ENGLAND IN THE WORLD WAR.—When the World War broke out between Austria-Hungary and Serbia, and between Germany, Russia, and France, England's position was uncertain, until the Germans commenced the invasion of Belgium on 2 August, 1914, whereupon the British Foreign Secretary, Sir Edward Grey, dispatched an ultimatum to Germany, requiring assurance that Germany would respect Belgian neutrality. Germany refused on the ground of military necessity, and the German Chancellor rebuked England for making war for "a scrap of paper." The next day (5 August, 1914) war was declared between Germany and England. In September England, along with the great powers, France and Russia, mutually engaged in the Pact of London not to conclude peace separately, nor to demand terms of peace without the previous agreement of each of the others. As soon as was possible a British expeditionary force under Field Marshal Sir John French was dispatched to aid the French and the Belgians. Stationed north of Maubeuge they were forced by the fall of Namur and a hot contest at Mons to retreat from Mons to avoid a flanking movement of General Von Kluck's cavalry. Outflanked again on 26 August, 1914, they were driven from Cambrai, and in two days expelled from St. Quentin. Abandoning Amiens, Laon, and Reims they fell back to the Marne on a line extending from Soissons to Compiègne. The British force sent to save Antwerp was too small to be of any avail, and on 5 October, 1914, was forced to evacuate the city.

In the meantime the British army was reinforced by volunteers from England and a strong contingent from India, and was moving up to Ypres. Determined to capture the seaport towns the Germans fiercely assailed the allied line along the Yser River, at Ypres, at La Bassée and before Arras. The German attempt failed, and the Battle of Flanders subsided into a dreary process of trench-digging with intermittent cannonading. The original British force of 150,000 was augmented until it numbered 750,000 men, without counting the colonial troops, which were arriving from Canada, Australia, and India. With its lines thus strengthened the British began a formidable offensive at Neuve Chapelle, but from want of ammunition and failure of reinforcements the first British drive, in 1915, turned out to be a victory "that halted half way through lack of prompt support and co-ordination." They, however, took part in the great offensive under Foch, and penetrated the German lines to a depth of two miles. In December, 1915, Sir Douglas Haig succeeded Sir John French in command of the British troops in France. Those on the Somme front were commanded by Sir Henry Rawlinson, who directed the second British drive. Their objective was now Bapaume. In the first fortnight of the battle of the Somme they advanced three miles and took 10,000 prisoners. In the second phase of the battle they joined the French in taking Comblès and Thiepval. In the battle of Arras in 1917 they took Bapaume, Péronne, and Chaumes, and shortened the line by 25 miles, and carried Vimy Ridge. Renewing the offensive after a lull of several months the British concentrated their fire on Passchendaele Ridge. This battle of Flanders strengthened their hold on Ypres, and soon they were engaged in the battle of Cambrai. In March, 1918, came the great German offensive against the British lines, which, owing to the incomplete battles of Flanders and Cambrai and the allied failures at St. Quentin and La Fère in 1917, were relatively weaker and could be outmaneuvered with superior forces of men and munitions. The line extending from Arras to St. Quentin was held by the third British army under Sir Julian Byng, and that from St. Quentin to the Oise by the fifth army under Sir Hubert Gough. The German idea was to drive a wedge between the French and British armies, a design which was almost realized, as Sir Hubert Gough's army, outnumbered four to one, lost contact with the French at its right and gave way at several points. Retreat became rout, and the Germans swept forward, took Péronne and Ham, and crossed the Somme on 24 March, 1918. In the north the army of Sir Julian Byng was forced to yield Bapaume and finally Albert. On 26 March, 1918, the gap between the French and British lines was closed by the arrival of the French army under General Fayolles, who joined the British at Moreuil, and by the new British army improvised from sappers, laborers, and engineers under General Sandeman. In this Battle of Picardy the Germans regained nearly all the ground they held at the beginning of the Battle of the Somme in 1916, and besides gained an area of about 1500 sq. miles. The British losses were severe, but their line was intact. In April, 1918, the British were forced to yield Armentières, Messines Ridge, Merville, and to withdraw from Passchendaele Ridge, which they had captured at such tremendous cost the previous year.

In the midst of the German drive against the British the Government at London, on 8 April, 1918, passed a new Military Service Bill, imposing military service on every British subject between the ages of eighteen and fifty-five, withdrew immunity from ministers of religion, and extended the service to Ireland. In the meantime the Americans had arrived in France and the allied advance began (August, 1918). The British under General Rawlinson attacked the Germans on the southern side of the salient. Bapaume was regained on 29 August, Péronne on 1 September, and farther north in Flanders the British army of General Plummer launched an offensive against the salient between Arras and Ypres, and forced the Germans to yield Mount Kemmel. East of Arras the British broke the line between Drocourt and Quéant. In September St. Quentin was taken by General Haig. Cambrai was occupied by Generals Byng and Horne on 9 October, Passchendaele Ridge was recovered, and Roulers, Menin, Courtrai, Valenciennes, and Maubeuge fell into British hands. On 11 November, 1918, the last day of fighting, the British gained Mons, the scene of their defeat and retreat in August, 1914.

The British army, however, did not play a merely defensive rôle on the blood-soaked plains of France and Belgium. It fought in a dozen different places, in various parts of Europe, Africa, and Asia. It conquered all the German colonies overseas; with Russia out of the war the Britishers had to fight the Turkish army single-handed in Mesopotamia and Palestine. They helped rout the Bulgarians in Macedonia, they rushed to the help of Italy when the Austrians broke the Italian front; they sent troops across northwestern Persia to occupy Baku so that the Russians might not make it a base in their possible operations against India; in northern Russia British troops were landed to prevent Germany's seizure of Russia's one gateway to the Atlantic. At Vladivostok, on the Pacific coast, British troops fought beside American, Japanese, and Czechoslovak contingents to preserve Siberia. England's protectorate in Egypt, declared in 1914, was recognized, but in 1922 Egypt was declared a sovereign state. Ireland was declared a free state in the same year.

NAVAL ACTIVITY.—With the entry of Great Britain into the World War, the command of the seas passed into the hands of the Allies. Early in the war the British fleet achieved much. Although it could not altogether prevent the Germans from planting mines and torpedoes along the coasts of the North Sea and bombarding Russian ports in the Baltic, it compelled the German squadron to lie idle at its moorings in Wilhelmshaven, Cuxhaven, and Kiel. The first encounter of any magnitude took place in the Bight of Heligoland on 28 August, 1914, and resulted in the destruction of three German cruisers and two torpedo boats. Small German squadrons made flying raids on English ports, bombarding Yarmouth (3 November, 1914), Scarborough (16 December, 1914), Hartlepool, and Whitby, and killing a few inhabitants. On 3 November the British lost the "Monmouth" and the "Good Hope" off the harbor of Coronel in Chile, and took speedy revenge on the German ships by dispatching another squadron under Admiral Sturdee, which destroyed four German ships. The sole survivor of the combat was the "Dresden," which was overtaken at Juan Fernandez on 14 March, 1915, and sunk. The German cruisers which remained at large were able to inflict considerable damage on British and allied shipping. The "Emden" was destroyed on 9 November, 1915, at the Cocos Islands, and the "Koenigsberg" was bottled up in the Rufiji River in German East Africa and destroyed on 11 July, 1915.

In January, 1915, the British squadron encountered the German squadron on its way to attack a British port, sunk the "Blücher" and drove off the remainder in a damaged condition. In February, 1915, the British fleet joined the French in a naval attack on the Dardanelles. Though they succeeded in silencing the forts they lost three battleships by mine explosions and gunfire. The British themselves lost their cruiser the "Lion," and the destroyer the "Meteor" was temporarily disabled. On 4 February a proclamation issued by the German Admiralty declared all the waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland as a war zone after the eighteenth of the month, in which every hostile ship would be destroyed by their submarines. In pursuance of their policy they destroyed many vessels and thousands of lives, including the Cunard liner "Lusitania," the largest ship in the Atlantic service, sunk on 7 May, 1915, with a loss of 1153 lives. The submarine campaign, however, failed to interrupt the commerce between the British Islands and the rest of the world, or to interfere materially with the transport of troops and supplies in the several theaters of war. British submarines, on the other hand, succeeded in entering the sea of Marmora and the Baltic and destroying hostile vessels. In June, 1916, the British cruiser, the "Hampshire," with Field Marshal Earl Kitchener on his way to Russia with his staff, was sunk. In that year two British battleships and a light cruiser were torpedoed. Foiled in the effective use of commerce raiders by the British Grand Fleet, which dominated the North Sea and had its base in the harbor of Scapa Flow, the German authorities decided to risk their own high seas fleet in a naval battle off Jutland on 31 May, 1916. The British lost 113,000 tons, including the battle cruisers "Queen Mary," the "Indefatigable," and the "Invincible," and eight destroyers. The German losses were proportionally more. With the exception of a few raids, the German fleet remained during the rest of the war at anchor in Kiel Canal, but the German submarine activity increased and did great damage. With the idea of curbing this submarine activity by attacking the German submarine bases, a British squadron bombarded Zeebrugge on 12 May, 1917, and a few months later another made an attack on the docks and harbor of Ostend. In the same year the Germans made another unsuccessful raid on Dover, and a German submarine shelled Scarborough. After the signing of the armistice the first division of the German high fleet was delivered to an Allied fleet commanded by Admiral Beatty off the Firth of Forth; and the German submarines, numbering 122, were surrendered to a British squadron at Harwich.

The total loss of British merchant tonnage was stated by the admiralty to amount to 15,053,396 gross tons, valued at $3,000,000,000. According to this official statement 2475 British ships were sunk with their crews and 3147 sunk and their crews set adrift, and 670 fishing boats destroyed. The total loss in lives exceeded 15,000. The British losses included 13 battleships, 3 battle cruisers, 64 destroyers, 10 torpedo boats, 50 submarines, and 27 small craft, a total tonnage of 550,000. A large number of British fast vessels were utilized in the transportation of American troops to France, and in many cases these were escorted by British cruisers and destroyers. The action of the British fleet was one of the most decisive factors in the war, as the blockade had brought the Central Powers to the verge of famine and deprived them of the most essential supplies for a continuation of hostilities. It also kept the seas free for the transportation of troops to the important theaters of war.

The loss of British life from the World War was appalling. The whole number of casualties among all military forces and in all theaters of war was as follows:

	KILLED		WOUNDED
	Officers	Other Ranks	Officers	Other Ranks
British	30,807	466,831	76,132	1,532,552
Colonials and Indians	7602	168,703	17,125	421,402
Totals	38,409	635,534	93,257	1,953,954
	673,943		2,047,211

The missing numbered 64,000, and those dead from various causes 97,000; these figures included the losses of the Royal Naval Division and of the Royal Flying Corps up to 1 April, 1918, making a grand total of casualties from all causes of 2,882,954. The casualties due to hostile air raids and bombardments were as follows: killed, 1570; injured, 4041. The casualties in the Royal Air Forces between 1 April, 1918, and the date of the armistice included: killed, 1551 officers and 1129 men; wounded, 2357 officers and 631 men; missing, 1612 officers and 225 men; interned, 45 officers and 39 men.

English College, Rome (cf. C. E., V-472c), known as the Venerable, is composed of students who are admitted upon application from a bishop of England or the Colonies for the purpose of training for the English Missions. At the present time there are about 65 students registered with only one for any diocese outside of England, viz., the Archdiocese of Malta.

The students are obliged to follow the course of studies prescribed by the Gregorian University and attend most of their lectures, philosophy, archeology, history, Greek, Hebrew, mathematics, science, Scripture, dogmatic theology, ascetica and moral theology, at this university. This leaves only the studies which have a practical bearing on the missionary or parochial work, such as pastoral theology, ceremonies or ritual, church music, etc., to be given in the English College.

The faculty of the college consists of a rector, at present Rt. Rev. Mgr. A. Hinsley, a vice-rector, a repetitore, an ecomus, and a spiritual director. The college possesses a library of 40,000 volumes.

Eperies, DIOCESE OF. See PRJASEV.

Ephraim, SAINT (cf. C. E., V-498a), was declared a Doctor of the Universal Church, by pontifical decree, 5 October, 1920, and his feast fixed for 18 June.

Erdely, DIOCESE OF. See TRANSYLVANIA.

Erdington Abbey (cf. C. E., V-517d).—Due to the war the community of Erdington Abbey had become so depopulated that it was impossible to restore it. Therefore, in 1922 the community was disbanded, and the work of their mission taken over by the Redemptorists. This abbey was founded in 1876 by German Monks of the Beurnese Congregation, and attracted to it certain Englishmen who felt called to a monastic life of more conventual observance than was possible under the conditions of the time in the houses of the English Congregation. High Mass and the Divine Office were solemnly and beautifully celebrated daily, much of the pre-Reformation splendor of liturgical worship being restored in the monastic church. Erected into an abbey in 1896, the first and last abbot was Dom Ansgar Hockelmann. Attached to the abbey was the parish of Erdington, in the Archdiocese of Birmingham, with 2300 souls and 2 public oratories. Under the stress of war the enemy nationality of some of the monks made their position difficult, but by arrangement between the British Government and Cardinal Bourne the community, in part at least, was able to be kept together, until the depletion of their number made necessary their disbanding.

Erie, DIOCESE OF (ERIENSIS; cf. C. E., V-518c), comprises an area of 9936 sq. miles in the State of Pennsylvania, U. S. A. The fourth bishop of Erie, Rt. Rev. John E. Fitzmaurice, died 18 June, 1920, after a prolonged illness, and the auxiliary bishop, Rt. Rev. John Mark Gannon, D.D., who had been consecrated titular Bishop of Nilopolis 6 February, 1918, was appointed to succeed him, and installed 16 December, 1920. Bishop Gannon was born and received his early education in Erie, finally completing his studies at the Catholic University in Washington, the University of Munich, and the College of S. Apollinare at Rome. Up to the time of his consecration he was superintendent of the parochial schools and has at all times promoted education. His most recent work for this cause was the establishment of a Catholic preparatory school for boys.

Since 1909 a new cathedral and 3 new churches have been consecrated in the city of Erie. During the World War the clergy of the diocese were represented by five chaplains, three of whom went overseas, while many others acted as four-minute men. The laity were equally active giving up many young men to the service and over-subscribing every welfare loan ordered by the Government.

Since 1909 the diocese has lost many prominent members, among them: Rt. Rev. Msgr. P. J. Sheridan, vicar general of the diocese for nearly thirty years; Msgr. Bernard McGivney, pastor at Du Bois for over a quarter of a century; Rev. Joseph M. Cauley, Rev. J. F. Donnellan, chancellor and secretary of the diocese; Rev. B. J. Rayercroft, scholar and writer; Msgrs. Michael Decker and James Dunn; Deans Winter and Coonan and Mr. Bernard Veis, Mayor of the City of Erie; and Dr. and Mrs. M. C. Dunnigan.

The religious orders in the diocese are: the Benedictines, Redemptorists, Brothers of Mary, Society of the Divine Word, Congregation of the Mission, Benedictine Nuns, Sisters of St. Joseph, Sisters of Mercy, Felician Sisters, and Sisters-Servants of the Holy Ghost. The Redemptorists, who conduct a seminary and college for young men who intend to join their order, now have 240 students.

The Sisters of St. Joseph have charge of the boys' protectory, the orphan asylum, home for the aged, 2 hospitals, Academy of Villa Maria and 13 parochial schools. The Sisters of Mercy besides having an academy at the mother-house in Titusville, have charge of 8 parochial schools, a hospital in Du Bois, and a home for working girls in Erie. The Sisters of St. Benedict are about to found a hospital in St. Mary's, in addition to the academy which they now have there; they teach in 13 parochial schools.

There are in the diocese 110 churches with resident priests; 55 missions with churches and 12 chapels; 181 priests, 142 seculars and 39 regulars; 46 parochial schools; 7 academies for young ladies, with an attendance of 840; 4 monasteries for men; 5 convents for women; 15 lay brothers; 530 sisters;

27 seminarians; 2 colleges for men with 24 teachers and an attendance of 340; 1 high school for boys with 6 teachers and an attendance of 100. There are 3 homes; 1 orphan asylum and 3 hospitals, two of which receive a small appropriation from the government. Three societies are organized among the clergy and about ten among the laity. "The Lake Shore Visitor" is the diocesan periodical. At the present time (1921) the Catholic population is estimated at 114,695, including Irish, Germans, Poles, Slavs, Lithuanians, Hungarians, Italians, and French.

Eritrea, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF, comprises an Italian colony in East Africa. The present vicar apostolic is the Rt. Rev. Francesco Carrara, a Capuchin of the province of Rome, appointed titular Bishop of Agathopolis and vicar apostolic 7 February, 1911. Due to his zeal and energy the Capuchins, in 1912, founded a well equipped printing establishment, where they publish works in Italian and native languages, which are greatly appreciated in the colony and in the different countries to which they are sent. The principal works hitherto published are a collection of books of instruction, eight volumes printed in Italian and Tigré, a grammar, dictionary, and devotional books in various languages for the use of the native clergy and laity. In 1921 they brought out the New Testament, printed in the Ghez language and edited by Rev. Francis Bassano, O.M.Cap., in accordance with the most authentic Ethiopian code. The work merited the praise of Benedict XV, and of the Sacred Congregation of Eastern Churches. A Catholic magazine called "Parole buone," which contains mission news, is printed every month, and is distributed among the Italians of the colony. They also publish the lives of the saints and pious stories for the instruction of the natives.

There are about 3500 European Catholics in the colony. Since 1912 the native Catholics have increased from 14,000 to 25,000. The majority belong to the Bileni and Abyssinian races, while a few are scattered among the Assaortini and Cunama races. The latter are fast becoming converted to the Faith. Among the events of special importance since 1914 are the conversion of the Bileni, who live in the northwest of Asmara among the Mussulmans, and incline towards Islamism. They are well disposed toward the Catholic Church, and are eager to become Christians, to build chapels, and to have their own native priests. During the past six years the number of baptisms varied from 800 to 850 a year. A house-to-house visitation was made by the vicar apostolic, which in a great measure contributed to their rapid conversion. Fifteen churches and chapels have been erected, the principal ones being at Asmara, and one which was built over the tomb of the Venerable De Jacobis at Elbo. A circulating library has been established and a young men's club at Asmara, in connection with which there are a gymnasium, dramatic society, music hall, and theater. On 3 July, 1912, the cornerstone of the new church for the white people of Asmara was laid, an event which was celebrated by the civil as well as the religious authorities. Two spacious and imposing school buildings for boys and girls have been erected at Asmara, which are attended by nearly all the children of that place. At Asmara the custom has been established to dedicate the family to the Sacred Heart.

In 1921 the vicariate apostolic contained 2 quasi-parishes for the Italians, 53 quasi-parishes for the natives, 60 churches, 10 mission stations, 2 convents for women founded by the Daughters of St. Ann (38 Sisters), and the Pie Madri della Nigrizia (12 Sisters), who have charge of the hospital at Asmara, 1 secular priest who is the army chaplain, 20 regular priests, and 9 lay brothers (Capuchins), 60 native priests, all of whom belong to the Coptic Catholic Rite, 1 seminary, and 43 seminarians. The following educational institutions have been established in the vicariate: 2 secondary schools for men, 4 teachers, 72 students, 1 secondary school for women, 4 teachers, 20 students, 2 professional schools, 3 teachers, 40 students, 1 elementary school for the Italians with 390 pupils, 40 elementary schools for the natives with 1300 pupils. The Government supports two schools, one at Saganeiti for the natives and the other at Asmara for the whites. The following charitable institutions exist in the vicariate: 2 orphanages for boys at Cheren and Asmara, 3 for girls at Saganeiti, Cheren, and Asmara, 6 agricultural schools for the natives, 1 medical dispensary, 3 asylums, 1 at Asmara for the whites, 1 at Saganeiti, and 1 at Cheren. Among the natives the following societies have been established: the Association of St. Michael, Association of St. George, Third Order of St. Francis, and Sodality of the Children of Mary. Among the whites there are the: Societies of the Children of Mary, of St. Aloysius, of the Sacred Heart, and of the Blessed Sacrament.

Erlan, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See EGER.

Ermland (or WARMIA), DIOCESE OF (VARMIENSIS; cf. C. E., V-522a), in East Prussia, is directly dependent on the Holy See. The episcopal residence, cathedral and chapter are at Frauenburg, as also the Upper Seminary with 60 students in 1914, for the last three years of theology, 1 ecclesiastical lyceum, and 1 hostel for university students.

Bishop Andrew Thiel (b. 28 September, 1826; d. 17 July, 1908), was succeeded by the present (1922) incumbent, Rt. Rev. Augustin Bludau, b. 6 March, 1862, ordained 13 March, 1887, vicar at Marienveder and Braunberg, later sub-rector of the Upper Seminary, 1895, professor of Biblical exegesis at Munster University, author of numerous works of New Testament exegesis, appointed bishop by the chapter, 26 November, 1909, consecrated and enthroned 20 June following. According to 1921 statistics the diocese is divided into 17 deaneries with 118 parishes and rectories, 67 vicariates served by 171 rectors and 98 assistants, 66 other priests are also engaged in teaching. There are in all 319 secular and 4 regular clergy. The population of the diocese includes 327,277 Catholics, and 1,044,418 non-Catholics. There are 557 Sisters in 69 houses.

Ernakulam, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (ERNACULAMENSIS), in Malabar, India, of the Syro-Malabar Rite. The present (1922) Vicar Apostolic is Rt. Rev. Augustine Kandathil, titular Bishop of Arad, b. 24 August, 1874, nominated Bishop of Arad, and coadjutor with right of succession to the vicar Apostolic of Ernakulam 29 August, 1911; consecrated 3 December following, succeeding Rt. Rev. Aloysius Pareparambil (b. 25 March, 1847; d. 9 December, 1919). According to the 1920 statistics the total population of this territory is 1,029,000, of whom, by the census of 1919, 113,936 are Catholics of this rite; the chief language spoken is Malayalam. There are 9 parish churches, 6 chapels with resident pastors, 143 secular priests, 29 seminarians, and 37 Jacobite churches with about 30,000 members. Besides these there are native Carmelite Nuns of the Third Order with 198 professed nuns, 25 postulants, and 2 catechumenates. The various institutions include 10 boarding schools with 268 pupils, 1 high school, 198 primary and secondary schools with 6,632 pupils, and 1 orphanage with 12 orphans. The Mar Louis Memorial Press, which prints books in Malayalam, English, and Latin, was lately started in honor of the late Bishop Pareparambil. "The Ernakulum Mission," a diocesan gazette, contains the pastoral letters of the bishop as well as items of interest regarding the history and work of the mission. A Society for the Propagation of the Faith has lately been organized, as well as the St. Joseph's Provident Fund, for the benefit of aged and infirm clergy. The Syro-Chaldaic Carmelite Congregation of Malabar has 4 convents and 41 members attached to this vicariate.

Error (cf. C. E., V-525).—Error may be presumed about the private acts of another until the contrary is proved, but as a rule not about a law or penalty or about one's own act or another's notorious act. A rescript containing an error as to the name of the grantor or grantee, or of the place, or of the thing in question is not void, if the ordinary judges that there is no doubt about the identity of the person or thing. A dispensation from the impediments of consanguinity or affinity is valid even if an error about the degree occurred in the petition or concession, provided the real degree was more remote. A single error about the unity, indissolubility, or sacramental dignity of marriage, even if it were a cause of the contract, does not vitiate matrimonial consent (can. 1084).

Erythrae, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF. Sec ERITREA.

Erzberger, MATTHIAS, statesman and publicist, b. in the village of Bittenhausen, Württemberg, 20 September, 1875; murdered by his political enemies at Griesbach in the Black Forest on 26 August, 1921. His father was a teacher in the village school, and Matthias determined to follow in his father's footsteps. After two years in a training college he began his work as a pedagogue at nineteen, but two years later he was at the university in Fribourg studying law and economics, only to be engrossed soon in journalism and politics, editing the "Deutschen Volksblatt" from 1896 to 1903, when he was elected a member of the Center Party as a representative from Württemberg. In 1908 he removed to Berlin and took up the editorship of some of the official publications of the Center. His extraordinary talents immediately made him a leading figure in the Reichstag. His friends and enemies called him "a living volcano" because of the active perfervid energy he created around him by the vastness of the interest in which he was concerned, his abnormal power of rapidly grasping a situation in all its aspects, combined with a remarkable fluency and facility in expressing his views. He was quick and certain in his decisions, fearless in facing difficulties, and confident in the ultimate success of his plans. He kept the House in perpetual amazement at the extent and diversity of his knowledge, but he is credited with having thrown the Center into confusion by his vanity and overbearing manner as well as his utter disregard for discipline. He quarreled with its leader, Dr. Spahn.

At the beginning of the war, he was sure of victory and vied with the most ambitious Junkers in fixing the boundaries of the New Germany. Three years later, he had shifted completely around, and he began a system of German Propaganda in the neutral countries and in Rome. He interfered in army affairs and Ludendorff denounced him as "a burdensome busybody." His political activities in connection with the Orient, Alsace-Lorraine, Poland, and Italy all ended in failure.

He endeavored to arrange terms of peace with Belgium and at least stopped the deportation of Belgians. He was a bitter opponent of the U-boat warfare, but once it was decided upon he multiplied the ships with amazing rapidity. In 1918 van Capelle announced the failure of the submarines and when Erzberger let it be known to the public he so exasperated the army leaders that he narrowly escaped imprisonment.

His connection with the Peace Resolutions of 1917 brought him into the greatest discredit and evoked a new storm on the part of the Junkers. All the German authorities were agreed that hostilities should cease in that year, and Erzberger then began a great diplomatic campaign to effect that result. He won over a majority of the Parliamentarians to that view, and a peace resolution was introduced in the Reichstag, but it aroused such indignation that Erzberger came near being tried for high treason. The Kaiser considered him "an erratic, vulgar demagogue." Count von Hertling, his fellow-Catholic and colleague, treated him with contempt, but his chief enemies were in the military party. To Ludendorff he was "the most unspeakable of German traitors; the Ethiopian whom no scrubbing could wash white."

In August, 1918, Ludendorff was wondering how he could save his armies, though a month before he was sure of victory. On 1 October a war cabinet was formed and Erzberger appeared again in public life as a minister. Finally, on 26 October, Ludendorff gave up his command, and a Commission with Erzberger as its spokesman was formed to negotiate with the Allies. The Commission met Marshal Foch at Compiègne on 7 November, but Foch had nothing to offer except what Erzberger considered "inhuman conditions." During the discussions, news of the Kaiser's abdication arrived; the Red Flag had appeared at Berlin, and Erzberger went back to a chaotic Germany beaten. When at last the German delegates went to Versailles and were presented with the conditions they were struck mute with amazement. At Weimar, Erzberger was the only minister who would sign them. The Reichstag was therefore dissolved, and a new Government consisting of Social Democrats and the Centre was called into existence and agreed to sign the treaty. It aroused the country and that night an attempt was made to murder Erzberger; a few nights later a bomb was thrown into his bedroom; a third attempt equally unsuccessful was made later.

In the new Cabinet he was Minister of Finance and succeeded in amazing many of the capitalists by his attack on war profits and his imposition of a heavy tax on the rich. Those affected then began to attack his private character, which was irreproachable, for he was a most practical Catholic. Finally he met his death, as we have already said, in the Black Forest at Griesbach on 26 August, 1921. He had received Holy Communion that morning. The general consensus about him is that "he was one of most gifted men of his time, but that most of his schemes ended in failure. The reason is that he talked too much. He claimed to be a specialist in every branch and was regarded as being a specialist in none. Incessant airing of his opinions caused him to be regarded as a babler. That he meant well for his country can scarcely be doubted. That his death was a gain or loss for Germany is a matter for future speculation."

Erzerum (or GARIN), DIOCESE OF (ERZERUMIENSIS ARMENORUM), Armenia, Asia Minor, a diocese of the Armenian Rite. Rt. Rev. Joseph Melkisedekian, b. 22 July, 1848, ordained 2 April, 1874, was appointed to this see 27 August, 1911, and filled it until his death, 23 January, 1920. From 1915 until 1918 he was interned by the Turks at Eghin. Out of a total population of 500,000 inhabitants, 10,000 are Catholics. The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with 41 missionary priests, 2 regular priests, and 66 churches or chapels. The see is at present (1922) vacant.

Espousals (cf. C. E., V-542).—A promise of marriage, whether unilateral or bilateral, if it is not exacted as prescribed in the decree "Ne temere," is void in both the internal and the external forum. The text of the canon makes provision for the inability of either or both of the parties to write whether that arises from illiteracy or from a physical cause. A promise of marriage, even if valid and inexcusably violated, cannot be the basis of an action to compel one to marry, though it gives a just claim for damages if any resulted. Espousals do not now create a matrimonial impediment; they may be dissolved by mutual consent, or for the reasons that sufficed before 1918.

Esthonia, an independent republic, formed from the former Russian Estland, the northern part of Livland, the northwestern portion of the Pskoff Government, and the islands of Saaremaa (Oesel), Hiiumaa (Dago), and Muhumaa in the Baltic Sea. It is bounded on the east by Peipus Lake and Russia, on the south by Latvia, on the west by the Baltic Sea, and on the north by the Gulf of Finland. The country is 217 miles long and about 124 miles broad, the total area being about 23,160 sq. miles. The population, about 1,750,000, is composed of Esthonians (95%), Germans (Balts, 1%), Russians (9%), Letts (0.9%), Swedes (.08%), and Jews (.05%). The republic is divided into nine districts: Harju (Tallinn-Reval), Wiru (Rakvere-Wesenberg), Jarva (Paide-Wrisenstein), Laane-Weik (Hapsal), Tartu (Tartu-Dorpat), Woru, Wiljandi (Wiljandi-Fellin), Parnu (Pernau), Saaremaa-Oesel (Kuresaare-Arensburg). The capital, Tallin (Reval), was founded in 1219 and has 160,000 inhabitants. Parnu, on the Gulf of Riga, has 23,000, and Narva 35,000. The Esthonians (Ehsts) in nationality, speech, and customs belong to the Ugro-Finnish family and therefore to the Ural-Altaic branch of the race. They first appear in history as a predatory-piratical race in the Northern Baltic province, who are supposed to have migrated from the interior of Russia to the Baltic coast, in advance of the two Finnish tribes of Tavasti and Koreli. In physiognomy the Esthonians closely resemble the Finns of Tavastland, a Ural-Altaic Mongolian type.

RELIGION.—When Esthonia was incorporated with Russia the whole population, German and native, belonged to the Lutheran Church, but with the government of the Tsar (1721) came also the Orthodox Church, of which he was the titular head. He at once granted religious freedom, and there was henceforward a new religious influence which tended to identify itself with the movement for spreading Russian institutions in the Baltic provinces. Orthodoxy and Lutheranism competed for the religious allegiance of the people, and after 1883 the Orthodox Church was represented as being endangered by Lutheran propaganda. Mixed marriages were prohibited (1886), except when written guarantees were given that the children should be brought up in the Orthodox faith, and at the same period proceedings were taken against Lutheran pastors who recognized converts from the Orthodox Church. Five-sixths of the people are Lutherans. According to the new constitution (15 June, 1920) there is no state religion in Esthonia; freedom of religion and conscience prevails. Ecclesiastically Esthonia belongs to the archdiocese of Mohileff (q. v.). On 11 April, 1919, the Holy See recognized provisionally the National Council of Esthonia as an existing independent organization. In August the Foreign Minister of Esthonia asked for de jure recognition, which was accorded by the Cardinal Secretary of State 10 October, 1921.

EDUCATION.—In 1919 there were in Esthonia 1257 elementary schools with four years' course. Of these 1227 were supported by community, town, or state, and 30 were private schools. The number of higher schools with seven years' course amounted to 211, seven of which were private. There were also 65 middle-class schools for general education; 32 of these were private schools, mostly supported by the government. There are teachers' seminaries in Tallin, Tartu, and Rakvere, navigation schools in Tallin, Kasmu, Kuresaare, and Parnu, as also commercial schools, agricultural schools, and industrial schools. Since 1721 the educational system of the province has been in the hands of the Russian administration, and has not differed from that prevailing in other "Governments," but the earlier period of German dominance has left its impression on higher education. The University of Dorpat, founded in 1632 by Gustavus Adolphus, was a center of German culture, and although it disappeared for a time during the wars of the eighteenth century, it was re-established in 1802 by Alexander I on the model of a German university, and the monopoly of the Germans was not seriously challenged until the establishment of the German Empire antagonized the Russian Government. In 1889 Russian influence prevailed in the university, and in protest the Germans closed their higher educational establishments. After the revolution of 1905 German institutions were again regarded with favor, and a German union was formed to found schools, German being again recognized as a permissible language in private schools. The University of Dorpat was re-opened on 1 December, 1919, as an Esthonian seat of learning, maintained by the Government. The attendance in 1920 was 2127. The Technicum at Tallin is a higher professional school with 500 students (1920).

ECONOMIC EDUCATION.—Even without the complications brought about by the European War, the province of Esthonia was in an extremely disturbed state and became the scene of destructive revolutionary struggles. The Russian authorities were trying to Russanize the country by force, the inhabitants were struggling for land possession and better industrial conditions, and the Germans were aiming at industrial dominion. At the present time industries of all kinds, as well as agriculture, to a large extent, are in a state of suspension. Agriculture is the chief occupation, half the area of Esthonia being taken up by large landed properties of more than 2000 hectares each. An agrarian law, passed on 10 October, 1919, gave the Government the power to take over, "for the purpose of creating a land reserve," any estates belonging to the Balt nobility, and any arable land, except that owned by charitable institutions or by farmers, not noble, holding less than about 400 acres of land. Compensation for the land itself was to be fixed later by special legislation. The purpose of the law was to give land to the peasants, to parcel them out into small farms, special preference being given to soldiers. The theoretical compensation for the inventory, however, amounted to almost nothing. The arable land is divided as follows: fields 2,318,004 acres; meadows 2,408,840 acres; pastures 1,671,837 acres. Twenty per cent of the surface is forest land. The principal crops, with acreage and yield, as follows: rye 376,004 acres, 6,435,488 bushels; wheat 37,351 acres, 612,930 bushels; barley 297,453 acres, 5,968,308 bushels; potatoes 155,518 acres, 25,240,705 bushels. In 1920 Esthonia had 363,263 head of cattle, 436,259 sheep, 213,002 pigs, and 155,262 horses. Owing to the low purchasing value of the Esthonian mark (375 marks to the dollar in 1920), there is but little foreign trade. The chief exports are flax, timber, cellulose, and meat. The trade in 1920 amounted to 3,912,394 poods (61 poods—one ton) of imports and 7,675,508 poods of exports. Of the total imports 1,142,759 poods came from the United Kingdom and 1,298,670 from Germany; of the total exports 3,531,262 went to the United Kingdom and 275,905 to Germany.

GOVERNMENT.—According to the constitution of 15 June, 1920, the supreme power in the State is the people, who delegate its execution to the Constituent Assembly, and the legal representative of the country is the President of the Assembly. By order of the Constituent Assembly the Government exercises the supreme executive power, and the Supreme Court of Justice the supreme judicial power. The people have the power of the initiative and referendum. The Government, consisting of 11 departments, but no fixed number of ministers, is the instrument of the Constituent Assembly, holds office for one year and must always have a quorum of fifty per cent of its members. Serfdom is abolished and the peasant becomes the proprietor of his land with the right of sale. Suffrage is universal, the voting age for both sexes being twenty. The death penalty and the total confiscation of goods are forbidden. There is no censorship. The Assembly is composed of 100 members, elected for three years on the basis of proportional representation. The members are not the representatives of the districts which elect them, but of the whole nation. The Assembly is governed by a Præsidium (one of whom is chairman) elected at the first meeting of the Assembly, and chosen by it. The Premier-President is head of the State, represents the republic, presides over meetings, but executive power belongs to the Government, which holds office at the discretion of the Assembly. The Supreme Court of Justice watches over the execution of the laws and treaties, and if necessary elects the judges. Every Esthonian citizen may, without prejudicing his right as a citizen, declare the nationality to which he considers himself to belong, the four recognized nationalities being Russian, Swedish, Lettish, and German; he has the right to education in his language, and to the use of it in his daily life. Military service is made universal.

HISTORY.—Esthonia was conquered and Christianized by the Germans of the Teutonic Order overseas for trading and missionary purposes. It was invaded in 1558 by Ivan the Terrible, and finally submitted to Sweden. In 1710 it was seized by Russia, who confirmed her new position by the treaty of Nystad in 1721. In this treaty religious freedom hitherto denied was claimed for the members of the Greek Church. Under Russian rule Esthonia retained her own laws (provincial law) and her own special system of administration. Up to 1887 she enjoyed a certain autonomy, but with the advent of Alexander III (1881-94) the policy of Russianizing the province was introduced, and the Germans struggled to defend their privileged position against the Russian Government and the native races. In 1905 a violent revolution broke out, which assumed the form of an anti-German war, directed against pastors and other Germans, as well as the great proprietors. The outbreak, put down by military force, resulted in the strengthening of the German position, and the representation of the province in the Duma (1906-07).

In April, 1917, the Russian Provisional Government promulgated the law of Esthonian autonomy and provided for local self-government, under a National Council, elected by universal, secret, equal, and proportional suffrage. This council met for the first time on 14 July, 1917, and Esthonia virtually became a federal state in a Russian confederation. In October Bolshevism appeared in Esthonia, and after a coup d'état in November the National Council declared itself the sovereign power in Esthonia until a Constituent Assembly could meet. On 28 January, 1918, the Balts formally invited Germany to occupy the country, to which after protesting the council replied (24 February) by declaring Esthonia an independent state, and constituting a provisional government under M. Paets; the National Council maintained itself by missions abroad, and was recognized as a de facto governing body by Britain (3 May), France (15 May), and Italy (29 May), a recognition amplified by the British declaration of 10 September. As soon as the German evacuation began the National Council resumed power, reconstituted the provisional government and held elections for the Constituent Assembly which was opened on 23 April, 1919, and on 19 May proclaimed Esthonia an independent republic. A treaty of peace was signed with Russia at Tartu (Dorpat) on 2 February, 1920, by which the land frontiers of Esthonia were fixed. Another treaty in July, 1920, with Latvia fixed the southern boundaries. Finland recognized the republic as de jure independent, and by 7 June, 1920, de facto recognition had been accorded by practically all the powers.

Esztorgom (German, GRAN), ARCHDIOCESE OF (STRIGOMENSIS), situated in Lower Hungary, the primatial see of that country. This see is filled by His Eminence John Cardinal Csernoch, born in Szalkolcsa, Hungary, 1852, ordained 1874, served as a pastor and chancellor of the archdiocese, went as a deputy to the Hungarian Parliament, appointed Bishop of Csanad 16 February, 1908, transferred to Kalocsa 20 April, 1911, promoted to Gran 13 December, 1912, and made a cardinal-priest 25 May, 1914. He is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Joseph Medardus Kohl, titular Bishop of Samosata. On 11 September, 1919, the cardinal received a letter from the Pope deploring the Hungarian Revolution, which had despoiled many of the dioceses and hindered the work of the clergy. He congratulated the bishops, priests and faithful on their courageous resistance to the religious persecution, an important factor in the revolution, which was by no means entirely political. He assured them that he would take a keen interest in Hungarian affairs, and expressed his desire that the Hungarian bishops should do the same. The canons of the cathedral of Esztorgom are prothonotaries apostolic ad instar, durante munere. The Catholic population is counted at 1,594,515 by the 1920 statistics, as against 2456 Schismatics, 329,727 Protestants, 334

Oriental Greeks, and 258,222 Jews. The archdiocese is divided into 40 deaneries, 480 parishes, 200 second class parishes and vicariates, 1024 secular priests and 221 regular clergy.

Eucharist (cf. C. E., V-572d).—Under the Code for a grave cause a local ordinary or parish priest may permit a deacon to give Holy Communion. In case of necessity this permission may be presumed. Provided there is some one to take care of the consecrated host and that Mass is celebrated regularly, at least once a week; (a) the Blessed Sacrament should be kept in a cathedral, the principal church of a vicariate apostolic, a prefecture apostolic, an abbey or prelatrice nullius, in every parish, or quasi-parish church, and in churches annexed to exempt religious houses; (b) on the other hand it may be kept with the principal public or semi-public oratory of pious places or religious houses, and of ecclesiastical colleges directed by the secular clergy or religious. To keep it in other churches or oratories an Apostolic indult is required; a local ordinary, however, can grant permission for it to be reserved in churches or public oratories, but only for just cause and incidentally. No one may keep the Blessed Sacrament or bring it with him on a journey. The churches in which the Blessed Sacrament is kept, particularly parish churches, should be open to the public for at least a few hours each day. All privileges to the contrary being revoked, the Blessed Sacrament cannot be kept in religious or pious houses except in the church or principal oratory; nor can it be kept within the choir or enclosure of a nun's monastery. It may not be kept continuously or habitually on more than one altar in the same church, and rectors are to see that this altar is more adorned than any other, so that the faithful may be excited to greater piety and devotion. It should be kept in a fixed tabernacle in the middle of the altar. The tabernacle should be artistically constructed, securely closed, adorned according to liturgical regulations; it must contain nothing but the Blessed Sacrament, and must be guarded carefully against all danger of profanation. The priest in charge of the church or oratory is bound gravely in conscience to guard the tabernacle key most carefully. For grave reason the Holy Eucharist may be removed from the altar and kept during the night with the local ordinary's permission, in a fitting, safer place, in which case it is to be laid on a corporal, and a light must be kept burning before it.

A sufficient number of consecrated hosts to meet the wants of the sick and the faithful are to be kept constantly in a solidly constructed, tightly closing pyx, with a white silk embroidered cover. In churches or oratories in which the Blessed Sacrament is kept there may be private exposition in the pyx for any just cause without the ordinary's leave. In private exposition the ciborium is visible in the open tabernacle, and is taken out only for the Benediction. There may be public exposition in the monstrance in all churches during the Masses and continuing to Vespers on Corpus Christi and within the octave; at any other time this is forbidden without a just grave cause, especially a public cause, and the ordinary's leave, even in a church belonging to exempt religious. The Forty Hours' Devotion is to be held yearly in churches in which the Blessed Sacrament is reserved; if for any special reason this cannot be done with due reverence the local ordinary should arrange to have exposition with greater solemnity than usual for some hours on stated days.

Eugénie, EMPRESS (EUGÉNIE MARIE DE MONTIJO

DE GUZMAN Y DE PORTO-CARRERO), wife of Napoleon III, b. at Granada, Spain, 5 May, 1826; d. at Madrid, 11 July, 1920. Her father Count de Montijo, was Spanish, and her mother was a Kirkpatrick of Scotch extraction. She married Napoleon III on 29 June, 1853, when he was Emperor of the French and the prince imperial was born 16 March, 1856. When the war with Germany broke out in 1870 she was made regent, but the Communist Revolution, that followed the defeat of the emperor, forced her to leave France. She repaired to England, and was followed by the prince and emperor. On 9 January, 1873, the emperor died under a surgical operation, and six years later the prince was killed in the war with the Zulus. After that, her life was passed in seclusion.

Eupen and Malmédy, DIOCESE OF. See LIÈGE.

Europe (cf. C. E., V-607a).—The result of the World War (1914-18) in Europe has been to sweep away the old boundaries of states, political parties, and social classes. New states have risen, old states have changed their character, and others are experiencing a national re-birth. Among the latter, the most conspicuous example in Poland. The new states include Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Latvia, Estonia, and Lithuania. Germany has lost 5500 square miles and nearly 2,000,000 inhabitants by the recession to France of Alsace and Lorraine, in addition to the great Saar Valley coal field. Fifteen years hence the inhabitants of the Saar Basin will decide by plebiscite who shall rule them. Belgium has acquired full sovereignty over Moresnet, and possession of Eupen and Malmédy, surrendered by Germany, and now has an area of 11,630 sq. miles and a population of 7,600,000. Germany also gave up to Poland an area equal to 30,000 square miles with a population of 6,000,000, and in order to provide Poland with an outlet to the ocean surrendered Danzig, which became the free city of Danzig under the protection of the League of Nations. In addition to the Saar Basin six areas in the German Territory were placed under plebiscites: two in East Prussia (Marienwerder and Allenstein) voted to stay with Germany; Northern Schleswig to return to Denmark; Holstein and Southern Schleswig to become re-incorporated into the German State; and Upper Silesia was divided between Poland (1300 sq. miles) and Germany (2800 sq. miles). As a guarantee for the faithful execution of her contracts under the treaty of Versailles, Germany consented to the military occupation of territory to the west of the Rhine, designated as "Zone of Allied Occupation." The Kiel Canal was internationalized, and Helgoland dismantled. Thus Germany is reduced to an area of about 172,000 sq. miles and a population of about 55,090,000. Austria proper has shrunk from 134,000 sq. miles to 32,000 sq. miles; its population from 29,000,000 to 6,500,000. The Klagenfurt district voted by plebiscite to remain with Austria. By the loss of Transylvania (22,000 sq. miles) to Rumania, and Croatia, Slavonia, and portions of Banat to Yugoslavia. Hungary was reduced from 125,000 sq. miles with more than 20,000,000 subjects to 36,000 sq. miles with 8,000,000 people.

To the Greeks Bulgaria renounced Bulgarian Thrace; to the Yugoslavs, a strip of territory including the town of Strumitsa, also two fragments along the West Bulgarian front, one of which contains the town of Tsaribrod; a total loss of about 2000 sq. miles out of her 43,000 sq. miles. To the Turks only a small tract in Europe remains, the Chatalja district, west of Constantinople. The Dardanelles, Bosphorus, and shores of the Sea of Mar-more became the "Zone of the Straits," controlled and governed by an Inter-Allied Commission and a small area known as the Suvla Reservation was set aside as a cemetery for the Allies who fell in the attempt to take Constantinople. Greece received Turkish Thrace and numerous islands of the Aegean Sea. After being united to the Russian Empire as an autonomous grand duchy, Finland proclaimed its independence as a republic in December, 1917. She was awarded the Aland Islands, by the League of Nations in 1920. The three Baltic States of Esthonia, Latvia, and Lithuania declared their independence under republican forms of government, Esthonia (area, 23,160 sq. miles; population, 1,750,000), and Lithuania (59,633 sq. miles; population, 4,800,000) in February, 1918, and Latvia (25,000 sq. miles; population, 1,503,193) in November of the same year. Soviet Russia with its 95,000,000 inhabitants is still in a chaotic condition. The reconstituted Poland, now a republic, with its seat of government in the ancient capital of Warsaw, derives its territory from the three powers, who profited in the former partitions of the country; from Germany was acquired parts of Posen, West Prussia, East Prussia, and Silesia; from Austria-Hungary, most of Galicia and a part of Bukovina, and from Russia all of Russian Poland. The probable area of the republic is 100,000 sq. miles.

The new republic of Czechoslovakia, with an area of about 52,000 sq. miles and a population of 14,000,000, includes Bohemia, Moravia, and parts of Silesia and Slovakia, united in October, 1918. At the same time the Kingdom of Yugoslavia, formed by the union of Croatia, Slovakia, and Dalmatia, was proclaimed, a total area of 101,254 sq. miles, with a population of about 15,000,000. By the terms of the Treaty of Rapallo in 1920 Yugoslavia was awarded the Dalmatian coast and islands, while to Italy fell the towns of Zara and the islands of Cherso and Lagosta. The city of Fiume and the outlying territory was declared internationalized. Montenegro is no more, having been absorbed by Yugoslavia. Albania (11,000 sq. miles), the bone of contention in the Balkans, remains independent, Italy, however, keeping the island of Saseno. Italy's acquisition of the islands of the Adriatic constitutes a small part of her territorial gains as a result of the war; the redeemed region of Trentino, Gorizia, and Istria together with Trieste, now belong to Italy, and insure her control of the Gulf of Venice and all the North Adriatic littoral. All this area constitutes about 17,000 sq. miles. Italy also administers the island of Rhodes, which in fifteen years is to decide by plebiscite whether or not it is to be ceded to Greece; and also the island of Kastelorzio, near Kekova Bay, acquired by the Turkish Treaty of Sèvres.

By its recovery of Bessarabia and parts of Hungary, mentioned above, Rumania became the largest of the Balkan States, with 17,000,000 inhabitants, and 122,282 sq. miles. To the northeast is the nascent republic of Ukraine, whose boundaries are still vague, and which has a probable area of 200,000 sq. miles and a population of 30,000,000. The most recent change in boundary has been in the district of Teschen, Silesia; in 1921 Teschen was awarded to Poland, but the territory containing mines was awarded to Czechoslovakia. The acquisition of new territories by Greece as a result of the Balkan Wars gave the country a total area of 41,933 sq. miles and an estimated population of 4,821,300; add to this, all of Greece's acquisitions in the World War, the Aegean Islands, Western Thrace, and the greater part of the province of Aden in Asia Minor, all that was left of Turkey in Europe, west of the Chatalja lines, and the Dodecanese Islands, and it will be seen that no nation has profited more than Greece in proportion to its pre-war importance, with its present population of six million. Luxembourg, formerly a Grand Duchy of Germany, has placed herself under the protection of Belgium.

The following countries remained unaffected by the World War as far as area is concerned:

Country	Area Square Miles	Population
Holland	12,582	6,831,231 (1920)
Spain	194,783	20,783,844 (1920)
Sweden	173,035	5,847,037 (1920)
Portugal	35,490	5,957,985 (1911)
Switzerland	15,976	3,861,508 (1920)
United Kingdom	121,633	45,516,259 (1911)
Norway	125,001	2,691,855 (1920)

Euthanasia (cf. C. E., V-630a), means a good or painless death. Its advocates would apply it in certain severe cases to (1) the sick, (2) the insane, and (3) the criminal. These three classes of unfortunates, according to the advocates of euthanasia, are doomed to a life of suffering and are a useless expense to the State, and for these reasons should not be permitted to live. Committees of experts would be appointed to visit the wards of hospitals and to decide what patients may possibly be cured. Those who have no prospects of recovery and suffer from severe maladies are to be given some drug or opiate which will render them unconscious and gradually bring on death. Other committees would visit insane asylums and penal institutions and destroy the lives of those who have no chance of a cure, or who can in no way become dependable members of society. "Euthanasia is just now being made the subject of nationwide discussion among physicians, ministers, philanthropists and criminologists. Efforts are being made in New York, Massachusetts, Ohio, and Missouri to have it legalized by law. Many physicians favor it. Many lawyers believe that as a legal issue the state possesses the moral and constitutional right to practice euthanasia" (Chicago Inter-Ocean, 16 March, 1913). "As the author has stood by the beds of consumptive or syphilitic children, he has wondered if it were kindness to keep life in the pain-racked body. Cure was out of the question so far as medical science now knows, and one wonders why days of pain should be added to days of pain. The same questions recur as one passes through the incurable wards of an almshouse, especially as one studies the cases of the cancer patients" (Werner's "American Charities," revised ed., p. 26). George Ives, in his "History of Penal Methods," concludes that: "All [criminals] who cannot ultimately lead useful, human, tolerably happy lives should be destroyed as soon as their condition has been determined."

The principal objection to this vicious doctrine is that God alone has the supreme dominion over human life. No committee of social workers or legislators may presume to trespass upon this right of the Creator. God is the author of life and it is for Him to decide when the service of His creatures in this world terminates. Any law authorizing a committee of physicians to enter institutions and do away with the lives of inmates would be invalid as it contravenes the higher law of God. A second argument against the application of this doctrine is the mental anguish and fear which it would bring to the unfortunate sick and suffering. Every inmate of a hospital or other institution for the sick and suffering would be in continual fear of death, and the mental suffering thus brought about would far exceed any physical pain to which the inmates are now subjected. It opens an avenue, too, for all forms of injustice towards the sick under the plea of ridding them of useless pain. Doctors and nurses who may become insane or sick owing to their devoted care to humanity, soldiers wounded or rendered insane by the terrible sacrifices for their country, civilians in every walk of life who have broken their health by their daily routine of duty; all these would be helplessly in the power of the committee of physicians. No physician or social worker has any moral right over life. They are to prolong life, lessen human suffering and promote the general welfare of the community. Human life is from God and belongs to God. No one may under any conditions directly take the life of an innocent person.

Evangelical Association. See ALBRIGHT BRETHREN.

Evangelical Church (in Prussia; cf. C. E., V-642d), has in recent years continued to disintegrate internally and has ceased to be a state church.

I. INTERNAL DISINTEGRATION.—Many scholars, officially members of the Evangelical Church, reject almost all dogmatic belief and deny the Divine origin of the Bible. They have adopted and teach some sort of creedless, Christless Christianity. Owing to the spread of their radical opinions and to the success of Socialist propaganda the tendency to secession has become very pronounced in the denomination. Before the separation of Church and State was effected thousands seceded annually and thousands more omitted to follow the same course, merely owing to the petty restrictions and formalities with which the State surrounded the proceedings leading to official secession. Within the denomination itself such profound antagonism exists between the liberal and the conservative element in theological disputes and religious practice that German Protestantism seems to be divided into contending factions. The conservatives insist on the acceptance by all church members of the confessions of faith and doctrinal standards hitherto considered as authoritative expressions of orthodox evangelical doctrine. The rejection of these should, according to them, entail exclusion from the church, for a church devoid of internal cohesion and held together solely by external means obviously constitutes a very peculiar religious society. Briefly, the conservatives look upon creeds and other doctrinal standards as binding on all members of the Evangelical Church.

The Liberals, however, emphatically dissent from this view. They hold confessions of faith to be in no wise obligatory, freely reject articles of belief and nevertheless refuse to give up their church membership. In their eyes creeds drawn up by fallible men must yield before the private interpretation of the Bible and no man who has possessed himself of a more "modern and progressive" understanding of the Scriptures can be forced out of the church by an appeal to written denominational tests. They pertinently cite the Evangelical Union as an instance where Calvinists and Lutherans were brought together in one state church and conclude that Liberals and Conservatives should find it possible to live together in the same organization. The Evangelical church is, in their opinion, not a society whose members hold identical beliefs, but an organization composed of persons who follow the dictates of their individual conscience and oppose the power of the Church of Rome. Although, as one of them stated, in point of belief it could only be said of them with certainty that they were not Catholics, they held that, without their own consent, they could not be excluded from the church.

In religious practice liberal or conservative minorities in certain parishes took matters into their own hands to secure the occasional services of ministers acceptable to them. The Liberals in certain predominantly conservative parishes invited Liberal clergymen to conduct services in public halls or other secular buildings. The conservative minority took similar action in some parishes to which they belonged. The competent ecclesiastical authorities either tolerated the innovation or protested without success. These divisions led some to the conclusion that the separation of the Church from the State would be the most practical solution of existing difficulties. The great majority of Evangelical Christians, however, held fast to the existing union, because as one Protestant writer frankly stated, union with the State was the only effective means to preserve the Evangelical Church from dissolution.

II. SEPARATION.—The World War seemed at first to have solidified Protestant sentiment in Germany. As it progressed, however, the bickerings of former days were again heard. With its issue so disastrous for Germany, separation from the State was suddenly forced on the Evangelical Church. The revolution which on 9 November, 1918, forced the abdication of the Kaiser and overturned the imperial government, also suppressed the official connection of the Evangelical Church with the Prussian State. Until then that Church represented the governing class of Prussia and formed a constituent part of the state organization. It was a denomination composed of government officials and out of touch with the masses. By the revolution the former political protection and financial assistance were withdrawn, the Church was thrown on its own resources and its members were given complete freedom to secede from it. According to the constitution of the German Republic published on 11 August, 1919, "there is no state religion. All inhabitants enjoy complete freedom of belief and of conscience. The free exercise of religion is guaranteed by the constitution and placed under the protection of the State" (articles 135, 137).

These clauses have made secession easy where it was formerly difficult; they have removed constraint so long in use in favor of the Evangelical Church; they have placed the latter in legal matters on a footing of equality with other denominations. The strength of the Church has been immensely impaired. While there is small likelihood that Evangelicals will in large numbers accept Catholicism, separation probably means disruption of a formerly centralized body. The World War and consequent German revolution have eliminated the Prussian state as the official protector of Protestantism at home and its unofficial leader abroad.

Since the introduction of separation attempts have been made in the German states to reorganize the Protestant Church. In Prussia they have not led to definitive results at the present writing. In Bavaria the Lutheran and Reformed Churches, after a century-old union, have given themselves separate church governments. In Baden also the ecclesiastical reorganization has been completed and the right attributed to a sufficiently numerous minority in a parish to select its own minister and hold separate services. In other States a new church constitution has likewise been adopted. A curious feature of the Brunswick and Mecklenburg-Schwerin constitutions is the institution of "bishops" as heads of these churches.

III. STATISTICS.—The German Empire had, in 1914, 66 million inhabitants, of whom 41 million were Protestants and over 24 million were Catholics. Owing to the losses sustained in the war and cessions imposed by the peace treaty the German Republic was reduced to 60,900,000 inhabitants, according to the census returns of 8 October, 1919. Further losses have since been incurred by the cession of part of Silesia to Poland in accordance with the decision of the League of Nations. The population of Germany is now scarcely 60,000,000, approximately 39,000,000 of these being Protestants and 19,000,000 Catholics. The decrease of several million in the Catholic population is accounted for by the cession of predominantly Catholic provinces to France and Poland through the treaty of Versailles (1919).

N. A. WEBER.

Evora, ARCHDIOCESE OF (ELBORENSIS), in the Province of Alentejo, Portugal. This see is filled by Most Rev. Manuel Mendes Da Conceição Santos, b. in the Diocese of Lisbon 13 December, 1873, chancellor of the cathedral at Guarda, doctor of divinity, appointed Bishop of Portalegra 9 December, 1915, promoted to the titular metropolitan see of Philippopolis and coadjutor of Evora 4 June, 1920. Upon the death of Agustin Eduardo Nunez (b. 31 March, 1849, d. 14 July, 1920) he succeeded to Evora 24 July following. In 1921 the Portuguese Government decorated him with the Cross of the Order of Christ. The census of 1900 showed the diocese to have a Catholic population of 206,518, 176 parishes, and 176 priests, while the statistics of 1903 credited it with 313 churches and 297 chapels.

Evreux, DIOCESE OF (EBROICENSIS), in the department of Eure, France, suffragan of Rouen. Upon the death of Rt. Rev. Philippe Meunier, 11 January, 1913, Rt. Rev. Louis-Jean Dechelette was transferred to succeed him 7 February, 1913. On 9 August, 1919, Bishop Dechelette was named by the Belgian king commander of the Order of Leopold. He died the following year, on 11 April, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Constantin Chauvin, born in Cossé-le-Vivien 1859, made his studies at Mayenne, Laval, and St. Sulpice in Paris, and was ordained in 1882. He served as professor of Holy Scripture at the Seminary of Laval, and rector of the lower seminary, and was named an honorary canon in 1900, a member of the Biblical Commission in 1903, titular chancellor and vicar general in 1907, and appointed bishop 30 July, 1920. The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with 323,651 Catholics, 73 parishes, 545 succursal parishes, and 41 vicariates formerly supported by the State. The diocese is dedicated to St. Taurin, and the cathedral and chapter to the Blessed Virgin.

Examination (cf. C. E., V-673d).—A local ordinary or religious superior who has granted a priest a license to preach after the required examination, may insist on a second examination later, if a doubt arises in connection with the orthodoxy of the preacher's teachings. Before appointing a priest to a parish, the local ordinary should test his knowledge by an examination held in his own and the synodal examiners' presence; but, with the synodal examiners' consent, he may dispense from the examination in case of a priest who is known to be skilled in theology; where, however, the provision of parishes is made by a concursus, that practice is to be continued until the Holy See decrees otherwise. If a parish priest is transferred at the request and wish of the ordinary, he should be re-examined; if the transfer is at his own request, the examination is optional; but no examination is needed when the transfer is forced. An ordinary may examine anyone before confirming or instituting him in any ecclesiastical office. All priests must, unless exempted by the local ordinary for just cause, be examined yearly in sacred science, for the three years following the completion of their studies; the matter for the examination and the manner in which it is to be held are determined by the ordinary; priests in religious orders are to be examined similarly by some of the fathers for a period of five years, after completing their studies, unless they are exempted by their higher superiors or when they are teaching theology, canon law, or scholastic philosophy.

Examiners, SYNODAL (cf. C. E., V-676).—In each diocese there are to be not less than four nor more than twelve synodal examiners, the Code leaving the exact number in each instance to the discretion of the bishop. The names of the examiners are proposed in the synod by the bishop and approved by the synod. If any of them should die or vacate his position in the interval between two synods, the bishop, on consulting the cathedral chapter appoints a substitute. Formerly, if the number of examiners fell below six more than a year after the synod was held, the bishop had to obtain leave from the Holy See to fill the vacancies. After holding office for ten years or less, if a new synod occurs sooner, their tenure of office ceases, but they may complete any work they have begun, and may be re-appointed. They cannot be removed by the bishop, except for grave cause and after consulting the cathedral chapter. The chief duties of the synodal examiners are to examine candidates for parochial benefices, and to assist the bishop in the proceedings concerning the removal or transference of parish priests; they may be appointed also by the bishop to conduct examinations for faculties and for the recently ordained priests. An examiner may be a parochial consultor, but he may not act in both capacities in the one case.

Excommunication (cf. C. E., V-678).—The sixth canon of the Code of Canon Law, which came into force in 1918, declares that all former ecclesiastical punishments, whether spiritual or temporal, medicinal or vindicatory, latæ or ferendæ sententiæ, not mentioned in the Code have been abolished. The excommunications contained in the Constitution "Apostolicæ Sedis," for instance, and set forth in detail in the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA, V-686 sqq., have now lost their force, except in as far as they have been re-enacted in the Code.

Excommunications are now divided into five categories, according as they are reserved: (a) very especially to the pope; (b) specially to the pope; (c) simply to the pope; (d) to the bishop; (e) to no one. Of these the first class, though hitherto admitted by canonists, was not formally recognized by the law.

I—Excommunication very specially reserved to the pope is incurred by: (a) Those who throw away the consecrated species or carry them off or retain them for an evil purpose (can. 2320). This is a new excommunication.

(b) Anyone who lays violent hands on the pope; such a culprit is, moreover, by the very fact of his crime, an excommunicate vitandus (can. 2343). Under the Code, attacks on the person of the pope are punished more severely than before. It may be noticed also that this is the only case in which a culprit becomes an excommunicate vitandus (i. e., one to be shunned) without a sentence or denunciation.

(c) A confessor who absolves or pretends to absolve an accomplice in a sin against chastity, except when there is a really grave danger of death (in articulo mortis, at the point of death, usually so interpreted in this matter by canonists) and no other priest is present, even one lacking approbation, who could hear the confession without great danger of giving scandal or of ruining the reputation of either or both of the culprits, or if the dying person refuses to confess to another priest. Furthermore, the same penalty would be incurred if the guilty priest heard the confession of his accomplice, who at his direct or indirect instigation omitted mentioning the sin from which he or she had not been already absolved (can. 2367).

(d) A confessor who presumes to violate the seal of confession directly (can. 2369). This is a new censure, enacted not to correct an abuse, as violation of the seal of confession has occurred only extremely rarely in history, but to reaffirm to the world the sanctity of the secret of any penitent mentioned in the confessional.

II—Excommunication specially reserved to the pope is incurred by: (a) All apostates from the Christian faith, all heretics and schismatics (can. 2314). Those who gave credence to, received, countenanced, or defended apostates or heretics formerly incurred this penalty expressly; they are now immune, except in so far as they have incurred guilt as co-operators. Though absolution from this censure is reserved in the forum of conscience to the pope, yet, if the crime of apostasy, heresy, or schism has been brought before a local ordinary in the external forum in any way, even by voluntary confession, he but not a vicar-general without a special mandate, may by his ordinary power, absolve the culprit in the external forum, and then any confessor can absolve him from the sin. Before the local ordinary grants absolution from the censure the culprit must abjure his error in the presence of the ordinary or of his delegate and of at least two witnesses. This power of the bishop to absolve in the external forum is ordinary and can be delegated; in the United States it is customary to delegate it to priests who receive converts to relieve them from the necessity of asking for faculties in each case. If a person is suspected of heresy, he is to receive a canonical admonition; and if he stubbornly neglects the warning and minor penalties that may be imposed, he is finally to be deemed a heretic, and as such he incurs this form of excommunication.

(b) Those who publish books written by apostates, heretics, or schismatics, advocating apostasy, heresy, or schism—the censure is incurred only when the work has been actually published—and all who defend or knowingly and without due permission read or keep those books or others prohibited by name by Apostolic letters (can. 2318). The former legislation mentioned the printers, but not the publishers, of these forbidden books as incurring excommunication, and made no reference to writings of schismatics or to works upholding apostasy or schism. It should be noted that the authors whose works may not be published, or knowingly defended, read or kept, in virtue of this particular canon without the incurring of excommunication are those only who are or have been Christians.

(c) Anyone who not being a priest pretends to celebrate Mass or hear sacramental confession (can. 2322); a new censure.

(d) Those who are guilty of certain crimes in connection with papal elections referred to by Pius X in his Constitution "Vacante Sede Apostolica" of 25 December, 1904 (can. 2330). The following persons are therein mentioned as incurring excommunication: Cardinals who during the conclave, if not prevented by ill-health, do not obey the signal when given for the third time to assemble for a scrutiny (§37); any person who sends into or more specially out from the conclave any written or printed matter which has not been submitted for examination to the secretary of the Sacred College and of the prelates in charge of the conclave; it is, moreover, absolutely forbidden for anyone to send daily papers or periodicals from the conclave (§50); cardinals or attendants present at the conclave who violate the obligation of secrecy regarding the election or what takes place in the conclave or place of election (§51); cardinals who reveal to their attendants or anyone else matters relating directly or indirectly to the voting, or to the proceedings or decrees of the assemblies of the cardinals held before or during conclave (§52); those who are guilty of simony (§79); any persons, even cardinals, who, during the lifetime of the pope and without his knowledge, presume to treat of the election of his successor or to promise their vote, or who discuss the matter or come to any decision regarding it at private meetings (§80); anyone taking part in the conclave who, even as the result of a mere desire, has undertaken to propose the Veto on behalf of any civil power in any way to any or all of the cardinals before or during the conclave; and what is said of the Veto applies to every kind of attempt by a lay person or by the secular power to meddle in a papal election (§81); cardinals who agree or promise or in any way bind themselves to give or refuse their vote to anyone—this, of course, does not refer to the discussions that take place during the vacancy (§82); and finally, anyone who dares to disregard letters written by the pope after his acceptance of office but before his consecration (§88). Except where there is danger of death absolution from the excommunication inflicted for these offenses can be given by the pope alone, even the major penitentiary being without faculties for granting it.

(e) All those, not excluding even sovereigns, bishops, and cardinals, who appeal from the laws, decrees, or mandates of a reigning pontiff to a general council (can. 2332). The new legislation, unlike the old, makes no distinction between present and future councils; it may be noted, too, that nothing is said expressly in the canon about those who co-operate by giving aid, counsel, or countenance to such appeals.

(f) Those who have recourse to any lay power to impede the letters or documents of the Holy See or of its legate, or who directly or indirectly prohibit their promulgation or execution, or who on account of these letters or documents injure or intimidate those interested in them or any other person.

(g) Those who publish laws, mandates, or decrees against the liberty or rights of the Church; or who, directly or indirectly, impede the exercise of ecclesiastical jurisdiction in the internal or external forum, having recourse for that purpose to any lay power (can. 2334). This varies from the former censure by including mandates; again, the impeding of ecclesiastical jurisdiction referred to must result from the recourse to the civil authority; if it resulted from threats or violence on the part of the offender it would not come under this canon.

(h) Those who, without due permission of the Holy See, dare to cite before a lay judge, a cardinal, a papal legate, or a higher official of the Roman Curia in matters pertaining to their own office, or who thus cite their own ordinary (can. 2341). There are fewer persons protected by this enactment than under the old legislation. The censure may be incurred not merely by a plaintiff, but also by a judge, though the latter would ordinarily be immune as having usually no discretion in the matter; being compelled by law to act when requested, his action would not come within the category of those referred to when the expression "dare, ausus fuerit" is used.

(i) Those who lay violent hands on cardinals, legates, patriarchs, archbishops or bishops, whether residential or titular (can. 2343).

(j) Those who usurp or retain personally or otherwise the property or rights of the Roman Church (can. 2345). While accomplices are not mentioned in this canon, as they were in the Constitution "Apostolicæ Sedis," they, too, may, at times, still incur this penalty (can. 2209; 2231).

(k) Those who forge or falsify letters, decrees, or rescripts of the Holy See, or who knowingly make use of such letters (can. 2360). By forgery is meant the fabrication of an entire document or the affixing of the official seal to a document fabricated by another; falsification, on the other hand, means the alteration of an authentic document by suppression, erasures, writing over, or substitution, in a way that notably modifies its meaning. Under the pre-Code legislation forgery did not entail this excommunication, though the publication of the falsified letters did; on the other hand, those who knowingly made use of the falsified documents incurred only excommunication reserved to the ordinary.

(l) Those who directly or indirectly denounce a confessor to his superiors on a false charge of solicitation (can. 2363). This is a new censure, from which absolution cannot be given until the culprit formally retracts the charge, makes all the reparation possible, and accepts a severe penance.

III—Excommunication simply reserved to the pope is incurred by: (a) Those who traffic in indulgences (can. 2327); formerly traffickers in other spiritual favors besides indulgences were similarly punished.

(b) Those who join the Freemasons or other associations of the same kind that plot against the Church or the legitimate civil authorities (can. 2335); the penalty was formerly directed also expressly against all who countenanced these sects in any way and all who did not inform against the secret chiefs or leaders.

(c) Those who presume to absolve from excommunications specially or very specially reserved to the Holy See without having the requisite faculty (can. 2338).

(d) Those who help or favor anyone in connection with a crime for which he was declared an excommunicate vitandus, and all clerics who knowingly and freely communicate with him in divinis and admit him to the Divine offices (can. 2335).

(e) Those who, without leave of the Holy See, dare to cite before a lay judge a titular or residential bishop (other than their own), or an abbot or prelate nullius, or any of the highest superiors of religious orders approved or lauded by the Holy See (can. 2341).

(f) All persons of whatever kind, condition, or sex, who violate the canonical enclosure or cloister of nuns having solemn vows (moniales), by penetrating into their monasteries without lawful permission, and those who introduce or admit them; also all women who enter the enclosure of a regular order of men, and superiors and all others who introduce or admit them, or girls whatever their age may be; and, finally, nuns with solemn vows who leave their enclosure unlawfully, that is even for a short time under any pretext, without leave of the Holy See, except when they are in imminent danger of death or of some very grave evil (can. 2342). The wording of this section varies slightly from that of the old law; the censure for violating convent enclosure was formerly incurred by those who had not attained puberty; they are now, however, exempt from all censures. This canon, it may be noted, refers to papal enclosure exclusively.

(g) Those who presume to usurp and convert to their own use, directly or indirectly, church property of any kind, or who prevent those who have a right to receive the income from obtaining it (can. 2346). The excommunication cannot be removed till the culprit restores the property or removes the obstacle to the reception of the income.

(h) Those who fight duels or who challenge or accept challenges thereto or who aid or countenance duelling, or who are present designedly at such combats and permit them to take place or do not prevent them as far as lies in their power (can. 2351).

(i) Clerics in major orders and regulars and nuns having a solemn vow of chastity who presume to contract marriage, even civilly, and also all persons who presume to attempt marriage with them (can. 2388); formerly this censure was reserved to the ordinary.

(j) Those who are guilty of simony in connection with any ecclesiastical office, dignity, or benefice (can. 2392).

(k) A vicar capitular or any other person who, directly or indirectly, takes away, destroys, conceals or substantially changes any document belonging to the episcopal curia (can. 2405); this is a new censure.

IV—Excommunications reserved to the ordinary are incurred by: (a) Catholics who, even when a Catholic service has preceded or is to follow, renew or give their matrimonial consent personally or by proxy before a non-Catholic minister, unless when for the procuring of merely civil effects in accordance with the civil law they go before him purely as a civil registrar; or who marry with an explicit or implicit agreement to educate any or all of the children outside the Catholic Church; or who knowingly presume to offer their children to non-Catholic ministers for baptism; or parents or guardians who knowingly hand over their children to be educated or instructed in a non-Catholic religion (can. 2319). Some of these parties may, through stubbornness in their evil conduct, become suspected of heresy and so ultimately incur excommunication specially reserved to the pope (see above, II [a]).

(b) Those who manufacture or who knowingly sell, distribute or expose false relics for public veneration (can. 2326); this is a new censure.

(c) Those who lay violent hands on religious of either sex, or on clerics not mentioned above as protected by severer censures (can. 2350); the censure was formerly reserved simply to the pope.

(d) Those who efficaciously procure abortion, the mother not excepted (can. 2350); the censure has now been extended to include the mother.

(e) Religious of lay or non-exempt communities who leave their houses unlawfully with the intention of not returning (can. 2385); this is a new censure; if the religious belongs to an exempt order the censure is reserved to one of his higher superiors.

(f) Those who are members of a religious order or congregation and, who being professed with simple perpetual vows presume to contract even civil marriage; their partners also incur excommunication (can. 2388); this is a new censure.

V.—Excommunication reserved to no one is incurred by: (a) Authors and publishers who have books of Scripture or annotations or commentaries thereon printed without due permission (can. 2318); formerly it was the printers, not the publishers, who were expressly censured.

(b) Those who dare to order or compel the granting of ecclesiastical burial to infidels, apostates, heretics, schismatics or any other persons excommunicated or interdicted by a declaratory or condemnatory sentence (can. 2339); formerly this censure was imposed only in connection with the burial of notorious heretics or of persons excommunicated or placed under interdict by name.

(c) Those who knowingly omit obtaining the consent of the Holy See, when it is required by law, for alienating church property, and all those who take part in such a transaction by giving or receiving the property or authorizing its transfer (can. 2347).

(d) Anyone, no matter how exalted he may be, who in any way forces a person to become a cleric or to enter religion or to make his religious profession, whether simple or solemn, temporal or perpetual (can. 2352).

(e) Anyone who knowingly refuses to denounce to the proper ecclesiastical superiors within a month a priest by whom he or she has been solicited in confession; absolution from this censure must be refused until the party makes the formal charge or at least seriously promises to do so (can. 2368).

Under the Code régime no excommunicated person is a vitandus, that is, one to be shunned or boycotted, unless he has been excommunicated by name by the Holy See and the decree of excommunication has been made public, and unless, further, the decree or sentence declares him to be a vitandus. To this there is only one exception, namely, a person who lays violent hands on the pope becomes ipso facto excommunicated and a vitandus. It may be noted that not merely the reception of the sacraments, but also the use of the sacramentals, such as holy water or blessed candles, are forbidden to a vitandus, and even to any other excommunicated person after a condemnatory or declaratory sentence.

Exemption (cf. C. E., V-706b; XII-754b).—All regulars, including novices, but excluding nuns with solemn vows who are not subject to regular superiors, together with their houses and churches, are exempt from episcopal jurisdiction, except in the cases mentioned expressly in the Code. Among these exceptions we find that the bishop is entitled to pontificate, confirm and preach in exempt churches; he may investigate the moral and religious teaching given in their schools for externs, their oratories, and charitable or educational centers; he consecrates their holy places, their bells and their fixed altars; he acts as judge of first instance in suits between religious orders and settles urgent questions of collegiate precedence between them. Exempt religious have to obey his instructions regarding certain church matters, for instance, special prayers for the public weal, catechetical or Gospel instructions, public processions; they must obtain his permission to erect houses, to hear confessions of or preach to externs, to have public exposition of the Blessed Sacrament, to erect pious associations, to solicit alms, to publish books or to write for papers. Finally, it is the duty of the bishops to examine all female postulants, novices or temporarily professed before they take the next step in religion to see if they are acting freely and if they thoroughly understand the obligations they are about to assume. If a regular who is legitimately outside of his house returns after committing an offense he may be punished by the local ordinary, if his superior on being notified does not do so. A local ordinary must notify the Holy See if the superior of an exempt religious house fails to reform abuses, after his attention has been drawn to them; if the house is not yet fully formed and the abuses occur which cause scandal the local ordinary may, pending the reply from Rome, intervene to correct them. In the case of pontifical lay religious institutes, the local ordinary may and should see if the constitutions are enforced, the religious spirit upheld, the enclosure observed, and the sacraments duly received. He may and ought to visit hospitals, orphanages, and other such charitable institutions, even if they have been constituted legal persons and granted exemption, and, all customs to the contrary being reprobated, he has the right to an accounting from such institutes, even if they are exempt from his jurisdiction and right of visitation by the terms of their foundation or by prescription or apostolic privilege. A cardinal's chapel is exempt from episcopal visitation, as is a seminary from the jurisdiction of the parish priest.

VERMEERSCH-CREUSEN, Epit. jur. can., 618-24.

Extension Society of the United States of America, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH (cf. C. E., XIV-78c), an organization which collects in, and confines its benefits to, the United States of America and territory under the American flag, having been founded "to foster and extend the Catholic Faith; to develop the missionary spirit in the clergy and people; to assist in the erection of parish buildings for needy places; to contribute to the support of priests living in out-of-the-way localities and poverty-stricken districts; to extend the comforts of religion to pioneers; to supply altar plate and vestments for poor missions; to circulate Catholic literature; to educate or assist in the education of students who intend becoming missionary priests; to direct Catholic colonists to suitable localities."

ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT.—The Society was founded at a meeting held in the archiepiscopal residence in Chicago on 18 October, 1905, under the auspices of the late Archbishop Quigley. Four members of the hierarchy, nine priests and six laymen, who had become convinced of the necessity of an organization which would act as a channel between the charity of the cities and the needs of scattered Catholics, were present at the inaugural meeting, at which the Archbishop was appointed chancellor, and the Rev. Francis Clement Kelley, president. No money was available for the purposes of establishment, and the rectory at Lapeer, Michigan, where Father Kelley was pastor, became the first headquarters of the Society. The late Bishop Hennessy, of Wichita, was the first member of the hierarchy to give his encouragement to the plan which subsequently developed, of which Rev. F. C. Kelley was the originator. His mission at Lapeer was handicapped by poverty, and in order to support his work he undertook a lecture tour which brought him into touch with priests in the West and South, who were struggling against even more adverse conditions. He saw that there was no one to plead their cause, and that their constant anxiety concerning the problems of existence was minimizing the effectiveness of their apostolic labors. He wrote an article on the situation, which was published in the "Ecclesiastical Review," and evoked Bishop Hennessy's encouragement, which in turn brought about the inaugural meeting.

The Society met with an immediate and generous response, and at the second meeting of officers it was determined to move the headquarters to Chicago, where they would be more readily available, better able to cope with the increasing mass of work, and where the Society could claim serious attention as a national work. The president was released from parochial duties to devote his exclusive attention to the growth of the Extension movement.

The Holy See gave recognition to the Society, when it was less than two years old, in the form of a letter (7 June, 1907), addressed to its chancellor, and in which Pope Pius X spoke of the work as "most opportune in a country where, owing to the multitudes of immigrants of various nationalities, a great and extending field lies open for the up-building of the Kingdom of God. And the more so as the endeavors of associations hostile to the Catholic name are so active and so widespread. This hostile influence, unless coped with unceasingly and prudently, will do no little harm, especially among the simple folk of rural districts, to the happy growth of the Church in America." The Pope approved and ratified the Society and granted perpetually the following privileges and indulgences:

(1) St. Philip Neri shall be the patron of the Society; (2) a plenary indulgence to each member on the day of admission, on the feasts of St. Philip Neri, St. Francis of Sales, St. Rose of Lima, the Holy Apostles, and at the hour of death; (3) to every member of the Society an indulgence of seven years and seven quarantines for every good work done in the interests of the Society; (4) an indulgence of 300 days to all the members, as often as they piously recite the formula, "St. Philip, pray for us"; (5) the above indulgences, plenary and partial, may be applied to the souls in purgatory; (6) priests who are moderators or directors of the Society may enjoy a privileged altar three times a week; founders and life members, six times a week.

By an Apostolic Brief (9 June, 1910) Pius X erected the Society into a canonical institution, appointed a Cardinal Protector, fixed the headquarters in Chicago, appointed the Archbishop of Chicago the Society's chancellor ex officio, and reserved to the Holy Father the appointment, every five years, of the Society's president.

In a letter (12 April, 1919), signed by the Cardinal Secretary of State, Pope Benedict XV, "desiring to give to your Society a new mark of his particular consideration and esteem," granted the privilege of the use by the Society in its official emblem of the papal insignia.

ORGANIZATION.—Membership in the Society and participation in the privileges extended to it are secured by contributing to the Society's funds directly, or indirectly by subscribing to "Extension Magazine." The magazine was established a year after the foundation of the Society, "to foster the missionary spirit," and through it the needs of the missions and missionaries in America have been made known and, to some extent, supplied. In addition to "subscribing membership," the Society has annual memberships ($10 a year), life memberships ($1,000 in cash or in ten equal annual payments), and founderships ($5,000 in cash or in ten equal annual payments). Founderships and life memberships may be established through wills. Founderships bestow the privilege of membership in the Board of Governors. The Society has one thousand Masses offered annually for its members, living and dead. "Extension Magazine" began as a quarterly and developed into a monthly. Its circulation and influence increased steadily, and in 1919 it had reached a certified circulation of 287,000, and employed nearly 300 circulation agents.

Auxiliaries were formed in the "Order of Martha" and the "Child Apostles" to encourage personal service on behalf of the home missions. The "Order of Martha" is organized in "households," and its members have been responsible for building many chapels and schools, besides supplying vestments and linens of home workmanship for the missions. The pennies of the children have built ten chapels (1922).

A church goods department was created for the collection of used vestments and other church furnishings, and for their distribution after suitable repair. In one year (1921) goods estimated at the value of $25,000 were thus salvaged for use in poor missions.

A Mass intention department was opened to supply the machinery necessary for the passing of surplus intentions from the city priests to the poor missions where they were needed, and where they are, very often, the only means of subsistence afforded the missionaries. The Mass intentions which passed through the Society in 1921 totaled $147,044.14. In 1919, in a period of national anxiety, they reached $240,164.10. Mass intentions are distributed through diocesan ordinaries and through provincials of communities, and no deduction is made for administration.

Extension Press was created to meet the demand for an efficient Catholic mail order house for the supply of books and articles of devotion. Of the goods despatched 95% are shipped to points at which there are no Catholic book stores. Extension Press has published several books, and prints illustrated calendar for which the annual sale is about 200,000. The profits of this department and of "Extension Magazine" benefit the Society's general work.

GOVERNMENT.—The Society is governed by its chancellor (the Archbishop of Chicago). A Board of Governors, consisting of bishops, priests, and laymen, for a place on which any member of the American hierarchy is eligible, meets annually in November to review work and discuss policies. The priests and laymen on the board are chosen for their representative character, and founders are entitled to membership. An executive committee is elected at the annual meeting, and consists, besides the chancellor and the president, who are ex officio members, of one bishop and four business men. This committee alone has power to allocate the Society's funds. No member of the board or of the executive committee receives remuneration for such service. The immediate direction of the Society and of "Extension Magazine" is in the hands of the president, who is assisted by priests and laymen. The books of the Society and of the magazine are audited quarterly by a certified public accountant, and annually by an auditing committee.

WORK ACCOMPLISHED.—The Society's annual collections were:

1906..... 34,080.79	1914..... 265,531.08
1907..... 41,338.93	1915..... 335,899.58
1908..... 75,481.64	1916..... 343,921.30
1909..... 121,809.16	1917..... 384,316.97
1910..... 176,395.20	1918..... 465,360.53
1911..... 307,967.15	1919..... 530,701.62
1912..... 268,984.13	1920..... 575,561.18

These figures include the Mass intentions handled by the Society.

To the end of the fiscal year of 1921 the Society had assisted in the building of 2074 structures, of which 1932 were churches, 98 schools and convents for the accommodation of teaching Sisters, and 44 priests' houses. The Society's policy is to assist the local Catholics to help themselves, and to foster in them a spirit of responsibility. Thus a portion of the cost of erection is guaranteed by the Society when the need of a structure has been demonstrated, and the money is paid when the roof is on the building. Buildings assisted in this way have been erected in forty-three states of the Union, and also in the Philippines, Porto Rico, Alaska, and Canada. Texas stands first (1921) with 313, and South Dakota, Louisiana, New Mexico, Oregon, Montana, and Minnesota have each over one hundred. About half of all Catholic churches erected in America in recent years have been assisted by the Society, in 1919, the percentage aided being as high as 88.04. The reports of the missionaries, submitted with applications for assistance, show that nearly half a million Catholics have benefited by this constructional work.

Mission schools have been helped to some extent. Missionary grants have been made to bishops for the development of poor dioceses. Students for the priesthood are being assisted, the method found most practical being that of working through the bishops of missionary dioceses. Chapel cars have been used with success in the West and South, the plan being to send the cars to churchless places, where a halt is made and a mission given. Where experience shows the need of a chapel, efforts are made toward that end, and dozens of chapels mark the trail of the chapel car. The Society has three chapel cars named "St. Anthony," "St. Peter," and "St. Paul." At first they were transported free by the railroad companies, but the privilege was withdrawn during the great war. Motor chapels were also used experimentally, but though successful in their mission it was found that automobiles were unsuited to the rough usage to which they were subjected by the necessity of journeying long distances.

The headquarters officials of the Society are (1922): President, Rt. Rev. Magr. Francis C. Kelley, D.D., LL.D.; vice-presidents, Rev. William D. O'Brien (general secretary); the Rev. Eugene J. McGuinness (director of Order of Martha and Child Apostles).

The Catholic Church Extension Society of Canada, which has headquarters in Toronto, was inspired by the success of the American movement. It works on lines identical with those of the parent body, but is autonomous. Cf. "The Story of Extension," by Rt. Rev. F. C. Kelley, published serially in "Extension Magazine," from May, 1920, to April, 1922.

Extreme Unction (cf. C. E., V-716).—Any priest, but only a priest, can administer extreme unction validly; the ordinary minister is the parish priest of the place where the invalid is, but in case of necessity any priest can act with the reasonably presumed leave of the parish priest or local ordinary, and, indeed, is bound in charity to do so. The chief cathedral dignitary or canon available is to administer extreme unction to a sick bishop; a clerical religious superior is the proper minister for those who live day and night in his house, as is the confessor or his substitute, for nuns with solemn vows (moniales), but in other lay communities extreme unction is to be given by the local parish priest or a chaplain specially appointed by the bishop.

Extreme unction cannot (non potest) be repeated in the same illness, unless the invalid after being anointed rallies and later again falls into danger of death. It is not lawful to neglect extreme unction, and the greatest care should be taken in order that the sick may receive it while fully conscious; it should be administered unconditionally to those who are unconscious, if they have previously asked for it at least implicitly. In case of necessity the anointing of one sense, or more correctly of the forehead, with the prescribed shorter formula is sufficient, but when the danger is passed the separate anointings are to be supplied. The anointing of the feet may for good cause, but the anointing of the loins must always be omitted. Except in a case of grave necessity the holy oil must be applied by the minister's hand, and not by means of an instrument.

F

Fabre, JEAN-HENRI-CASIMIR, entomologist and natural historian, b. at St. Léons, France, in September, 1823; d. at Sérignan 11 October, 1915; son of Antoine and Victoire (Salgues) Fabre. He received his elementary education at a school in his native village kept by his godfather, and later entered the lycée at Rodez, where he made rapid progress, being especially attracted by Virgil's "Bucolics" and "Georgics." He then proceeded to the Normal College of Vacluse, where he received his diploma at the age of eighteen; a little later began his career as teacher at Carpentras. While thus occupied he won his licentiate in mathematical sciences and was appointed professor of physics and chemistry in the lycée of Ajaccio. Fabre had displayed a deep interest in plants and animals from his earliest youth. While in Corsica he met Esprit Requien, director of the museum of Avignon, and accompanied him on his scientific expeditions. By Requien he was introduced to Horace Moquin-Tandon, director of the botanical gardens at Toulouse, who gave him his first and only lesson in natural history, and counselled him to devote himself to the study of plants and animals. It was, however, a pamphlet by Léon Dufour, the naturalist of Les Landes, that led him to devote himself to the study of insects. In 1852 he was transferred to the lycée of Avignon, where his every spare moment was devoted to natural history. In 1858 he won his licentiate in natural sciences in the Faculty of Toulouse and a little later the doctorate. He had hoped to win a university chair, but it was not so decreed. In 1870 mainly through the hatred of the secretaries and the envious he lost his position at the lycée, and retired to Orange. In 1879 he withdrew to Sérignan, where he lived till his death, carrying on his wonderful experiments and observations, and writing his immortal works. Fabre, who was mainly self-taught, had a brilliant mind, and was possessed of wonderful perseverance, and keenness of observation. Unlike so many scientific writers, he dwelt and conversed with nature, and read her book incessantly. As a result his Catholic faith grew only stronger: "I can't say I believe in God," he says: "I see Him. Without Him I understand nothing; without Him all is darkness. Not only have I retained this conviction, I have aggravated or ameliorated it, whichever you please. Every period has its manias. I regard atheism as a mania. It is the malady of the age. You could take my skin from me more easily than my faith in God."

Fabre speaks with great respect and sympathy of Darwin, who admired his entomological knowledge; but his theory of evolution he rejected emphatically as mere theory incompatible with the evidence of the facts he had discovered. He had hoped to convert Darwin, but the great English scientist died before the second volume of the "Souvenirs" was published. Until 1910 Fabre's name was little known outside scientific circles; to-day his fame is worldwide. In that year Sweden and France paid him honor long due. He received the Linnæan medal of the Royal Academy of Sweden; the French Academy conferred on him its literary award, the Née prize, and France unanimously recommended him for the Nobel Prize, and Rostand wrote of him as "one of the purest glories of France, the profound and racy poet, the Virgil of the insects, who has brought us to our knees in the press. . . ." His hermitage at Sérignan became a pilgrimage for the political, literary and scientific world, and he was granted a pension of 2000 francs a year. His wife, who had borne eight children, his collaborators, died in July, 1912.

Fabre's first publication was a memoir in the "Annales des sciences naturelles" on the predatory hymenoptera, which merited him one of the prizes of the Institute of France and excited the astonishment of Darwin and Dufour, and was the forerunner of many other brilliant essays. Meanwhile he wrote an enormous number of elementary treatises on mathematics and natural science. In 1879 appeared the first volume of his great entomological masterpiece, his "Souvenirs entomologiques," which reveal his acuteness of observation, his vigor of thought and enthusiasm, and wherein he studies the insect living its life, and examines its instincts, its habits, its passions, its aptitudes, and replaces the prevalent standpoint of morphology and physiology by that of biology and psychology. Unlike so many moderns his method is strictly experimental, to a large degree it was original, and in his investigating he devised most delicate and difficult procedures, by which he made the insects reveal their secrets. The "Souvenirs" have appeared in English in separate volumes under the following title "The Life of the Spider," "The Life of the Fly," "The Mason-Bees," "Bramble Bees and Others," "The Hunting Wasps," "The Life of the Caterpillar," "The Life of the Grasshopper," "The Sacred Beetle and Others," "The Mason-Wasps," "The Glow-Worm and Other Beetles," "More Hunting Wasps," "The Life of the Weevil," "Insect Adventures" (all published by Dodd Mead, of New York).

Fabriziano and Matelica, DIOCESE OF (FABRIANENSIS ET MATHELICENSIS; cf. C. E., V-744a), re-established and united to the see of Matelica by Pius VI 8 July, 1785, situated in the province of Ancona (Central Italy), directly subject to the Holy See. The bishop, Rt. Rev. Louis Ermini, b. in Rome 13 December, 1856, made a private chamberlain 27 November, 1903, prothonotary apostolic supernumerary 25 October, 1905, coadjutor canon at the church of St. John Lateran, deputy to the monasteries of Rome in 1905, assistant secretary at the Council 20 October, 1908; spiritual director of the Pius Seminary, appointed titular Bishop of Amatha 30 December, 1908, and auxiliary of Porto and Santa Rufina, consecrated bishop by Cardinal Respighi 31 January, 1909, transferred to Caiazzo 4 December, 1914; proclaimed 22 January, 1915; transferred to Fabrizio at the Consistory of 30 June, 1921, succeeding Rt. Rev. Andrea Cassulo, retired. There are at present (1922) in the diocese 35 parishes, 103 churches, 40 secular and 10 regular priests, 3 monasteries for women, 1 abbey, 1 convent for men, 10 lay brothers, 34 Sisters, 1 seminary with 18 seminarians, 1 elementary school with 120 pupils, 1 asylum with 180 inmates. Four public institutions receive Government aid. Fifteen associations are organized among the clergy and laity, and a weekly journal, "L'Azione," is published.

During the World War three chaplains served in the army, one of whom was decorated; war orphans were cared for by the clergy and laity.

Faculties, CANONICAL (cf. C. E., V-748a).—For nearly three centuries it has been customary for the Holy See, owing to the distance of so many of the dioceses from Rome, as well as to varying local conditions, to grant bishops, vicars apostolic, and prefects apostolic throughout the world, according to their needs, extra faculties or powers set forth in special forms or schedules and valid for various definite periods. As Canon 4 of the Code stated that acquired rights, privileges, and indulgences, hitherto granted to physical or moral persons by the Apostolic See, which were still in use and had not been recalled, were to remain in force unless they had been expressly withdrawn in the Code, it was concluded that the various formulae were to remain unaffected. However, on 25 April, 1918, a few weeks before the Code went into effect, the Congregation of the Consistory issued the decree "Proxima sacra," which said that in as much as the general law expressed in the Code now conferred on ordinaries very many of the powers conceded heretofore as a privilege through the formulae, sufficient certainly to meet the average needs of a diocese, the indulgences previously granted by the Holy See in Brief or formulae for periods of three, five, ten, or twenty-five years, would cease from 18 May, 1918. It was provided the faculties granted to ordinaries for special reasons and those given by the Sacred Penitentiary were not to be affected by the decree. Furthermore, notwithstanding the dispensing power granted by the Code in regard to matrimonial impediments when death was imminent or in a casus perplexus, local ordinaries in America, the Philippines, the East Indies, Russia, and Africa, excluding the Mediterranean littoral, were authorized to dispense during five years, beginning 18 May, 1918, from all the minor and all but two of the major matrimonial impediments of ecclesiastical law, and to grant sanationes in radice for marriages invalid through any of the impediments of minor grade.

Faenza, DIOCESE OF (FAVENTINENSIS; cf. C. E., V-751b), in the province of Ravenna, suffragan of Bologna, has a Catholic population of 103,962. The present (1922) bishop, Rt. Rev. Vincenzo Bacchi, b. at Castelfranco dell' Emilia in the Diocese of Bologna 1 August, 1854, served as Secretary of the episcopal council, archdeacon of the cathedral, and pro-vicar general, named a prelate of the pontifical throne 1905, consecrated titular Bishop of Myndos 16 September, 1906, proclaimed 6 December following, and made auxiliary at Bologna, transferred to Faenza 2 December, 1912, succeeding Mgr. Gioacchino Cantagalli (b. 18 August, 1825; d. 13 August, 1912), who was dean of the bishops of Italy. The statistics for 1920 credit the diocese with 116 parishes, 40 seminarians, 20 Brothers, 290 Sisters, 164 churches or chapels.

Faguet, EMILE, author and academician, b. at La Roche-sur-Yon, Vendée, France, 1847; d. in Paris in 1916. He was educated at the Lycée Charlemagne and l'Ecole Normale. After teaching for some time at Bordeaux and La Rochelle he went to Paris, and in 1890 became professor of poetry at the university. In 1900 he was elected a member of the French Academy. He was the author of: "La Tragédie au XVI^e Siècle," "Le Théâtre Contemporain," "Dix-huitième Siècle," "Histoire de la Littérature française," "Tropes Littéraires," "Les Préjugés Nécessaires," "Monseigneur Dupanloup, un Grand Evêque," and others. He directed his criticisms especially to the literatures of the seventeenth century, interest in which he did much to revive. He also wrote on the modern drama, politics, and philosophy.

Falconio, DIOMEDE, Cardinal, b. at Pescocotanzo in the Abruzzi, 1842; d. in Rome, 17 February, 1917. He became a Franciscan in Italy but was ordained priest in the United States and subsequently became professor, vice-president and president of St. Bonaventure's College, Allegheny, Pa., and at a later period diocesan chancellor of Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, and administrator. He returned to Italy in 1883, and was elected Provincial of the Franciscans in the Abruzzi. In 1889 the general chapter in Rome chose him as procurator general and in 1892 he was consecrated Bishop of Lacedonia and three years later was translated to the Archbishopric of Acerenza. In 1899 he was sent as Apostolic Delegate to Canada and received a third archiepiscopal title of Larissa and from 1902 till 1911 he occupied the post of Apostolic Delegate at Washington, was made cardinal priest in 1911 and cardinal bishop in 1914. During his stay in the United States he became a naturalized citizen of the Republic.

Fall River, DIOCESE OF (RIVERORMENSIS; cf. C. E., V-771b), comprises an area of 1194 sq. miles in the State of Massachusetts, U. S. A. On 19 September, 1907, the second bishop of the diocese, Rt. Rev. Daniel Francis Feehan, was consecrated, and still fills the see. During recent years the diocese lost by death several active workers among its clergy: Rev. Simon A. O'Rourke, Jr. Lt. in the U. S. Navy and chaplain of the Charlestown Navy Yard, d. 20 September, 1918; Chaplain John B. De Valles, d. 12 May, 1920; and Rt. Rev. Hugh J. Smith, pastor of St. Lawrence's Church, New Bedford, d. 4 February, 1921.

The Catholic population of the diocese numbers about 177,000, comprising a cosmopolitan community, largely French and Portuguese. Various charitable institutions are conducted: St. Ann's hospital at Fall River, directed by the Dominican Sisters of Charity of the Presentation; 3 orphan asylums under the Sisters of Mercy, Sisters of Charity (Grey Nuns), and Sisters of St. Francis respectively; and a home for the aged, as well as much charitable work done by the St. Vincent de Paul Society. There are 76 parishes, 22 missions, 2 monasteries, 147 secular and 24 regular clergy, 321 nuns, 2 high schools, 4 academies with an attendance of 600 girls, and 30 elementary schools with an attendance of 13,215.

Fano, DIOCESE OF (FANENSIS; cf. C. E., V-785a), in the province of Pesaro, Central Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Giustino Sanchini, b. 1 November, 1860, in Saluccio in the Diocese of Rimini, served as professor of moral theology in the seminary, became chancellor and rector of the Cathedral at Rimini, appointed Bishop of Citta di Castello, 12 July, 1909, declined, and was re-elected Bishop of Fano, 6 June, 1916; proclaimed 7 December following, succeeding Mgr. Vincenzo Franceschini, b. 26 December, 1844, d. 29 March, 1916. The diocesan statistics for 1920 are as follows: 45 parishes, 101 secular and 15 regular clergy, 35 seminarians, 20 lay Brothers, 70 sisters, 144 churches and chapels; the Catholic population numbers 65,273.

Fargo, DIOCESE OF (FARGENSIS; cf. C. E., V-786d), in North Dakota, suffragan of St. Paul, formerly embraced the whole State of North Dakota. A portion of this territory was taken in 1909 to form the Diocese of Bismarck, leaving an area of 34,899 sq. miles to the Diocese of Fargo. The first bishop of the diocese, Rt. Rev. John Shanley (b. 4 January, 1852, d. 16 July, 1909), was succeeded by Rt. Rev. James O'Reilly, b. 10 October, 1857, ordained 24 June, 1882, appointed bishop 18 December, 1909, consecrated 19 May, 1910.

According to 1922 statistics it has a Catholic population of 69,872, 97 parishes, 177 churches, 79 missions, 57 stations, 111 secular priests, 1 lay brother, 19 seminarians, 5 high schools with 503 pupils, 7 academies, 26 elementary schools, 1 orphanage, 5 hospitals; the ministry of the priests in public institutions is unrestricted. The Indian Industrial School, in charge of the Grey Nuns, receives government rates. The Knights of Columbus and various parish societies are established in the diocese. The men of the diocese were well represented in the service, and 102 gave up their lives for the cause.

Farley, JOHN MURPHY, Cardinal, Archbishop of New York, b. at Newtown Hamilton, County Armagh, Ireland, on 20 April, 1842; d. at New York on 17 September, 1918. He emigrated to the United States in 1859, and continued his education at Saint John's College, Fordham, New York, and at the seminary in Troy. In 1867 he entered the American College in Rome, and on 11 June, 1870, he was ordained there to the priesthood. Upon his return to the United States that year he was appointed assistant pastor at Saint Peter's Church, New Brighton, Staten Island. Pope Leo XIII created him a domestic prelate in 1884, and seven years later he was made Vicar-General of the Archdiocese of New York. He was appointed titular Bishop of Zeugma and auxiliary of New York on 21 December, 1895, and he was consecrated by Archbishop Corrigan on 21 December, 1895. He succeeded to the archiepiscopal see, after serving as administrator sede vacante, on 25 September, 1902, and he was created cardinal-priest with the title of Sancta Maria super Minervam on 27 November, 1911. He was the author of "The Life of Cardinal McCloskey" (New York, 1918), and of "History of Saint Patrick's Cathedral," New York, 1908 (cf. C. E., XI-25b).

Faro, DIOCESE OF (PHARAONENSIS; cf. C. E., V-789a), in the province of Algarve, Portugal, suffragan of Evora, has a Catholic population of 228,384, and 50 Jews. The bishop, Rt. Rev. Marcelino Antonio Maria Franco, b. 17 April, 1871, in this diocese, became vicar capitular, and was appointed bishop 15 May, 1920, succeeding Mgr. Antonio Barbosa-Leas, transferred to the Diocese of Oporto in November, 1919. There are in the diocese (1920) 66 parishes, 112 priests, 66 churches, and 152 chapels.

Fast (cf. C. E., V-789d).—The law of fasting is now obligatory on Ember days, the vigils of Pentecost, the Assumption, All Saints', and of Christmas, but if the vigil falls on Sunday there is no fast, nor is it anticipated; all days in Lent, except Sunday and Holy Saturday afternoon. There is no fast on feast-days of obligation, except when they occur during Lent. In addition to the principal meal, at which, if the day is not one of abstinence, flesh may be eaten without an indult, the law of fasting allows some food to be taken both in the morning and in the evening, the quantity and kind of food being determined by the various approved local customs; it is lawful also to interchange the time of taking dinner and the light meal. Fish and flesh are no longer forbidden at the same meal. The changes introduced by the Code regarding fasting do not affect special indults or obligations imposed by vow or by the rules of religious orders or of men or women living in community without vows. There is no mention of the Advent fast. The Advent fast, formerly observed in certain countries, has been abolished. Finally, the law of fasting is binding on those who have completed their twenty-first year, but not their fifty-ninth, consequently a person would not be bound to fast on the former, but would on the latter of those birthdays.

Faurie, URBAIN, missionary and botanist, b. at Dunieres, Le Puy, France, on 1 January, 1847; d. at Tai-hoku, Formosa, on 4 July, 1915. In his early childhood no one suspected he would embrace the priesthood, as he suffered from an apparently incurable deafness, but on a pilgrimage to La Louvesc, he was miraculously cured through the intercession of St. John Francis Régis. He received his elementary education from the De La Salle Brothers and later attended the petit séminaire of Monistozol. He entered the Seminary of the Foreign Missions of Paris in September, 1869, and having been ordained in 7 June, 1873, he set out for Japan on 2 July following. His first assignment was as a teacher in the ecclesiastical college at Tokio. A little later he was deputed to aid in establishing Christianity in Niigata. From the beginning he was deeply interested in natural science, and his brilliant work in the then untrodden field of Japanese botany repeated once more the proofs given so often by Catholic missionaries that the Church, far from being opposed to science, is its mother. His frequent journeyings in out of the way places gave him unwonted opportunity for collecting and he laid Japan, Corea, part of Saghalien, Hawaii, and Formosa under contribution. He sent specimens of many new species to the great herbariums in Europe and America; some of these bear the appellation Fauriei or Fauriana; as does the Fauria japonica, a new genus discovered on a mountain near Aomori. Faurie was recognized as the father of Japanese botany. After his death his herbarium at Tokio was presented by the Marianists to the Imperial University of Kyoto, which has named one of its halls after him; and under the inspiration of Dr. Hayata of Tokio, the botanists of Japan have erected his bust in bronze in Tai-hoku. France honored her missionary scientist by appointing him an officer of the Academy and a corresponding member of the Museum of Paris.

The salvation of souls was, however, Faurie's first thought. From 1882 till 1894 he was engaged in evangelizing the northern regions of Japan—Aomori, Hokkaido and the Kurile Islands, seeking for scattered Christians, and undertaking the pioneer work that was to facilitate the labors of future apostles in these inhospitable regions. His perfect mastery of Japanese, together with his zeal, bore fruit, and where in 1882 there were only a few dozens of Christians there are to-day ten well-established missionary stations. In 1895 ill health forced his return to France. This gave him an opportunity of conveying to Europe his 25,000 botanical specimens, which he arranged while en route and during his stay in his native village. These he presented, before leaving, to French, Swiss, English, and Italian societies. He returned again to Japan at the end of 1896. After seventeen years' fresh labors he proceeded to Formosa, partly to rest and partly to complete his collection for the European societies; while he had thus an opportunity of aiding the scattered Japanese Catholics, thus relieving the Spanish Dominicans whose flock was composed mainly of Formosans and Chinese. He had spent eighteen months on this scientific and evangelical work, when he was stricken with apoplexy and died in the residence of the Dominican Fathers.

Fear (cf. C. E., VI-20).—Any act done as the result of grave fear unjustly caused is valid unless the law provides otherwise; if it is valid it can, however, be rescinded by judicial authority. While relatively grave fear excuses one for violating a merely ecclesiastical law it only decreases imputability if an act is intrinsically wrong or militates against public good, ecclesiastical authority or the faith; in as far as, however, the fear excuses from imputability in the external forum, it excuses likewise from penalties latæ sententiæ.

Feasts, ECCLESIASTICAL (cf. C. E., VI-21d; XIV-342).—The only feast days of obligation for the entire Church, apart from Sundays, are: the Nativity, Circumcision, Epiphany, Ascension of Our Lord, the Immaculate Conception, the Assumption, Sts. Peter and Paul, All Saints, Corpus Christi, and St. Joseph's, the last two being additions to the list announced by Pius X in 1911. Where any of these feasts has been lawfully abolished or transferred, no change is to be made without consulting the Holy See. Local ordinaries can appoint certain days as feasts in their own territories, but only incidentally; they and parish priests can, in individual cases and for just cause, dispense individuals or a particular family from the obligation of observing feasts; exempt clerical superiors have the same power in regard to those subject to them. On holidays of obligation the faithful must hear Mass, and abstain not merely from servile work, but from legal proceedings, and, unless otherwise authorized by legitimate custom or special indult, from public trading.

Federation of College Catholic Clubs, an Association established in 1915 in the city of New York, whose object is "to join together organizations of Catholic students in non-Catholic colleges and educational institutions for the purpose of mutual helpfulness and united effort in promoting their religious, intellectual, moral and social standards." It began with seven Catholic students' clubs from Hunter College, Columbia University, Teachers College, New York University, Adelphi College, the College of the City of New York, and Barnard College. It now numbers thirty-one clubs in its membership and publishes an official organ called the "Newman Quarterly." Through the kindness of the Archbishop of New York, the Federation now has its own quarters in the vicinity of Columbia University, with a resident chaplain.

Felician Sisters, O. S. F. (cf. C. E., VI-27c).—This community was founded in 1854 at Warsaw, Poland, by Sophia Truskowska, in religion Mother Mary Angela, under the direction of Father

Honorat, O. M. Cap. Its members observe the Rule of the Third Order of St. Francis, with constitutions adapted to their special work. In 1864 the Russian Government, owing to political unrest and insurrection in Poland, compelled the Sisters to disperse and five years later they established their home in Cracow, where the general mother-house is now located. Mother Mary Angela, elected general superior for life, resigned in 1870 because of ill health. She died in 1899. After a short interval Mother Mary Magdalena was elected and served four successive terms of twelve years each. Through her efforts the community was first ratified by Pope Pius IX (Decretum laudis) in 1874. The Sisters were cloistered, but as there was a general demand for their services among the poor they changed their mode of life, combining the active with the contemplative. In 1874 they were called to America by Rev. Joseph Dabrowski, who labored here among the Polish emigrants, and Mother Mary Monica with five companions established the first school in Polonia, Wis. After many hardships and privations a provincial house with novitiate was established in Detroit, Mich. (1882), and Mother Mary Monica was appointed provincial superior. The community grew in number and (1900) a second province of about 200 members was founded in Buffalo, N. Y. The constitutions were ratified for the second time by Pope Leo XIII in 1899 for a trial period of seven years. In 1907 Mother Mary Magdalena went to Rome to solicit a final ratification of the constitution. This was granted, after the constitution had been revised, and the community was definitely approved by Pius X. In the last decade four new provinces, each with a novitiate, have been established: one in Milwaukee, Wis. (1910), numbering at present 504 members; Lemberg, Poland (1913), 205 members; Lodi, N. J. (1913), 541 members; and McKeesport, Pa. (1920), 120 members.

In 1916 the community suffered a great loss through the death of Mother Mary Magdalena. It was during the World War, and as communication was impossible there was a vacancy until 1920, when at the General Chapter held in Cracow, Mother Mary Bonaventura was elected general superior. Novice mistress for many years in the province of Detroit, she had been transferred to Cracow as one of the general councillors, and several years later sent as a commissary to the United States, where she remained until 1920. The government of each province is vested in the provincial superior and four councillors, who serve for a term of six years. Each province is subject to the mother general residing at Cracow. The novitiate lasts two years, after which the Sisters make the vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience for one year. These vows they renew annually for six years, when they are permitted to make simple perpetual vows. The Sisters in Poland are chiefly occupied with charitable works; they nurse the sick poor in their homes, keep day nurseries, provide daily meals for hundreds of poor children and students, and solicit the help of others for them. They take charge of retreat centers for the seculars, teach in elementary schools, and instruct girls in practical arts. The Sisters in the United States labor mostly in parochial schools, conduct orphan asylums, homes for working girls, day nurseries, and several private academies. In Poland the Felician Sisters number 455, and in the United States there are 2021 Sisters in charge of 167 parochial schools with 78,940 pupils, and 8 orphanages with 1897 orphans.

Fenwick, EDWARD DOMINIC, Dominican, first bishop of Cincinnati, called the Apostle of Ohio,

b. 19 August, 1768, St. Mary's County, Md., of Col. Ignatius Fenwick and Sarah Taney; d. at Wooster, Ohio, 26 September, 1832. The work of the exiled English Dominicans at their College of the Holy Cross, Bornheim, Belgium, whither he went for his humanities in the fall of 1784, inspired young Fenwick with the idea of founding a similar institute in his beloved Maryland. With this object in mind he took the habit of the Friar Preachers 4 September, 1788, and became a professed religious 26 March, 1790. Though he never wavered a moment in his lofty design, more than ten years elapsed since his ordination, 23 February, 1793, before the obstacles to his project had yielded sufficiently to allow of his return to America. On his arrival there in November, 1804, with Fr. Angier, O.P., one of the three companions he had secured for the enterprise, Bishop Carroll succeeded in persuading him that Kentucky, with its several thousand Catholics and its lone missionary, Fr. Badin, was in more desperate need of his services than Maryland. October, 1805, saw the arrival of the coveted decree of Pius VII appointing Bishop Carroll delegate Apostolic to establish a Dominican Province anywhere in his diocese. With it came the letters patent of the Dominican superior general, Most Rev. Pius J. Gaddi, designating Fenwick as head of the Province of St. Joseph directly it was founded. Fathers Wilson and Tuite, the two other members of the little band who had meanwhile landed, were immediately hurried to the field of their future labors. Delay in the sale of his Maryland estate kept Fenwick from joining his confreres till June, 1806. The proceeds of the sale were presently sunk in the property now known as "St. Rose's Farm," near Springfield, Ky., in the heart of the Catholic settlement along Cartwright Creek. The convent and church of St. Rose and St. Thomas College were erected as quickly as the straitened circumstances of the Friars and their parishioners would permit. The time that could be spared from his duties as superior at St. Rose Fr. Fenwick spent in the saddle, visiting the scattered families and distant settlements that saw a priest only at rare intervals. From the day that the burdens of superior were shifted to Fr. Wilson's able shoulders the zealous Dominican devoted himself exclusively to the missions, traversing Kentucky on horseback in every direction. He even ventured into the fastnesses of the infant State of Ohio, to which, touched by the constant pleading of the settlers for a priest, he made semi-annual trips, seemingly, from 1808-16. In 1816, the ordination of four Dominicans at St. Rose enabled him to leave the Kentucky missions, in which he had become such a familiar and well-loved figure, and to give his undivided attention to his Ohio apostolate. His nephew, Fr. Dominic Young, O.P., was assigned to assist him in this formidable undertaking. Near Somerset, Ohio, on land donated for the purpose by the pious frontiersman, Jacob Dittoe, a primitive log-cabin and a crude church dedicated to St. Joseph were built. Making this his headquarters, Fenwick began the arduous campaign for Christ that has won him the well-merited title of Apostle of Ohio.

The rapidly developing State soon required the guidance of an ordinary. At the suggestion of Bishop Flaget of Bardstown, Pius VII erected the promising city of Cincinnati into an episcopal see by the "Bull Inter Multiplices" (19 June, 1821). Fr. Fenwick failed to escape the honor of being its first bishop; at the same time he was appointed Apostolic Administrator of Michigan and the Eastern portion of the Northwest Territory. The ceremony of consecration was performed by Bishop Flaget 13 January, 1822, in St. Rose's Church. The new prelate took up his residence in the course of the year in Cincinnati at the corner of Ludlow and Lawrence streets in a little dwelling which had to serve for some time in the double capacity of an episcopal palace and a house of worship. After the withdrawal of the city ordinance forbidding the erection of Catholic churches within the corporate limits of Cincinnati, the cathedral, a barn-like frame building on the outskirts of the town, was put on rollers and hauled to the site now occupied by the College of St. Francis Xavier. This sorry makeshift had to be borne with until the bishop, having borrowed money enough to carry him to Europe in search of aid, returned with generous donations from the reigning Pontiff, Leo XII, and the French nobility. With the fund thus raised he bought the property on Sycamore Street now occupied by the Church of St. Francis Xavier; ther (19 May, 1825), he laid the corner-stone of the old St. Peter's Cathedral and dedicated it 17 December, 1826. In the spring of 1829 the Athenæum, dedicated to St. Francis Xavier, opened with four theological and six preparatory students. From the printing-press with which the bishop had been presented by a European benefactor, came the first edition (October, 1831), of "The Catholic Telegraph," one of the oldest Catholic papers in the country.

But these monuments of Bishop Fenwick's industry in his episcopal city form a very small portion of the efforts he made for the welfare of his diocese. His territory extended from the Ohio to the Lakes. To look after his scattered flock he traveled to the most distant sections on horseback, by boat or afoot. During the last two years of his life, in spite of continued ill-health, the saintly man must have journeyed over 6000 miles in this way, and a third of that distance was covered in the last three months of his earthly sojourn. While returning from a last pastoral visit to the North he was stricken with the cholera then ravaging his diocese and died unattended. The remains were brought to Cincinnati, 11 February, 1833, and laid in the old cathedral, from which they were transferred to the new cathedral in 1846. On 23 March, 1916, they were again moved to the beautiful mausoleum in St. Joseph's cemetery, Price Hill, in which a compartment is reserved for the bishops of the diocese.

Ferentino, DIOCESE OF (FERENTINENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-42c), in the province of Rome, Central Italy, immediately subject to the Holy See, with a regular list of bishops since 721. The bishop, Rt. Rev. Domenico Bianconi, b. in Piperno, 7 May, 1852, was appointed 19 April, 1897, succeeding Mgr. Facciotti, deceased. There are in the diocese (1920 statistics) 45,000 Catholics; 19 parishes, 68 secular and 32 regular clergy, 55 seminarians, 9 Brothers, 89 sisters, 56 churches or chapels.

Fermo, ARCHDIOCESE OF (FIRMANENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-43d), in the province of Ascoli-Piceno, Central Italy. The see is filled by Most Rev. Carlo Castelli, b. 20 March, 1863, in the Diocese of Milan, ordained in November, 1885, vicar forane and rector of Busto-Arsizio; appointed Bishop of Bobbio, 14 November, 1904; promoted 10 July, 1906, to the Archdiocese of Fermo, proclaimed 6 December following, succeeding Mgr. Papiri, deceased. The diocese numbered (1920) 200,000 Catholics; 147 parishes, 368 secular and 86 regular clergy, 208 seminarians, 40 Brothers, 189 Sisters, 660 churches and chapels.

Fernando Po (or FERNANDO POO), VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (INSULARUM HANNOBOM, CORSICO ET FERNANDO POO; cf. C. E., XVI-83b), a Spanish colony, West Africa, is the most important of the Annabón Islands and covers an area of 695 sq. miles, with residence at Santa Isabel. It is entrusted to the Spanish Congregation of the Sons of the Immaculate Heart of Mary. The present (1922) vicar Apostolic, also titular Bishop of Ionopolis, is Rt. Rev. Nicolas Gonzalez y Perez, F. C. Im. M., b. 3 February, 1863, in La Nuez de Arriba in the Diocese of Burgos; missionary for twenty-five years, appointed bishop 24 August, 1918, and vicar Apostolic of Fernando Po, 10 September of the same year, consecrated at Madrid, 7 December following, succeeding Mgr. Pedro Armengaud Coll, F. C. Im. M., the first vicar Apostolic of Fernando Po. There are in the vicariate (1920) 38 priests and 25 Brothers (F. C. Im. M.), and 39 native catechists, 4 Fathers of the Holy Ghost, 12 churches, 16 chapels, 56 stations, 12 colleges for boys with 901 pupils, 4 for girls with 409 pupils, 1 high school with 40 pupils, 1 professional school with 41 pupils, 54 elementary schools with 1250 boys and 901 girls, 1 seminary with 2 seminarians, 4 go-out hospitals, all the others in charge of the Sisters, 30 Spanish Sisters of the Immaculate Conception; 120,000 inhabitants. The Spanish government supports 14 missions and dispenses an annual sum of 26,000 frs. for the schools. "La Guineá Española" is published in the vicariate. Mgr. Armengol Coll, vicar Apostolic died 21 April, 1918, after twenty-eight years of administration, helping the people spiritually and materially. He invented an agricultural apparatus. Events of importance are: the internment of more than 20,000 people, both Europeans and natives coming from German Kamerun; the dedication of the cathedral 23 January, 1916.

Ferns, DIOCESE OF (FERNENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-45b), in the province of Leinster, Ireland, including almost all of Wexford and a part of Wicklow counties, is suffragan of Dublin, with residence at Summerhill, Wexford. Rt. Rev. William Codd, Lord Bishop of Ferns, the present incumbent, b. 6 July, 1864, studied at St. Peter's College, and at the Irish College, Rome, ordained 1889, president of St. Peter's College, Wexford, 1907; appointed bishop 7 December, 1917, consecrated 25 February, 1918, succeeding Rt. Rev. James Browne (b. 28 August, 1842; d. 21 June, 1917). The diocesan statistics for 1921 are: 41 parishes, 130 secular and 20 regular priests, 92 parochial and district churches, 1 seminary with 100 seminarians; 1 college, higher schools for boys and girls, 150 Catholic primary schools, all run by the religious communities established in the diocese; 14 convents, 2 orphanages, 1 industrial school, 1 refuge. Five workhouses and 1 mental hospital admit the ministry of priests, and all the national and technical schools of the diocese receive government rates. The total population of the diocese numbers 106,850, Catholics 98,134, non-Catholics 8816. The missionary work is carried on by priests living in community for the giving of missions at home and abroad. The societies organized in the diocese are the Ui Ceinnsealaigh Historical Society, and the conferences of St. Vincent de Paul. The Catholic press is represented by "The Past," a periodical published in the diocese. Canon Michael Kavanaugh spent a substantial sum for the new church, new presbyteries and schools in New Ross.

During the World War four priests of the diocese served as chaplains at the front.

Férotin, MARIUS, Benedictine writer, d. on 16 September, 1915; he had been a Benedictine monk of the Abbey of Farnborough, England, for forty years. He was highly esteemed as a historian and his studies of the mozarabic liturgy of Southern Spain are considered to be authoritative, as are those of the cartularies of the Abbey of Silos, which form a part of the history he wrote of that establishment.

Ferrara, ARCHDIOCESE OF (FERRARIENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-46c), in Italy, immediately subject to the Holy See. From 29 December, 1908, to 7 July, 1920, the diocese of Comacchio was united to the Archdiocese of Ferrara, and administered by the Archbishop of Ferrara as Bishop of Comacchio. His Eminence Cardinal Boschi, who had filled this see from 1900, retired and was transferred to the see of Frascati 3 July, 1919, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Francesco Rossi, b. at Thiene 1836, appointed Archbishop of Cagliari 9 April, 1913, transferred to the Archdiocese of Ferrara 15 December, 1919. According to 1922 statistics the diocese numbers 91 parishes, 159 churches, 153 secular and 25 regular priests, 10 lay brothers, 78 Sisters, 1 seminary with 45 seminarians, 1 university with 501 students, 4 colleges for boys, 5 for girls, 1 high school with 40 boys, 25 girls, 2 academies, 1 normal, 1 professional, 100 elementary and 2 industrial schools, 3 homes, 19 asylums, 3 hospitals, 1 refuge, 1 day nursery. Twenty-five public institutions in the diocese admit the ministry of the priests. The following institutions, academies, lyceums, elementary, technical, industrial, commercial, evening, music, drawing, and normal schools receive government support. Two associations are organized among the clergy, and a "Circolo Popolare Catolica," a Mutual Aid Society, and the Society of St. Vincent de Paul among the laity. A weekly journal and a monthly bulletin are published in the diocese. During the World War the clergy distinguished themselves as chaplains, and in the care of the poor and the war orphans of the diocese. His Eminence the late Cardinal Giulio Boschi gave his archiepiscopal palace as a home for the soldiers, and the citizens manifested their gratitude by erecting a commemorative tablet to his memory. The laity co-operated with the clergy in all patriotic works meriting praise and decorations.

Ferrari, ANDREA CARLO, Cardinal, b. at Lalatta, district of Pratopiano in the Diocese of Parma, Italy, 13 August, 1850; d. 2 February, 1921, the son of Giuseppe Ferrari and Maddalena Langarini. Andrea Ferrari studied at the episcopal seminary of Parma and was ordained there 20 December, 1873, became vice-rector of the seminary and in 1876 was made rector, in 1878 canon of the cathedral of Parma, elected Bishop of Guastalla in 1890, transferred to Como 1891, promoted to be metropolitan of Milan 21 May, 1894, received the hat with the title of Sant' Anastasia 21 May, and the pallium 3 June following.

At the conclave of 1903 Cardinal Ferrari was one of the Papabili most in view. During his long episcopate the diocese conducted three diocesan synods, a Eucharistic Congress, a Catholic Congress, the Centenary of St. Charles Borromeo, and a provincial council. Many churches and institutions were constructed in the city and diocese. During the war the cardinal organized a committee of Religious Assistance, a Secretariate for Soldiers, a Notification Bureau for Prisoners, and every possible aid for the combatants. He was decorated with the Grand Cross of Sts. Maurizio and Lazzaro 15 October, 1919. On November 5 following he celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his enthronement at Milan, on which occasion he was presented with a purse of 330,000 lire, which was later increased to 1,500,000 lire and was devoted to the founding of the Casa del Popolo for the people of Milan. Shortly before his death his long dreamed-of Catholic University became an actuality.

In the course of the Church's history there have been few death-bed scenes comparable to that of His Eminence Cardinal Ferrari. Prolonged for over three months, quite consciously dying from a cancer in the throat, the successor of St. Ambrose and St. Charles received the daily pilgrimage of thousands of his flock. The suffering prelate would allow no one to be turned away. During this illness he wrote a pastoral letter of farewell, many instructions, directions, replies, and he died on Candlemas Day, 1921, leaving behind him two monuments which show his deep interest in religious and social work, the Catholic University of the Sacred Heart, and his wonderfully conceived Casa del Popolo, called L'Opera Cardinale Ferrari. Several books were published by him which will perpetuate the memory of one of the greatest of Italian cardinals, including: "Breve trattato della religione," "Summula theologiæ dogmaticæ generalis," "Ambrosiana," "Dopo la visita pastorale," and "La Vita sacerdotale secondo il vangelo," a beautiful manual of meditations. Amid scenes of extraordinary emotion throughout the city and diocese, the cardinal was buried in the great Duomo, not far from the shrine of his predecessor, St. Charles Borromeo.

SAMUEL FOWLE TELFAIR, JR.

Ferrata, DOMENICO, Cardinal, b. at Gradoli, 4 March, 1847; d. in Rome, 10 October, 1914, received his classical education at the Jesuit College of Orvieto and from there went in 1860 to the seminary of Montefiascone. In 1867, he was at the Gregorian in Rome, where he devoted himself to theology and to canon law at the Appollinare. He became professor of canon law at the latter place in 1876 and on the following year at the Propaganda, where his eminent gifts of conciseness, completeness and clearness made him so famous that in 1877 he was made Consultor to the Congregation of Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs. His secretary, Mgr. Czaski soon perceived his unusual ability and when sent as nuncio to Paris in 1879 he took Ferrata with him as auditor and cameriere segreto. Returning to Rome three years later, Ferrata resumed his place in the Bureau of the Secretary of State, meantime going on special missions, the most important of which was that to Switzerland, where he had to rearrange the division of dioceses and settle the political strife that was raging there. On his return he was advanced to other ecclesiastical honors and in 1885 was made Nuncio to Belgium to repair the damages done to religion by Frère-Orban, who had broken off relations with the Vatican, was consecrated Archbishop of Thessalonica and then passed four years at Brussels. We find him next as nuncio at Paris, an exceptionally difficult post because of the unfriendly attitude of the Government, but he met with such success that the Republic asked to have him made cardinal. He received the red hat on 22 January, 1896.

According to Cardinal Mathieu, Ferrata was the cleverest member of the Sacred College. He had a power of grasping a subject which with his marvelous memory enabled him to present a question to the assembled cardinals in such a way that it was hard to determine in which respect he excelled, the thoroughness of his knowledge or the form in which it was presented. His power of persuasion was such that he won his case almost as soon as he began to speak. He was so well known for this, that the postulants of the causes for beatification and canonization were always anxious to have him to defend their case before the tribunal. His ability was so marked that office after office was assigned to him from 1900 to 1913. No one knows whether Cardinal Ferrata received any votes as successor of Pius X for Benedict XV kept the proceedings of the Conclave a profound secret. At all events, Benedict chose him as Secretary of State on 4 September, 1914, but death came shortly after. The Cardinal had to undergo surgical operation for some intestinal trouble and in October he was in his coffin.

Fianarantsoa, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC (DE FIANARANTSOA, cf. C. E., XVI-83c), in Madagascar, previously formed the southern part of the Vicariate Apostolic of Central Madagascar, but was erected into a separate vicariate on 10 May, 1913, and entrusted to the Jesuits. The present (1922) and the first vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Charles Givélet, S. J., titular bishop of Gindaris, b. 18 July, 1857, in Reims, studied at Vaugirard in Paris, and at the lower seminary of Reims, novice at St. Acheul in 1877, ordained in Enghien Belgium, 8 September, 1889, prefect of studies, president of various missionary houses in 1902, appointed bishop, and Vicar Apostolic of Fianarantsoa 16 May, 1913, consecrated at Luçon 2 October of the same year, and proclaimed 28 May, 1914. There are in the vicariate (1920 statistics) 110,000 Catholics, 36 missionary priests, 12 lay brothers, 12 Brothers of the Christian Schools with 2 colleges, 24 Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny, 637 catechists, 577 stations with chapels, 52 schools with 5300 pupils, 1 dispensary, and 1 leper hospital.

Field, MICHAEL, the pseudonym under which two noted English writers, Katherine Harris Bradley and her niece, Edith Emma Cooper, produced many dramatic works and volumes of lyrical poetry, the excellence of which won the admiration and praise of Browning, Pater, and Meredith. The first fruits of this literary partnership was the drama "Cal-lirhoc" (1884), which like "Brutus Ultor" (1887) is based on classical history. Besides these, however, Miss Cooper and Miss Bradley wrote romantic plays such as "Fair Rosamund" and "William Rufus" on British themes. Among their poetical works are "Long Ago" (1889), "Sight and Song," and "Underneath the Bough" (1893). In 1907, like so many other women writers, the joint authors entered the Catholic Church. Thereafter their poetry revealed their deep religious spirit, reflecting the soul of the church as appears in their "Poems of Adoration" (1912), "Cedar and Hyssop," and "Mystic Trees" (1913), the latter being almost entirely from the pen of Miss Bradley. Miss Cooper died in December, 1913, and Miss Bradley at Hawkesyard, England, on 26 September following.

Fiesole, DIOCESE OF (FESULANENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-70b), in the province of Florence, Central Italy, suffragan of Florence. By a special decree of the Consistory, 24 August, 1917, the boundaries of the diocese were modified. The bishop bears the title of Count of Turicchi; the see is filled by Rt. Rev. Giovanni Fossi, b. in Gambellara in the diocese of Vicenza, 17 January, 1853, prothonotary apostolic 5 January, 1901, archpriest at Lonigo, appointed 29 April, 1909, consecrated at Lonigo, 27 June of the same year, succeeding Mgr. David Camilli, b. 15 January, 1847, d. 13 February, 1909. According to 1920 statistics the diocese numbers 155,800 Catholics; 254 parishes, 300 secular and 93 regular priests, 90 seminarians, 62 Brothers, 210 Sisters, 329 churches or chapels. On 26 April, 1914, the diocesan chapter was reorganized with archdeacon and primicerius.

Fiji Islands, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (INSULÆ FIJIS), Central Oceania. The first and present Vicar Apostolic is the Right Rev. Julian Vidal, S. M., Titular Bishop of Abydos, who was elected on the 13 May, 1887, and consecrated 27 December of the same year. Right Rev. Charles Joseph Nicolas, S. M., Titular Bishop of Panopolis, was elected Coadjutor to Bishop J. Vidal, on 22 August, 1918, and consecrated on 2 February, 1919. Missions have been established in all the principal islands, Viti Levu, Vanua Levu, Ovalau, Taviuni, Kadavu, and Rotuma. The official residence of the vicar apostolic is at Suva, which is the capital of Fiji, and seat of the government.

The latest (1922) statistics for the vicariate show: 27 priests (Marist Fathers), who tend 20 central stations, and about 300 villages; 1 lay brother of the Society of Mary, who supervises the construction of new buildings, schools, churches, convents, etc.; 14 Little Brothers of Mary (Marist Brothers), who have charge of a large boarding and day school for Europeans, a boarding and day school for half-castes and natives, at Suva, an English school for natives at Cawaci and Rewa; 31 European and 63 native Sisters of the Third Order of Mary, with 16 houses (novitiate for the native Sisters, at Solevu, Vanua Levu), who conduct the majority of schools for native girls; 11 Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny, who conduct at Suva a large boarding and day school for Europeans, and a day school for half-castes and natives; 14 Sisters of the Holy Name of Mary (Marist Sisters), who have charge of a boarding and day school for Europeans and half-castes, of a day school for natives, and of an orphanage at Levuka, schools for natives at Cawaci and Ba, 20 native Brothers (novitiate at Loreto), in 6 communities. In the central stations Brothers and Sisters (European and native) teach about 1000 children, while in the villages 230 catechists give elementary instruction to about 1700. The churches and chapels number 67 and the Catholic population is about 12,000 (400 Europeans).

The Fiji Government (British) has established in the island of Makogai a lepers' settlement, where under the direction of a European doctor 8 European and 6 native Sisters of the Third Order of Mary nurse about 350 lepers. A chapel has just been built for the lepers. A Marist Father is in charge of the station as chaplain.

Finland (cf. C. E., VI-76c), formerly a grand duchy of the Russian Empire, now a republic, proclaimed an independent sovereign state on 6 December, 1917. The area of the republic is 129,549 sq. miles; the population (1919), 3,331,814. The chief towns with their population in 1919, are: Helsinki (Helsingfors) with Sveaborg, 187,544; Turku (Åbo), 56,168; Tampere (Tammerfors), 46,353; Viipuri (Viborg), 29,753; Oulu (Uleaborg), 21,949; Pori (Björneborg), 17,603; Vaasa (Vasa), 24,776; Kuopio, 18,106. Finns who amalgamated with the Swedes to form the present population, came from farther east; ethnologists class them with the Hungarians. About 78 per cent are blue-eyed and about 57 per cent are light-haired. Of this population 522,608 or 15.69 per cent reside in towns, and 2,809,206 or 84.31 per cent in the country austriacts; 87.73 speak Finnish; 11.79 per cent, Swedish.

RELIGION. Vicariate Apostolic.—In June, 1920, the vicariate apostolic of Finland was erected from territory taken from the diocese of Mohileff and entrusted to the Congregation of Picpus. The first vicar apostolic is Mgr. J. M. Buckx, appointed 17 March, 1921. The Catholics number 1000 and are for the most part Finns; the minority are either Poles, Germans, French, or Italian. There are 2 secular and 3 regular priests and 1 lay brother; 2 parishes; 3 churches; 1 mission. The women have an association of St. Anne for work among the poor. Other religious bodies in Finland in 1917 numbered: Lutherans, 3,283,035; Greek Catholics and Raskolniks, 56,815; Baptists, etc., 6397.

EDUCATION.—Notwithstanding the vast and thinly populated areas of the country Finland is well advanced in the matter of education. A Bill making it compulsory was introduced into the Diet in 1919. Every parish has at least one folk-school, or elementary school. At the beginning of the 1919-20 school year, there were 3639 ordinary rural folk-schools, of which 3172 were Finnish and 456 Swedish, with 4951 teachers. There were also 549 primary folk-schools in the rural districts, with 1351 teachers. The total number of folk-school teachers was 6302, of whom 5448 were Finnish and 859 Swedish; the number of pupils in rural folk-schools was 173,869 and in city folk-schools, 42,026, a total of 215,895. The amount spent by the State for folk-schools in 1919 was 38,390,000 marks ($2,492,857 at 15.40 marks to the dollar). Of the 55 State secondary schools, 37 were Finnish and 18 Swedish. The government expenditure on these was 16,074,300 marks ($1,043,786). There is one State University, which was founded in Åbo in 1640 and removed to Helsingfors, after having been burned down in 1827. There is a technical high school in Helsingfors and private high schools and academies in the larger cities. A Swedish university was opened in Åbo in 1919. Since 1918 the Finnish reformatory and industrial schools have been under the supervision of the school administration; formerly the reformatory schools were under the prison administration and the industrial schools under the Senate civil administration. In 1919 the State had 8 reformatory and industrial schools for boys and 2 for girls and subsidized 12 privately owned institutions for boys and 7 for girls; total expenditure, $197,408. Of the 75 kindergartens in Finland, 4 are State, 8 communal, 49 owned by associations, and 14 by individuals, with a total number of 5932 children and an expenditure of $140,140. In addition to the homes for war orphans which were under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Social Affairs, there are 81 children's homes, 21 day homes and work homes, 8 reception homes, and 30 nurseries, also 16 schools for the deaf, dumb, and feeble-minded, of which 11 were State schools and 5 private schools, some of which receive state aid. On the special schools, the state expenditure was $164,338. The school age in the primary schools is from seven to fifteen years.

ECONOMIC CONDITION.—The bulk of the population is engaged in agriculture and farming, leaving a very small proportion employed in commerce and industry. The following statistics show the acreage sown and the yield of the principal crops in 1920: Wheat, 19,275 acres, 7500 tons; rye, 580,593 acres, 233,000 tons; barley, 278,241 acres, 103,000 tons; oats, 976,496 acres, 356,500 tons; potatoes, 192,888 acres, 486,000 tons; hay, 2,386,989 acres, 1,900,000 tons. The home production of grain is barely enough to meet one-half of the requirements of the country, and Finland therefore is obliged to import largely from abroad. In 1920 the butter produced amounted to 10,000,000 kilog. and the cheese to 2,000,000 kilog.

The cultivated area of Finland covers only 8.5 per cent of the land, divided in 1910 into 284,188 farms. In 1918 the Crown forests covered 12,546,296 hectares, about 33 per cent of the area of the country. Their maintenance cost (1919) 33,250,000 marks, and the income derived from them 65,690,000 marks. In 1915 the 139 sawmills with water-motors and 510 steam and 317 motor mills gave occupation to 17,661 workers. In 1917 Finland had 4389 large factories, employing an aggregate of 178,987 workers, and yielding an aggregate product of 1,458,107,500 marks; in 1919, 5252 factories, employing 99,843 workers, turning out a product worth 2,345,200,000 marks. The eight-hour day was instituted on 17 April, 1917, but previous to this the working day at private factories and works was nine and a half hours. In 1920 the imports amounted to 3,620,400 Finnish marks; the exports to 2,906,600 Finnish marks. The principal imports are cereals and other food-stuffs, textile materials, colonial products, metals, machinery, and minerals; the chief exports, timber and paper products, which constituted in 1919 more than 88 per cent of the total. The closing of the Russian markets have had a detrimental influence on dairy exports.

The Finnish railways have always been built and owned by the State. On 31 December, 1920, there were 2685 miles of railway, all but 186 miles belonging to the State. There are also 19,000 miles of main roads and 1250 miles of secondary roads. The total revenue from the State railways in 1919 was about $19,146,500; the total expenditures were $13,770,000. The canals are also of great importance as means of communication in Finland, the foremost being the Saima Canal, which has 28 sluices and is 38 miles in length. This canal connects the extensive Saima Lake system with the sea. Finland's debts are comparatively small, amounting to less than 2,000,000,000 marks ($100,000,000 at the rate of 20 marks to the dollar). The national debts on 31 May, 1921, amounted to 1,812,911,411 marks ($90,645,571 at the rate of 20 marks to the dollar).

GOVERNMENT.—According to the Finnish Constitution, ratified at Helsingfors on 21 June, 1919, the legislative power is exercised by Parliament, together with the president of the Republic, who is elected for a term of six years, and who has the right of initiative in formulating new legislation, also the right of veto. The general government is entrusted to a Council of State, composed of the prime minister and a fixed number of other ministers. The judicial power is exercised by independent courts of justice, chief of which are the Supreme Court and the Highest Administrative Court. The president is elected by 300 electors, chosen by popular vote, and is limited in power by the Council of State. The official languages are Finnish and Swedish, which can be used in the national courts. The linguistic, religious, and minority rights of all citizens are assured; free speech and free assembly are granted under all normal conditions.

HISTORY.—Finland was acquired by Russia from Sweden by the Treaties of Fredrikshamn (September, 1809), which confirmed the decision of the Diet of Barga a few months earlier. In 1811 territories taken from Sweden, which had been incorporated in Russia before 1809, were added to the State thus constituted. The Swedish constitution was, however, retained, dating from 1772, but recast in 1786, modified in 1809, and again fundamentally altered in 1906. The country, then an autonomous grand duchy under the sovereignty of the Czar of Russia, was considered by the inhabitants a separate state with inalienable rights; but it was the policy of Russia to promise to respect the national institutions of her newly acquired territories and later, step by step, proceed in her course of centralization and assimilation without regard to her agreement. That this did not immediately happen in Finland was due to a strong insistence upon her rights; yet during the period 1899-1914 Russia's intention to Russianize the country was evident.

By the law of 15 February, 1899, all matters of legislation were to be referred to the Czar of Russia; again in 1910 there were attempts to curtail the power of the Diet; in 1912 the Russian subjects were given the same rights as the Finns themselves, enabling the Russians to hold office in Finland, thus preparing the way for Russian bureaucracy; the Russian language was prescribed in the Finnish courts and public offices, and the Russian courts given jurisdiction over political offenses committed in Finland. By this time the Finnish constitution was virtually annulled and the Diet little better than a figurehead.

When the Russian revolution broke out the Diet decided on 9 November, 1916, to declare that as the Provisional Russian Government no longer existed, the Diet entrusted the government to a committee of three persons, including a banker, magistrate, and privy councillor. It was considered a free and independent state in a Russian federation, but at the fall of Kerensky's Government, it declared itself a republic (9 December, 1917). Its independence was recognized by Russia, Sweden, Norway, France, Spain, Denmark, and Germany, with the understanding that an arrangement be reached between Finland and Russia in regard to a formal separation. On 9 January, 1918, the Russian central executive committee of the Soviets, acting in behalf of the Russian Provisional Government, unanimously recognized the republic as free and independent. Meanwhile, the Red Guards (Bolsheviki) and White Guards (pro-German) were arrayed against each other and civil war broke out. It ended in the triumph of the latter and the signing of the Brest-Litovsk Treaty between Germany and the Bolshevik Government on 3 March, 1918. Four days later Germany signed a treaty with Finland, having invaded Finnish territory and occupied the Aland Islands which she used to enable her soldiers to cross by ice to the mainland of Finland to support the White Guards. By April, 1918, there were 40,000 German soldiers at Helsingfors and a German squadron in the harbor. The Russian ships escaped to Kronstadt. The Finnish Landtag in October, 1918, elected Prince Frederick Charles of Hesse, brother-in-law of the German emperor, as King of Finland. Later, however, Finland requested Germany to withdraw her troops from Finnish territory, but it was not until after the collapse of Germany that she was able to rid herself of German influence. In December a peaceful revolution paved the way to recognition by the United States and Great Britain, 5 May, 1919. First the Bolsheviki were forced out of the country, then the Russian Reds. Finland claimed Pechenga, a strip of land in Russian possession, cutting off Northern Finland from Varanger Fiord and Finland's natural outlet on the Atlantic Ocean; also the islands in the Gulf of Finland, including Hogland, which controlled the waters leading from the Baltic to the Russian fortress of Kronstadt.

and to Petrograd (under the Czar these islands had been administered by Russia as a part of the Finnish duchy); and finally, Karelia, a province to the north of Lake Ladoga, where a large Finnish population existed. These claims were granted in a treaty signed between Soviet Russia and Finland on 14 October, 1920, at Dorpat, Esthonia. In 1920 Finland was also given the Aland Islands by the League of Nations. The majority of the population is Swedish, but the islands were nearer the coast of Finland and had been ruled by Russia as a part of the Grand Duchy of Finland. In the same year there was a vain attempt at a conference at Helsingfors to form a Baltic League among the small Baltic States as a defense against Russia.

Fiume, an independent state created by the Treaty of Rapallo, signed on 12 November, 1920, between Italy and Yugoslavia. The area is 8 square miles, and the population 49,806. Article 5 of the Treaty of Rapallo proposes that the area of Fiume be delimited by a special commission composed half of Italian and half of Yugoslav delegates. Fiume owes its commercial importance to its location at the only real break in the mountain range running down the eastern coast of the Adriatic. While it has not a naturally fine harbor, its facilities have been well developed by Hungary and are susceptible of further improvement, and while not logically serving the same territory as Trieste, it is a commercial rival of that city. In 1914 the trade of Hungary found its political and natural outlet at Fiume, and its surrounding country and neighboring hinterland was wholly Slav. If the suburb of Susak, which is part of the port, is included in the city, the Italians, although the largest group in Fiume, are not a majority of the population. Fiume was not included in the territorial gains of Italy promised by the Allies in the Pact of London in 1915; nevertheless, after the World War Italy claimed the city, despite the protests of Yugoslavia. The Peace Conference at Versailles (1919) refused to recognize Italy's demand. On 13 September, 1919, Gabriele D'Annunzio, an Italian poet and soldier, at the head of a volunteer force seized the city, negotiations for the disposition of which were then pending. His action was disapproved by the Allies, and the Italian Government issued an ultimatum ordering his return to Rome; upon his refusal the city was declared blockaded and military forces were sent to dislodge him. The blockade, however, was laxly enforced, and the troops sent against him mutinied. The situation became so grave that the Crown Council was summoned. D'Annunzio reaffirmed his intention of retaining Fiume, and declared himself to be at war with Yugoslavia, threatening to extend his sway over the entire Dalmatian coast, and while the Italian populace seemed to give him its enthusiastic support, the Government insisted that the Adriatic question should be adjusted by the Peace Conference. The question was adjusted in Rapallo, Italy, on 12 November, 1920, by a treaty signed by Yugoslavia and Italy. According to its provisions Fiume was made an independent city linked by a "corridor" to Italian Istria. Gabriele D'Annunzio, the self-styled "Rector of the Regency of the Quarnero," who on 20 September, 1920, had declared Fiume to be an independent State, vehemently denounced the treaty, and declared war on Italy on 3 December. Fiume was bombarded by the Italian regulars and D'Annunzio was forced to leave the city. On 6 October, 1921, the Constituent Assembly of Fiume elected Professor Riccardo Zanella as President of the Provisional Government. In March, 1922, the city was seized by the Fascisti, the Zanella Government overthrown, and Deputy Giurati chosen head of the Government. To quell the disturbance, the Italian Government ordered the occupation of Fiume by Italian troops. President Zanella and forty-nine members of the Constituent Assembly continued to meet in Yugoslavia, where they had taken refuge.

Florence, ARCHDIOCESE OF (FLORENTINENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-105d), in the province of Tuscany, Central Italy. This see is filled by His Eminence Cardinal Alfonso Maria Mistrangelo, b. 26 April, 1852, entered the Congregation of the Clerks Regular of the Pious Schools at the age of nineteen, preacher, rector of Ovado College in 1880, and appointed 19 June, 1899, taking possession 17 December following, succeeding Cardinal Bausa, deceased. He was made superior general of the Pious Schools in 1900, named apostolic visitor of the order, and created cardinal-priest 6 December, 1915, with the title St. Mary of the Angels, of which he took possession 11 December following. In the beginning of 1918 he celebrated his episcopal jubilee and received a letter of congratulation from the pope.

By 1920 statistics there are in the archdiocese 500,000 Catholics; 477 parishes, 800 secular and 400 regular priests, 200 seminarians, 150 Brothers, 1600 Sisters, 1900 churches or chapels; the chancellors of the cathedral are prothonotaries apostolic supernumerary, durante munere. By a decree of the Consistory of 24 August, 1917, the limits of the archdiocese were altered, and on 15 January, 1918, the Church of Monte Senario was made a minor basilica.

Floresta, DIOCESE OF. See PESQUEIRA.

Florida (cf. C. E., VI-115b).—The area of the State of Florida is 58,666 sq. miles, of which 3805 is lake and river area. The State is divided politically into fifty-two counties.

RESOURCES. Agriculture.—In 1920, 41,051 farms were operated by whites; 12,954 by negroes; farm acreage in 1920 was 6,046,491, 2,297,271 acres being improved. The total value of all farm property in 1920 was $330,331,717; operating expenses, $37,071,977; products, $80,256,806; cereal crops, $14,528,809; fruits crops, $23,218,209; live stock, $33,304,627. The statistics of corn and cotton crops were: Cotton, 110,562 acres, 19,358 bales, value $3,440,593; corn, 811,737 acres, 9,103,549 bushels, value $14,528,809. There were 3,645,811 orange-bearing trees, producing 5,930,322 boxes, value $15,715,618. Live stock included 38,570 horses, 42,046 mules, 153 asses, 638,981 cattle, 755,481 swine, 64,659 sheep, 45,890 goats.

Commerce and Industries.—In 1919 there were in the State 2582 manufacturing establishments, capital $206,294,000, wage earners 74,400, wages $67,581,000, value of products $213,327,000. In 1919 the value of oversea exports was $72,842,179; the value of imports was $15,275,615. The fisheries of the State give employment to over 9000 men and yield an annual product valued at $3,500,000. The total assessed valuation of taxable property in the State for 1920 was $304,923,946; State debt $601,567. In 1917 there were nineteen railroads with a total mileage of 6060, main track 3833. The Florida East Coast Railway Extension to Key West was opened in 1912.

POPULATION.—In 1920 the population was 968,470, an increase of 28.7 per cent since 1910. Of this, 36.7 per cent was urban; 63.3 rural. The average number of inhabitants to the square mile was 17.7 as against 13.7 in 1910. There are 967 election precincts and 2 military reservations. Florida has 48 cities, of which Jacksonville with a population of 91,558, is the largest. The other large cities are Tampa with a population of 51,608; Pensacola, 31,035; Key West, 18,749. There are 638,153 whites, of whom 43,008 are foreign born, and 329,487 negroes. Of the native whites, 532,295 are of native parentage, 35,751 are of foreign parentage, and 27,099 are of mixed parentage. The population of ten years of age and over numbered 751,787, of whom 71,811 were illiterates (9.6%). Of these, 55,639 were negroes (21.5%). Most of the foreign-born came from Cuba, Spain, England, Germany, and the West Indies.

EDUCATION.—The State school fund in 1919 was about $2,000,000. Statistics from the latest biennial report (1920) of the State superintendent show: total public schools, 2996; white, 2128; colored, 837; enrolment, white, 137,826, or 70 per cent of school population; colored, 58,579, or 30 per cent of school population; total expenditure for school year ending June, 1918, $4,383,445. There are 5062 white and 1288 colored teachers. Annual grants from the Federal treasury for higher educational institutions aggregated in 1918 about $75,000. The faculty of the University of Florida numbers forty-three, the experiment station staff seventeen, enrolment (1919) 988. The Florida Female College has 54 professors and instructors and 598 students. The colored normal school at Tallahassee reports a faculty of 10. The productive endowment funds of the John B. Stetson University, Deland, amount to $1,023,000; its enrolment in 1919 was 649, faculty, 32. The faculty of Rollins College, Winter Park, numbers 25, enrolment, 175; of Southern College, Southerland, 20, enrolment, 258; of Columbia College, Lake City, 15, enrolment, 93; St. Leo's College, St. Leo, has 70 students, the Sacred Heart College, Tampa, 125 students. The Sisters of St. Joseph have academies at St. Augustine, Jacksonville, Loretto, Orlando, Palatka, Miami, Fernandina, and Ybor City; the Sisters of St. Benedict at St. Leo; the Sisters of Mercy at Apalachicola; the Sisters of Perpetual Adoration at Pensacola.

The State laws relative to private and parochial schools are as follows: no school fund or any part thereof shall be appropriated or used for the support of any sectarian school (XII, 13); property held and used exclusively for religious, scientific, municipal, educational or charitable purposes shall be exempt from taxation (XVI, 16). Bible reading is neither permitted nor excluded in the public schools.

RELIGION.—The Catholic population of the State of Florida (1916) was 24,650. For Catholic statistics see St. Augustine, Diocese of; Mobile, Diocese of.

Of the other religious denominations the Baptist National Convention has the largest membership: 69,865; next comes the Southern Baptist Convention, with 57,732 members; the Methodist Episcopal Church South comes third, and in 1916 reported 590 churches and 155 parsonages; estimated membership 51,500. The Episcopalian denomination had (1916) 10,399 communicants, 95 Sunday school organizations, and 59 parsonages. The Episcopalians maintained 132 parishes and missions, 8 churches and 4 schools for colored people and have an enrolment of 315 teachers and 2491 students in their Sunday schools; their church property is valued at $728,038. Presbyterians, North and South, number 10,170 with 61 parsonages; Congregationalists, 2878. Among the colored people, five distinct branches of Methodists report 436 preachers, 1434 churches, and 14,821 members.

FLORIDA INDIANS.—Descendants of the few defiant Indians who refused to withdraw to reservations after the Indian War in 1842 were assigned a reservation by the Legislature in 1917 and granted 100,000 acres near the Ten Thousand Islands.

LEGISLATIVE CHANGES.—Armistice Day, 11 November, has been added to the number of legal holidays. The State prison is now permanently located at Bradford Farms. The custom of leasing prisoners was abolished in 1913, when the Legislature provided for the new prison. On 1 January, 1917, there were 1620 State prisoners, 82 per cent of whom were colored, 643 in prison, 979 employed outside.

In recent times the political situation of Florida has been marked by unfortunate religious bigotry. Governor Sidney J. Catts put through the Legislature a Convent Inspection Bill, under the terms of which in every county in Florida, there is a committee of three men and women, who shall at least once a year visit and inspect all convents and Catholic institutions. He also put through a Compulsory Education Bill, compelling all the children of school age to attend the public schools. Not satisfied with the feeling of bigotry which he stirred in Florida, he stumped the State of Michigan in favor of the anti-parochial school amendment to the State constitution, which later failed to pass. In 1921 reports accusing Governor Catts of graft were circulated and on 16 April, the Florida Senate adopted a resolution authorizing investigation. In May he was indicted for peonage by the Grand Jury and arrested, but in June he was acquitted. Florida ratified the Federal prohibition amendment, 14 December, 1918, the fifteenth State to do so. The State did not take any action on the Federal suffrage amendment which went into effect without Florida's ratification.

Fogaras and Alba-Julia, ARCHDIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., VI-123a), of the Greek-Rumanian Rite, in Rumania, with residence at Blaj. The suffragan sees are: Oradea-Mare (Grosswardein or Nagy-Varad), Gherla (Armenopolis or Armenierstadt or Szamos-Ujvar), and Lugoj (Lugos). Through existing political agitation a prominent part of the archdiocese was taken away by the Hungarian element in 1912 and erected into the new diocese of Hajdu-Dorogh (q.v.). On 1 December, 1918, the exertions of the national union of Alba-Julia in bringing about the incorporation of the archdiocese into the kingdom of Rumania were crowned with success. The present Archbishop Basil Suciu (b. at Capocel 13 January, 1873) was elected in May, 1918, in succession to Archbishop Victor Mihalyi de Apsa (d. 1918), who was a learned scholar and defender of the Church, and bequeathed all his possessions to the archdiocese. During the World War most of the clergy were subjects of Hungary, and they succeeded in confirming the people in their hope of a future incorporation in the kingdom of Rumania. Some sought refuge within Rumania itself, and there labored to bring about the desired union. The Hungarians either imprisoned or interned many priests and laymen, and some died during their imprisonment. Of special note are the following recently deceased: Rev. Johannes M. Moldovanu, cathedral provost, and Canon Augustine Bunea, member of the Rumanian Academy.

The Catholic population of 500,000 is Rumanian. There are 570 secular and 2 regular priests; 706 parishes; 1 monastery for men and 1 for women; 1 abbey for men; 1 convent for men; 1 theological seminary with 7 professors and 75 students; 3 colleges for boys with 27 teachers and 800 students; 1 college for girls with 14 teachers and 300 students; 1 normal school with 7 teachers and 60 pupils; 408 elementary schools with 432 teachers and 70,245 pupils; 1 industrial school with 3 teachers and 40 pupils; 1 orphanage with 180 orphans. The Catholic institutions are supported by the Government. Among the clergy there is an organization for the advancement of the missions; and among the women the Marian Congregation. The Catholic publications number two weeklies, "Unirea," founded in 1890, and "Unirea Poporului," founded 1919, and a monthly review, "Cultura Crestina."

Fogazzaro, ANTONIO, b. at Vicenza, Italy, in 1842; d. on 7 March, 1911. His name is associated with the Modernist movement which was condemned by Pius X in his Encyclical "Pascendi." He was a writer of verse and romance, beginning his literary career as early as 1874. His heroes in several of his novels are himself, notably in "Il Santo," the story that brought him to grief when it was put on the Index at the time Modernism, which it portrayed, was condemned. Fogazzaro submitted to the condemnation and is even said to have been exasperated by the defiant attitude of his quondam friends. He criticized them severely in his last novel, "Leila," but at the same time did not please the opposite side. At last sickness overtook him and that with failure brought serenity of spirit. He died in a hospital after a serious surgical operation.

Foggia, DIOCESE OF (FODIANENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-123b), in the province of Foggia in Apulia, Southern Italy, immediately subject to the Holy See. The present (1922) bishop, Rt. Rev. Pietro Pomares y Morant, a former chancellor and primicerius of the metropolitan see of Ancona, named private chamberlain, 25 June, 1909, appointed 27 August, 1921, consecrated at Rome 1 November, and proclaimed 21 November of the same year, to succeed Mgr. Salvatore Bella, transferred to the Diocese of Aci-Reale, in Sicily. There are within the confines of the diocese 98,000 Catholics; 9 parishes, 98 secular and 13 regular priests, 45 seminarians, 13 Brothers, 72 Sisters, 74 churches or chapels.

Foley, JOHN S. See DETROIT, DIOCESE OF.

Foligno, DIOCESE OF (FULGINATENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-124d), in the province of Perugia, Central Italy, immediately subject to the Holy See. The bishop, Rt. Rev. Stefano Corbini, b. in Siena, 21 May, 1859, canon penitentiary, appointed 18 June, 1918, proclaimed 10 March, 1919, succeeding Mgr. Carlo Sica, transferred to the titular see of Damascus in Phoenicia. The diocese numbers 56 parishes, 41,000 Catholics, 71 secular and 40 regular clergy, 35 seminarians, 135 Sisters, and 173 churches or chapels. In 1914 Mgr. Faloci-Pulignani, head of the cathedral chapter, published "I priori della cattedrale di Foligno, Memorie."

Forbes-Leith, WILLIAM, Jesuit writer, b. at Aberdeen Scotland, in 1833; d. at Roehampton, England, on 30 April, 1921. He became a Jesuit at Issenheim, Alsace, in 1851; studied theology in France and England, and was ordained at St. Beuno's in Wales. He lectured on philosophy and literature in Paris from 1865 till 1880, a period, however, which was interrupted by the Franco-Prussian War, in which he saw service as chaplain. He is the author of "The Scots Men-at-Arms and Life Guards in France," "The Gospel Book of St. Margaret, Queen of Scotland," "The Life of St.

Cuthbert," "Historical Memoirs of Scotch Catholics During the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries," "Pre-Reformation Scholars in Scotland During the Sixteenth Century."

Fordham University (cf. C. E., XIV-203b), comprises the school of arts and sciences known as St. John's College, the college of pharmacy, school of law, school of social service, graduate school and department of education. The medical school, founded in 1905, was discontinued in 1921, owing to a deficit in the running expenses. The schools of law and social service are conducted in the Woolworth Building, New York City.

The school of social service, founded in 1917, has as its object the training of students for social and charitable work and occupies two academic years. The training comprises field work and actual case work, as well as lectures, and includes as its basic course: family welfare, child welfare, social investigation, criminology, medical social service, community work and industrial problems.

The graduate school and department of education was founded in 1918 and offers advanced courses in philosophy, history, literature and science to persons who have finished the normal college course and are desirous of continuing their studies along these lines. Extension courses in connection with this department are given in the Woolworth Building.

The total number of students registered in the university for 1920-21 was 2184 under 180 professors. The academic department registered 502 students with a faculty of 31; the school of law, 845 students with a faculty of 21; the school of social service, 94 students with a faculty of 21; the college of pharmacy, 125 students with a faculty of 19. In 1916 the Rev. Jos. A. Mulry, S.J., succeeded the Rev. Thomas J. McCluskey, as president of the university, and presided until 1919, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Edward P. Tivnan, S.J., now president.

Foreign Mission Society of America, CATHOLIC, was approved by the National Council of Archbishops, Washington, D. C., 27 April, 1911, and authorized by Pope Pius X at Rome on the Feast of Sts. Peter and Paul, 29 June, 1911. Maryknoll, in honor of the Queen of the Apostles, has become the popular designation of the Society. It was founded by Fr. James Anthony Walsh and Fr. Thomas Frederick Price (d. 1919) for the purpose of training Catholic missionaries for the heathen, and of arousing American Catholics to a sense of their apostolic duty. The ultimate aim is the development of a native clergy in lands now pagan. The priests of the Society are secular, without vows. They are assisted by auxiliary brothers and by the Foreign Mission Sisters of St. Dominic, more commonly known as the Maryknoll Sisters. In the ten brief years of its existence Maryknoll has achieved a remarkable development. The seminary and administration is situated on the Hudson, about thirty miles north of New York City, at Maryknoll, N. Y. Students in the seminary make the usual six year course in philosophy, theology, Scripture, etc. The Auxiliary Brotherhood of St. Michael was established for those who wish to devote themselves to foreign mission work, but are not inclined to pursue higher studies or to assume the responsibilities of the priesthood. The general management of the Society and the publication of its two periodicals, "The Field Afar" and "The Maryknoll Junior," are carried on at this center. Here, too, is the mother-house of the Maryknoll Sisters. Although not a corporate part of the Society, the Sisters have worked with it from the beginning.

first as lay helpers, and now as recognized religious, known officially as the Foreign Mission Sisters of St. Dominic, Inc. These Sisters devote themselves exclusively to work for foreign missions. The Maryknoll Preparatory College, The Venard, at Clark's Summit, near Scranton, Pa., admits to a five year classical course foreign mission aspirants who have completed the eight grammar grades. Connected with this institution is a group of the Maryknoll Sisters. Their convent is dedicated to Our Lady of the Missions. The Maryknoll Medical Bureau, New York City, was founded in 1920 to interest the medical profession in mission needs, to secure the services of physicians and nurses, and to provide medical supplies for hospitals and dispensaries in the missions. The Maryknoll Procure in San Francisco, Cal., is the center of Maryknoll activities on the western coast, and the depot of supplies for the missionaries in China. It is also the headquarters of the Maryknoll Society of the Pacific, Inc. The Maryknoll Japanese Missions at Los Angeles, Cal., and Seattle, Wash., are conducted by the Maryknoll Sisters for the education and religious instruction of the Japanese in those cities. The personnel of the Society in 1922 consisted of 38 priests, 162 students, 23 auxiliary Brothers and 128 Sisters, of whom 38 were professed, 64 novices, and 26 postulants, making a total of 351.

in September, 1918. There are now 16 priests and 1 auxiliary brother in the Maryknoll Mission. In the fall of 1921 the first mission group of Maryknoll Sisters arrived at their Chinese convent, Kowloon, Hongkong. The Maryknoll Procure at Kau-lung is the center of communications and supplies for the missions at Wu-chou, Yeung-kong, Tung-chan, Kao-chau, Loting, Shi-lung, Tungon, Chetung, Dosing, and Ping-nam, in the provinces of Kwang-tung and Kwang-si. Kau-lung is on the mainland, a few moments by ferry from Hongkong. The mission was visited in 1921 by the founder and superior of the Society, Very Rev. James A. Walsh, who arrived in China in November and spent six weeks studying conditions and conferring on plans for mission development. A report for 1921 of the mission gives a population of 6,000,000 pagans and 2010 Catholics, administered to by 16 American missionaries, 1 auxiliary brother (American), 6 Sisters (American), 4 seminarians, 50 men catechists and 30 women catechists. There were 2018 catechumens, 111 baptisms of adults, 723 baptisms of children, 2196 annual confessions, 5236 confessions of devotion, 2093 annual communions, 7008 communions of devotion, 7 who received Extreme Unction, and 46 marriages. The Maryknoll missionaries had the following establishments: 8 districts staffed, 70 stations, 7 churches,

The work of the Society is maintained and developed by the co-operation of its associate or "spiritual" members. For these members weekly Masses are offered by the priests, and they are remembered in the communions and prayers of the students and Sisters. The same spiritual benefits may, if desired, be applied to departed souls. Spiritual membership in the Society, with a personal share in its good works and merits, is secured by all benefactors and by subscribers to the Maryknoll mission monthly, "The Field Afar." Associate membership for one year is fifty cents; in perpetuity, fifty dollars, payable on enrolment or within two years.

A mission of 25,000 square miles in South China has been assigned to the Maryknoll Society by the Sacred College of Propaganda Fide, Rome. The first band of Maryknoll priests left for this field 30 chapels, 4 infant asylums and orphanages, 20 schools for boys with 359 pupils, 8 schools for girls with 124 pupils, 1 industrial school, and 3 dispensaries. It is proposed that in addition to the industrial school Maryknoll conduct a boys' high school and a university hostel at Hong-kong. A catechist or normal school has been opened recently at Kochow, with Fr. Meyer in charge. The accompanying table gives the details of the districts assigned to the Foreign Mission Society of America.

Foreign Missions, SAINT JOSEPH'S SOCIETY FOR (cf. C. E., VIII-521d).—Besides St. Joseph's Missionary College at Mill Hill, London, there are three branch colleges: St. Joseph's Missiehuis at Pozendaal, Holland (erected 1890); St. Josef's Missionhaus at Brixen, Tyrol (1891); and St. Joseph's Studiehuis at Tilburg, Holland (1912). At Vryland, near Arnhem, Holland, there is a sanatorium for old, sick, and disabled missionaries. The superior general, resident at Mill Hill, is Very Rev. Francis Henry. The Society comprises (1922) about 260 priests and 15 lay brothers. About 220 of these priests are engaged as missionaries, the others as teachers in the colleges or in the sanatorium. There are 10 mission stations in the Belgian Congo. In 1912 the Caribbean mission, including San Andres, Old Providence, and Corn Island, was confided by the Holy See to the Society, and in 1921 the portion of the Cameroons under British control.

SISTERS OF ST. JOSEPH'S SOCIETY FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS of the Third Order Regular of St. Francis have a novitiate at Patricroft, Manchester, England. The Sisters also have establishments at Mill Hill, boarding schools and an orphanage at Blackburn, where there are 10 Sisters in charge of 80 to 100 children; Freshfield (Liverpool); Waterford and Cork in Ireland; Rozendaal and Tilburg in Holland. In Borneo there are 20 Sisters at various mission stations. The total number of professed Sisters in the congregation is 200.

Foreign Missions of Milan, SOCIETY OF, founded in the year 1850, under the patronage of Pope Pius IX, by the late Father Angelo Ramazzotti, then an Oblate Father of Rho (Milan), who was afterwards consecrated Bishop of Pavia, and subsequently elected Patriarch of Venice. The Society is a "Pious Association of Secular Priests," who devote themselves freely to the work of missionaries on the mission field in heathen countries (India, Burma, and China), for the conversion of infidels. They are directed in their life work by a rule approved by the Sacred Congregation of Propaganda. At present there are entrusted to this Society seven large missions: the Dioceses of Hyderabad-Deccan and Krishnagar and the Vicariates Apostolic of Eastern Burma, Hong-Kong, Northern Ho-nan, Southern Ho-nan, and Eastern Ho-nan.

The Fathers have under their care about 60,000,000 infidels. The mother-house, to which the seminary for the students of theology is attached and where at present there are 40 students, is at Milan. Besides this seminary the Society had an apostolic school at Monza with 33 students of philosophy, another at Genoa with 37 alumni, and a fourth recently opened at Aversa (near Naples) with a few alumni. From the last statistics (1920) the Catholics in all seven missions number 141,000, besides 36,000 catechumens. There are in all 247 churches and 1001 chapels. The missionaries working in the missions at present are 121 in number, aided by 35 native priests; and with 25 lay brothers on the teaching staff. There are also 528 nuns of different religious orders, who have charge of orphans, of schools for girls, of hospitals, and other charitable institutions. There are 1881 catechists and teachers in the 712 colleges and schools of the missions. In 1920 there were 29,500 baptisms, of which 7934 were of adults.

Foreign Missions of Paris, SOCIETY OF (cf. C. E., XIV-79d).—Part of the vast territory in Japan evangelized by the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris has been confided to other congregations, this being necessary because of the extent of territory, the density of population, and the diversity of languages. In 1912 the Congregation of the Divine Word was entrusted with 3 departments of the Diocese of Hakodate and two departments of the Archdiocese of Tokio, but no canonical erection of prefecture or vicariate was made; on 12 February, 1915, was erected the Prefecture Apostolic of Sapporo, comprising Hokkaido (Yezo), the Chishima islands (Kruile), Karafuto (Sakhalin), detached from the Diocese of Hakodate and confided to the German Franciscans of the Province of Thuringia; finally the Jesuits of the German province have been assigned the departments of Yamaguchi, Shimane, Hiroshima, Tottori, and Okayama, though no canonical erection has yet been made of an ecclesiastical division. The Society retains the Archdiocese of Tokio, and the three dioceses of Nagasaki, Osaka, and Hakodate, diminished in extent by the loss of the departments mentioned. The province of Kwang-tung, which formed a single vicariate, was divided in 1914 into 2 vicariates: Canton and Swatow. In 1920 the Vicariate of Canton was again subdivided into the 2 vicariates of Canton and Western Kwang-tung and Hainan. These last two vicariates Apostolic and also Swatow remain under the direction of the Society; the Vicariate of Siu-chow has been confided to the Salesians. Since 1918 the American Foreign Missions of Maryknoll have labored in Yeung-kong under the authority of the Vicar Apostolic of Canton, in preparation for the erection of an ecclesiastical division under their care. The Society of Foreign Missions of Paris at present (1921) has under its direction 36 dioceses and vicariates apostolic, of which 6 are in Japan and Corea, 11 in China, 9 in Eastern Indo-China, 4 in Western Indo-China, and 4 in the south of India. The Japanese missions are Tokio, Nagasaki, Osaka, and Hakodate; Seoul and Taiku are in Corea. The Chinese missions are: Western Sze-ch'wan, Eastern Sze-ch'wan, Southern Sze-ch'wan, Kien-chang, Yun-nan, Kweichow, Canton, Western Kwang-tung, and Hainan, Swatow, Kwang-si, Southern Manchuria, Northern Manchuria, and Tibet. In Eastern Indo-China are: Western Tong-king, Southern Tong-king, Upper Tong-king, Maritime Tong-king, Eastern Cochinchina, Western Cochinchina, Northern Cochinchina, Cambodia, and Laos. In Western Indo-China are Siam, Malacca, Southern Burma, and Northern Burma. In India are: Pondicherry, Mysore, Coimbatore, and Kumbakonam.

The World War seriously affected the Society and the missions. Among those who enlisted at the beginning were 5 directors, 103 aspirants, and 2 lay brothers from the Seminary at Paris, and 150 priests and 1 bishop from the missions. Of the 55 missionaries in Eastern Sze-ch'wan, 14 were mobilized; in Canton, 12 out of 40; 16 in Pondicherry; 17 in Eastern Cochinchina; in Seoul, 13 out of 26. In the following December there were already among these 9 killed, 7 prisoners, and about 20 wounded. By the end of the war, in November, 1918, 46 priests and seminarians had given their lives for France. To insure the care of souls the bishops reassigned their districts, they themselves undertaking the direction of one or more parishes and also teaching in the seminaries, so that spiritual needs might be met. When the war was over the mobilized missionaries returned to their missions, where death had left many vacancies among the veterans of the apostolate. In August, 1914, the Society numbered 1385 members and in November, 1918, only 1222, this being a loss of 163 members. At the same time financial resources had greatly diminished, due to the depreciation in value of French money. The high rate of exchange affected charitable institutions, such as orphanages and hospitals. Though far from good, financial conditions are now improved.

In 1918 the cause of the Martyrs of Corea was introduced at Rome. These were 2 bishops (Mgr.

Berneux and Mgr. Daveluy), 7 missionaries, and 17 faithful all beheaded in 1866, and 20 Christians martyred in 1860 and 1862. The Apostolic Letter "Maximum Illud," issued by Benedict XV in 1919, called attention to the need for native clergy. Mgr. Petrelli had been sent to Japan as Apostolic delegate in 1916 and 1917 and Mgr. Fumasoni-Biondi in 1920. In 1919 Mgr. de Guébriant, of the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, Vicar Apostolic of Canton, was named apostolic visitor in China. The Holy See thus took a particular interest in the extension and cultivation of the missionary field. To meet the needs of the situation, the bishops of the Society, which heretofore had no superior general, met at Hong-kong in April, 1921, and elected as first superior of the Seminary and of the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, Mgr. de Guébriant. Born in Paris, 11 December, 1860, ordained priest 5 July, 1885, the same year Mgr. Jean-Baptiste-Marie Budes de Guébriant went as a missionary to Southern Sze-ch'wan, in 1894 was made provicar, and in 1910 Bishop of Eúroea and Vicar Apostolic of Kien-Chang, in 1916 Vicar Apostolic of Canton and in December, 1921, Archbishop of Marcianopolis.

The missionaries are assisted in their labors by the native clergy, the catechists, and religious. In 1912 there were 889 native priests in all the missions of the Society; in 1915 there were 984; in 1918, 1073; and 1920, 1109. In 1912 in Southern Tong-king 11 priests were ordained; in 1916 in Western Tong-king, 8; in 1918 in Eastern Sze-ch'wan, 4; in 1910 in Siam, 6; in 1920 in Western Cochin China, 6. The missions possessing the greatest number of native priests in 1920 were: Western Tong-king, 136; Southern Tong-king, 127; Western Cochin China, 91. According to countries they may be listed (1920) as follows: Japan and Corea, 62; Chian, 251; Eastern Indo-China, 600; Western Indo-China, 60; India, 76. Among the native clergy recently deceased are: Fr. Joseph Tong (d. 1913), of Eastern Sze-ch'wan; Fr. Trinn (d. 1915), curate of Hanoi for thirty-five years; Frs. André Vai (d. 1916), and Jacques Ichang (d. 1916), of Manchuria; Fr. Huyen (d. 1916), of Western Tong-king, ninety years of age and fifty-eight years a priest, the last survivor of the great persecution of Tu-duc, during which he ministered to the confessors of the faith imprisoned at Nam Dinh, hearing their confessions, bringing them Holy Communion, and giving them final absolution; Fr. Tin (d. 1918), former confessor of the faith, imprisoned during the persecution of 1859; Frs. Doanh Chan and Chuong (d. 1918), of Northern Cochin China; Frs. Duong, Chinh, Khu, Tan, Duoc, Qui, Duc, Van, and Le (d. between 1912 and 1916), of Western Cochin China; Frs. Chien, Tsung, and Vien (d. 1918), of Western Cochin China; Frs. Giang and Hoc (d. 1918), of Cambodia; Fr. Araya (d. 1918), the first priest of Hakodate. In 1912 the catechists numbered 3330; in 1920 there were 3449. Schools for catechists have been founded at: Chang-Chun, in Northern Manchuria (1912), Thai in Maritime Tong-king (1913); Taiku, in Corea (1915) for women catechists; Southern Sze-ch'wan and Kwei-chou (1916); Kai-nhum, in Western Cochin China (1920). In 1920 Nagasaki had 578 catechists; Western Tong-king, 449; and Southern Tong-king, 215. The native religious are very few, not more than a hundred men. Religious orders of native women are more numerous: in Eastern Indo-China the lovers of the Cross number over 3000; in China there are many Christian Virgins. In Eastern Sze-ch'wan in 1912 Fr. Derouin established the Chinese congregation of the Servants of the Sacred Heart for the instruction of young girls. In Manchuria the native religious of the Holy Heart of Mary have installed several convents. Carmelite convents have been founded at Hue (1912), Pnom-Penh (1919), and Chung-king (1920). The European congregations have received into their congregations about 1500 natives. The religious orders of both men and women of all nationalities numbered 7630 members in 1920.

Since 1912 there has been a total of 274,333 conversions in the missions confided to the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, with an annual average of 30,482; in 1920 there were 28,883. There have been (1912-20) 3120 abjurations of Protestants; 1,096,650 baptisms of pagan children in articulo mortis; the number of confessions and communions has been very high. Of recent years several associations have been organized and others re-established, such as the Confraternity of the Holy and Immaculate Heart of Mary in Siam, the Children of Mary at Pondicherry, the Confraternity of Christian Mothers at Kwei-chou. Nocturnal adoration has been organized at Maritime Tong-king. On 26 July, 1914, a Eucharistic feast, in union with the international Eucharistic Congress at London, was celebrated at Kien-chang. The Enthronement of the Sacred Heart in the schools and families has been established in Burma, Cochin China, Tong-king, Japan, Sze-ch'wan. Pilgrimages, especially that of the Blessed Virgin at La-Vang in Northern Cochin China and that of St. Anthony at Kolar, in Mysore, are much frequented. Weeks of religious conferences and the association called the Catholic Bond have been organized in Burma. The Catholic Association, founded at Tien-tsin, has spread throughout the Chinese missions. The Society for Catholic Youth is established at Taiku in Corea. Many reviews and bulletins are published such as "Le Semeur," "The Friend," and "The Voice" in Southern Burma, parochial bulletins at Taiku in Corea, "La Vérité" published in Chinese at Chung-king, the "Petit Messenger Paroissial" in Coimbatore, the "Recherche de la Vérité" in Northern Manchuria, the "Echo de l'Assomption" in Siam.

In 1912 the Society of Foreign Missions had 5950 churches, oratories, and chapels; in 1920 there were 6393. All the older missions have seminaries and some of those recently created have established them. Maritime Tong-king opened its seminary in 1912, as did also Kien-chang. Taiku opened a seminary in 1914. In 1920 seminarians from Japan, Corea, China, and Cochin China were sent to Rome to make their theological studies at the College of Propaganda. The general seminary established at Penang to receive seminarians from all the missions had 74 pupils in 1912 and 97 in 1920. Colleges, boarding and day schools of good standing have also been established. These totaled 326 with 19,818 pupils in 1912, and 357 with 24,037 pupils in 1920. Printing presses have been established to supply the necessary books. There were 6 in 1912 and since then one has been installed at Ninh-Binh in Maritime Tong-king and another at Ghirin in Northern Manchuria. The largest printing press of the Society is at Hong-Kong. Nearly all the missions have orphanages for boys in charge of the missionaries and orphanages for girls directed by nuns. In 1912 these numbered 452 with 24,009 children; in 1920 there were 429 with about the same number of children, the decrease in the number of institutions being due to diminution of resources. For the same reason there were fewer hospitals, hospices, leper-hospitals, and dispensaries (582) in 1920 than in 1912 (636). Most of these institutions were constructed by the missionaries from their personal means or at the expense of the mission, and put under the charge of the Sisters of St. Paul of Chartres, Sisters of Providence, French Missionaries of Mary, or the Little Sisters of the Poor.

Among notable members of the Society recently deceased are: J. B. Guerlach (b. 1858; d. 1912), missionary in Eastern Cochin China; Jules Lemaréchal (b. 1842; d. 1912), missionary in Japan, vicar general at Tokio in 1888, author of several devotional works in Japanese and a Japanese-French dictionary; Jean Bruyère (b. 1852; d. 1912), missionary in Western Cochin China, reformed and developed the religious congregation of the Lovers of the Cross; François Belleville (b. 1860; d. 1912), Vicar Apostolic of Southern Tong-king in 1911 and Bishop of Amisus; Edouard Gourdin (b. 1838; d. 1912), missionary in Southern Sse-ch'wan, author of a Chinese-French dictionary and other works; Pierre Cazenave (b. 1834; d. 1912), director of the seminary at Paris in 1867, assistant to the superior in 1880, and procurator general at Rome from 1883 till his death; Auguste Desgodin (b. 1826; d. 1913), missionary in Tibet, explorer and geographer, received academic honors for his geographic work, one of the compilers of a Tibetan-Latin-French dictionary, author of "Le Thibet," "Bouddhisme d'après les Bouddhistes"; Armand Dessaint (b. 1831; d. 1913), missionary in Mysore, founder of the Sisters of Pity, a religious community of young widows, who, according to the custom of India are not permitted to remarry, author and translator of works in Canara and of "A Manual of Medicine"; Hugues Bottero (b. 1837; d. 1913), missionary in Pondicherry, professor at the Colonial College and the College of St. Joseph at Cuddalore, Bishop of Kumbakonam (1889), conversant in French, English, Italian, Tamul, Bengalese, and Hindoustan, orator and writer, translator of the Bible into Tamul; Jacques Vissac (b. 1848; d. 1913), missionary in Mysore, principal of the College of St. Joseph at Bangalore; Jean-François Genibrel (b. 1851; d. 1914), missionary in Western Cochin China, director of the printing press at Tandinh, composer of Annamite-French dictionaries and lexicon; Joseph Grosjean (b. 1859; d. 1914), missionary in Northern Cochin China, professor at the preparatory seminary where he composed a method of harmony in Annamite, founder of twelve mission stations in Quang-tri, director of the seminary at Paris (1892), procurator general at Rome (1912); Henri Pianet (b. 1852; d. 1915), missionary in Cambodia; Eugène Luce (b. 1863; d. 1915), missionary in Southern Burma, member of the council of public instruction, founder of "The Voice," a monthly review; Marie Dunand (b. 1841; d. 1915), Vicar Apostolic of Western Sse-ch'wan in 1893 and Bishop of Caloe; Urbain Faurie (b. 1847; d. 1915), missionary in Japan, evangelized the district of Hiroshima, director of the seminary at Paris, chaplain in the French army, killed in action; Joseph-Adolphe Klinger (b. 1852; d. 1916), missionary in Southern Tong-king; defended over 2000 faithful at Xa-doi during the Annamite persecution; Charles-Emile Lesserteur (b. 1841; d. 1916), missionary in Western Tong-king, superior of the seminary at Paris, author of several works; Jean Darras (b. 1835; d. 1916), missionary in Pondicherry, baptized over 35,000 in India, published an account of part of his apostolate; Marius Guiraud (b. 1876; d. 1916), missionary in Mysore, professor at the seminary of Pondicherry, superior of the seminary at Bangalore, director of the seminary at Paris, military infirmarian during the war, Forgery (cf. C. E. VI-135).—All those who forge letters, decrees or rescripts of the Holy See incur excommunication; if they are clerics they are to be further punished as the ordinary thinks fitting, even by depriving them of their benefice, office, dignity, and ecclesiastical pension; if they are religious they are to be deprived of their office and of active and passive voice, and may be subjected to other penalties provided by their constitutions. In case of other ecclesiastical documents, the ordinary is to inflict suitable punishment on the same parties, depriving the guilty one of his office if he falsified documents which he was charged with drawing up or preserving.

Forlì, DIOCESE OF (FOROLIVIENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-137a), in the province of Emilia, Northern Italy, suffragan of Ravenna. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. Raimundo Jaffei, has filled this see since 1895; b. in Bagnaia in the diocese of Viterbo 1 November, 1847, ordained at Fermo, appointed bishop 18 March, 1895, and made an assistant to the pontifical throne 17 April, 1920. According to 1922 statistics the diocese numbers 61 parishes, 102 churches, 101 secular and 15 regular priests, 2 seminaries, 1 in Forlì, 1 in Bologna, and 26 seminarians; 1 university in Bologna, 1 college for men with 150 boys, 4 for women with 250 girls, 1 normal school with 450 pupils, 4 training schools, 50 elementary schools with 15,000 pupils, 1 industrial school, 4 missionary organizations, 1 home, 10 asylums, 1 hospital. The gymnasium, lyceum, normal, and technical schools receive Government support. The societies organized in the diocese include the Mutual Aid Society among the clergy, and twenty different associations among the laity. A diocesan synod was held in April, 1920. Patriotic works were organized in the diocese during the World War by Mgr. Adamo Pasini, and met with zealous co-operation from both the clergy and laity; war orphans were cared for, an association for soldiers' families was formed, and a home for soldiers established in the diocese.

Formosa, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (INSULÆ FOAMOSÆ), comprises the island of the same name and the twelve civil prefectures known as the Pesadores, subject to Japan. It was evangelized in 1626, later in 1860, and by a decree of 19 July, 1913, it was erected into a prefecture apostolic and separated from the Vicariate Apostolic of Amoy and entrusted to the Dominicans of the Philippines, with official residence at Taipeh. Rt. Rev. Clemente Fernandez, b. in Penerudes, in the Diocese of Oviedo, 17 October, 1879, professed 17 November, 1895, ordained priest 8 September, 1903, was appointed first Prefect Apostolic of Formosa, 3 September, 1913. He was succeeded by Rev. Thomas de la Hoz, O.P., appointed 1 August, 1921. There were in 1912 out of a total population of 3,290,978, 3533 Catholics, 10 Spanish Dominicans, 31 catechists, 30 churches and chapels, and 3 Dominican Sisters.

Fort-Dauphin, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (DE FORT-DAUPHIN; cf. C. E., XVI-83b), in Southern Madagascar, with residence at Fort-Dauphin. Erected 16 January, 1896, under the name of Southern Madagascar, it was changed to Fort-Dauphin, 20 May, 1913; it is entrusted to the Lazarists. The vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Jean-Jacques Crouzet, a Lazarist, b. in Lansargue in the Diocese of Montpellier, 1 April, 1849, entered the Congregation of the Mission 12 October, 1868, was appointed titular Bishop of Zephyrium, 11 September, 1886, consecrated at Paris, 28 October, 1888, named Vicar Apostolic of Abyssinia (16 January, 1896), and later of Fort-Dauphin. According to 1920 statistics the vicariate has approximately: 800,000 inhabitants, 20,000 of whom are Catholics; 18 missionary priests, 12 churches, 25 schools, and 15 Sisters of Charity.

Fort Wayne, DIOCESE OF (WAYNE CASTRENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-150c), in Indiana, U. S. A., suffragan of Cincinnati, has a Catholic population of 151,000. It is at present under the administration of Rt. Rev. Herman Joseph Alerding, born 13 August, 1846, in the Diocese of Covington, ordained 22 September, 1868, curate at Terre Haute, rector at Cambridge, and for 26 years at St. Joseph's in Indianapolis, elected bishop 30 August, 1900, consecrated 30 November following, succeeding Rt. Rev. Joseph Rademacher (b. 8 December, 1840; d. 12 January, 1900).

The diocesan statistics for 1922 are: 138 parishes, 33 missions, 179 secular and 152 regular priests; convents: men 1, women 4, with 2052 in the various communities; Holy Cross Seminary with 39 seminarians, 1 university with 90 professors, 1800 students; 1 college for men with 20 teachers, 340 students; 1 college for women with 434 students; 2 high schools, 8 academies with 450 pupils, 6 normal schools, 7 training schools for nurses, 104 elementary schools with an attendance of 25,582 pupils.

The different nationalities represented in the diocese with their approximate numbers are: American-born, 100,000; Polish, about 20,000; Lithuanian, 30,000; Slovaks, 8000; Italians, 1000; Greeks, 2000;

Croatians, 5000; and others Spanish, Mexican, Hungarian, etc.

The missionary work is carried out by the Fort Wayne Apostolate. The charitable establishments include 2 homes for the aged, 2 diocesan orphan asylums, 15 hospitals, 1 settlement house (Bishop Alerding-Judge Gory Settlement house). All public institutions are self-supporting, and the priests are never forbidden to minister in these institutions.

A weekly paper, "Our Sunday Visitor," founded by Rt. Rev. Mgr. John F. Noll in 1912, is published in the diocese, and has at present a subscription of more than half a million. In December, 1921, the founder and editor was honored by the Holy See with the title of domestic prelate. A society for the relief of infirm priests is organized among the clergy. During the World War six priests served as chaplains in the army and navy, and the Catholics in the service held the same proportion as in other parts of the country.

Fortaleza (or CEARA), ARCHDIOCESE OF (FORTALEXIENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-145d), in the State of Ceara, Brazil, was raised to metropolitan rank 10 November, 1915. By decrees of 20 October, 1914, and 10 November, 1915, the dioceses of Crato and Sobral, its suffragans, were erected from this territory; the new boundaries established 24 January, 1919, include an area of about 11,882 sq. miles. The bishop, Rt. Rev. Manuel Da Silva Gomez, b. in Bahia, 14 March, 1874, studied in the Seminary of Bahia, was ordained 15 November, 1896, professor at the seminary 3 February, 1893, chancellor of Bahia, 15 November, 1899, appointed titular bishop of Mopsuestia and auxiliary at Fortaleza, 11 April, 1911, consecrated 29 October following, transferred 16 September, 1912, enthroned 8 December, succeeding Mgr. Joachim Joseph Vieira. He was named first Archbishop of Fortaleza, 10 November, 1915. There are in the diocese (1920) 771,120 Catholics, 832 Protestants, 12 Jews, 78 parishes, 106 secular and 5 regular priests, 234 churches or chapels.

Forty Hours' Devotion (cf. C. E., VI-151).—The Forty Hours' devotion is to be held each year on appointed days in all the churches in which the Blessed Sacrament is kept, with greater solemnity than usual. If for a grave reason this cannot be done, the local ordinary is to have solemn exposition for a few hours at least.

Forum (cf. C. E., VI-153c).—The following rules are laid down in the Code for determining the proper forum for ecclesiastical suits. The plaintiff is to sue in the forum of the defendant, but if the defendant has several fora the plaintiff is entitled to make the choice. Actions de spolio must be tried before the local ordinary of the place where the object is situated, as must actions about benefices; administration suits come before the ordinary of the place of administration; suits regarding inheritance or pious bequests come before the local ordinary of the place where the testator had his domicile. By reason of his domicile or quasi-domicile anyone can be summoned before the local ordinary, who, moreover, has jurisdiction over his subjects even when they are absent. A traveler who is in Rome can be summoned there just as if it was his home; but he has the right of going home and requesting that the suit be sent before his own ordinary. If a person, however, has been in Rome for a year, he may insist on being cited before the Roman courts. The proper forum of a religious is where his house is situated; the forum of a vagus is wherever he chances to be. If an action is in rem the suit may be brought before the local ordinary of the place where the thing is. In virtue of a contract one may be cited before the local ordinary, either of the place where it was made or where it is to be executed, though the parties may stipulate in a contract what is to be the forum in case of a dispute. A culprit is to be cited in the place where the crime was committed, and the local judge may pass sentence on him even if he has left. If there should be two judges of equal competence, a suit is to be tried by him who first took cognizance of it.

FOSSANO, DIOCESE OF (FOSSANENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-154c), in the province of Cuneo, Northern Italy, a suffragan of Turin. The bishop, Rt. Rev. Quirico Travaini, who was archpriest of Trecata, in the Diocese of Novara at the time of his appointment, 16 January, 1919, was proclaimed 10 March following, to succeed Mgr. Giosué Signori, transferred to the Diocese of Alessandria della Paglia, 23 December, 1918. The diocese comprises (1920) 36,000 Catholics; 25 parishes, 100 secular and 20 regular priests, 32 seminarians, 9 Brothers, 95 Sisters, 45 churches or chapels.

Fossombrone, DIOCESE OF (FOROSEMPRONIENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-154d), in the province of Pesaro, Italy, suffragan of Urbino. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. Pascal Righetti, b. at Cornice in the diocese of Brugnato 29 May, 1868, served as vicar general, canon of the archpresbytery of Brugnato, appointed bishop 19 February, 1914, consecrated 14 May following, as successor to Rt. Rev. Achille Quadrozzi (b. 22 March, 1846; d. 5 December, 1913). There are at present (1922) in the diocese 40 parishes, 71 churches, 51 secular and 3 regular priests, 1 lay brother, 4 nuns, 1 convent for men, 1 seminary with 20 seminarians, 2 asylums. A civil hospital and an orphanage for girls admit the ministry of the priests; several societies are organized among the laity. During the war thirteen clergymen of the diocese served in the army; four asylums were established; shelter was given to the refugees, and relief work was carried out by two committees.

Foundation (cf. C. E., VI-157c).—Bequests for religious and charitable purposes are valid and binding in conscience even if they are null according to civil law, and the Code says that the heirs are to be admonished to fulfil the testator's wishes.

France (cf. C. E., VI-166b).—POPULATION.—According to the census of 1921 France has 39,402,739 inhabitants, of whom 37,852,280 were French and 1,550,459 were foreigners. The chief departments with their population in 1921 are as follows: Seine, 4,411,691; Nord, 1,787,918; Pas-de-Calais, 989,967; Rhône, 956,566; Seine-et-Oise, 921,673; Seine-Inférieure, 880,671; Bouches-du-Rhône, 841,996; Gironde, 819,404; Finistère, 762,514; Bas-Rhin, 651,686.

In spite of the return of Alsace and Lorraine, France has now 400,000 fewer inhabitants than in 1911. This loss is due principally to war casualties, to the reduction of the birth-rate, and to the epidemics of influenza. There has also been a pronounced movement to the cities and a consequent increase in the urban population, especially in Lyons, which showed an increase in the last decade of 37,796; Marseilles, 35,722; Havre, 27,215; Toulouse, 25,858; Saint-Etienne, 19,311.

The largest cities with their populations are as follows: Paris, 2,906,472; Marseilles, 586,341; Lyons, 561,562; Bordeaux, 267,409; Lille, 200,952; Nantes, 183,704; Toulouse, 175,434; St-Etienne, 167,967; Strasburg, 166,767; Havre, 163,374; Nice, 155,839; Rouen, 123,742; Nancy, 113,266.

VITAL STATISTICS.—The birth rate, which was 3.16 per 100 during the period 1906-1916 and 2.29 during the period 1831-1841, fell to 2.56 per 100 in the period 1872-1882, to 1.88 per 100 in 1913 and to 1.21 in 1918. In seventy-seven departments the total excess of deaths over births for 1914 to 1919 was 1,490,227. The number of divorces was 3668 in 1916; 5572 in 1917; 8121 in 1918; and 11,657 in 1919 (77 departments only). To encourage the growth of large families an Act was passed on 14 July, 1913, making the relief of large families obligatory with the parishes and the State, and providing for a bonus of 60 francs minimum or 90 francs maximum for each child after the third. Owing to the immense war losses the allowance was supplemented, in the Act of 28 June, 1918, by an additional ten francs per month for each child. This still being inadequate, the Departmental Council of the Seine raised the annual allowance of each child to a minimum of 240 francs and a maximum of 300 francs, and moreover, from January, 1921, offered, independently of the parish, bounties to mothers for each child in excess of two still living, 300 francs for the third child, and an increase of 50 francs for each additional child. In 1921 there were in Paris and suburbs about 18,000 beneficiaries receiving 24,000 allowances. The population of France showed signs of recovery during the first half of 1920, when the births exceeded the deaths by 67,946, the former numbering 424,668 and the latter numbering 386,722 in all the 90 departments. Marriage is also on the increase. Besides government bounties there are the marriage and child bonuses given by the Employers' Association of 2 francs a day for each married man in addition to his wages, and 2 francs a day for each child. Each member of the association contributes in proportion to the number of his employees.

ECONOMICS AND AGRICULTURE.—Of the total area of France (132,381,447 acres) in 1912, 24,716,752 acres were under forests, 9,403,625 acres were returned as moor and uncultivable land, and 98,181,070 acres, of which 59,127,750 were arable, were returned as under crops, fallow and grass. In 1920, 12,135,000 acres were devoted to wheat, 8,160,000 acres to oats, 2,022,000 acres to rye, 1,512,000 acres to barley. The chief crops in that year were potatoes, 10,315,000 metric tons; wheat, 6,271,000 metric tons; oats, 4,223,000 metric tons; and beet sugar, 2,055,000 metric tons. The production of wine in 1920 was 1,310,719,000 gallons. The war cost France many of her farmers, besides rendering temporarily useless some 9,775,000 acres of farm land, but since the end of the war she has redeemed 3,755,920 acres. By furnishing the farmers with fertilizer, machinery, and seed the Office of Reconstruction has greatly assisted the economic recovery of the country.

INDUSTRY.—The effect of the invasion of France was to reduce the production in the damaged area in a proportion varying from 25% for machine shops to 74% for coal mines, 81% for iron and steel works, and as high as 93% for some branches of technical industry. Before the war France consumed over 63,000,000 tons of coal annually, of which she produced, roughly, 42,000,000 tons, leaving 21,000,000 tons to be imported. By the terms of the Peace Treaty, France acquired control of the Saar Basin, containing coal deposits estimated at 12,500,000,000 tons. Actual production from these fields in 1913 was 17,000,000 tons. This new source of coal will supply the additional demand on France from the industries of Alsace-Lorraine and will lessen the French normal shortage, but it will not offset the loss of output in the damaged mines of the departments of Nord and Pas-de-Calais. To make reparation for the damage done to the mines and to other property, Germany was to deliver approximately 25,000,000 tons of coal annually to France for ten years. The Germans, however, have not paid the exact amount. As a result of the Spa conference, held in July, 1920, of the 2,000,000 tons promised to the allies, beginning August, 1920, France was to receive 1,600,000 tons monthly. To obtain even these shipments France was obliged to pay Germany 200,000,000 francs monthly for six months for the feeding of the Ruhr workers. The production of the Saar Basin in 1920 was 9,410,433 tons. This lack of coal has greatly hampered production, especially that of iron and steel, which in the first five months of 1920 was half the pre-war quantity.

During the war the French textile plants, however, kept up production to a remarkable degree; in 1916 and 1917 the production of cotton and silk goods passed its pre-war level. The chief handicap of the textile industries at present is the lack of raw materials. Of the 456 textile mills in the devastated district of Lille, 75% had resumed production on 1 March, 1920. The return of Alsace-Lorraine will double the production of France, for the textile industries of Alsace are of great importance and employ over 78,000 persons. Silk culture is carried on with government encouragement, most extensively in Gard, Drôme, Ardèche, and Vaucluse. By law of 23 April, 1919, an eight-hour day prevails in France.

FOREIGN TRADE.—For the five years preceding the war France had an average annual unfavorable "visible" balance of trade of some billion and a half francs. This was more than offset by "invisible" items, such as the interest on foreign investments accruing to France as a creditor nation. During the war the purchase of vast amounts of war materials caused a great increase in the unfavorable balance, which continued after the war. During 1919, however, the exports reached the record figure of 8,713,000,000 francs, some 2 billions above the previous high figure in 1913. Since 1919 the exports have shown a steady increase. The imports for home use were valued, in 1920, at 35,404,000,000 francs; the exports of French origin, 22,434,700,000 francs.

RAILWAYS.—In France there are 25,167.8 miles of railway in operation. In October, 1918, the government assumed control of the railroads during the war and for a year after its termination. In 1920 the lines were reorganized and co-ordinated to form one national system. Rolling stock and other equipment suffered during the war, and a large part of the lines on the Nord and Est railways required entire rebuilding. In twenty months after the signing of the armistice, 1353 miles of the 1407 destroyed were put back in service, and in 1920, as a result of this effort, transportation in devastated regions was practically restored to normal. Electrification is now receiving the attention of the railway officials. In 1921 the railway deficit amounted to 1,500,000,000 francs. There are air lines from Paris to Warsaw, London, Lausanne, Copenhagen, Brussels, Bucarest, and Havre. Half the cost of the initial outlay for construction is provided by the Government. State subsidies, amounting to three-fourths or four-fifths of the receipts, have been necessary to keep the service in operation.

EDUCATION.—French education is divided into three classes, primary, secondary, and superior. It is directed by the Minister of Instruction aided by the Government educational bureaux and inspectors-general. The Superior Council of 52 members has deliberative, administrative, and judiciary functions, and a Consultative Committee advises on the school system. For purposes of local administration France is divided into 17 circumscriptions, called Academies, each of which has an Academic Council. Each is under a rector and each is provided with academy inspectors. Each department has a council for primary educational matters. In 1919-20 there were in France and Algiers (excluding Alsace-Lorraine) 2063 public kindergartens with 5242 teachers and 189,762 pupils; 786 private kindergartens with 999 teachers and 37,394 pupils; 56,503 lay and 11,512 clerical primary and higher schools with a total of 102,433 teachers and 3,835,816 pupils (3,002,666 lay and 833,150 clerical). Secondary education is given in the State lycées or communal colleges, which in 1919 had 100,230 boys and 45,168 girls. Higher education is supplied by the State in the 16 universities, divided into the four traditional faculties: law, medicine, science, and letters, with an enrollment of about 40,000. These figures show that secondary education, which in France is not free, is restricted to the minority of children, and that a large majority of the French children cease to go to school altogether too early. In 1919 a "College of the United States" was established in Paris for American students. There are also technical schools, dependent on the Ministry of Commerce, industrial schools, municipal professional schools, schools of commerce, schools of arts and trades, and schools of horology. By an enactment in July, 1919, compulsory physical education for children of both sexes was instituted, for boys from 6 to 16, and for girls during the period of primary and secondary education. Out of the 6445 schools which existed in the devastated regions before the war, 4500 were destroyed between 1914 and 1915, but since 1918 no less than 5345 have been established. The 1920 budget includes 1,176,600,000 francs for education.

GOVERNMENT.—The executive power of France is vested in a President elected for seven years, and a Ministry; the legislative power in the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate. The President chooses the Ministry, generally from the two Chambers, and with the consent of the Senate can dissolve the Chamber of Deputies. Each minister is in charge of an administrative department, and each is responsible to the Chambers for his acts, while the whole ministry is responsible for the policy of the Government. The Chamber of Deputies is elected for four years, by the scrutin de liste with proportional representation (in elections in which no party list has secured an absolute majority in the votes cast), a method adopted in the new Electoral Reform Bill of 1919. There are now 610 deputies. The Senate, composed of 314 members, is elected for nine years, one-third retiring every three years. The Council of State is presided over by the Minister of Justice, is the last resort in administrative units, and prepares the rules for the public administration. For administrative purposes France is divided into 90 departments, 385 arrondissements, 3019 cantons, and 37,963 communes. The three new departments, Moselle, Bas-Rhin, and Haut-Rhin, contain 23 arrondissements, 97 cantons, and 1703 communes. Three cantons and 19 communes have been erected since 1911. Each department is placed under the prefect, nominated by the Government, and assisted by a Prefecture Council. Each commune has a municipal council, which elects the mayor. The canton, which is generally composed of 12 communes, is the seat of a justice of the peace, but is not an administrative district. The districts or arrondissements have an elected council, with as many members as there are cantons.

JURISDICT.—The Courts of lowest jurisdiction are those of the justices of the peace in each canton. The Correctional Courts pronounce on all the graver offences; each includes three judges belonging to tribunals of first instance. The Court of Assizes is assisted by 12 jurors and decides the guilt of the persons concerned. The highest courts are the 26 Courts of Appeal, and one Court of Cassation for criminal cases. In each arrondissement there is a tribunal of first instance. For commercial cases there are Tribunals of Commerce and Councils of Experts. All judges are nominated by the President of France and can be removed only by a decision of the Court of Cassation.

COLONIES.—The colonies and dependencies of France, including Algeria and Tunis, have an area of about 5,119,138 sq. miles, with a population of about 53,582,905. Algeria, however, is not regarded as a colony, but as a part of France; and Tunis and Morocco are attached to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The administration of the colonies is directed by the Ministry of Colonies. Some colonies have direct representation in the French Legislature, but most of them are represented on the Conseil Supérieur des Colonies, by delegates or deputies and other officials. Some colonies have a revenue sufficient for the cost of administration. In 1919 France spent on the colonial services 201,835,110 francs, of which 18,001,210 francs were for civil administration, 173,791,000 francs for military services, and 10,042,900 francs for penitentiary services. The most recent acquisitions of France are: the Niger Territory, acquired in 1912; Kamerun and Togo, acquired in 1919 under a mandate of the League of Nations, the protectorate of Morocco, acquired in 1912, Mayotte and Comoro Islands in 1914. The French Sudan Territory was made a colony in 1920; the Upper Volta in 1919; Mauritania and Chad in 1920. In 1918 the imports and exports of the various dependencies of France showed a value of 2,412,227,827 francs (imports, 1,287,276,937 francs; exports, 1,124,950,890 francs). During the war the colonies contributed largely to the success of France, for on 1 July, 1918, they had furnished 1,918,000 men, of whom 680,000 took active part in the fighting. Algeria contributed 510,000,000 francs toward the cost of the struggle.

By a decree of 29 June, 1919, the Ministry of the Colonies was reorganized. In 1911 the service had been divided geographically, but was found inadequate and cumbersome. The new decree of 1919 removed the administrative services, attached them to a general agency of the colonies; regrouped the colonies according to the conditions prevailing in them instead of geographical vicinity, and established new technical services for banks, education, economic questions, merchant marine, and justice.

FINANCE.—The financial position of France (1922) is rather serious. Expenditure exceeds revenue; the public debt is colossal and the tax burdens are very heavy. Before the war the public expenditure of the State approximated 5,200,000,000 francs; in 1915 it was 22,804,000,000 francs; in 1916, 32,945,000,000 francs; in 1917, 41,679,000,000 francs; in 1918, 54,537,000,000 francs. Since the war ended, the expenditures have increased slightly. For 1919, 49,029,000,000 francs were voted in appropriations. From 1914 to 1917 there were no annual budgets, the financial requirements of the country being provided for by votes of credit. For 1918, 1919, and 1920, budgets were introduced. In 1918 the military and special expenditure was 44,047,748,089 francs; in 1919, it was 35,811,389,662 francs; the total expenditure in 1918 was 54,537,105,100 francs; in 1919, 49,026,587,140 francs. The French budget of 1922 provided for appropriations and revenue of 24,700,000,000 francs, the principal items of expenditure being: service of public debt, 12,653,000,000 francs; military expenditures, 3,709,000,000 francs; naval expenditures, 844,000,000 francs; other executive departments, 5,224,000,000 francs; administration of monopolies and tax collecting, 2,475,000,000 francs. The special budget is estimated at 14,000,000,000 francs, of which 8,000,000,000 are to be spent on reconstruction, 4,000,000,000 on pensions, and 2,000,000,000 on interest on reconstruction loans, which it is the intention of France to meet by Germany's reparation payments. The principal items of revenue are as follows: Taxes and receipts, 15,663,000,000 francs; monopolies and state industries, 2,911,000,000 francs; war profits tax, 3,050,000,000 francs; and liquidation of war stocks, 500,000,000 francs. On 1 October, 1921, the public debt stood as follows: internal debt, 237,867,000,000 francs (paper); and external debt, 86,000,000,000 francs (paper); 35,525,000,000 francs (gold). Of the latter, 29,534,000,000 francs, gold, represents the political debt, i. e., the war loans by Great Britain and the United States. To add to the financial strain, the Algerian budget showed a deficit for the first time in years.

RECENT HISTORY.—When Germany declared war on Russia in July, 1914, she demanded to know the attitude of France in eighteen hours, instructing the German ambassador in the event of the French Government's repudiation of its alliance with Russia to demand that the fortresses of Toul and Verdun be handed over to Germany for the duration of the war. The French Government gave a non-committal answer to the German ultimatum and began mobilization. On 3 August, 1914, Germany declared war on France. The attitude of France upset the calculations of her enemies. They had counted on two great causes of her inferiority, want of artillery, and internal disturbance. The first deficiency was remedied by the hasty production of howitzers and long range cannon in addition to her light artillery guns, the manufacture of which had been carried on in secrecy. Internal disturbances disappeared before the common danger and the solid unity of the nation gave birth to that immortal "spirit of France," which was to sustain her during the fateful years ahead. The Chambers at once authorized the Government to issue decrees in Council of State opening the supplementary and extraordinary credits required for the defense of the nation, and decided to remain in continuous session. The French plan of defense had been originally based on the assumption that the neutrality of Belgium and Luxemburg would be respected. The eastern half of the frontier, from Luxemburg to Switzerland was defended by the Vosges Mountains and by a line of fortified towns from Verdun through Toul and Epinal to Belfort. French Flanders was at the very first left undefended.

As events proved, the Germans poured through Belgium and Luxemburg, violating the neutrality of the latter. Fortunately for France, the Belgians resisted and gave the French troops time to mobilize. The Germany army of invasion advanced upon France in three grand divisions, the right wing attempting to enter France at Maubeuge, necessitating the crossing of Belgium, the center entering at Sedan, and crossing Luxembourg, and the left wing entering at Nancy. The right wing was delayed longer than had been anticipated in the German plans by the resistance of the fortress of Liège and after its fall on 7 August, by the resistance of the Belgian field army, supplemented by a small French force. Its advance through Belgium was steady, however, Brussels being occupied on 20 August. The invasion of France along the Franco-Belgian border from Lille to Maubeuge was immediately attempted, and with complete success, the French army which had been re-enforced by the vanguard of the British expeditionary force falling back hastily toward the second line of defense, the inferior British forces on the left being in constant danger of envelopment. Meanwhile the German army of the center, encountering no resistance in its progress through Luxembourg, and defeating the inferior French forces which opposed it, was now in contact on its right with the advancing right wing, while its left was attempting to thrust itself between the retreating French army and Paris. Menaced thus on both flanks, the allied armies retreated in such haste as to make impracticable a firm stand on the second line of defense. On 29 August that line was passed by the Germans. Paris was now put under martial law and every preparation was made for an extended siege, the government retiring to Bordeaux. South of the Marne the allied forces halted, and for the first time in the war gave vigorous battle to the invaders over the entire front, eventually compelling the falling back beyond the Marne of the entire German line, pursued by the allied forces. On 13 September the Germans halted and entrenched themselves on their right on the line of hills running from Soissons to Rheims. Suddenly, in the closing days of September the city of Antwerp fell, the major portions of the Belgian army escaping to the west where they were re-enforced by the allied armies. The battle lines of both armies now extended to the coast, flanking operations were at an end, and the conflict along the whole line assumed the character of a field siege. The Germans still persisted in the offensive, however, particularly along the Yser River and canal, southwest of Ostend, with the alleged object of forcing the allied lines beyond Calais, which could then be used as a base for naval and military attacks on the British Islands.

In the south the French had in the beginning of the war attempted a vigorous counter invasion, which was for a time successful, Alsace and German Lorraine being entered and Saarburg and Muelhausen occupied. The attack was, however, quickly repulsed by the German forces. Following the battle of the Marne, the German forces began an attack on the whole southern barrier of forts, known as the Verdun-Toul barrier, and met with varying success. The German offensive was abandoned early in December, 1914. The French government which had removed to Bordeaux in 3 September, 1914, returned to Paris in December. The next four months witnessed a series of frontal attacks, the success of which varied. Deadlock continued through the summer. For some reason the long heralded Spring drive did not occur in 1915, which seemed remarkable because of the numerical superiority of the Allies (the Germans having transferred forces to the eastern front) and because of the relief which a successful forward movement would have brought to the hard-pressed Russians. The Germans, indeed, took the initiative at the close of April. They directed against the Ypres region an attack in which massed artillery and poison gas played a conspicuous rôle. The British, suffering from lack of artillery ammunition, had to shorten their line by three miles on 3 May. In June the French made progress in the country north of Arras and west of Lens. About a quarter of a million men were employed along a front of twenty miles, the assault being preceded by a concentrated artillery fire which flattened the whole countryside. The highway between Arras and Bethune was cleared; more prisoners and guns were taken than on any other occasion since the battle of Marne, but the French lost heavily. As the months went on, the resources of the Allies steadily augmented. Large stores of munitions arrived from America and the reorganized English factories. By the end of September, Sir John French had a million men under his command. On 25 September, 1915, after the German positions had been heavily bombarded for some days, a vigorous offensive was set in motion. The British, penetrated the German lines to a distance of 4000 yards and captured several strong positions, including Loos and Hill 70. The French made substantial gains in Artois and in Champagne pushed the enemy back two miles.

General Joffre, commander of all the armies in France, was promoted on 2 December to the supreme command of all the French armies excepting those in the colonies and in North Africa. This step was taken in accordance with the plans of the Anglo-French War Council, which met in Paris on 27 March, and not only made plans for a concerted general Summer offensive, but also resolved to establish the stringency of the blockade. The Entente Powers' Economic Conference on 14 June, formulated a program which increased the severity of the economic measures against the Central Powers during the war but also indicated a determination to continue the struggle after the conclusion of peace by establishing an economic bloc of the Entente Powers. General de Castelnau, able commander of the French armies of the center, was appointed chief commander of the General Staff.

The winter of 1916 witnessed no major operations on the western front. Spasmodic local events advanced the German line at Hooze (Belgium), at Vimy (Artois), at Frise (on the Somme), and on the Butte-de-Tahure (in Champagne). In compensation the French won the La Courtine entrenchment in Champagne and the peak of Hartmannsweilerkopf in Alsace. This desultory fighting occupied the interval between the cession of the allied offensive in September, 1915, to the beginning of the terrific German assault on Verdun, 21 February, 1916. Eight German army corps, under the general command of the Crown Prince, and enormous quantities of heavy artillery were concentrated against the secondary fortifications seven or eight miles north of Verdun. Then suddenly on 19-20 February a bombardment of unprecedented intensity announced the beginning of the greatest battle in the war. On 21 February, under cover of incessant artillery fire, German infantry in irresistible masses was hurled against the demolished fortifications. The French line yielded; within a week the commanding hill-fort of Douaumont (4 miles from Verdun) had succumbed to headlong infantry and pulverizing artillery attacks. During the second week, the French line east of Verdun was crushed back to the strong line of the heights of the Meuse and a savage struggle was waged in the outskirts of Vaux village. Then the storm center shifted to the west bank of the Meuse. Forges, Regnéville, Malancourt, Haucourt, and Béthincourt were captured in rapid succession, but in April the German drive west of the Meuse slackened. Further progress was barred by a French salient of great natural strength, resting on Hill 304 and the bicuspidate ridge called Le Mort Homme (Hills 265 and 295). Moreover, General Joffre was able to stiffen his line with reinforcements, since the British had replaced the French troops north of the Somme River and now held ninety miles of the western front. The arrival of Russian contingents, though numerically inconsiderable, stimulated confidence. Consequently on 22 May, 1916, General Joffre struck a counterblow. The heaviest fighting was around Fort Douaumont, which was taken and retaken by the Germans. The opening of the Anglo-French drive (battle of the Somme) forced the Germans to shift their forces and the battle of Verdun flickered out. The great drive beginning on 1 July, 1916, advanced the French front to a maximum depth of six miles and netted the French 80 square miles of territory. In the fourth week it came to a standstill; the summer was spent in series of futile but furious battles around the ruined villages of Thiaumont and Fleury. The failure of the Germans at Verdun proved that the tide of war had turned at last in favor of the allies. Henceforth the Germans were on the defensive, and their line was battered back mile by mile. The battle of the Somme (1 July to 1 November, 1916), resulted in heavy losses for the allies, but it had relieved Verdun, worn down German man-power, and created such an embarrassing salient in the German line that the French were tempted to make a counter-offensive at Verdun. By two brilliant attacks in November and December General Nivelle regained Forts Douaumont and Vaux, and was rewarded by the appointment to the command of all the French forces in France in succession to General Joffre, who was retired with the title of "Marshal of France." In February the British advanced two miles, wiping out the Ancre salient. In March a general retirement of the Germans to the Hindenburg line commenced. About 1000 square miles of French territory were regained, but the country was devastated, the towns laid in ruins, and all railroads destroyed. A terrific drive against the Hindenburg Line near Arras (battle of Arras) was launched by the British under General Allenby. The French under Nivelle and Haig attacked in April along the Aisne with remarkable success. In June, 1917, a contingent of American troops led by General Pershing arrived in France to take its place with the Belgian, British, Italian, Russian, and Colonial troops on the front. In France a War Council was created. It repudiated the German peace offer, decided for bread-cards, and for the minimum prices for dairy products, for the voluntary calling of the 1918 class, and industrial mobilization. The new war minister provoked unusual opposition by his Bill providing for the incorporation of priests into the army. The Allied advance continued, with remarkable results, especially at Chemin-des-Dames, Passchendaele Ridge, and Cambrai. The Germans replied with their great offensive on 21 March; created an opening between the Oise and Somme and broke the English front, which was saved by the French cavalry. The Germans continued in the direction of Amiens. Noyon, Bapaume, Albert, and Montdidier had to be evacuated. The shattering of the English Fifth Army compelled the French to send re-enforcements and to extend their lines. On 1 April the Germans were within six miles of the main railway from Amiens to Paris. To meet the patent need for man-power, General Pershing offered all his force to General Foch, who had been appointed generalissimo of the allied armies on 28 March, and when on 4 April, the Germans renewed the conflict, they were met by unified command. With the aid of American troops and French reinforcements, the line became stabilized, but the Germans, after a brief respite continued the offensive until 2 June, when they were at Château-Thierry, forty miles from Paris. At Château-Thierry their advance was checked by the Americans, who took Belleau-Wood and Torcy. On 15 July came the fifth German offensive, the infantry pressing on toward Châlons. The Marne was crossed in several places and Château-Thierry occupied. A counter-offensive under Marshal Foch aimed to cut the enemy communications at Soissons, La Fère, and Fismes. With the aid of the Americans he succeeded in clearing Château-Thierry of Germans, and in flattening out the German salient existing since the attack at Verdun. On 26 September the American army again came prominently into action, and aided General Gouraud in carrying out a great combined offensive in the Argonne. In the north the British Second Army and the Belgians under the command of King Albert took Dixmunde, Passchendaele, and Messines, after which a deadlock never occurred again in Belgium. During October the German retreat all along the line became a rout. St. Quentin, Ostend, Lille, Cambrai, Le Cateau, Bruges, Valenciennes, and Sedan fell to the allies. Meanwhile negotiations for an armistice were opened, but this did not cause a halt in the offensives. The armistice was signed on 11 November, 1918.

Never in all its history did the French nation display greater courage or unanimity than during the wearisome years of war. Not only were the French troops engaged with the enemy in France, but also in Salonika, Italy, and Asia Minor. Their land was ravaged in the north and their loss in men was terrific. One man out of six in the entire population had served in the army. The French army is reported to have lost 1,089,700 killed and 265,000 missing, or 16.2% of the immense mobilized force of 8,410,000. The number of French prisoners was 446,300. Naval losses included 5421 killed and 5214 missing. The loss suffered by the country amounted to a total of 119,801,000,000 francs, and included damages to landed property, 35,446,000,000 francs; loss of household effects, cattle, securities, 32,352,000,000 francs; raw materials and provisions, 28,861,000,000 francs, and loss to revenue or trade, 23,242,000,000 francs.

The terms of the armistice which the Germans were given to accept or to reject within seventy-two hours, when they met Marshal Foch and his victorious army at Rethondes, six miles east of Compiègne were as follows: the Germans were to evacuate Belgium, France, Alsace-Lorraine, and Luxembourg within 14 days, and all the territory on the left bank of the Rhine within a month. The allied troops were to occupy those areas together with the bridge-heads at the principal cross-ways of the Rhine (Mainz, Coblenz, and Cologne) to a depth of 30 kilometers on the right bank. The treaties of Brest-Litovsk and Bukarest were to be denounced and German troops withdrawn from Russia, Rumania, Austria-Hungary, and Turkey. German submarines and warships were to be surrendered, also 5000 locomotives, 5000 motor lorries, and 150,000 railway cars. The economic blockade of Germany was to continue. The terms of the armistice, originally agreed upon for thirty days, were subsequently renewed from time to time and remained in effect until the signing of the Treaty of Peace at Versailles on 28 June, 1919. The French entered Alsace-Lorraine and the territory surrounding Mainz.

By the terms of the Treaty of Versailles, Germany yielded Alsace-Lorraine to France and by way of reparation and economic settlement, accepted full responsibility for all damages caused to the allied and associated governments and nations, and promised to reimburse all civilian damage, beginning with an initial payment of $5,000,000,000, subsequent payments being secured by bonds to be issued at the discretion of an International Reparations Commission. Until reparation is made and the treaty fully carried out, allied occupation of German territory on the left bank of the Rhine and of the bridge-heads at Cologne, Coblenz, and Mainz, will continue. In compensation for the destruction of coal mines in Northern France, and as payment on account of reparation, Germany surrendered full ownership of the coal mines in the Saar Basin, the territory to be governed by a Commission of five appointed by the League of Nations. After fifteen years a plebiscite is to be held by the communes to decide as to the continuance of the existing régime, union with France, or union with Germany. Germany also renounced all her rights under the Franco-German agreements of 1909 and 1911 regarding Morocco.

The provision in the Treaty of Versailles that Germany, subject to certain deductions, was to pay $1,000,000,000 (gold) before 1 May, 1921, was so remarkably wide of facts and possibilities that it was totally abandoned in the London Agreement of 5 May, 1921. From 11 November, 1918, to 30 April, 1921, however, Germany delivered to the allies 99,334,000 gold marks, ships worth 270,331,000 gold marks, coal worth 437,160,000 gold marks, dyestuffs, 36,823,000 gold marks; other deliveries, 937,040,000 gold marks, immovable property and assets not yet cashed, 2,754,104,000, a total of 4,534,792,000 gold marks, or £284,500,000. The immovable property consists chiefly of the Saar coalfields, surrendered to France, State property in Schleswig surrendered to Denmark, and State property in the territory transferred to Poland. Still the sums received were not available for reparation, as under the Spa agreement, 360,000,000 gold marks were returned to Germany and the costs of the Armies of Occupation had to be paid. The situation thereby created has been irritating to the French, especially as the financial schemes of France in recent years have been based on the hope of rehabilitating the country with German reparations and easing the financial burdens of France, and especially as the tax per capita in France is much heavier than the head tax in Germany.

In the various conferences which have followed the signing of the treaty, France has always stood for a thorough-going application of the terms of the Versailles Treaty, Italy for a virtual revision, and England for the adaptation of the terms to the changing situation. The question of reparations has been very complicated. As soon as schemes are devised and accepted, for "making Germany pay," there are frantic efforts to get them altered. The Versailles Conference established the principles of reparations and determined such sums to be paid, but postponed the details and regulations until a later date. The problem in all its aspects was discussed at various conferences, at San Remo (19 April, 1920), at Hythe, England (15 May and 19 June, 1920), in Boulogne (21 June, 1920), Brussels (2 July, 1920), the Spa (5-6 July, 1920), again at Boulogne (16-21 December, 1920), at Paris (24 January, 1921), at London (1 March, and 5 May, 1921), at Wiesbaden (6 October, 1921), at Cannes (6 January, 1922), and at Paris (21 March, 1922). Of these, the Spa, Wiesbaden, and the last London conferences were most successful. Under the Spa agreement, the terms of the Versailles Treaty regarding the delivery of 3,400,000 tons of coal per month to the allies, were found incapable of realization, and the demand was reduced to 2,000,000 tons a month from August, 1920. The allies agreed to pay Germany something for the coal, the sums thus received to be utilized in purchasing from abroad additional food for the miners. It was also decided to apportion the reparations made by Germany as follows: France 52%; Great Britain 22%; Italy 10%; Belgium 8%; and the rest to Japan, Portugal, Yugoslavia, Greece, Rumania, and other powers not signatories to the Agreement. At the Boulogne Conference it was agreed to finance the Spa coal agreement through the Reparations Commission. At the London Conference in May, 1921, the total bill against Germany was fixed at 132,000,000,000 gold marks ($33,000,000,000), $12,500,000,000 to be paid in bonds bearing 5% interest, $3,000,000,000 by 1 July, 1921, $9,500,000,000 by 1 September, 1921. To provide for interest and sinking fund of 1 per cent on these bonds, Germany was to pay annually $500,000,000 (2,000,000,000 gold marks) in two installments, plus a levy of 25% on all her exports. For the remaining $20,500,000,000 Germany was to turn over to the Reparations Commission blank bonds to be issued by the Commission at such times as the return from the export tax should warrant. The fall of the value of the mark and the accompanying economic disturbances in Germany led to the Wiesbaden Pact, which was a scheme to stimulate payment of reparation in the form of actual materials for the reconstruction of devastated regions and other raw material until May, 1926. At Cannes the French held tentatively to the Wiesbaden Pact, arranging for the payment by Germany of 720,000,000 marks in 1922, payment in kind, not to exceed a value of 1,450,000,000 marks in gold (950,000,000 to France). The agreement was ratified by the allies but owing to the sudden withdrawal of France from the conference, nothing was done to put the scheme into operation. A limitation of the issue of German paper money and the reform of German currency was ordered, and an international finance corporation was formed, to be composed of two British, two French, one Belgian, one Italian, and one Japanese member, whose purpose was to be the economic rehabilitation of Europe. In the meantime there were threats of excursions by the French army into Germany east of the Rhine. In March, 1920, France without the approval of her Allies, occupied Frankfurt and Darmstadt. In March, 1921, Duisburg, Ruhrort, and Düsseldorf were occupied.

The war revealed the loyalty of the Royalists, conservatives, and clericals, who had been bitterly accused of enmity to the Republic. Most remarkable was the patriotism shown by thousands of members of religious orders who returned from exile and promptly offered themselves to their country. Thousands of priests volunteered, either for active fighting or as chaplains. There was a great revival of religious enthusiasm not only among the women but also among the men who, in the face of death abandoned their religious indifference. Anti-clericals and Catholics, Republicans and royalists, all formed a union sacrée to defend the country against attack. The Unified Socialists, who had long opposed co-operation with the bourgeois parties, sent their leaders, Guesde and Sembat, into a Coalition Cabinet headed by Viviani. Jaurès, the leader of the French Socialists, was assassinated in August, 1914, because he had opposed the three-year military law. The failure of the Balkan campaign overthrew the Viviani Ministry, which was succeeded on 29 October, 1915, by one headed by Briand. The administrative system was thoroughly organized and a War Council of five members was appointed, with full authority to direct affairs. In March, 1917, Ribot succeeded as premier, and declared unflinchingly for the return of Alsace-Lorraine. In September, Painlevé became premier. A German Peace propaganda was organized by a financier, Bolo Pasha, who had succeeded in bribing several newspapers in the interest of Germany. Caillaux, former premier and Minister of Justice was suspected of treasonable correspondence with Germany. For three years no Government ventured to attack Caillaux openly, but in November, 1917, Clémenceau became premier and succeeding in convicting Bolo of high treason. Caillaux was found not guilty, but was convicted of "dangerous correspondence with the enemy."

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS.—In the treaty of Peace between France and Turkey (10 August, 1920), the French protectorates of Morocco and Tunisia were recognized, although the dispute over the internationalized territory of Tangier remained, the French demanding in 1922 that the sovereignty of the Sultan be extended over Tangier, which is virtually a demand that the sovereignty of France be recognized, as (in the Morocco Agreement of 1912) the Sultan had accepted the French protectorate. By a decision of the Supreme Council in March, 1920, Kamerun and Togoland were divided between Great Britain and France as mandatories. By an Anglo-French agreement of 15 September, 1920, Syria was allotted to France. Cilicia was to be occupied by the French but they were to abandon Damascus, Hama, Homs, and Aleppo, these cities having previously been promised by Great Britain to the Kingdom of Hejaz. On 19 February, 1921, a defensive alliance between Poland and France was concluded. An amicable understanding with Italy had also been reached in a conference between the Italian and French premiers at Aix-les-Bains in September, 1920. In July, 1921, a defensive alliance was formed between Belgium and France, the former reserving the right to remain neutral in all disputes respecting French colonial possessions between France and other nations. England had already agreed in the treaty of Versailles to come to the assistance of France, if she were again attacked. In November, 1920, the world became aware of an Italo-Franco-British agreement for maintaining spheres of influence in Asiatic Turkey, signed secretly at Sévres on 10 August, 1920. It assigned to France the Syrian and Cilician coasts, the hinterland extending across the middle reaches of the Euphrates, through southern Kurdistan to the undefined frontiers of Armenia, omitting Mossul. The French Government had the privilege of exchanging its rights in the Bagdad Railway for the exclusive exploitation of railroads within its area of special interest. The opposition of the people in France to the maintenance of such a large French army in the Near East and the unnecessary military expenditure induced the French Government to negotiate a secret treaty with the Angora Government, on 9 March, 1921. In return for extensive economic concessions the French agreed to withdraw from Cilicia, and the boundary between Syria and the Turkish territory as arranged in the Sévres Treaty was altered. In the Disarmament Conference held in Washington, D. C., the French revealed their lack of faith in Germany and held tenaciously to the maintenance of a large auxiliary fleet if their ratio of capital ships was as low as 1.75. No decision as to the auxiliary fleet was reached, but France was reduced to 10 ships with a total tonnage of 221,170. France was also one of the participants in the nine-power treaty declaring for the integrity of China, for equal opportunity in trade intercourse, and for the revision of Chinese customs, and proved her faith by renouncing Kwang-chau-wan to China from whom in 1898 she had leased it for ninety-nine years.

THE CHURCH.—The Catholic Church in France faced the delicate work of reorganization attendant upon the Separation Laws with a courage and a tact that are by degrees re-establishing her moral and spiritual ascendancy. During the war Catholics gave splendid proof of their patriotism, 20,000 priests having served under the flag. Statistics published by the Documentation Catholique of Paris show that the number of French religious mobilized was 8928, the majority of whom belonged to congregations established outside of France, who returned as volunteers. Of these 1464 died in the war. This number included 42 Assumptionists, 34 Benedictines, 40 Capuchins, 28 Dominicans, 280 Brothers of the Christian Schools, 165 Jesuits, 41 Lazarists, 53 priests of the Foreign Missions, 81 Fathers of the Holy Ghost, 100 Little Brothers of Mary, 39 Redemptorists and 54 Trappists. Two hundred twenty crosses of the Legion of Honor, 346 military medals and 4722 citations in orders were won by members of religious congregations. The Bishops of France took an active part in the Sacred Union, and conquered the respect of associates of every creed. Since the war there is evidence of a desire on the part of the Government to be more generous and just in its dealings with the Church. Its attitude is conciliatory, as shown by a return of ecclesiastical properties seized and held by the civil authorities under the law of separation. Some of the Catholic schools have been opened unofficially, and many men have realized the mistakes committed by the rabid secretaries of the Left in forcing the religious communities out of the country, and opening the way to disruptive teaching in the State schools. Negotiations have been entered into with the Holy See seeking some arrangement for the congregations as a measure of necessity and in response to the political requirements of France. Catholic social service organizations, patronages, etc., are increasing in numbers and effectiveness. Catholic artists have combined their forces in organizations suggestive of the ancient guilds in the production of religious art for new and rebuilt churches and Catholics in general are prominent pioneers in France's reconstruction. It has been estimated that out of the 34,000,000 people in France, outside of Paris and its suburbs, some 10,000,000 are practicing Catholics in the strict sense of the word as compared to 2,000,000 out of 32,000,000 seventy years ago. For Catholic statistics see articles on the archdioceses and dioceses of France.

On 14 March, 1920, diplomatic relations between the Vatican and the French Government which had been broken in 1904, were resumed. The sentiment of France was that the national interest required the resumption of such relations and that French diplomacy must have its official share in the discussion at the Vatican of questions involving French interests; that it could not remain absent from the seat of spiritual government at which the greater number of states were careful to be represented; that the enforcement of the various peace treaties made timely the resumption of these relations with the Holy See. The Peace Treaty of Versailles presented problems that must be solved, such as the application of the old Concordat in Alsace-Lorraine, the fate of the former German missions in the colonies in Togoland, Kamerun, and elsewhere, and also the safeguarding of the Catholic religion in Morocco.

When Alsace-Lorraine was given over to France in the Fall of 1918, the French Government was faced with two alternatives of denouncing the Concordat governing the religious policy of the German Government in Alsace-Lorraine, or of recognizing it and assuming its obligations. There are over 1,400,000 Catholics there, opposed to the French separatist regime and to the anti-clerical spirit. On 22 April, 1920, the Government issued decrees, naming Mgr. Ruch as Bishop of Strasbourg and Mgr. Pelt as Bishop of Metz. Such a decision entailed negotiations with Rome. There was besides the desire to permanently remove the issue of "clericalism" from French politics. From the formation of the Radical-Socialist Party in 1901 to November, 1919, with the exception of a few ministers, the Government has been in the hands of the parties of the Left, who were united on one issue—hostility to the Catholic Church. The result of this anti-clerical intolerance upon the political life of France has been largely to remove the very type of men needed to give stability and character to the Republic.

Mgr. Bonaventuro Ceretti, titular Archbishop of Corinth, was appointed nuncio to France, 20 May, 1921, and presented his letters of credit to the President of the Republic 6 August following. He was born at Orvieto, 17 June, 1872, ordained 31 March, 1895, and attached to the Congregation of Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs. In 1904 he was made a papal chamberlain and Apostolic Delegate to Mexico; later he was auditor of the delegation at Washington, and in April, 1914, was appointed titular Archbishop of Philippopolis and Apostolic delegate to Australia, and New Zealand. He was consecrated in St. Peter's, Rome, by Cardinal Merry del Val, 19 July and solemnly received at Sydney the following year. In May, 1914, he was transferred to the see of Corinth. Recalled to Rome he was appointed Secretary of Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs, 1917, and the following year named Consultor of the Congregation for the Eastern Churches. Mgr. Ceretti was entrusted with very important missions in the United States and Ireland in 1919, and later in Paris, where through his negotiations advantages were obtained for Catholic Missions in the Treaty of Versailles. M. Charles Jonnart, senator, represents France at the Vatican, having been appointed Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary 18 May, 1921.

Frascati, DIOCESE OF (TUSCULANENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-243a), in the province of Latium, Central Italy, a suburbicarian see, at present filled by His Eminence Cardinal Giovanni Cagliero, a Salesian, b. 11 January, 1838, in the Diocese of Turin, pupil of Don Bosco, ordained 14 June, 1862, missionary to Patagonia in 1875, was appointed Vicar Apostolic of Patagonia, 30 September, 1884, and titular bishop of Magydos 18 November following, consecrated at Turin 7 December; promoted as titular archbishop of Sebaste, 24 March, 1904. He was named Apostolic Delegate to Costa Rica, 10 June, 1908. Created cardinal priest 6 December, 1915, he received the hat and the title of San Bernardo alle Terme three days later. On 16 December, 1920, he was transferred to Frascati, of which he took possession 16 January, 1921, to succeed His Eminence Cardinal Cassetta, appointed 27 November, 1911, d. 23 March, 1919. He resides in Rome. The diocese comprises (1920) 35,000 Catholics, 8 parishes, 38 secular and 115 regular clergy, 40 seminarians, and numerous monasteries representing all the great orders.

Free Church of Scotland (cf. C. E., VI-257b).—For many years previous to the World War the question of union with the Established Church of Scotland had been a burning one. The war put a stop to the negotiations, which many thought were on a fair way to success, and since then no definite action has been taken. On 31 December, 1919, the Free Church had 1489 congregations, 528,000 members (communicants and connections), 2050 Sunday schools, with 21,647 teachers and 201,000 pupils. These figures seem to indicate a loss in most particulars, and a lack of healthy growth in number of members, when compared with statistics taken from the same source (Statesman's Year-Book), according to which there were, in 1903, 1676 congregations, 501,000 members, 2475 Sunday schools, with 26,541 teachers and 344,000 children. This condition is due in part to defections to the "Wee Frees," who rose from 26 congregations to 150 in the same period.

Freiburg, ARCHDIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., VI-264b), in the former archduchy of Baden, which has been a republic since 9 November, 1918. According to the latest census the population of the city of Freiburg is 90,000. Within the city limits there are 8 parishes and 3 parochial curacies, and 18 Catholic churches and chapels. At the present time there are 80 priests stationed at Freiburg, seven of whom are Franciscans. The Vincentian Sisters (300) have charge of 21 institutions, the Franciscan Sisters (81) have 5 institutions, the Sisters of the Holy Cross (180) have 6 institutions. During the Summer term of 1921 the University of Freiburg was attended by 3931 students and has a teaching body of 175. The members of the Catholic theological faculty numbered 14, and the students of theology 379. Since 1911 the university classes are held in an imposing new building, in which there is a so-called mensa academica where the students can procure cheap, wholesome meals. Mention should also be made of the Sapienz, a residence for priests who are continuing their studies, and a students' home, called "Albertus burse." The Archdiocese of Freiburg embraces Baden and the property of the Hohenzollerns in Prussia. The Catholics in the archdiocese number 1,340,722. The civil powers no longer have a voice in the appointment of a bishop. There are in the archdiocese 44 deaneries, 894 parishes, 40 parochial curacies and 14 chaplaincies with 813 pastors, 37 parochial administrators, 40 curates, 310 vicars who are active in parish work, and 161 priests employed in other capacities. The entire number of secular clergy in the archdiocese is 1472, of regulars 120.

The following monasteries for men are situated in the diocese: Beuron (Benedictine) 65 priests, 17 scholastics, 12 lay brothers; Gorheim (Sigmaringen Franciscans), 13 priests, 17 scholastics, 15 lay brothers; Freiburg (Franciscans), 7 priests, 3 lay brothers; Säckingen (Capuchins), 6 priests, 3 lay brothers; Zell (Capuchins), 5 priests, 1 lay brother; Waghausel (Capuchins), 5 priests, 3 lay brothers; Bickesheim (Redemptorists), 3 priests, 4 lay brothers; Birnau (Cistercians), 6 priests, 4 lay brothers; Bronbach (Cistercians), 6 priests, 4 lay brothers. Since 1918 male orders and congregations are permitted to have foundations in Baden and the following orders are now established there: White Fathers at Haigerloch (10 priests, 8 brothers); Pallotini Fathers at Bruchsal; Fathers of the Holy Ghost at Donaueschingen. There are also Brothers of Charity at five stations. The entire number of monasteries for men in the archdiocese, inclusive of 3 missionary establishments, is 12, including 1 abbey with 360 regulars (including lay brothers). The total number of lay brothers is 114. The entire number of monasteries and convents for women is 8, situated as follows: Sisters of the Holy Sepulchre (40 members), Benedictines at Habstal (30), Dominicans at Constance (60), Cistercians at Lichtenal (65), Ursulines at Villingen (75). The total number of nuns exceeds 300.

The following congregations devoted to charitable works are active in the archdiocese: Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul, mother-house at Freiburg, 327 establishments, 1199 Sisters; Sisters of St. Francis from Gengenbach, 317 establishments, 1037 Sisters; Sisters of the Holy Cross from Ingenbohl at Hegne, 304 establishments, 1134 Sisters; Sisters of the Third Order of St. Dominic at Neusatzek, 4 foundations; Sisters of St. Joseph of St. Mark (Alsace), provincial house St. Trudpert, 45 convents, 114 Sisters; Sisters of St. Francis of Milwaukee, 104 convents, 400 Sisters, provincial house at Erlenbad; Sisters of the Holy Redeemer of Oberbronn (Alsace), provincial house at Bühl, 68 convents, 574 Sisters; Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul, mother-house Strassburg, 12 convents, 75 Sisters; Sisters of the Holy Cross, Strassburg-Neudorf, 10 convents, 36 Sisters; Sisters of St. Francis of Mallersdorf, Bavaria, 5 convents, 32 Sisters; Sisters of the Divine Infant Jesus, Würzburg Oberzell, 3 convents, 6 Sisters; Sisters of Christian Charity, Paderborn, 2 convents, 9 Sisters; Sisters of the Divine Redeemer, Würzburg, 3 convents, 7 Sisters; Sisters of the Holy Cross, Menzingen, 4 convents, 9 Sisters; Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul, Augsburg, 1 convent, 2 Sisters. The following institutions and charitable organizations are in charge of the various orders of Sisters: 560 homes for visiting nursing Sisters; 125 hospitals in charge of the Sisters of Charity; 30 homes and alms houses; 7 foundling asylums; 400 day nurseries; 20 asylums; 4 refuges for wayward girls; 1 asylum for the feeble-minded; 2 homes for cripples; several soup kitchens; 7 convalescent homes for children; 1 convalescent home for mothers; 1 convalescent home for war veterans; 5 homes for working women and employees; 1 convalescent home for priests.

Aside from the above mentioned schools, educational institutions and university, there are in the archdiocese of Freiburg: the University of Heidelberg with 2431 students and 188 professors and a Protestant theological faculty, an Institute of Technology at Karlsruhe, an Institute of Commerce in Mannheim, altogether 43 high schools, gymnasias, 6 oberrealschulen and girls' high schools, 6 training schools, 5 gymnasial boarding schools at Freiburg, Rastatt, Constance, Sigmaringen, and Tauber-bischofsheim; 3 boarding schools for high school students, 1 home for theological students (Collegium Sapientiæ), 1 home for students (Albertus burse), 1 home for girl students (Hildegardisheim), 2 schools for the training of women social workers, 1 training school for kindergarten teachers, 1 caritas school, 1 crèche, 5 housekeeping schools, 1187 sewing and needle-work schools. In the archdiocese there are 4 homes for shop-girls, 12 for servants, 4 for apprentices, and 7 for journeymen.

Mention may be made of the following societies among the clergy: the Unio Apostolica, the Unio cleri pro missionibus, the Assecurantia clericorum, and the Association for the support of sick priests. The following societies and organizations are under the care of the clergy: Marian Association of Priests, St. Bonifatiusverein (its income during the past year was 516,453 m.); Bonifatiusverein for poor children and for missionary works in the archdiocese; society of the Holy Childhood, St. Francis Xavier Association, Marian Congregation for young women (420 branches), Marian Congregation for boys and young men (60 branches), Marian Congregation for men (20 branches), Marian Congregation for students (3 branches), Association of Christian Mothers (620 branches), Catholic Journeymen's Unions (70 branches), Workingmen's Unions (120 branches), boys and young men's associations (240 branches), working women's association (30 branches), servant girls' associations (35 branches), association for women and civil service employees (12 branches), People's Union (Volkverein, 490 branches), Borromäusvereine, Catholic Women's League (10 branches), Catholic Students' League, Association of High School Students of New Germany (15 branches), Association of Catholic Social Workers (13 branches). The confraternities include the Association of the Holy Family, the Caritas Association with 8 bureaux and committees in all parishes, St. Vincent de Paul Society (25 branches), Elizabeth Verein, Girls' Protective Associations (14 branches), Association of asylums and day nurseries.

There are 11 periodicals published within the limits of the archdiocese, and 39 Catholic newspapers.

The following distinguished clergymen have died since 1915: Most Rev. Thomas Nörber, Archbishop of Freiburg; Rt. Rev. Justus Necht, auxiliary bishop of Freiburg; Rt. Rev. Mgr. Lorenz Werthmann, founder of the Caritas Association for Catholic Germany and organizer of the charity organizations throughout the country; Rev. Theodore Wacker, for many years the distinguished leader of the Center Party of Baden.

Archbishop Nörber, born in Waldstetten 1846, ordained 1870, served as vicar at Schwetzingen and Mannheim and pastor at Seckach, Hardheim Lichtenal, Thiergarten and Baden-Baden, was appointed archbishop 5 September, 1893, named an assistant at the pontifical throne 9 May, 1900, and died 27 July, 1920, having celebrated the golden jubilee of his priesthood. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Most Rev. Charles Fritz, born in Adelhausen 1864, appointed 12 October, 1920.

Fréjus, Diocese of (FORUM JULIENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-269d), suffragan of Aix. The present diocese comprises the territory of the ancient Diocese of Fréjus, as well as that of the ancient Diocese of Toulon. The most important events which have taken place in the diocese since 1909 were the solemn canonical coronation of the statue of Notre Dame de Consolation at Hyères, and the centenaries of the churches of Notre Dame-des-Grâces and of St. Joseph at Colignac. Throughout the war both clergy and laity willingly and unselfishly gave their services for their country. Among those who especially distinguished themselves was Abbé Rodié, captain in the artillery, who was awarded the Legion of Honor and received the croix de guerre with three citations. The diocese is at present administered by the Rt. Rev. Felix Guilibert, b. at Aix, 1 November, 1842, ordained 24 December, 1865, appointed to the see of Fréjus 21 February, 1906, consecrated at Rome 25 February following, appointed inspector general of the chaplains, of the French Navy 30 April, 1918, named chevalier of the Legion of honor in August, 1921, for exceptional services rendered during the war.

In 1921 there were 322,945 Catholics in the diocese, not including the black troops, namely, the Senegalese, Moroccans, Algerians, and Malagasy. There were 179 parishes with 28 parish churches and 151 succursal churches, 1 monastery, 1 convent, 1 abbey for men, 2 Carmelite, 2 Dominican, 2 Capuchin monasteries for women, 1 diocesan seminary (60 seminarians), 1 seminary conducted by the Dominicans for the training of missionaries, 1 preparatory seminary for boys, 2 colleges for boys.

Throughout the diocese there are numerous public institutions, including lycées, asylums, refuges, naval and civil hospitals, day nurseries, all of which admit the ministry of priests. Since the war the government has founded an institution which educates and cares for those children who were left orphans in consequence of the war. Three Catholic periodicals are published in the diocese. Among the clergy there is a co-operative association for the purpose of ecclesiastical vestments. The principal societies among the laity are the Association chrétienne de la jeunesse catholique and the Catholic Workmen's Association.

French Academy, THE (cf. C. E., I-89a), which from 1635 up till the present day has included many faithful sons of the Church, now has nine Catholics among its thirty-five members. The list of Academicians given in the order of priority of election, with the names of the Catholic members italicized, follows: le Comte d'Haussonville; Pierre-Louis de Freycinet; Pierre-Louis Loti-Viaud; Ernest Lavisse; Paul Bourget; Anatole France; Gabriel Hanotaux; Henri Lavedan; Paul Deschanel; Frédéric Masson; René Bazin; Alexandre Ribot; Maurice Barrès; Maurice Donnay; Jean Richepin; Raymond Poincaré; Eugène Brieux; René Doumic; Marcel Prévost; Mgr. Duchesne; Henri de Régnier; Général Lyautey; Etienne Boutroux; Alfred Capus; Pierre de la Gorce; Henri Bergson; Maréchal Joffre; Louis Barthou; Henry Bordeaux; Mgr. Baudrillart; René Boylesve-Tardiveau; François de Curel; Jules Cambon; Georges Clemenceau; Maréchal Foch.

Friars Minor, ORDER OF (cf. C. E., VI-281c; also VI-217a).—By the Constitution "Quo Magis" of 23 October, 1911, Pope Pius X introduced important changes into the order. He also relieved Fr. Schuler of his responsibility, making him titular Archbishop of Nazianzus, and appointed Pacificus Monza of Vicenza (Venice) general of the order. At the general chapter in 1915 Seraphine Cimino of Ischia (Naples) became head of the order, and in 1921 the general chapter elected Bernardine Klumper of Amsterdam (Holland) minister general. The tenure of this last office was restricted by the Constitution "Quo Magis" to six years; re-election for one other term, however, may be made by a simple (absolute) majority of votes at the general chapter, which must now be held every sixth year. By the same Constitution the division of the order into circumscriptions was abolished, and only six definitors general or counsellors are elected at the general chapter, according to language (English, French, German, Hungarian-Slavic, Italian, Spanish), for a term of six years. The procurator general holds office for the same length of time, and, according to the new regulations, he is delegatus a jure whenever the general is absent from Rome, and in case of the latter's death or cessation from office during his term, the procurator ipso facto becomes vicar general of the order and governs with full authority until the general chapter convenes at the regular sexennial period. In Spain all the provinces of the order are governed by a vicar general and four inter-provincial counsellors who are elected for a term of six years and reside at Madrid. The congregatio intermedia for the whole order and the capitulum intermedium in the single provinces have been abolished. As to head-dress, custom permits the use of a hat with the habit in many provinces of the order, and the great tonsure is given only in some countries.

In October, 1920, the order had 16,248 members, of whom 8891 were priests and 2251 clerics; the number of provinces was 99, with 837 convents and 801 residences (i. e., domus non formatae). In the United States the 5 provinces and 2 commissariats (Polish at Pulaski, Wisconsin; Slovenian and Croatian at New York) of the order (besides the Commissariat of the Holy Land at Washington, D. C.) comprised 35 convents, 108 residences, 654 priests, 256 clerics, and a total membership of 1236. After the United States and several other countries were removed from the jurisdiction of the Propaganda and thereby lost their status as missionary countries, the number of religious classified as missionaries was also considerably reduced. Thus, in October, 1920, the statistics of the order showed 1120 missionary priests, 64 clerics, and about 200 lay brothers working in the foreign field. In 1921 the three Franciscan cardinals, Aguirre, Neto, and Falconio, who had been raised to the purple in November, 1911, being deceased, the order still included among its members 8 archbishops, 34 bishops (of whom 14 are vicars apostolic), and 2 prelates nullius (of Santarem in Brazil and Mozambique in Africa), besides 2 prefects apostolic and 3 superiors of the missions in the Holy Land, in Upper Egypt, and in Constantinople. Among notable members recently deceased are: David Fleming (d. 1915); Agostino Gemelli, first rector of the Catholic University of Milan; and the celebrated composer of many classic oratorios, Hartmann von An-der-Lan Hochbrunn (d. 1914).

Owing to the reform of the Breviary under Pope Pius X the dates assigned in the calendar for the feasts of several of the saints and of a number of the Blessed have been changed. Since 1909 sixteen Friars Minor have been added to the catalogue of Beati whose feasts are celebrated throughout the order, viz.: Gerard Cagnoli, d. 1342 (2 January); Roger of Todi, d. 1237 (28 January); Giles of Lorenzano, d. 1518 (28 January); John Baptist of Fabriano, d. 1539 (11 March); Christopher of Milan, d. 1485 (11 March); Mark of Montegallo, d. 1497 (20 March); Hippolytus Galantini, d. 1619 (20 March); Gandulphus of Binasco, d. 1260 (3 April); Julian Cesarrelli, d. c. 1350 (11 May); John of Aragon and Peter of Duenas, martyred at Granada, 1397 (22 May); Timothy of Monticulo, d. 1504 (26 August); Bonaventure of Barcelona, d. 1684 (11 September); Christopher of Romandiola, d. 1272 (31 October); Anthony Bonfadini, d. 1482 (1 December); Nicholas of Dalmatia, martyred at Jerusalem, 1391 (5 December).

FRIARS MINOR IN AMERICA (cf. C. E., VI-298a).—On 11 September, 1885, the Province of Cincinnati, Ohio, was established under the invocation of St. John the Baptist. In October, 1897, at the request of the Most Rev. Peter Bourgade, this province accepted missions in New Mexico and northern Arizona among the Navajo and Pueblo Indians, and a little later their activity was also extended to the Mexican and Spanish settlers of that territory. To further their work among the Navajo tribe, the Fathers made a special study of that language, and with much difficulty and labor succeeded in editing a "Vocabulary" in 2 volumes, and an "Ethnologic Dictionary" of the Navajo language, together with a short catechism and Bible History in the same tongue. With the elevation of one of their brethren, Rev. Albert Daeger, to the Archbishopric of Santa Fé (consecrated 7 May, 1919), a new impetus was given to their missionary zeal, and many new parishes and missions were undertaken with great success. At present the province numbers 5 monasteries, 43 residences, 1 bishop, 172 priests, 54 professed clerics (22 in philosophy and 32 in theology), 9 novice clerics, 53 professed lay brothers, 10 tertiaries professed, and 2 tertiary novices. The Fathers conduct a preparatory seminary, attended by 96 students, and are in charge of 46 parishes, 143 missions and stations, including the Indian missions in New Mexico and Arizona, 45 parish schools attended by 12,000 pupils, 2 Catholic Indian schools, and a number of Indian Government schools are also attended by the Fathers. Eight Fathers on the missionary band are continually engaged in preaching missions to the people. The Friars of this province also publish "Der Sendbote," a German monthly periodical for the Apostleship of Prayer, the "St. Anthony Messenger" for the members of the Third Order of St. Francis, "The Sodalist," a monthly for the young people, and the "Franciscan Missions of the Southwest," an annual for the members of the Indian Preservation Society.

The Province of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, with provincial house in St. Louis, Mo., numbers 219 priests, 73 clerics, 100 lay Brothers, 23 Fathers in Indian missions, 1 in China, 2 at the Catholic University, Washington, D. C., 10 monasteries, 23 residences, 81 parishes, 56 missions, stations, and institutions, 4 houses of studies, 1 college for aspirants to the order, 1 college with commercial, classical, and philosophical course. On 7 November, 1915, the convents and missions, which had constituted the commissariat of California, were detached from the Province of the Sacred Heart and formed into a separate province under the patronage of St. Barbara, virgin and martyr. This province now embraces the Franciscans in California, southern Arizona, southern New Mexico, Oregon, and Washington, with provincial resident in San Francisco. The status of the province is as follows: 99 priests, 17 professed clerics, 6 novices, 57 lay brothers, 1 novice, 14 tertiaries regular, 5 monasteries, 10 residences among whites, 6 residences among Indians, 21 parishes, 40 mission stations among Indians, 1 seminary with 70 students for the order, 4400 children in parochial schools, and about 400 Indian children in mission schools.

The Province of the Most Holy Name, with provincial house in New York City, has 6 monasteries, 8 residences, 102 priests, 59 professed clerics, 21 novices, 52 lay brothers. The Fathers have charge of 12 parishes, 31 missions, 4 houses of studies, 1 seraphic seminary, 1 ecclesiastical seminary, 1 classical, commercial, and pre-medical college, 2 high schools, 11 parish schools attended by about 3000 pupils. They publish "The Franciscan," a monthly, "St. Anthony's Almanac," "The Laurel," and "The Seminary Year Book." The Province of the Immaculate Conception, with provincial house in New York, comprises 3 monasteries, 10 residences, 48 priests, 13 professed clerics, 6 novices, 6 professed lay brothers, 4 tertiaries regular, 7 students for the priesthood, 12 parishes, 1 college with 25 students, 6 parish schools with 4200 children, 1 asylum for boys.

The Polish Franciscans in Wisconsin constitute a commissariat, under the title of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, composed of 22 priests, 20 professed clerics, 5 novices, 31 professed lay brothers, 2 novices, 11 tertiaries regular, 1 postulant, 1 monastery, 1 seraphic college, 2 residences, and 2 mission stations. On 2 August, 1912, the commissariat of the Holy Cross was established in New York City for Slovenian and Croatian Friars. It embraces 15 priests, 6 professed clerics, 5 novices, 7 postulants, 7 professed lay brothers, 2 novices, 10 residences, 10 parishes, and 2 mission stations.

The first Franciscan friary in Canada was founded in Montreal 24 June, 1890, exactly 275 years after the first Mass celebrated on Canadian land (24 June, 1615), and that by a Franciscan Recollect, Fr. Joseph Le Caron, and more than a century since the last Recollect died in Canada. The founder was Very Rev. Otho Ransan de Pavie, Minister Provincial of the Province of St. Louis d'Anjou, in France, sent directly by the Minister General, Most Rev. Aloysius of Parma. He had, however, been preceded by Rev. Frederic of Ghyvelde (1881), who made a short stay in Canada where he became very popular and where he returned in 1888 to found the Commissariat for the Holy Land. He died at Montreal in 1916, and many favors are attributed to his intercession. Until 23 March, 1920, when the Franciscan friaries in Canada were erected into an independent commissariat with Very Rev. Jean-Joseph Deguire as first commissary provincial, the Franciscans in Canada had been subjects of the French provinces of the order. After the expulsion from France of religious orders, the provincial temporarily took up his residence in Montreal. Three monthly reviews are published in Canada, two in French, "La Revue Franciscaine" and "La Tempérance," and one in English, "The Franciscan Review and St. Anthony's Record"; and also a yearly calendar in French, "L'Almanach Franciscain." The Fathers of the province have also published many books on all kinds of subjects, making a total of 278 for the period 1890-1915. They are the leaders of the Temperance League, for which during the first two years, besides many single sermons and 78 lectures with luminous projections, 160 triduums and retreats were preached. Persons known to have taken the pledge number over 80,000. Members of the Third Order under the obedience of the Franciscans in Canada number over 75,000 with a church of their own in Montreal, six houses in different places, and two libraries.

Statistics for the order in Canada are as follows: 70 priests, 46 professed clerics, 14 novice clerics, 2 novice lay brothers, 45 professed lay brothers, 23 postulants, 3 Tertiary Brothers Regular, 2 parishes, 3 mission centers (New Brunswick, Alberta, and Japan), with numerous stations and outposts, 5 monasteries (guardianates), 4 residences or hospices, 1 college with 110 seraphic students. Another college for the education of future missionaries is to be founded as soon as circumstances permit.

Friends, SOCIETY OF (QUAKERS; cf. C. E., VI-304d). I. Orthodox.—In recent years there has been a strong tendency toward greater unity of effort in the fields of home and foreign missions, Bible schools, education, evangelistic work, philanthropy, and social reform. The Friends have joined the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and are taking part in the preparations for the World Conference on Faith and Order. The official position of the Friends in the World War was practically the same as that taken in the American Revolution. Their position was recognized by Congress in the Selective-Draft Act, which provided for assignment of drafted Friends to noncombatant service. They organized the American Friends Service Committee (participated in by the four branches of Friends), carrying out its work as a part of the civilian branch of the American Red Cross, for the purpose of furthering reconstruction work in France. They were also prominent in relief work in Central Europe after the war.

II. Primitive.—Since 1906 the meetings of the Primitive Friends in New England and New York have become component parts of the "Wilburite" yearly meetings in New England and Canada.

The four bodies (Orthodox, Hicksite, Wilburite, and Primitive) reported, in 1921, 1331 ministers, 985 church edifices, and 119,294 members in the United States (Christian Herald, 7 March, 1921).

Fu-chow, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF. See YIH-KIANG.

Fu-kian, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (FOKIENSIS), in China, with residence at Fu-chow. The present vicar apostolic also is Rt. Rev. Francisco Aguirre, O.P., titular Bishop of Botrys or Botra, b. 22 February, 1863, in Elgaibar in the Diocese of Vitoria, professed 14 September, 1883, ordained 24 April, 1887, arrived in China, December following, provincial vicar 31 May, 1910, appointed 13 December, 1911, consecrated at Buichu, 16 June, 1912.

There are in the vicariate (1920) a total population of 17,000,000 souls of whom 49,160 are Catholics, 25,800 catechumens. There are 31 missionary and 21 native priests, 175 churches or chapels, and 112 stations. The work of the Holy Childhood is flourishing in this vicariate, where there are three establishments run by the Spanish Dominican Sisters of the Philippines. In 1913 they received 4518 little girls and more than 6000 in 1914.

Fulda, DIOCESE OF (FULDENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-313c), in Germany. In 1920 the Catholics numbered 216,000. The diocese contains 120 parishes, 40 curacies, 15 deaneries, 245 secular priests, 216 of whom are charged with the care of souls and 39 are otherwise occupied. The diocesan institutions are: the episcopal seminary at Fulda with 8 professors of theology, a hospice at Fulda under the care of the bishop for students attending the state gymnasium or the city Oberrealschule (8 years scientific course), the episcopal Latin schools at Amoneburg, Geisa, Hunfeld, Orb, and Grossauheim. The present bishop is the Rt. Rev. Adam Schmitt, b. at Marbach 22 April, 1858, ordained 22 October, 1882, elected bishop 29 December, 1906, consecrated and enthroned 19 March, 1907, and published 18 April following.

Funchal, DIOCESE OF (FUNCHALENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-318d), comprising the Madeira Islands, the three islands of Las Deserta, Porto-Santo, Falcon-Baio, and Selvagem, a total of about 314 sq. miles, is suffragan of Lisbon. The bishop, Rt. Rev. Antonio-Emmanuel Pereira Ribeiro, b. 16 February, 1879, doctor of theology and vicar capitular of Funchal, appointed 2 October, 1914, proclaimed 22 January, 1915, succeeding Mgr. Barreto, deceased. There are no statistics later than 1900. Charles, former Emperor of Austria and apostolic king of Hungary (born in 1887) was exiled to Madeira and arrived at Funchal 19 November, 1921, where he died 1 April, 1922.

Gaboon, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (GABONENSIS), in Central Africa, originally known as the Vicariate Apostolic of the Two Guineas. A part of the territory comprised in this vicariate, the mission of the Estuary of Mouni, founded in 1894, was ceded to Germany by the Franco-German treaty of 4 November, 1911. The mission, which at that time counted 500 Christians and 1000 Catechumens, had 2 priests, 2 Brothers, and 1 school. Gaboon, which is entrusted to the Fathers of the Holy Ghost, has its official residence at Sainte Marie du Gabon. Rt. Rev. John Martin Adam, who was appointed to this vicariate 16 February, 1897, retired 7 May, 1914, and was appointed auxiliary at Bordeaux. Rt. Rev. Louis Martrou, born in Riom-es-Montagnes, France, 1876, entered the Congregation of the Holy Ghost 17, and made superior of the mission of Gaboon in 1909, was appointed titular Bishop of Corycus and coadjutor to the vicar 10 December, 1911, and succeeded as vicar apostolic upon the resignation of Bishop Adam.

According to 1920 statistics this territory has a total population of 10,000,000, of which 14,939 are Catholics and 4200 heretics. The mission is served by 20 missionary priests, 26 Brothers, 58 catechists, 6 stations, 16 chapels, 1 seminary, 25 schools, 12 hospitals, and 44 Sisters of the Immaculate Conception of Castres.

Gabriel, BROTHERS OF SAINT. See SAINT GABRIEL, BROTHERS OF.

Gabriel Possenti, SAINT (cf. C. E., VI-330a), whose canonization, the first in the reign of Benedict XV, took place on 13 May, 1920. Present at the ceremony was his brother, Dr. Michele Possenti, of Camerino. His feast is celebrated on 27 April.

Gaeta, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CAIETANENSIS), in the province of Caserta, Southern Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. By a pontifical Decree of 21 March, 1921, the boundaries of this diocese were slightly changed, the town of Vallecorsa being incorporated in the Diocese of Veroli. Most Rev. Francesco Niola, promoted to this see 14 December, 1891, died 14 August, 1920, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Pasquale Berardi, born in the diocese of Trivento 1861, appointed Bishop of Ruvo 24 March, 1898, and promoted 21 April, 1921. The diocese comprises a Catholic population (1920 statistics) of 83,600, 42 parishes, 193 secular and 10 regular clergy, 30 seminarians, 4 Brothers, 60 Sisters, and 97 churches or chapels.

Galatians, EPISTLE TO THE (cf. C. E., VI-336a).—The historical setting and the precise meaning of St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians continue to be the subject of interesting discussion. We give below only the principal works which have appeared since Father Aherne's article in 1909. Father Lagrange, whose commentary is the most important contribution to the recent literature of the subject, defends the North Galatian theory and the late date. (c. A. D. 53 to 57). He is sure that the "Galatian country" of Acts xvi, 6, and xviii, 23, can only be the ancient home of the Gauls of Asia, in the northern part of the Province Galatia; and that St. Paul could not designate as "Galatians" the Phrygians and Lycaonians of the southern part of the province, whom he and Barnabas had converted during the first missionary journey (c. 47-49). "With the immense majority of interpreters," he regards Gal. ii, 1-10, as St. Paul's account of the meeting at Jerusalem related by Acts xv, written several years after it took place. Dom Höpfl defends similar views in his Introduction to the New Testament. So does Father Prat in his recent revision of his "Théologie de St. Paul." On the other hand, Fathers Lévesque and Keogh, with Sir W. M. Ramsay, contend that the Epistle was addressed to the Churches of Antioch, Iconium, Lystra, and Derbe, in South Galatia, before the Council of Jerusalem. It would be the earliest of St. Paul's Epistles, written c. A. D. 49. Professor Burton favors the South Galatian theory, but agrees with Father Lagrange concerning the date of the Epistle.

In the interpretation of the Epistle Fathers Lagrange and Lévesque maintain that the opponents of St. Paul in Galatia advocated circumcision and the observance of the Mosaic law as necessary for salvation, as did the Judaizers of whom St. Luke tells us in Acts xv. Like the Pharisees, they would have counted on the works of the law as a principle of justification, so attributing to human efforts effects which belonged exclusively to God's mercy and the merits of Christ's death. It is, indeed, hard to understand on any other supposition St. Paul's arguments, his emotions, his fear for his converts, his denunciation of those who disturb them. The Judaistic teachers are accused of perverting the Gospel; those who accept circumcision are said to cut themselves off from Christ. St. Paul would not so speak of the observance of the Mosaic law if it were not based on a subversive error. It is obvious that this view of the Judaizers' error should incline one to think of the Epistle as written before the Council of Jerusalem. After it the Judaizers could not appeal to the authority of Peter and James; nor could they wield such dangerous authority over the Galatians, who were clearly desirous of persevering in the doctrine of the Apostles. Writing after the Council St. Paul would, we should think, have simply told the Galatians that the thesis defended by the Judaizers had been submitted to the Apostles and Elders at Jerusalem and there condemned promptly, solemnly, and decisively. Father Prat, however, still holds as more likely that the Judaizers only advocated circumcision as a means of becoming more perfect Christians; and so much can be said in favor of this view and in favor of bringing together in point of time the Epistle to the Galatians and the Epistle to the Romans that no consensus of opinion may be expected among the doctors in the near future.

Galgani, GEMMA, Stigmatic, b. at Camigliano in Tuscany on 12 March, 1870; d. 11 April, 1903. On her mother's side she was descended from the noble family of the Landi. Unfortunately, there was consumption in the whole family and for that reason, when Gemma was two years old she was cared for by two pious women named Vallini and remained with them till she was six. At the age of nine she made her First Communion and from that time her life was one of continual suffering. At the age of twenty the death of her father left her and the rest of the children in absolute destitution. She was at this time at the point of death but was miraculously saved from the grave by the apparition of the Blessed Gabriel Possenti (canonized 1920). She was then taken into the household of a pious woman in spite of the menace to its members on account of her tuberculous condition. Her occupations were mostly of a menial character and entailed considerable mental as well as physical suffering, all of which contributed to her sanctification. She was the recipient of wonderful spiritual illuminations, ecstasies and visions, and on 8 June, 1899, was marked with the stigmata of the Passion on the hands, feet, head and heart, not permanently but at various intervals. Thenceforth her sufferings increased in intensity until her death. The cause of her beatification was introduced on 20 April, 1920.

Galla, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (AFRICE INTER POPULOS GALLA), embraces the territory of the Galla or Ormo tribes, in Abyssinia, Northern Africa. Founded in 1846, the limits of this vicariate were somewhat changed in 1906, and by a Decree of 28 April, 1914, a portion of its territory was taken to form the prefecture apostolic of Jibuti (q.v.). The vicariate of Galla is entrusted to the Capuchins with the official residence at Harar. The present vicar is Rt. Rev. André-Marie-Elie Jarosseau, born in the diocese of Luçon, France, 1858, entered the Congregation of Capuchins in 1876, and appointed titular Bishop of Savatra 4 April, 1900. This territory embraces a population of 8,017,608 (1920 statistics), of whom about 17,608 are Catholics, 2,000,000 Schismatics and Monophysites, and most of the remainder Mohammedans. The mission is served by 20 Capuchin and 8 native priests, 21 churches, 23 chapels, an upper and lower seminary with 41 students, 12 schools for boys and 4 for girls, 4 orphanages, 7 Brothers of St. Gabriel, and 16 Franciscan Sisters of Calais. On 6 March, 1919, one of the missionaries, Rev. Julien-Marie, a member of this mission since 1902, was assassinated by a band of Abyssinian brigands, at Minné among the Arouass tribes.

Galle, DIOCESE OF (GALLENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-349d), in Ceylon, has been making steady progress under its first bishop, Rt. Rev. Joseph Van Reeth, who was consecrated 19 March, 1895. At the present time (1921) the total population is about 1,037,086, of whom 12,853 are Catholic. The number of confessions has risen from 6331 (1897) to 46,065, and the number of communions from 7196 to 183,868. In 1897 only 335 boys and 376 girls attended the 14 Catholic schools; there are now some 3039 boys and 1930 girls in 39 schools. St. Aloysius College, under the Jesuit Fathers, now has an attendance of 500, and the Belgian Sisters of Charity of Jesus and Mary have erected a third convent in the diocese at Kegalla. Attached to each convent is a room for lace-making. There are now 10 parishes, 27 churches and 32 chapels, 5 secular priests and 22 Jesuit Fathers, 4 lay brothers, 48 Sisters, 36 of whom are Europeans and 12 natives. The Government assists in the support of all the schools, and various clubs, sodalities, and the Society of St. Vincent de Paul are organized in the diocese.

In 1918 and 1919 the mission lost two zealous workers by the deaths of Rev. Joseph Cooreman, S.J., who joined the Ceylon mission 16 October, 1895, and was later made vicar general of the diocese, d. suddenly in Calcutta 1 March, 1918; and Rev. Paul Cooreman, S.J., parish priest of Hambantota, who joined the mission 5 December, 1899, d. stricken by cholera while ministering to the sick 8 July, 1919.

Gallipoli, DIOCESE OF (GALLIPOLITANA; cf. C. E., VI-366d), in the province of Lecce, Southern Italy, is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Bishop Muller, b. in Naples 1850, and appointed to this see 29 July, 1898. During the World War all the clergy of this diocese from the bishop down performed numerous patriotic works, particularly in the hospitals, which were filled with the English and French wounded.

At the present time (1921) the diocese counts 7 parishes, 24 churches, 1 monastery for men, 1 convent for men, 35 secular and 2 regular clergy, 2 colleges for women with 45 students and 2450 children in elementary schools. One technical school with 13 professors and a student body of 300 is supported by the Government. Among the charitable institutions are 1 poorhouse, 1 infant asylum, 1 home for the aged, 1 hospital and 1 orphan asylum and work-house. Eight societies are established among the laity. The Catholic population numbers approximately 25,000.

Galloway, DIOCESE OF (GALLOVIDIANA; cf. C. E., VI-370a), underwent an interesting change in its educational system when, in 1918, a law was placed in the statutes of Great Britain whereby all the Catholic schools of Scotland were incorporated in every respect, financial and otherwise, in the Scottish National system of education. At the same time a guarantee was given to the effect that Catholics should have separate schools with Catholic teachers and supervised, with regard to religious education, by Catholic authorities.

On 19 January, 1914, Rt. Rev. William Turner, who had filled the see from 1899, died, and was succeeded by the present bishop, Rt. Rev. James McCarthy, consecrated 9 June, 1914.

The diocesan statistics for 1921 show a Catholic population of 16,469; 40 priests, 39 secular and 1 regular; 42 churches and chapels; 22 missions and 17 stations; 1 college under the Marist Brothers; 2 charitable institutions; 25 congregational schools with an attendance of 3285.

Various religious orders of women are represented in the diocese: the Benedictines, Poor Sisters of Nazareth, Sisters of Charity, Sisters of St. Joseph, Sisters of the Most Holy Cross and Passion, and the Sisters of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary. Among the laity the following societies are organized: Children of Mary, Young Men's Society, societies of St. Vincent de Paul, Holy Angels, Mount Carmel, Propagation of the Faith, and Sacred Heart and Needle-work Guild.

Galtellì-Nuoro, DIOCESE OF (GALTELLINENSIS NORENSIS), in Sardinia, Italy, suffragan of Cagliari. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Luca Canepa, born in Cagliari 1853, appointed 15 February, 1903. He resides at Nuoro. The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with 66,300 Catholics, 25 parishes, 66 secular and 3 regular priests, 16 seminarians, and 213 churches or chapels.

Galveston, DIOCESE OF (GALVESTONIENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-372b).—This diocese lost its fourth bishop, Rt. Rev. Nicholas Aloysius Gallagher, on 21 January, 1918, after an incumbency of thirty-six years. Born in Temperanceville, Ohio, 19 February, 1846, he was consecrated titular Bishop of Canopus 30 April, 1882, and succeeded as Bishop of Galveston 16 December, 1892. His successor is Rt. Rev. Christopher Edward Byrne (b. in Byrnesville, Diocese of St. Louis, 21 April, 1867), who was appointed to the see 8 July, 1918, and consecrated by Archbishop Glennon in St. Louis, 10 November, 1918. During the past few years the Catholic population of the diocese has increased from 56,000 (1909) to 98,178 in 1922. St. Mary's Seminary at La Porte has been taken over by diocesan priests (1911) and new buildings, of a modern and complete sort, erected (1919). Also a House of the Good Shepherd has been founded at Houston and a day nursery opened at Austin, while throughout the diocese Holy Name societies have been organized. On March 14, 1922, the diocese of Galveston celebrated its diamond jubilee at St. Mary's Cathedral, Archbishop Shaw of New Orleans, pontificated, Archbishop Glennon of St. Louis delivered the sermon, and many prelates from other dioceses attended the ceremonies.

For the duration of the war Rev. Marius S. Chataignon was chaplain and liaison officer of the 36th Division, U. S. Army. The religious communities of men in the diocese are: the Jesuits, who have charge of St. Mary's University, Galveston; the Basilians (from Canada), managing St. Thomas College, Houston; the Fathers of the Congregation of the Holy Cross at Austin; the Paulist Fathers at Austin; the Oblate Fathers, and the Josephite Fathers. The religious communities of women are: Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word, Sisters of Charity (Emmitsburg), Sisters of St. Dominic, Sisters of the Holy Cross, Sisters of St. Mary, Sisters of Divine Providence, Ursuline Sisters, Sisters of the Holy Family, Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament.

Statistics for 1922 show the diocese to have 66 parishes, 79 missions, 145 churches, 32 stations, 86 secular and 35 regular priests, 5 lay brothers, 495 nuns and Sisters, 1 seminary with 31 seminarians, 1 university with 9 professors and 115 students, 3 colleges for men with 20 teachers and 437 students, 10 academies with 198 teachers and 2607 pupils, 5 training schools with 90 teachers and 275 pupils, 43 elementary schools with 197 teachers and 7928 pupils, 1 home for the aged, 1 orphanage, 6 hospitals, 1 refuge, and 1 day nursery. There are one organization among the clergy and twenty-seven among the laity, and one Catholic periodical is published.

Galway and Kilmacduagh, DIOCESE OF (GALVIENSIS ET DUACENSIS), in County Connaught, Ireland, has the perpetual administration of Kilfenora (Fenaborensis). Rt. Rev. Francis MacCormack retired from this see in 1909, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Thomas O'Dea, transferred from Clonfert 29 April, of the same year. Born in Clonfert in 1858 he was appointed bishop of that diocese 10 June, 1903, and consecrated 30 August following. On 21 May, 1921, Bishop O'Dea appointed a diocesan chapter of twelve on the authority of the Holy See. The religious orders of men established in this diocese include the Franciscans, Dominicans, Augustians, Jesuits, Christian Brothers, and Patrician Brothers; of women: Presentation Sisters, Sisters of Charity, of Mercy, Poor Clares, and Dominicans. By the 1911 census the total population of these united dioceses is 68,703, of whom 67,271 are Catholic. The latest statistics (1922) credit them with 30 parishes, 79 secular and 22 regular priests, 53 churches, 4 houses of regular clergy, 16 convents, 2 colleges, 3 monasteries, and 2 homes of missionaries. The charitable institutions include 5 workhouses, 1 infirmary, 1 hospital, 2 industrial schools, and 1 asylum.

Gap, DIOCESE OF (VAPINCENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-378a), suffragan of Aix, includes the department of Hautes-Alpes (France). The retreat for the clergy of the diocese is a famous place of pilgrimage, Notre Dame du Laus. The Catholic population numbers 87,000 and is bound together with many organizations for both clergy and laity. For the former there is the Association of Priestly Perseverance, a society for mutual aid called Mutualité ecclésiastique, and an Association for Priestly Defence. Among the laity in practically every parish there are pious societies of divers sorts, including the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin, the Confraternity of the Holy Rosary, Christian Mothers, etc.

Rt. Rev. Prosper-Amable Berthet, born at Hères in Diocese of Gap, 17 February, 1838, ordained 23 June, 1861, elected Bishop of Gap 27 May, 1889. While visiting the wounded in the military hospital Bishop Berthet caught cold and died 25 October, 1914. His successor was Rt. Rev. Gabriel de Llobet, born at Perpignan 19 January, 1872, student at French Academy in Rome, where he was ordained 30 May, 1896, and elected Bishop of Gap at the consistory of 22 January, 1915. Mobilized as an "auxiliary," Bishop de Llobet was made a military chaplain at his own request and was sent to the front in March, 1916. Cited in orders of 1 November, 1918, awarded croix de guerre (2 citations), made chevalier of Legion of Honor 4 September, 1918, nominated with Mgr. Ruch, Bishop of Strasbourg, by decree of consistory of 19 November, 1917, as inspector of chaplains and mobilized clerics. The bishop was dismissed from the army and re-entered his own diocese in January, 1919.

Since the war only "La croix des Hautes-Alpes" has been published, besides the religious bulletin issued twice a month by the bishop. There are 23 parishes in the diocese, with 23 churches, 221 missions, 221 stations, 3 convents for women with 280 religious, 195 secular priests, 2 seminaries (upper and preparatory), the upper having 14 seminarians and the lower 45, 8 free elementary schools with 25 teachers and 500 pupils, 1 home for the aged, 1 orphanage, and 3 hospitals. In the colleges at Gap, Embrun, and Briançon a priest with the title of chaplain is stationed to give religious instruction.

Garanhuns, DIOCESE OF (GARANHUNENSIS or GERANHUNENSIS), in the State of Pernambuco, Brazil. This diocese was erected by a Consistorial decree of 2 August, 1918, which took the southern part of the diocese of Olinda for the new diocese, making it suffragan of Olinda and giving it fifteen parishes. The church of St. Anthony of Padua at Garanuns was made the cathedral, and the diocese was given the privilege of sending two clerics to the Latin-American College in Rome. Rt. Rev. João Tavares de Moura, born in the diocese of Olinda 1863, was appointed the first bishop 3 July, 1919. No statistics are yet published.

Garcia, ANNE. See ANNE OF ST. BARTHOLOMEW, BLESSED.

Garnier, CHARLES (cf. C. E., VI-388c).—The cause of his beatification was introduced at Rome, 9 August, 1916.

Garrold, RICHARD PHILIP, English Jesuit and writer, b. 2 February, 1874, at Hereford, England; d. 7 July, 1920. He was educated at Hereford Cathedral School and Pope's Hall, Oxford, and became a Catholic in 1896. He was the author of the following popular stories for boys: "The Man's Hands and Other Stories," "The Boys at St. Batts," "A Fourth Form Boy," and "The Black Brotherhood," several of which have been translated into French and German. He served as a chaplain with the British forces in the World War.

Garzon, DIOCESE OF (GARZONENSIS), in the Republic of Colombia. This diocese, erected in 1900, comprises the provinces of Neiva and Sur, and is suffragan of Popayan. It is under the administration of its first bishop, Rt. Rev. Esteban Rojas, born in Hato, Colombia, 1859, made his studies at the Latin-American College at Rome, was ordained in 1883, appointed Bishop of Tolima (since suppressed) 18 March, 1895, and transferred 20 May, 1900. No statistics are published.

Gatard, AUGUSTINE, Benedictine scholar, b. at St. Brevin, near Nantes, France, 18 May, 1862; d. at London, England, 22 November, 1920. He was educated at the petit séminaire of Guérande, St. Sulpice, and the Institut Catholique of Paris, and was ordained at Nantes in 1886. After teaching for some years in the Enfants Nantais he was professed at Solesmes in 1894, and the following year he assisted in founding St. Michael's Abbey, Farnborough, England. Dom Gatard was a zealous exponent of religious music, in particular of the Solesmes method of plainsong, which he introduced at the Southwark Diocesan Seminary and Westminster Cathedral. He took part in the Gregorian Congress at Rome and Strassburg, and was director of the Congress held at New York in 1920. Dom Gatard is the author of: "Manual of Gregorian Chant," "A Primer of Plainsong," "La musique grégorienne," and "Plain Chant," a technical and historical treatise, published after his death. In addition he was a contributor to the "Dictionnaire de théologie catholique" and "Dictionnaire d'archéologie et de liturgie."

Gavin, MICHAEL, Jesuit, b. at Kilpeacon, Limerick, Ireland, on 5 January, 1845; d. at Rochampton, England, on 28 June, 1919; son of Michael and Eliza (Galloway) Gavin. After preliminary studies at Astleknock College, Ireland, and Stonyhurst College, England, he entered the Society of Jesus at the novitiate of Saint Andrea, Rome, on 23 April, 1864. He studied philosophy at Stonyhurst and theology at Montauban (France), and St. Bueno's in Wales, where later he held a chair of theology from 1878 to 1881. After his tertianship he was appointed to the Jesuit church at Farm St., London, where he spent the remaining thirty-five years of his active life, highly esteemed as a preacher and spiritual director, being in charge of the men's Sodality of the Immaculate Conception for a quarter of a century. Among his publications are "The Sacrifice of the Mass," "The Memoirs of Fr. Galloway, S.J.," and a collection of sermons.

Gennari, CASIMIRO, Cardinal, b. at Maratea, 20 December, 1839; d. in Rome, 31 January, 1914. He was ordained in 1863 and then employed in ministerial work in the diocese of Conversano. In 1875 he founded the monthly review "Il Monitore Ecclesiastico," whose purpose was to make known the various legislative enactments and judicial pronouncements in the life of the Church and also to give the solutions and moral and canonical cases which were of especial interest in that part of the Peninsula. This publication became very popular all through Italy and revealed the editor as an accomplished theologian and canonist. He was made Bishop of Conversano 13 May, 1888, and in 1897 was promoted to Rome by Pope Leo XIII, who made him titular Bishop of Lepanto and Assessor of the Holy Office. He was promoted to the cardinalate in 1900 and in 1908 was chosen as Prefect of the Congregation of the Council, a post which he occupied until his death. He was the forty-fifth cardinal who died during the pontificate of Pius X.

Genoa, ARCHDIOCESE OF (JANUENSIS), in the province of Liguria, Northern Italy. This archdiocese, which was the birth place of the late pope, Benedict XV, was especially honored by him on 1 November, 1920, when he delegated the archbishop, Cardinal Boggiani, to crown the statue of Our Lady de Vineis with a crown of gold. The Madonna was crowned in 1616 by Cardinal Spinola, who decreed that every centenary of the crowning should be celebrated. However, in 1916 the war prevented the celebration of the feast and so the Holy Father, born in the parish, and baptized in the shrine church, ordered the feast to be celebrated four years later, and granted special indulgences to those who assisted at the crowning. On 29 April, 1912, Most Rev. Andrea Caron was promoted to this see and filled it until he retired, 23 December, 1914. The Italian government refused to give its exequatur to this appointment until 17 December, 1914, and as a result the diocese was forced to remain practically under interdict for almost two years. Archbishop Caron was succeeded by Most Rev. Lodovico Garotti 22 January, 1915, who died three years later 23 December, 1918. His Eminence Pio Tommaso, Cardinal Boggiani, was then promoted to fill the see 10 March, 1919. Born in Bosco-Marengo, 1863, he entered the Dominican Order in 1878, served as a missionary in Constantinople, became prior of Ragusa 1891, professor in the Seminary of Genoa, administrator of the diocese 1908, named apostolic visitor of the dioceses of Northern Italy, and appointed Bishop of Adria, 16 October, 1908. In 1910, upon the occasion of the transfer of the archives and curia of Adria to Rovigo, he was the victim of a riot in which he was seriously wounded. On 9 January, 1912, he was promoted to the titular metropolitan see of Edessa and made apostolic delegate to Mexico, 10 January following, and two years later he was named apostolic administrator of Genoa, assessor of the Congregation of the Consistory and secretary of the Sacred College, attending the Conclave which elected Benedict XV. He was created a cardinal-priest 4 December, 1916, and in August, 1921, he retired from Genoa and now lives in Rome. The see is now (1922) filled by Most Rev. Giosué Signori, born in Commenduno, 1859, made an honorary chamberlain in 1901 and again in 1903, appointed Bishop of Fossano, 15 April, 1910, transferred to Alessandria, 23 December, 1918, and promoted 21 November, 1921. He is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Giacomo Maria de Amicis, titular Bishop of Sinope. According to 1920 statistics Genoa counts 470,900 Catholics; 200 parishes, 956 secular and 270 regular priests, 250 seminarians, 110 Brothers, 1100 Sisters, and 400 churches or chapels.

Georgetown University (cf. C. E., VI-458b), Washington, District of Columbia, made an important addition to its various departments, when on 25 November, 1919, the School of Foreign Service was included among the established departments of the university. Convinced that foreign service is to dominate the new American era, and that to be properly fitted for such service a man should have a systematic training, Georgetown University launched a provisional semester of the new school, opening on 17 February, 1919, and ending on 17 June, 1919. The trial gave such promise of ultimate success that the establishment of the school followed immediately, with all the customary rights and privileges, particularly that of presenting candidates for academic degrees. The first graduation took place on 14 June, 1921, the degree "Bachelor of Foreign Service" being conferred for the first time in the history of education in the United States on 18 candidates, and certificates of proficiency awarded to 64.

The school was established under the direction of Rev. John B. Creeden, S.J., who was appointed President of the University in 1919, succeeding Revs. Joseph J. Himmel, S.J., 1909-12, and Alphonsus J. Donlan, S.J., 1912-19.

The number of students registered at present (1921) is: college, 445; medical, 172; dental, 163; law, 1153; foreign service, 427; total, 2360. The faculties, including officials, professors, special lecturers, assistants, and associates are distributed as follows: college, 117; medical school, 9; dental school, 13; school of law, 40; school of foreign service, 51. The hospital staff numbers 8 physicians-in-chief, 15 associates, and 16 assistants.

Decrees have been conferred from 1817-1920 inclusive as follows: Doctors: D.D., 27; LL.D., 137; Ph.D., 52; Litt.D., 3; Sc.D., 2; M.D., 1151; DD.S., 336; Phar.D., 3; Mus.D., 7; total, 1718. Licentiates: Ph.L., 1; LL.M., 1143; L.D.M., 395; A.M., 458; M.S., 5; total, 2002. Bachelors: LL.B., 3895; A.B., 1152; Ph.B., 32; Phar.B., 6; B.S., 19; Mus.B., 1; B.S. in Med., 34; total, 5139.

Georgia (cf. C. E., VI-460b).—The area of the State is 59,265 sq. miles. In 1920 its population was 2,893,601, as compared with 2,609,121 in 1910. Savannah, the largest city, had a population of 83,252. The State is divided into 12 congressional districts, 44 senatorial districts, and 155 counties. In 1919 Georgia produced 1,730,000 bales of cotton, 10,800,000 bushels of oats, 69,890,000 bushels of corn, and 2,520,000 bushels of wheat. In the same year the value of its products of manufacture was $80,510,749, the capital employed being about $96,061,709. The value of foreign commerce is estimated at $247,079,176. In 1918 the mileage of Georgia railroads was 7,404.22.

EDUCATION.—In 1919 the State University at Athens had 71 instructors and 1131 students; Atlanta University at Atlanta had 29 instructors and 521 students; Clark University at Atlanta, 18 instructors and 536 students; Morris Brown College at Atlanta, 24 instructors and 305 students; Emory College at Oxford, 143 instructors and 509 students; Shorter College at Rome, 26 instructors and 275 students; the Wesleyan Female College at Macon, 31 instructors and 496 students. In the common schools of Georgia there were enrolled, in 1918, 937,742 pupils and 15,054 teachers.

RECENT LEGISLATIVE CHANGES.—The Legislature of 1907 enacted an amended suffrage law which had the effect of practically eliminating the negro vote in the state. In 1917 the establishment and maintenance of two agricultural schools, a home guard or state constabulary, and primary election by candidates for certain offices by county unit system were provided for. In 1918 Cook County was created, a budget system provided, and tipping was declared illegal. The Torrens system of registering land titles, known as the "Land Registration Act," became effective in Georgia 1 January, 1918. State-wide prohibition went into effect in 1916. In 1919 a Department of Fish and Game, also a Department of Commerce and Labor, and a Department of Insurance were created. The sale of habit-forming drugs is prohibited.

EXCISE AND WILLS.—The inheritance tax is 1% on bequests to parents, husband, child, lineal descendants, brother, sister, daughter-in-law, $5000 exempt; on others 5%. In the year 1916 1339 divorces were decreed. In that year the divorce rate per 100,000 was 54, as compared to 26 in 1900.

RELIGION.—For Catholic statistics see SAVANNAH, DIOCESE OF. Anti-Catholic bigotry, encouraged by a certain section of the press, the Watson publications, has been particularly virulent in Georgia. As a consequence the state passed a convent inspection bill in 1916, which, with the bitter attacks made on the Church, led to the formation of the Catholic Laymen's Association (q.v.) "for the purpose of maintaining the civil rights of all persons regardless of their religious belief."

RECENT HISTORY.—In 1915 the Frank case took on a national interest. Leo Frank, a Jew, was convicted of murder and sentenced to death. It was charged that the atmosphere outside and inside the court-room was so hostile that a fair and impartial verdict was impossible, and the prisoner was absent by request when the verdict was announced. An appeal was taken to the U. S. Supreme Court, which refused a writ of habeas corpus. Frank's sentence, however, was commuted to life imprisonment, barely twenty-four hours before execution. He was removed to the State Farm at Milledgeville, from which he was kidnapped later by a posse, taken to a nearby town, and hanged.

Georgia's contribution of soldiers to the European War was 85,506, or 2.28 per cent of the U. S. Army. Many of her soldiers were quartered with the 1st Division at Wheeler, Georgia (National Guard Camp), or with the 82d Division of the National Army at Gordon, Georgia. Of all the Georgia men who went with the Expeditionary Force, 85 officers and 1445 men died, 8 officers and 36 men were taken prisoners, and 223 officers and 2628 men were wounded.

Georgia, REPUBLIC OF. See ARMENIA.

Gerace, DIOCESE OF (HIERACIENSIS), in the province of Reggio-Calabria, Italy, suffragan of Reggio. On 4 May, 1910, Pius X accorded the title of domestic prelate to the rector of the Sanctuary of Santa-Maria de Polsi, in this diocese. Benedict XV wishing to do something further to honor this ancient shrine, which was founded in 1144 by Roger I, king of the Normans, after an apparition of the Blessed Virgin, re-established the abbatial title which existed under the Basilians, and accorded to the abbot the power to confer under certain conditions, the sacrament of confirmation. His privileges are defined in six articles, the last of which states that if the abbot confirms without the permission of the bishop of the diocese the act is invalid. Rt. Rev. Giorgio Delrio, appointed to this see 6 December, 1906, was transferred to Oristano, 16 December, 1920, and the diocese is now under the direction of an administrator, Rt. Rev. Antonio Galati, Bishop of Oppido-Mamertina. In 1920 this diocese counted 135,000 Catholics; 70 parishes, 20 vicariates, 250 secular and 3 regular clergy, 25 seminarians, and 80 churches or chapels.

Geraldton, DIOCESE OF (GERALDTONENSIS), in Australia, suffragan of Perth. The first bishop of this diocese, Rt. Rev. William Bernard Kelley, born in the West colony of Australia, 1855, and appointed shortly after the erection of the see, 21 March, 1898, died 28 December, 1920; his successor has not yet been appointed. The Presentation Nuns and Sisters of St. Dominic conduct schools in the diocese. By the latest statistics (1922) it comprises 13 districts, 28 churches, 11 priests, 85 religious, 5 boarding and 14 elementary schools with an attendance of 845 children.

Gerard, JOHN, Jesuit scholar, b. in Edinburgh, 30 May, 1840; d. at London, 13 December, 1912. He was the son of Colonel Archibald Gerard of Lanarkshire. He was educated at Stonyhurst and at London University; was ordained a priest in 1873, and was twice editor of "The Month," from 1894 to 1897 and later from 1900 to 1912. Between these two periods he had been superior of the English Province. He was the author of several books, among them "The Old Riddle and the New-est Answer," a reply to Haeckel (q.v.).

Germany (cf. C. E., VI-484d), a republic, bounded on the west by France, Belgium, and Holland; on the south by Switzerland, Austria, and Czechoslovakia; on the east by Czechoslovakia and Poland; on the north by the North Sea, the Baltic Sea and Denmark. According to the returns of the census of 8 October, 1919, the area of the German Republic is about 183,381 sq. miles, and the population, 60,900,197 (29,012,000 males and 31,888,197 females). The largest towns with their respective populations in 1919 are: Berlin 1,902,509, Hamburg 985,779, Munich 630,711, Leipzig 604,380, Dresden 529,326, Cologne 633,904, Breslau 528,260, Frankfurt-on-Main 433,002. In 1917 there were 308,446 marriages, 939,938 births, 1,082,334 deaths (exclusive of military casualties). The number of divorces in Germany in 1914 was 17,740 (26.2 per 100,000 inhabitants); in 1917 (exclusive of Alsace-Lorraine), 11,603, or 17.3 per 100,000 inhabitants.

EDUCATION.—Education in imperial Germany was an affair of the State. The German "system" was usually the Prussian system which other states adopted. In the new Germany there is a national system of education, in the establishment of which the states and local communities co-operate. The schools are free to all, taught by teachers who are state officials, and supervised by technically trained officials with administrative ability. This last phrase reveals the end of clerical supervision. The great difference between the education of the classes and the education of the masses is also a thing of the past. For the classes there were the Vorschule (preparatory school), then one of the three types of the secondary school (Gymnasium, Realgymnasium, and Oberrealschule), and finally the university. The masses went to a Volkschule, or if they were able to afford the fees, to a Mittelschule. To the graduates the various vocational and continuation schools were open, but the secondary schools and the universities were closed to them. The new change in the educational system includes the establishment of an intermediate and higher school system. The exclusive private preparatory schools (Vorschulen) are abolished. Within the local communities public schools, to accord with a certain belief or philosophy of life, can be established by the parents, provided they conform in organization to the public school system. In all schools, except the secular schools, religion is to be taught according to the principles of the religious denominations concerned, but parents have the right to withdraw their children from school during the period of religious instruction. Physical education has been deprived of its military character. In the ten technical schools there were 929 teachers and 19,862 pupils (summer of 1920).

For instruction in agriculture there are Agricultural High Schools at Berlin (662 students in 1920), Hohenheim (599), Bonn-Poppelsdorf (652), and Weihenstephan (358). In 1920 there were Agricultural Institutes at eight of the universities, and throughout the republic there were various farming schools (26 in Prussia), agricultural winter schools (118 in Prussia), 15 schools of mining, 15 schools of architecture and building, 4 academies of forestry, 27 schools of art and art-industry, 429 commercial schools, 100 textile schools, 11 public music schools, 19 navigation schools, 11 naval architecture schools, and numerous other trade schools. There are also 23 German universities, besides the various lyceums.

AGRICULTURE.—The chief crops in 1919, with their acreage and total yield in metric tons, were as follows: wheat 2,828,150 acres and 2,169,169 metric tons; rye 10,789,235 acres and 6,100,144 metric tons; barley 2,815,127 acres and 1,910,368 metric tons; oats 7,482,197 acres and 4,453,688 metric tons; potatoes 5,451,982 acres, 21,449,688 metric tons. In 1921 the area under beets was 273,826 hectares, and the number of mills was 270.

INDUSTRIES.—In 1920 Germany produced 97,465 metric tons of zinc, 17,255 metric tons of copper, and 54,400 metric tons of lead. The source of a considerable part of Germany's mineral wealth was in the regions lost in the war, especially Luxemburg and Lorraine. The highest producing capacity of the iron and steel plants left to Germany is about 12,000,000 tons of iron or about 8,000,000 tons less than her former output. The eight-hour day has reduced the coal miner's shift to seven or seven and a half hours. The total production of coal for 1919 was only 108,000,000 tons, or 57 per cent of the former output (1913). Moreover, according to the Spa agreement, Germany must deliver to the Allies 24,000,000 tons of coal a year. Owing to the lack of coal, German industries are carried on at half speed, although in some cases the output has increased, as in the glass industry which during the war was restricted to about 40 per cent of its pre-war activity and since then has increased its output 50 per cent. In 1913 there were 23,339 breweries in Germany, a number which, at present has been reduced to 7500. The lack of coal and the eight-hour day have also reduced production in the paper and textile industries. Thus Germany is forced to make reparations in such a way as to diminish her ultimate capacity for full payment. (See FRANCE.)

FINANCES.—The German government financed the war chiefly by issuing loans. Owing to the blockade customs brought in very little, and owing to the scarcity of goods, consumption could not be fairly taxed. The result was a huge increase of the debt, which rose from 22,000,000,000 marks, Reich and States combined, to 247,000,000,000 marks for the Reich. More than half of this debt, 132,000,000,000, is short—termed floating debt, which cannot be funded at present, as there is little chance of placing a big loan with the public. On 30 August, 1920, the total paper circulation was over 72,000,000,000 marks including over 14,000,000,000 marks in loan certificates. It is still increasing rapidly, since public income does not meet public expenditures and also because of the necessity forced upon the bank of buying foreign bills of exchange for payment of foreign debts. The value of the imports in 1919 was about 32,000,000,000 marks, that of the exports, 10,000,000,000 marks, leaving an unfavorable balance of over 22,000,000,000 marks to settle. In 1920 the unfavorable balance was still greater. The value of the mark which was $23.797 per 100 marks before the war (March, 1913), has fallen as low as 29 cents per 100 marks (March, 1922). On 1 March, 1919, the total funded debt of Germany amounted to 92,396,411,300 marks, of which 76,275,230,500 marks bear interest at 5 per cent; 1,126,230, 100 marks at 4 per cent; 1,622,554,200 marks at 3 per cent; the Treasury bills amounted to 2,315,137,000 marks at 5 per cent; 9,093,001,500 marks at 4½ per cent. There is also a debt of 63,696,000,000 marks free from interest. On 1 March, 1921, the total debt amounted to 300,000,000,000 marks. Between 4 August, 1914, and 31 March, 1920, Germany issued loans to the total value of 222,151,465,980 marks. On 30 November, 1920, the floating debt was 165,918,235,629 marks. The budget for 1920-21 included a revenue of 90,612,306,340 marks and an expenditure of 57,501,670,140 marks.

RAILWAYS.—On 1 April, 1920, all the German railways were transferred to the Central Government. The total length of railway line on 31 December, 1918, was 38,809 miles, of which 36,006 miles were state lines. Though the railway rates have been raised to nearly six times their former standard, the systems are worked at a loss, as the high rates have reduced traveling and the cost of operating is rising rapidly.

ARMY.—The terms of the Armistice required the surrender by Germany of 5000 guns, 25,000 machine guns, 3000 trench mortars, and 1700 aeroplanes but did not specify the size of the German army or the degree of demobilization. In 1919 the President was authorized by the Reichstag to disband the existing army and to raise a provisional national defense army pending the creation of a permanent defense force. On 8 May, 1919, the demobilization of the German army was completed and the defense force came into being. By the terms of the Treaty of Versailles, the number of effectives was to be reduced to 100,000 men; universal compulsory service is abolished, also the German Great General Staff and all similar organizations. The Public Safety Police (50,000), Emergency Volunteers (150,000), and Civic Guards (350,000) formed in 1919 on the claim that they were needed to maintain order, were ordered disbanded, as being contrary to the terms of the Versailles Treaty. In January, 1921, 30,500 guns had been surrendered, 6000 guns in process of manufacture had been destroyed, 10,000 trench mortars, 63,100 machine guns, and 2,524,000 rifles had been surrendered.

NAVY.—As a fighting force the German navy ceased to exist under the terms of the Armistice and the Treaty of Versailles. Only a navy recruited and maintained on a volunteer basis is allowed to Germany, the total personnel not to exceed 15,000, including a maximum of 1500 officers and warrant officers. The naval expenditure in 1921, including mine-sweeping, is estimated at 221,000,000 marks. All the capital ships of the former High Fleet of Germany left afloat have been or will be broken up.

RECENT HISTORY.—In Germany during the years 1911-1914 the chief internal issues, outside regular financial measures, were concerned with Alsace-Lorraine, the increase in the German army, the Bagdad Railway, and the continued opposition of the Socialist Party to the Government. Since its annexation to Germany Alsace-Lorraine had proved a continual embarrassment to the Government, the inhabitants in the western part being strongly French in sympathy, and thwarting every effort of Germany to placate them. In 1911 it was granted a constitution with universal suffrage and the privilege of sending three members to the Bundesrath. In 1912 the forced acknowledgment by Germany of the French protectorate in Morocco in return for part of the French Congo made many Germans feel that her diplomatic defeat was due to lack of a sufficient military strength to overawe France, and led to a prompt increase of the German army to 870,000 men. In an agreement signed in August, 1911, Russia withdrew its opposition to the completion of the Bagdad railway and agreed to link up the German line, when finished, to the Persian lines in the Russian sphere of influence; and Germany in return recognized Russia's predominant interests in Northern Persia and pledged herself not to seek concessions therein. In May, 1913, Great Britain recognized the German economic and financial control of the railway as far as Bagdad, and made tentative plans for the extension southward to Bassora under international control, with both German and British members on the governing board. The growth of German militarism was vigorously combated by the Socialist party in Germany but militarism meant a greater Germany and had the absolute approval and encouragement of the Kaiser.

EUROPEAN WAR.—When Austria declared war on Serbia (28 July, 1914), Russia immediately mobilized her armies against Austria, and Germany commenced mobilizing against Russia and France. On 1 August Germany declared war against Russia. Germany then asked of France a statement of her attitude and demanded the fortresses of Verdun and Toul as pledge of her neutrality. France's reply was such that Germany felt sure that she would support her ally, Russia, and declared war against her on 3 August, 1914. Germany planned to crush France by a swift march on Paris before Russia's armies were ready for an attack in the east; France crushed, she would then turn on Russia with all her forces. Belgium was promptly invaded and German armies were on their way to France. The route taken by the German armies in 1870 was so strongly fortified all the way from Verdun to Belfort as to make a rapid march in this direction impossible. In Belgium they first attacked Liège, which surrendered in three days. The Belgian army made a desperate stand at Louvain, but this place was taken. On 20 August the Germans entered Brussels without firing a shot. The road to France, however, was not yet open; the Belgians were joined by the French and by an expeditionary force of British under General Sir John French, who together opposed the German forces. At Namur and again at Mons (22 August, 1914), the Allies were defeated by General von Kluck, the commander of the German forces, and were compelled to retreat from Mons to the main French line. Nothing seemed to stop von Kluck's march to Paris. City after city was taken, and at one time the Germans were only fifteen miles from the capital. A new French army was suddenly launched at the German right flank. By this time the Germans were across the Marne River. Von Kluck turned back to meet the new attack and at the same time the French General Foch drove back the center of the German line. The battle of the Marne which followed (6 September) was a severe defeat for the Germans, who retired to the Aisne River. Having dug themselves in trenches and fortified their line, the Germans now finished the conquest of Belgium, taking Antwerp on 9 October.

The Russian mobilization was very rapid. The first army invaded East Prussia, where it gained several victories. A large German army under the command of General von Hindenburg was sent to meet it. On 29 August the great Battle of Tannenberg was fought, which resulted in victory for the Germans. The invasion of Galicia by the Russians was more successful. Lemberg was captured on 20 August and the Austrians were forced to yield Galicia by March, 1915. To relieve the Russian pressure on the Austrians the Germans began a counter-offensive by invading Poland. Warsaw fell on 4 August, 1915. The Germans prepared to march on to Petrograd (St. Petersburg) but they were halted by the Russian trenches in front of Riga. Under General von Mackensen the Russians were driven out of Galicia during May-June, 1915.

On the western front the repulse of the Germans at the Marne was followed by a period of unrelenting trench warfare. The battle line, six hundred miles long, seemed impregnable, but the Germans decided on another great effort to break it. For six months the Crown Prince and his troops struggled in vain to take Verdun. In July, 1915, a counter-offensive on the part of the Allies on the Somme relieved the pressure on Verdun.

In the east the Russians were attempting to retrieve some of their losses by a "drive" under General Brusilov and though they conquered Bukovina, they were unable to do more than push the Teutonic line back from twenty to fifty miles. Now that Bulgaria had declared war against Serbia (14 October, 1915), Serbia was invaded from two sides by Germans and Austrians under von Mackensen and by Bulgarians. Her conquest was soon complete, and nearly all her army captured. The route from Berlin to Constantinople was now open, Turkey having in November, 1914, cast her lot with Germany. In March, 1916, Germany declared war against Portugal because the latter had seized German ships interned in her harbors. Upon Rumania's declaration of war on Austria on 27 August, 1916, the Germans and Austrians retaliated by a prompt invasion of the country under von Mackensen and von Falkenhayn. In three weeks Rumania was at their feet. In 1916 occurred the long drawn out Battle of the Somme on the western front between the British under Haig, and the Germans under Hindenburg. It resulted in the withdrawal of the Germans to the Hindenburg line and the surrender of a thousand square miles of devastated French territory. During April-June, 1917, the Germans fought all the British offensives by a series of counter offensives. In February, 1915, the Germans declared that the waters around the British Isles constituted a war zone, wherein enemy merchantmen would be subject to destruction. What German ships remained on high seas after the withdrawal of the fleet to Kiel Canal were either destroyed or sunk, off the coast of Chile in November, 1914, and near the Falkland Islands, in December, 1914. On 31 May, 1916, the German High Seas Fleet under Admiral von Scheer slipped out of Kiel Harbor and was met by the British battle-cruiser squadron under Admirals Jellicoe and Beatty. Losses were severe on both sides and the Germans returned to Kiel Harbor. Deprived of the opportunity to use their navy, the Germans were forced to watch the seizure of the German colonies in West Africa, Togo, and Kamerun without much opposition. Japan had on 23 August, 1914, ordered Germany to give up Kiau-chau which she had leased from China, and upon the refusal, bombarded the port, forcing the German force to surrender in November, 1914. England's naval blockade was returned by a German blockade of the English coast by the submarine. The unrelenting German submarine warfare led to the entrance of the United States into the war (6 April, 1917).

In the meantime there was revolution in Russia.

On 15 March, 1917, the Tsar abdicated and on 22 July, Kerensky became head of the Provisional Government. The Germans took advantage of the disorders that followed to capture Riga on 2 September without striking a blow. The Kerensky Government was overthrown by the Bolsheviks who on 16 December signed an armistice with Germany at Brest-Litovsk. While the negotiations were going on, the Russian armies were being demobilized; the Germans on the other hand, continued their advance in Russia and on 19 February, 1918, occupied Dwinsk. On 9 February they signed a treaty of peace with Ukraine. They overran Livonia and were marching on Petrograd, when the Russians finally signed the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk on 4 March, 1918.

On the western front in November, 1917, the British made a counter-attack on the German line in the direction of Cambrai, but before they could consolidate their positions, the Germans launched a counter-attack and the British had to yield more than half the territory which they had won.

On 6 May, 1918, Rumania signed a treaty of peace with Austria and Germany. The peace on the eastern front gave Germany a free hand in the west, and the Germans decided to break through the allied line before America had time to send large armies to France. Their object was to split the British and French forces, to capture the Channel ports, and force the French to make peace. In the battles of Flanders, of the Aisne, and of the Oise, they gained 1130 square miles of French territory, and again approached the Marne. Again they were hurled back by the French aided by the Americans. In the French counter-offensive, they were forced to retire and in the battle of St. Mihiel, lost many men and much booty to the American army. The Hindenburg line was now broken and a general retreat from France and Belgium began. Austria, overwhelmed at the Piave, sued for peace. Germany now stood practically alone in her fight. Turkey was suing for peace (31 October, 1918), and the following nations had declared war on Germany: Greece (23 November, 1916), Guatemala (21 April, 1918), Hayti (12 July, 1918), Honduras (19 July, 1918), Italy (28 August, 1916), Liberia (4 August, 1917), Panama (7 April, 1917), Portugal (23 November, 1914), Serbia (9 August, 1914), United States (6 April, 1917). Bolivia severed diplomatic relations on 14 April, 1917; Brazil 11 April, 1917; China 14 March, 1917; Ecuador 7 December, 1917; Guatemala and Nicaragua 19 May, 1917; Peru 5 October, 1917; Uruguay 7 October, 1917. With her line broken and the conquering Allies marching rapidly towards Germany, the only course was to negotiate for peace. The negotiations lasted until 5 November, when President Wilson informed the Germans of the readiness of Marshal Foch to conclude an armistice with accredited German agents, and that the allies were ready to make peace. The armistice was signed on 11 November, 1918.

In the meantime there were rumblings of a revolution in Germany. The Kaiser hurriedly left Berlin and sought refuge at Spa. News came that Liebknecht and the Minority Socialists were openly inciting to rebellion and that mutinies were occurring in the navy. On 8 November the Socialists at Munich under Kurt Eisner deposed King Ludwig, and transformed Bavaria from a monarchy into a republic. The next day saw the flight of the Kaiser into Holland, on 9 November, 1918, the German Imperial Chancellor announced the appointment of Friedrich Ebert as Chancellor and the plans for a German Constitutional Assembly.

The flight of the Kaiser was followed by the abdication or deposition of practically all the rulers of the sovereign states of Germany, control passing in most cases peaceably into Socialist hands. On 28 November, 1918, the Kaiser signed at Amerongen a formal abdication of the crowns of Prussia and the German Empire, and the Crown Prince Frederick William at Wieringen in Holland on 1 December definitely renounced all claims to the succession. The legislative power of the new provisional government was vested in a Soldiers' and Workmen's Council until a constituent Assembly should be summoned, and the executive power in a cabinet with Friedrich Ebert as Prime Minister. The cabinet of six was composed chiefly of Majority and Independent Socialists. A movement of the Spartacides headed by Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg was started to prevent the meeting of the National Assembly (see SPARTACUS GROUP). On 15 January, 1919, the leaders were killed and after desultory fighting, the uprising subsided. Weimar was chosen as the seat of the National Assembly which convened 6 February, 1919. A provisional constitution was adopted and Ebert was chosen as the first president. A smouldering reactionary revolt in Bavaria was fanned into flame by the assassination of Kurt Eisner, Bavarian Premier. In Saxony the Spartacans launched a movement to overthrow the bourgeois Government. A Soviet Republic was even set up in Munich on 6 April, but the new government was short-lived. Attempted revolts in Baden, Brunswick, Dresden, and other centers were crushed. A similar attempt was made in the Rhenish provinces to establish a Rhine republic under the protection of the French troops. Unsupported by the overwhelming German population, the movement collapsed.

The Peace Treaty of Versailles, signed by Germany on 28 June, 1919, and ratified by the German Assembly on 7 July, 1919, revolutionized the position of Germany territorially, economically, and militarily. By the terms Germany ceded Alsace-Lorraine to France, Eupen and Malmédy to Belgium, Memel to Lithuania, and a large part of the provinces of Posen and West Prussia to Poland; to Poland, moreover, she agreed to cede Upper Silesia, the southern part of East Prussia, and a strip west of Vistula, if in a plebiscite to be conducted under international auspices, the population of these districts should express the desire for incorporation within the Polish Republic; and in order to provide Poland with a convenient access to the Baltic, she consented to the establishment of Danzig (q.v.) as an internationalized free city. Furthermore, she was willing to acquiesce in the cession to Denmark of such districts of Schleswig as should vote accordingly in a plebiscite, and likewise she would submit for fifteen years to the economic exploitation by France, and the political control by an international commission of the rich Saar Basin, and would abide by the decision reached by popular plebiscite at the end of fifteen years as to whether the Saar region should belong to Germany or to France.

Germany also surrendered all her overseas colonies and protectorates, her lease of Kiao-Chow and her Shantung privileges to Japan, Samoa to New Zealand, her other Pacific possessions south of the Equator to Australia, German Southwest Africa to the British Union of South Africa, German East Africa to Great Britain; Kamerun and Togoland were partitioned between Great Britain and France, generally under mandates. Besides, Germany renounced all special rights and privileges in China, Siam, Liberia, Morocco, and Egypt.

Politically, Germany recognized the complete independence and sovereignty of Belgium, likewise of German Austria, Czechoslovakia, and Poland; and denounced the treaties of Brest-Litovsk. Militarily, she promised to reduce her army to 100,000 men, to raze all forts fifty kilometers east of the Rhine and to abolish conscription; also to demolish fortifications at Heligoland, to open the Kiel Canal to all nations, to refrain from building forts on the Baltic, and to surrender her fourteen submarine cables. She agreed to the trial of the ex-Kaiser for violation of the laws and customs of war. By way of reparation and economic settlement, she accepted full responsibility for all damages caused to the allied governments, agreed to pay shipping damage on a ton-for-ton basis by cession of her merchant, coasting and river fleet, and new construction, to aid in the rebuilding of the devastated area, to return the works of art taken from Belgium and France as well as the manuscripts and prints equivalent in value to those destroyed at Louvain. Until reparation was fully made the allied troops were to occupy the left bank of the Rhine, evacuating the regions gradually, as Germany fulfilled her obligations.

In the negotiations of the Supreme Council which followed, Germany assumed a passive attitude, except in the matter of reparations. The sum demanded by the allies was too great to be given up by Germany in such a brief space of time, and to make matters worse, the allies demanded coal by way of reparations, thus crippling the industrial ability of Germany to pay.

In July, 1921, a separate peace treaty was negotiated with China, in which Germany renounced all her treaty rights in that country. On 25 August, 1921, a treaty of peace between Germany and the United States was signed which was ratified by both countries 11 November, 1921.

The war losses of Germany were astounding. Of the 11,000,000 men mobilized, 1,611,104 were killed, 3,683,143 were wounded, 772,522 were taken prisoners or missing, the total casualties being 6,066,769. The losses of the German navy were very small, owing to the fact that the greater part of her fleet remained in port during the war and as she had no mercantile marine at sea the service of scouting vessels and patrol boats to protect her shipping was unnecessary. The total loss in tons was only 350,000.

GOVERNMENT.—The new constitution of Germany, adopted by the National Assembly at Weimar on 31 July, 1919, and promulgated on 11 August, 1919, declares that the new German Government is a Republic, and that the power of the state is derived from the people. The head of the Government is the President. The legislative branches are the Reichstag and the National Council, or Reichsrat. The real authority of the state is vested, however, in the Reichstag, subject to the direct control of the people. The President is elected by the people for seven years, and appoints a Chancellor, and at his suggestion, other ministers, through whom the Government is administered. The President represents the nation in its foreign relations, but his acts require the approval of the Reichstag, and war can be declared and peace made only by a national law. The Reichstag consists of delegates chosen for four years by the people on the principle of proportional representation. The National Council (Reichsrat) is a body in which the various German states (Länder) have representation according to size. Each has at least one vote and the larger ones have one vote for each million inhabitants. They are represented through members of their respective governments. All Bills require the assent of the Reichsrat before they are introduced into the Reichstag. There is provision for a budget system, which is compulsory, and for referendum elections. All Germans are declared equal before the law and all privileges or disadvantages of birth, class, or creed are abolished. Freedom of speech and of the press and religious liberty are guaranteed. The State church is abolished. Labor power is placed under the special protection of the nation and the right of combination for the defense and promotion of labor and economic conditions is guaranteed. A comprehensive system of labor insurance is provided for—health, motherhood, unemployment, old age, and industrial. A National Economic Council is established to pass on drafts of social, political, and economic political laws of fundamental importance. Each state obtains a republican constitution.

During 1920, the German Assembly worked on the new constitution, while the state was swept by serious political and economical disturbances. A counter-revolutionary movement under the leadership of Dr. Wolfgang von Kapp took the Government by surprise on 13 March, 1920, when the revolutionists marched into Berlin and took possession of all the public buildings, forcing President Ebert to flee. The coup failed, however, owing to the resistance of the Socialists. Elections took place in accordance to the new franchise bill providing for one member of the Reichstag for every 60,000 votes cast, on the basis of proportional representation. In February, 1920, Coburg was united to Bavaria, and the new federal State of Thuringia (including Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach, Saxe-Meiningen-Reuss, Saxe-Altenburg, Saxe-Gotha, Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt, and Schwarzburg-Sondershausen), was recognized on 24 April, 1920. Northern Schleswig voted to join Denmark, Southern Schleswig to remain German. The plebiscite in Upper Silesia on 20 March, 1921, resulted in 716,408 votes for Germany and 471,406 for Poland. The peculiar distribution of the votes caused the question to be submitted to the League of Nations, which partitioned the country so that Poland obtained the eastern part, the frontier line being east of the German towns of Beuthen, Glewitz, Ratibor, Guttentag, Tost, and Gr. Strehlitz.

In the Reichsrat, 1922, Prussia has 22 representatives, Bavaria 7, Saxony 5, Württemberg 3, Baden 3, and the other states 15. According to the elections of 6 June, 1920, the Reichstag is composed of 113 Majority Socialists, 81 Independent Socialists, 69 Center Party, 66 German National People's Party, 62 German People's Party, 45 German Democratic Party, 20 Bavarian People's Party, and 10 minor parties; total, 466.

THE CHURCH.—The Constitution of the new Republic of Germany provides for entire liberty of conscience and for complete equality among all religious denominations. According to a statistical survey for 1920, published by the Bureau of Statistics of Cologne and covering Germany, including Polish Upper Silesia but excluding the Saar District, the total Catholic population was 20,822,503. To provide for the spiritual wants of this great number there were 19,076 secular priests, or one priest for every 1346 Catholics. There were 258,366 Catholic marriages, and 29,658 mixed marriages, in 11,436 of which the husbands were Catholic. The number of children baptized in the year was 538,248, of whom 38,241 were born of mixed marriages. The children born of Catholic mothers and non-Catholic fathers numbered 22,903, and those of Catholic fathers and non-Catholic mothers 15,338. A total of 476,389 children received their First Communion, an increase of 17,132 compared with the preceding year. The total number of communions for the year was 189,072,854. About 12,000,000 Catholics made their Easter duty, or more than 75 per cent of all those under obligation to do so. Conversions numbered 9351, which was 1552 in excess of those reported in 1919. The Saar District, now under French control, has 142 parishes with 21 curacies, 293 secular priests, and a Catholic population of 507,831.

It is an undeniable fact that in Germany since the war there has been a marked movement towards the Catholic Church. Since the downfall of the empire Protestantism has no official head, and sincere Protestants feel the lack of any supreme and final authority. (See EVANGELICAL CHURCH.) The disinterested motives and impartial conduct of the Sovereign Pontiff in endeavoring to secure peace, the close contact brought about by the war between the Catholic army chaplain and the Protestant minister, the devotion of the priests to all, whether they were their own spiritual children or not, have dissipated anti-Catholic prejudices that were centuries old. Many of the old religious orders and congregations excluded under the imperial régime are returning. In some instances they are even recovering their former buildings; the Cistercians, for example, have regained their monastery in Bamberg, and the old barracks at Ingolstadt, originally the Jesuit College, founded by Blessed Peter Canisius in his great work of the counter-Reformation, are to be restored to their former purpose. On the other hand the situation of the German nursing Sisters is most disquieting. There are 33,000 in Germany engaged in hospitals, homes for the sick, and dispensaries. Many of them are dying of tuberculosis, owing to the hard conditions of their service and the inadequate pay they receive. In one community in Southern Germany having 160 nuns, 70 are sick and there is an average of two deaths a month. There is a tendency to replace them with high-salaried secular nurses. Several important diplomatic and political posts have been and are held by Catholics, amongst them Matthias Erzberger (q.v.), Count von Hertling (q.v.), and Dr. Andreis Hermes, Minister of Food and Acting Minister of Finance in the cabinet of Dr. Joseph Wirth, also a Catholic. In spite of the split in the Center Party caused by the formation of the Bavarian Popular Party, the former retains much of its power. Though Catholics are still deprived of many of the rights taken from them by the German Nationalists under Bismarck, they hope to regain them in the near future. There is a splendid spirit of organization amongst Catholic young people.

In 1920 Germany was given the rank of Apostolic nunciature with Mgr. Pacelli, titular Archbishop of Sardes, as nuncio. The Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary representing Germany in Rome is Dr. Jacobus von Bergen. The embassy was formerly the Prussian legation. For Catholic statistics see articles on the archdioceses and dioceses of Germany.

Germany, Northern Missions of, Vicariate Apostolic of (cf. C. E., VI-529a).—In the broad sense the jurisdiction of this Vicariate Apostolic covers the free and Hanse towns of Bremen, Hamburg, Lübeck, the Oldenburger free state of Lübeck, the free state of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Schaumburg-Lippe, and the Apostolic Prefecture of Schleswig-Holstein. The bishop of Osnabrück is also Vicar Apostolic of the Northern Missions, and prefect Apostolic of Schleswig-Holstein. The vicariate Apostolic has a Catholic population of 113,945. There are 29 parishes, 39 mission stations, 63 secular priests and 7 regulars. In 1921 the following orders and congregations had foundations: Jesuits at Hamburg; Sisters of Mercy of St. Charles Borromeo at Hamburg; Franciscans (mother-house in Münster), at Bremen and Bremerhaven; Franciscans (mother-house in Thuine), at Bergedorf (2), at Bremen (3), also at Bremerhaven, Neustrelitz, Niendorf, and Rostock; Sisters of St. Elizabeth (Grey Nuns) at Eutin, Hamberg (8), Lübeck (2), Schwerin and Wismar; Ursulines at Hamburg and Eutin. The prefecture Apostolic contains 48,752 Catholics, 24 parishes, 32 mission stations, 35 secular priests and 3 regulars. The following orders are represented: Franciscans (mother-house in Aix-la-Chapelle), at Flensburg and Causlund; Franciscans (mother-house in Thuine), at Wordstrand, Oldesloe and Ottenser; Sisters of St. Elizabeth (Grey Nuns) at Altona, Kiel, Neumünster and Reinbeck.

In the Vicariate Apostolic and in the prefecture Apostolic together there are 614 nuns. The Ursulines have a lyceum and a realschule (6 years scientific course) at Hamburg and at Eutin. There are 22 institutions of various kinds, including 8 hospitals, 4 homes for children, 1 reformatory, 2 day nurseries, several asylums and preparatory institutions for first communicants. There is one Catholic periodical.

Gerona, DIOCESE OF (GERUNDENSIS), in Spain, suffragan of Tarragona. Rt. Rev. Francisco de Pablo Mas y Oliver, appointed to this see 10 April, 1915, to succeed Bishop Pol y Baralt, died 16 April, 1920, and the see is now vacant. This territory which extends over 1916 sq. miles, comprises 390,000 Catholics; 386 parishes, 6 archpriests, 985 priests, 386 churches, 593 chapels and 176 convents with 176 religious, and 1754 Sisters.

Gerrard, THOMAS JOHN, author, b. at Wigan, England, in 1871; d. in Southampton on 14 December, 1916. He began his studies for the Bar but on becoming a Catholic in 1891 he entered Oscott College and was ordained in 1896. He served on the missions of Chelsea and Southalt in the Archdiocese of Westminster, and later owing to ill health he acted as assistant chaplain to the Canonesses of the Holy Sepulchre, at New Hall, Essex. Father Gerrard collaborated in the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA and also contributed frequently to Catholic periodicals, his writings whether spiritual, philosophical, or literary being of a high standard. His principal published works are: "The Wayfarer's Vision," "The Cult of Mary"; "Marriage and Parenthood," "The Church and Eugenics" and "Bergson: an Exposition and Criticism."

Gezireh, DIOCESE OF (JAZIRENSIS), the seat of two Catholic residential sees, one Chaldean, the other Syrian, in Mesopotamia. The Chaldean diocese has been vacant since 26 August, 1915, when the bishop, Rt. Rev. Philip Abraham, together with the Syrian bishop and ten Chaldean priests, were shot to death by the Turks, in the prison of Gezireh. At the same time about 5000 of the faithful were massacred out of hatred of the Catholic Faith. In 1920 there were in this diocese about 6400 Chaldean Catholics; 17 priests, 14 churches or chapels, 1 station, and 7 schools.

Since the massacre of the Syrian bishop, Rt. Rev. Flavian Michael Malke, this see has also been vacant. Born near Mardin in 1856, of Jacobite parents, Bishop Malke entered the Jacobite convent of Zapharan in 1876, and had become a deacon, when in 1877 he embraced the Catholic Faith. He then studied at the seminary of Charfet, where he was ordained in 1883 by the Patriarch of Antioch. He served in a number of different missions converting many Jacobites, was named patriarchal administrator of Mardin in 1910, and was appointed Bishop of Gezireh, 14 September, 1912. For the Syrians the diocese comprises 1300 Catholics, 7 secular priests, and 7 churches or chapels.

Ghardaia in Sahara, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (GHARDAIENSIS IN SAHARA), in the French Sahara. This territory was formerly known simply as Ghardaia, but a Decree of Propaganda, 10 January, 1921, added the words "in Sahara" to its title. In 1920, by a consistorial Decree of 2 July, some important changes were made in the prefecture, giving it a portion of the territory (Geryville and Ain-Sefra), formerly belonging to the Diocese of Oran. The same year two new stations, at Laghouat and Djelfa in Southern Algiers, were created at the suggestion of the military authorities, who wished to have the White Fathers established in these regions. In Laghouat, with the exception of the soldiers, there are few Europeans, the region being chiefly populated with natives and nomadic tribes. Rev. Henri Bardou, of the White Fathers, appointed prefect apostolic of this territory 3 January, 1911, retired in 1919, and was succeeded by Rev. Gustave Joseph-Marie Nouet, born in the Diocese of Nantes, 1878, appointed 8 April, 1919. The natives of this territory are all Mohammedans and number about 300,000. Conversions are very difficult and most of the Catholics at the present time are Europeans, chiefly soldiers. In 1920 the mission had 14 priests, 3 churches, 3 stations, 3 schools, 3 orphanages, 1 hospital, and 12 White Sisters.

Ghent, DIOCESE OF (GANDENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-542d), comprises the Belgian province of East Flanders. The cathedral chapter is the beautiful church of St. Bavon, whose famous altarpiece, "The Adoration of the Lamb," is the work of the Van Eyck brothers. The side panels of this triptych, which had been in museums of Berlin and Brussels, were returned to Ghent in 1920 amid great rejoicing.

Rt. Rev. Antoine Stillemans, born at St. Nicholas, 10 December, 1832, ordained in 1858, was elected Bishop of Ghent 30 December, 1889, assistant at the papal throne 14 November, 1901, received the personal privilege of the pallium 12 May, 1910, in 1915 celebrated his diamond jubilee of priesthood in St. Bavon. Bishop Stillemans was the dean of the Belgian bishops and the second to die (4 November, 1916) during German occupation. In 1914 Bishop Stillemans was given an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Eugène Van Rechem, chevalier of the Order of Leopold, b. at Audenarde 8 April, 1858, named Bishop of Carpasia 26 March, 1914, and consecrated at Ghent 17 May following. The successor of Bishop Stillemans is Rt. Rev. Émile-Jean Seghers, licentiate in theology and chevalier of the Order of Leopold, born at Ghent 3 September, 1855, elected twenty-fifth bishop of Ghent 22 March, 1917, and consecrated there 1 May, 1917.

The diocese is divided into 28 deaneries, with 329 parishes and 1,142,347 inhabitants. There is a seminary at Ghent and a preparatory one at St. Nicholas. The episcopal college of Saint-Lieven at Ghent and 7 similar schools in the diocese, also 7 institutes for technical education, take care of the higher education. There are numerous schools, hospitals, homes and refuges maintained by the religious of the diocese, several of these orders, such as Sisters of the Holy Childhood of Jesus, having been founded there for the relief of misery.

Gherla (Hungarian, SZAMOS-ÚJVÁR; Lat., SZAMOS-UVARIENSIS; cf. C. E., I-739d), a diocese of the Greek Rumanian Rite, formerly known as Armenierstadt, embracing the northern part of Transylvania, suffragan of Fagaras. Rt. Rev. John Szabo, who came to this see in 1879, died 2 May, 1911, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Basil Hoessu, appointed 15 December, 1911, d. 13 January, 1916. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. John Hoessu, succeeded him in January, 1919. By 1920 statistics the total population of this territory is 683,314, of whom 432,915 are Greek Catholic Rumanians, 41,116 of the Latin Rite, 1500 Armenians. There are 502 parishes, 500 secular and 3 regular priests, and 685 churches or chapels.

Giball and Batrun, DIOCESE OF (GEBAILIENSIS ET BOTRYENSIS MARONITARUM), a residential see of the Maronite Rite in Syria. It is a patriarchal diocese of the Maronites with residence at Békorki, Lebanon, where the Maronite Patriarch of Antioch resides. At present (1922) the see is filled by His Excellency Mgr. Elie-Pierre Hoyek, born in Lebanon, 1842, studied at the colleges of Ghazer, and Propaganda in Rome, ordained in 1870, served as secretary general of the patriarchate and consecrated titular archbishop of Arca and named patriarchal vicar 14 December, 1889, became director of the Maronite College in Rome in 1897, and was appointed patriarch 6 January, 1899. By latest statistics (1920), the three districts of Gitaïl, Batrun, and Jubbé count 85,000 Maronite Catholics; 470 priests, 277 churches and chapels, 5 seminaries at Batrun, Aïn-Warca, Mar-Habda-Harharaia, Reyfoun, and Roumié, 12 monasteries of Baladites with 177 Monks, 2 monasteries of Aleppines with 30 Monks, 2 monasteries of Antonians of St. Isaias with 9 Monks, 1 monastery of Baladite Nuns with 18 religious, and 2 convents of native Sisters of the Holy Family with 21 religious.

Gibbons, JAMES, Cardinal, Archbishop of Baltimore, b. there on 23 July, 1834; d. there on 24 March, 1921. He received his early education in Ireland, but returned to the United States and was ordained priest 30 June, 1861. He was Archbishop Spalding's secretary, and subsequently made Vicar Apostolic of North Carolina and consecrated Bishop of Adramytum 16 August, 1868, and on 30 July, 1872, was translated to the see of Richmond. On 25 May, 1877, he was named Bishop of Junopolis and made coadjutor of Baltimore, succeeding to the archbishopric at the death of Mgr. Bayley, 3 October, 1877. He occupied a conspicuous place in American public life, and was constantly looked for as a mediator in labor troubles. His episcopal life synchronizes with an enormous growth of the Church in the United States. When he was Bishop of Richmond he was rejoiced in the fact that there were 5,000,000 Catholics in the United States, with 67 bishops, 6500 churches, and 1700 schools with 500,000 pupils. Before his death he saw a hierarchy with a Delegate Apostolic, 2 cardinals, 15 archbishops, 100 bishops, and 6048 schools with 1,774,448 pupils. He is the author of three widely read books, "The Faith of Our Fathers," "Our Christian Heritage," and "The Ambassador of Christ."

Gibraltar, DIOCESE OF (GIBLATARIENSIS), comprising the English Colony of Spain, directly subject to the Holy See. This territory, erected into a vicariate apostolic in 1806, was raised to a diocese by a Decree of 19 November, 1910. It is under the administration of its first bishop, Rt. Rev. Henry G. Thompson, O.S.B., of Monte Cassino.

Born in Mold, England, 1871, studied at College of St. Anselm in Rome, and became prefect of studies in the College of St. Augustine in Ramsgate, appointed to the see of Gibraltar, 10 November, 1910. In 1920 there were 15,600 Catholics in this diocese out of a total population of 25,760; 19 secular and 27 regular clergy, and 7 churches and chapels.

Gigot, FRANCIS ERNEST, biblical scholar, b. at Lhuant, Indre, France, on 21 August, 1859; d. at Yonkers, New York, on 14 June, 1920; son of Denis Wenceslas and Madeleine (Pelletier) Gigot. He studied in the Petit Séminaire of Le Dorat (Haute-Vienne), the Grand Séminaire of Limoges, and the Catholic Institute of Paris. He was ordained in 1883, and passed his remaining years, after a brief tenure of chairs of dogmatic theology and philosophy, in teaching Hebrew and the Sacred scriptures in American seminaries at Boston, Baltimore (1899-1904) and St. Joseph's Seminary, Yonkers, from 1904. Gigot, who collaborated in Vigouroux's "Dictionnaire de la Bible" and contributed many of the Scriptural articles in THE CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA, is the author of "Causes which Entailed the Multitudes of St. Mark's Gospel"—an essay crowned by the Catholic Institute, Paris; "General Introduction to the Study of Holy Scripture" (1900), "Spécial Introduction to the Study of the Old Testament" (2 vols., 1901, 1906); "Christ's Teaching Concerning Divorce in the New Testament," and "Outlines of New Testament History." He is the author also of the translation of the Apocalypse in the Westminster Version of the Bible.

Gilbert, LADY, better known to the world at large as Rosa Mulholland than by the title which her marriage to Sir John T. Gilbert brought her in 1891; b. in Belfast, Ireland; d. at Blackrock, Dublin, in April, 1924. Her literary contributions were always welcome to the Catholic public. They were mostly stories, but we find in the list a volume of poems entitled "Spirit and Dust," besides a Life of her husband, Sir John Gilbert.

Gilbert Islands, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (GILBERTINENSIS INSULENSIS), comprises the group of that name, and the islands of Ellice and Panapa, in the Pacific Ocean. Geographically these islands cover about 390 miles, but the length of the inhabited islands is only about 279 miles. They have a population of about 40,000, of whom 14,200 are Catholics. The vicariate is entrusted to the Congregation of the Sacred Heart of Issondun, the present (1922) vicar being Rt. Rev. Joseph Leray, appointed titular Bishop of Remesiana, 27 July, 1897. From 1888 until 1917 this mission averaged about 20,000 baptisms and 300 conversions annually. There are now 22 priests in the vicariate, 20 churches or chapels, 14 Brothers, 18 Sisters of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart, 105 catechists and 96 primary schools teaching 1549 boys and 2576 girls.

Gillow, JOSEPH, historian and biographer, born in 1850; died at Hale, England, on 17 March, 1921. He was the son of Joseph Gillow, justice of the peace of Preston and Ribby, and was educated at Sedgeley Park and Ushaw College, and in 1878 married Miss Ella McKenna, of Dunham Massey. On completing his education Gillow devoted himself to the history of the English Catholics from the time of Henry VIII. As the fruit of his herculean energy and undaunted perseverance he has given us a monumental "Biographical Dictionary of English Catholics," in five volumes, the first of which appeared in 1885 and the last in 1902. His record of those who labored for, wrote for, and suffered for the Faith in England has won Gillow the title of "Plutarch of the English Catholics"—and justly so. Interested in the cause of education he was twice elected a member of the Manchester School Board. He assisted in founding the Catholic Record Society (of England) and was chosen as its honorary recorder. In addition to his magnum opus Gillow published "The Tyldesley Diary," "The Haydock Papers," "St. Thomas' Priory," "The Story of a Staffordshire Mission," "Lancashire Recusants," "A Catalogue of the Martyrs in Englande for Profession of the Catholique Faith since the Yeare of Our Lord 1535," and, in collaboration with R. Trappes-Lomax, "The Diary of the Blue Nuns of Paris."

Giovinazzo, DIOCESE OF. See MOLFETTA, TERLIZZI AND GIOVINAZZO.

Girgenti, DIOCESE OF (AGRIGENTINENSIS), in Sicily, suffragan of Monreale. This diocese, the richest in Italy, is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Bartolomeo Maria Lagumina, born in Palermo, 1850, appointed 28 April, 1898. In 1920 it counted a Catholic population of 415,043; 67 parishes, 485 secular and 50 regular priests, 138 seminarians, 115 Sisters, and 369 churches and chapels.

Giustini, FILIPPO, Cardinal, b. at Cinete Romano, 8 May, 1852; d. in Rome, 17 March, 1920. He was professor of Canon Law at the Roman Seminary in 1878; then prefect of studies at the Apollinare. He was made Auditor of the Rota 20 February, 1897, secretary of the Congregation of Bishops and Regulars 1902, Secretary of the Holy Office in the same year, and of the Council and the Commission of Canon Law in 1904, which office he retained until 1917. He was created cardinal deacon 25 May, 1914. On 14 October, 1914, he was appointed prefect of the Sacred Congregation of the Sacraments, and presided as pontifical legate at the seventh centenary celebration of St. Francis Assisi in the Holy Land. While there he visited all the missions of Palestine and Egypt.

Glasgow, ARCHDIOCESE OF (GLASGUENSIS).—On the death of Archbishop John Aloysius Maguire, 14 October, 1920, the affairs of the diocese were administered by the Administrator-Apostolic Rt. Rev. John Toner, Bishop of Dunkeld, until the appointment (22 February, 1921), of Rt. Rev. Donald Mackintosh, rector of the Scots College, Rome, since 1913. Bishop Mackintosh was born at Glasnacardoch, Inverness, Scotland, in 1877, studied at Blairs College, the Paris lower seminary and the Scots College, where he was ordained in 1900. He was made a privy chamberlain in 1907 and a domestic prelate in 1914. The archdiocese lost its coadjutor upon the death of the Most Rev. Donald Aloysius Mackintosh, 8 October, 1919. During the World War practically all the men of the diocese under forty, served in some capacity and ten of the clergy served as military chaplains, two of them giving up their lives, one at the front, the other by drowning from a hospital ship.

The 1921 statistics for this diocese show: 94 quasi-parishes, 94 churches, 18 mission stations, 9 religious houses for men, 20 convents for women, 265 secular priests and 48 regulars, 500 nuns, 1 diocesan seminary with 40 seminarians, 1 training college for women with 12 teachers and an attendance of 200, 14 high schools with 148 teachers and an attendance of 4233; 2 academies with an attendance of 726, 2 training schools, 96 elementary schools with 1504 teachers and an attendance of 16,927, and 3 industrial schools with 12 teachers and an attendance of 690. The various charitable works carried on in the diocese include the Apostleship of the Sea, 4 homes, 3 orphanages, 1 hospital, and 2 refuges. All but one or two of the public institutions permit the ministry of priests and all the schools are supported by the Government. There are 3 organizations established among the clergy, and several among the laity, such as the Knights of Columbus; the only periodicals published in the diocese are the diocesan calendar and parish magazines.

Glasgow University (cf. C. E., VI-578c).—One of the most striking developments of modern times in Glasgow University is the steady growth of the women's department, known as Queen Margaret College. The college, founded in 1883, now shows a record of 2103 graduates, of whom 1627 have obtained the degree of M.A., 82 that of B.Sc.; 1 that of B.D.; 2 that of B.L.; 1 that of LL.B.; 358 graduated M.B.; C.M.; 26 are now M.D.; 5 are D.Sc.; and 1 D.Litt. During 1920-21 a woman took a degree in agriculture for the first time in Glasgow. This same year the number of students registered in the college was 1132, of whom 565 were students in the faculty of arts, 124 in that of science, 432 in medicine, 5 in law, and 6 in education.

The medical department has also had a remarkable growth, the number of students registered in 1919 being 3420 as against a registration of only 1600 in 1914.

In 1912 a change was made in the regulations governing the degree of B.L., when an ordinance was passed making it compulsory for a candidate for the degree to possess a degree in arts, science or economics, or to have passed an examination in arts, or such other examination as the board of examiners might accept.

The university library includes some very valuable collections, among them the Hunterian, Hamilton, and Euing collections; the Hunterian Museum, a storehouse of treasures, is also one of the possessions of the university.

Among the numerous societies and clubs formed in the university are the Catholic Students Sodality and the Ossianic Society. The first named was founded in 1911 with the object of providing for its members opportunities of social intercourse as well as to promote interest in literary, scientific, and sociological subjects. The Ossianic Society is one of the oldest in the university, as well as one of the most successful. The objects of this society are the discussion of subjects bearing on the language, literature and customs of the Highlands, and the promotion of social enjoyment among the Highland students. The meetings are conducted entirely in Gaelic, and the society has numbered many distinguished Gaels among its members.

Sir Donald MacAlister is the present head of the university.

Glastonbury Abbey (cf. C. E., VI-579b).—The ruins of Glastonbury Abbey were purchased in 1907, on behalf of a body of Anglican trustees, and in 1921 the "Abbot's Kitchen" was also acquired by them. Recent excavations have laid bare the foundations of the cloister, on the south side of the abbey church, and also of some chapels attached thereto, but nothing of special architectural or historical importance has been found.

Gnesen-Posen, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See GNIEZNO-POZNAN.

Gniezno-Poznan, ARCHDIOCESE OF (GNESNENSIS ET POZNANIENSIS), in Poland. This see carries with it the titles of Primate and Legatus-Natus of Poland and the privilege of wearing cardinalial vestments without the hat. It is now filled by His Eminence Edmund Cardinal Dalbor, born in Ostrowo, Poland, 1869, ordained 1893, made a prelate of the Holy See 23 November, 1914, served as chancellor and vicar general of Poznan, and was appointed Archbishop of Gniezno-Poznan, 30 June, 1915, and consecrated 21 September following, to succeed Most Rev. Edward Likowski, died 20 February, 1915. He was created a cardinal priest 15 December, 1919. In 1916 Cardinal Dalbor published a stirring pastoral letter, on the occasion of the nine hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the introduction of Christianity into Poland, in which he spoke of it as the anniversary of the historical and political as well as the religious birth of the country, and his sentiments met with an immediate and enthusiastic response from the people and the national press. During the pontificate of Pius IX the Canons of the two chapters of Gniezno and Poznan were accorded the privilege of wearing the soutane and violet mantelletta, and Leo XIII gave them the right to the ring.

A national council of all the bishops of Poland was held in Gniezno in 1919, presided over by Cardinal Dalbor. After the closing session all the members went in an impressive procession, to venerate the relics of St. Adelbert, patron of Poland, preserved in the cathedral. The cardinal is assisted by two auxiliaries, Rt. Rev. William Kloske, titular Bishop of Theodosiopolis, and Rt. Rev. Stanislas Kostka Lukomski, titular Bishop of Sicca-Veneria. The former lives in Gniezno, the latter in Poznan, where the cardinal also resides. There are two cathedrals, one in each of these cities, two upper seminaries, and three hostels for collegians, the third being at Ostrowo. By 1920 statistics the diocese comprises 43 deaneries, 554 parishes, 200 vicariates and auxiliary parishes, 44 posts of administration or teaching, 550 pastors and 200 curates besides 44 other priests, making a total of 837 clergy. The Brothers of Christian Charity are established here with 60 houses, as well as 6 congregations of religious women. The latest census (1914) credits the diocese with 1,392,692 Catholics and about 750,000 non-Catholics.

GOA, ARCHDIOCESE OF (GOANENSIS), PATRIARCHATE OF THE EAST INDIES, the chief see of the Portuguese dominions in the East. The archbishop of this see bears the honorary titles of Primate of the East and Patriarch of the East Indies. The see is filled by His Excellency Mgr. Mateo de Oliveira Xavier, born in Valle da Urra, Portugal, 1858, appointed Bishop of Cochin, 11 October, 1897, and promoted 26 February, 1909. The territory comprised in the diocese covers an area of 1449 sq. miles and embraces a total population of 2,349,110, of whom 330,006 are Catholics. The 1920 statistics credit it with 102 parishes, 23 missions, 131 churches, 364 chapels, 349 confraternities, 322 pious associations, and 3105 children in Catholic schools. In 1913 the diocese was divided into 12 districts, and had 629 priests, more than 119 of whom were in Portuguese India, and 58 convents.

Goajira, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., VI-606b), is a peninsula belonging to Colombia and entrusted to the Capuchins for spiritual care. Rt. Rev. Atanasio Maria Vincenzo Soler-Royo, O. M. Cap., appointed 18 April, 1907, as vicar apostolic and titular Bishop of Citharizum, and Rev. Bienvenido de Chilches as pro-vicar, are in charge of twelve Capuchin priests who are working among the Indians. In recent years Very Rev. Antonio de Valencia, pro-vicar apostolic and founder of two orphanages, died, and also Fathers Tomas de Orihuela and Salvador de Pinarejo, who had worked heroically for the conversion of the Indians of the Sierra Nevada in Colombia. Four orphanages, in which 2000 children are educated, were founded since 1909. The pacification of natives in a territory of 3089 square miles has been effected. An aqueduct had been constructed in Riohacha and a wagon road for use of autos and auto-trucks 25 miles long has improved commerce a great deal. Besides the above improvements a hospital and two colleges for both sexes have been constructed at the expense of the Capuchin mission.

Two periodicals, "Ecos de la Mision" and "Hojita Parroquial," are printed, and fifty organizations have been started among the laity. About 4000 Indians have become Catholics, 2800 since 1909.

In the vicariate there are 20 parishes, 30 churches, 12 stations, 4 secular and 14 regular priests, 11 lay brothers, 26 Sisters, 2 colleges for boys with 5 teachers and 200 students, 2 colleges for girls with 8 teachers and 80 students, 40 elementary schools with 40 teachers and 2500 pupils, and 1 hospital.

Gobineau, JOSEPH ARTHUR, COUNT DE, ethnographer and philosopher, b. at Ville d'Avray, near Paris, on 14 July, 1816; d. at Turin, on 13 October, 1882. He entered the French diplomatic service and was successively minister to Persia, Greece, Brazil, and Sweden. He is the author of "Religious et philosophies de l'Asie centrale," "Traité des inscriptions cunéiformes," and "Histoire des Perses." His "Essai sur l'inégalité des races humaines" (Eng. tr. by Collins, London, 1915), "La Renaissance" (tr. Cohn; 1913), and "Les Pléiades" are particularly noteworthy as having had an influence on Nietzsche and writers like Houston Stewart Chamberlain, votaries of the Germanic superman. Gobineau attributes the progress and decay of nations not to the theory of the milieu nor the action of moral forces and ideals—not even Christianity—but to the mingling of particular stocks. The predominance of the Aryan and particularly Germanic blood means progress, decay comes when the Aryan element is being driven under.

O'RAHILLY, Race and Super-Race in The Dublin Review, CLIX (1916), 125-140.

Gold Coast, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (LITTORIS AUREI), comprises an English colony on the west coast of Africa. It is entrusted to the African missionaries of Lyons and has its episcopal residence at Cape Coast. The present vicar is Rt. Rev. Ignatius Hummel, born in Suffenheim, Germany, 1870, ordained 1896, joined the mission at Asaba in the region of the Niger, and was appointed titular Bishop of Trapezopolis, 6 March, 1906, and made vicar apostolic. This territory counts 2,130,000 inhabitants, of whom 28,500 are Catholics and 23,805 catechumens, according to the latest statistics (1920). The mission is served by 27 priests, 15 religious of Our Lady of the Apostles, 265 native catechists, 234 churches or chapels, 8 principal stations, 316 secondary stations, and 82 schools with 4715 pupils.

Gonaïves, DIOCESE OF (GONAYVESENSIS), comprises the Island of Gonaïves and the government of Atribonite. It was erected in 1861, suffragan of the Archdiocese of Port-au-Prince, and has never had a residential bishop of its own, but is administered by the archbishop, at present the Most Rev. Julian Conan. Through the agreement signed on 4 August, 1914, between the Archbishop of Port-au-Prince and the Haitian Government, a number of primary schools, supported by the Government and under its inspection, have been added to the diocese. A beautiful church, built at St. Mark and paid for partly by the Haitian Government and partly through the generosity of the faithful, was completed during the present year (1921).

Owing to the general mobilization during the war, the total number of priests and religious has diminished noticeably since 1911. Seven of the priests of the diocese entered the service during the war, and of these two were killed, two received the croix de guerre, and three others received other citations. At present the diocese includes 9 parishes and 13 priests, and charitable and educational work is carried on by the two religious orders, the Christian Brothers and the Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny. The former conduct 2 government primary schools, 1 at Gonaïves and 1 at St. Mark, and have in all 8 Brothers and 700 pupils. Under the direction of the Sisters there are 2 hospitals and 4 government primary schools for girls. In all there are 1500 children in Catholic schools.

Gonzaga University is situated in the city of Spokane, Washington, and conducted by members of the Society of Jesus. It originated in 1881 when the Rev. Joseph Cataldo, superior of the Jesuit Missions in the Rocky Mountains, bought a half-section of land from the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., and in 1883 began the erection of the first Gonzaga building. It was formally opened on 15 September, 1887, and incorporated on 22 April, 1894, and empowered to grant literary honors and confer degrees. The rapid growth of the city so increased the value of the land that the sale of portions of it made possible the erection of new buildings in 1898 and 1903.

The system of education is substantially that of all universities conducted by the Society of Jesus. It includes the following departments: graduate school of philosophy and science, school of commerce and finance, law school, college of arts and sciences, including pre-engineering and pre-medical courses, and the preparatory high school. For the year 1920-21 the school of philosophy and science registered 121 students, law school 40, arts and sciences 102, and the high school 721. The Rev. John A. McHugh, S.J., is president of the university.

Good Hope, EASTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF THE CAPE OF (DISTRICTUS ORIENTALIS PROMONTORII BONÆ SPEI), one of the divisions of the original vicariate of the Cape of Good Hope, divided in 1847. The bishop resides at Port Elizabeth. It is at present administered by Rt. Rev. Hugh McSherry, born in Loughgilly, Ireland, 1852, appointed titular Bishop of Justinianapolis, 2 June, 1896, and made coadjutor to the vicar of Eastern Good Hope; whom he succeeded 1 October, 1896. The population of this territory numbers 163,210 of European origin and 432,270 natives: about 13,295 of these are Catholics and 466,621 Protestants. The 1920 statistics credit the vicariate with 27 secular and 15 Jesuit priests, besides 2 missionaries of Marianhill, 74 churches and chapels, 20 houses of religious, 43 Brothers, 407 Sisters, and 48 schools with 3400 pupils.

Good Hope, WESTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF THE CAPE OF (DISTRICTUS OCCIDENTALIS PROMONTORII BONÆ SPEI), one of the two vicariates in the Cape of Good Hope. The official residence is at Cape Town. It is at present administered by Rt. Rev. John Rooney, born in Edenderry, Ireland, 1844, and appointed titular Bishop of Sergiopolis and coadjutor to the vicar apostolic of Western Good Hope, 29 January, 1886, succeeding as vicar 19 February, 1909. He is also administrator apostolic of the prefecture of Central Cape of Good Hope. The total population of the territory according to 1920 statistics, numbers 209,580, of whom are 6500 Catholics. The mission is served by 25 secular priests and 6 Salesian Fathers, 8 Salesian and 12 Marist Brothers, 78 Dominican Sisters, 48 Sisters of the Holy Cross and 16 Sisters of Nazareth, 46 churches or chapels, and 32 schools.

Good Samaritan, SISTERS OF THE (cf. C. E. VI-647a), founded by Archbishop Polding, O.S.B., in Sydney, Australia, 2 February, 1857. In 1902 the Decree of Praise was granted by Pope Leo XIII. In 1920 the constitutions, having been revised in accordance with the prescriptions of Canon Law, were confirmed by Pope Benedict XV. The institute is governed by a mother general and her council, who are elected every six years. The mother-house, to which is attached a training college for teachers, is in Sydney, N. S. W. The novices and postulants are trained in one central novitiate house, which is also in the Archdiocese of Sydney. The Sisters devote themselves to works of charity, such as education, the care of penitent women and orphans, and the visitation of the sick. There have been 17 new foundations since 1909. The present number of members is 440, with a total number of 46 foundations, of which 24 are in N. S. Wales, 12 in Queensland, 8 in Victoria, 2 in South Australia. The Sisters have under their care the following institutions: 2 homes for penitent women, 1 orphanage, 1 domestic training school, 62 schools. In the homes 200 women are provided for. In the orphanage there are at present 80 children, but an additional building, which will accommodate 200, is being erected. The children attend school until they are fourteen years of age, after which they are taught domestic work, needlecraft, or trades. In the domestic training school 30 poor girls are boarded, receive religious instruction, and are trained in domestic work and needlecraft. The schools include boarding schools, secondary and primary day schools. The pupils number over 12,000.

Gorizia, ARCHDIOCESE OF (Görz; cf. C. E. VI-654c).—Gorizia was formerly the capital of the Austrian crownland of Görz and Gradisca, which province is now the extreme northeastern part of Italy. The archbishop has the title of prince and his archdiocese is composed of the united sees of Gorizia and Gradisca, and has for its suffragans the dioceses of Parenzo and Pola, Trieste and Capo d'Istria, and Veglia. The prince archbishop is Most Rev. Francesco Borgia Sedej, born at Cerkno, 10 October, 1854, elected 21 February, 1906, to succeed Mgr. Andreas Jordan, deceased. The war between Austria and Italy which broke out in 1915 devastated all the countries bordering on the Isonzo River; 43 churches were totally destroyed, 42 more or less damaged. The inhabitants, including the clergy, dispersed throughout Austria or were interned by the Italians. According to the Treaty of Rapallo, the archdiocese of Görz was annexed to the Kingdom of Italy. The new circumscription gives to the archdiocese three rural deaneries, those of Lubiano and Klagenfurt with an addition of 60,000 inhabitants. During the war the clergy by their zeal and unselfishness made themselves much beloved by the Government and the people. While in exile in Austria and Italy they shared the hardships of the faithful, admini-tered to their spiritual needs and assisted the local priests wherever possible. They received a testimony of commendation from the ordinaries of the various places.

The archdiocese has a Catholic population of 260,000 inhabitants, of whom two-fifths are Italians and three-fifths Slovenes. It contains 86 parishes, 44 curacies, 63 vicariates, 78 chaplaincies, 316 churches, 1 mission station, 8 monasteries for men, 6 for women with 180 Sisters and 47 lay sisters, 263 secular priests, 35 regulars and 66 lay brothers. There is a diocesan seminary with 18 students. The latter institution is destitute, which accounts for the small number of students. Two colleges for women with 18 teachers and 280 students have been established in the archdiocese. All the schools and institutions are in the hands of the Government and religious instruction is prohibited in private schools. There exists four associations among the clergy and 220 among the laity. The following charitable institutions have been founded: 4 orphanages, 2 shelters, 3 asylums, 3 hospitals, 4 hospices. The Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul have left Gorizia and have been replaced by the Sisters of Providence of St. Cajetan, who have charge of the orphan asylum at Contavalle. The Sisters of Mercy of the Holy Cross are no longer in charge of the domestic management of the archiepiscopal seminary, but minister to the sick in their homes.

Görz, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See GORIZIA.

Gotti, GIROLAMO MARIA, Cardinal-Prefect of Propaganda, b. at Genoa on 29 March, 1834; d. at Rome on 19 March, 1916. He was the son of a dock-laborer of Genoa, and after his ordination as a Carmelite he taught mathematics and the sciences at the Genoa Naval Academy. His knowledge of theology may be appreciated by the fact that he was at the Vatican Council as theologian of the General of his Order, to whose place he succeeded in 1881, and by special dispensation was reelected to the same post in 1889. He was given charge of the Oriental Missions, and was consecrated Archbishop of Petra in 1892, when he was sent as Internuncio to Brazil. In 1895 he was elevated to the cardinalate. Subsequently he was Prefect of the Institute of Simple Vows, which was composed of members of unusual learning and experience; he also presided over the Congregation of Relics and Indulgences which, under his direction, issued a series of decrees of the utmost importance. In 1899 he passed to the Congregation of Bishops and Regulars, and while there settled the very grave controversy between Annecy and Bourges, which might have had grave consequences in the Church. At the death of Cardinal Ledochowski he was given the prefectship of the Propaganda, and it was probably he who induced Pius X to withdraw England, the United States, and Canada from the jurisdiction of Propaganda. Amid all his ecclesiastical dignities he remained preëminently a friar, observing the rules of his Order almost as if he were in a monastery. He received a certain number of votes as the successor of Leo XIII, who indeed expressed the wish that the conclave would so decide, but some of the cardinals feared that the austerity of his life might show itself too strongly in his government of the Church.

Goulburn, DIOCESE OF (GOULBURNENSIS), in Australia, suffragan of Sydney. The limits of the diocese were somewhat changed by a decree of the Consistory 28 July, 1917, which cut off fifteen parishes to form the new diocese of Wagga-Wagga.

The see is now filled (1922) by Rt. Rev. John Gallagher, born in Castelbery, 1846, appointed 29 March, 1895, titular Bishop of Adrassus and coadjutor at Goulburn, where he succeeded Bishop Lanigan, 13 June, 1900. The religious orders established in the diocese include the Passionist Fathers, Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer, Christian Brothers, De La Salle Brothers, Sisters of Mercy, Presentation Nuns, Sisters of St. Joseph, Nursing Sisters of the Sacred Heart, Nursing Sisters of St. John of God, Sisters of St. Joseph of the Sacred Heart, Sisters of St. Brigid, of Charity and of the Good Samaritan of the Order of St. Benedict. By latest statistics the diocese is divided into 30 districts, and comprises 113 churches, 54 secular and 12 regular clergy, 21 Brothers, 374 Sisters, 7 novitiates, 2 secondary schools, 8 girls' boarding schools, 7 superior day schools, 76 primary schools, 3 orphanages, and 2 hospitals. The total number of children receiving Catholic education is 5720, out of a Catholic population of 43,077 (1911 census).

Goupil, RENÉ (cf. C. E., VI-684b).—The cause of his beatification was introduced at Rome 9 August, 1916.

Goyau, LUCIE FÉLIX-FAURE, author and lecturer, b. at Amboise in Touraine, France, in 1866; d. at Paris in June, 1913. She was the daughter of a modest merchant who had settled in Havre, but who later became President of the French Republic. She received a very careful private education and soon revealed her two most striking characteristics, a deep religious instinct and a love of letters. At the age of eight she was enchanted with "Esther" and "Athalie." In 1881 her father was appointed assistant secretary of the Foreign Office, and this brought her to Paris, where she studied the ancient Classics and the chief modern tongues of Europe, gaining a deep knowledge of their leading writers. Her favorite authors were Shakespeare, Pascal, Dante, and à Kempis. She traveled through Europe and with her father visited Algeria, Egypt, Palestine, and Greece. Her impressions are partly recorded in "Une excursion en Afrique," "Promenades florentines," "Méditerranée"; her visit to Greece inspired her "Melancholie de Nausicaa," a romance founded on the seventh canto of the Odyssey. In 1895 her father became president, and she utilized the new opportunities offered to engage in social work. Félix Faure was assassinated in February, 1899, and his daughter for nearly three years recorded her inner life in her "Journal intime." In writing her "Newman, sa vie, ses œuvres" (1900), and in meetings connected with the patriotic and social League des enfants de France, she made the acquaintance of M. Georges Goyau, the distinguished Catholic publicist and historian of modern Germany, whom she married in 1903. Later she wrote "Les femmes dans l'œuvre de Dante" and a volume of poetry, "La vie nuancée" (1905). After her marriage Mme Goyau took a prominent part in the Continental feminist movement, which she inspired with Christian principles; she delivered numerous conférences dealing with family life and woman under Christianity: such (e.g.) as "La culture de la femme au moyen âge," "Les femmes de la Renaissance," "Sainte Gertrude," "Sainte Mechtilde." Her conférence "Sainte Radegonde" was the first delivered by a woman in the Institut Catholique of Paris. In 1908 she wrote "Ames païennes, âmes chrétiennes," a little book in praise of the despised Christian virtues of obedience, humility, patience, and self-denial, which was very well received. In 1910 she published "La vie et la mort de fées," a charming, excellent history of the fairies throughout the ages.

HUZZET, Lucie-Félix-Faure Goyau: sa vie et ses œuvres (Paris, 1918).

Goyaz, DIOCESE OF (GOYASSENSIS), includes the state of the same name and a part of the state of Minas, Brazil, suffragan of Marianna. A part of the original territory of this diocese was separated from it by a Decree of 29 September, 1907, to form the new Diocese of Uberaba. It now comprises about 288,160 sq. miles. Rt. Rev. Prudencio Gomes da Silva, appointed to this see 17 November, 1907, died 19 September, 1921, and his successor has not yet been appointed. The population is chiefly Catholic, counting 300,748 Catholics against 50 Protestants and 10,000 infidels. The diocese according to 1920 statistics, comprises 36 parishes, 39 secular and 38 regular priests, and 158 churches and chapels. The secular clergy are gradually disappearing owing to the great difficulty in obtaining funds to maintain the seminary, and now more than half of the parishes are administered by priests of religious orders.

Gozo, DIOCESE OF (GAUDISIENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-687e), comprising the Island of Gozo in the Mediterranean. The present bishop is Giovanni Maria Camilleri (b. 1843), elected 1889, succeeding the late Rt. Rev. Pietro Pace (b. 9 April, 1831; d. 29 July, 1914). Educated at Rome Bishop Pace there took first honors in theology and canon law. Ordained priest in 1853, he was at one time secretary to the Cardinals Vincenzo Santucci and Antonio Panebianco. He became vicar general and administrator of Gozo in 1864, and was created bishop of that diocese by Pius IX in 1877. In 1889 he was appointed by Leo XIII, Archbishop of Malta, where he had at one time been professor in the university and seminary. Made a Knight of Malta he was decorated with the Order of Victoria by King Edward VII of England. He increased the teaching faculty and the number of students at the seminary, opened houses for nuns, and under the care of the Sisters of Charity restored in its entirety the orphan asylum, after adding a nursery. He purchased from the Government the episcopal residence and lands, and provided for daily communication with the Sisters of the diocese.

The spiritual needs of the Catholic population of 23,000 are looked after by a total of 180 secular and 18 regular priests, assisted by 14 lay brothers. There are 13 parishes and 42 churches, 14 convents for men and 6 for women, 1 seminary with 14 professors and instructors, 100 boarders and 100 day students, 1 college for girls with 20 students taught by 7 Sisters of Charity, 1 high school for boys with 2 teachers and 40 students, 9 normal schools for boys with 6 teachers and 196 students, and 9 for girls with 10 teachers and 240 students, 1 college with 7 missionary priests, 1 orphan asylum. The 120 boys and 50 girls in the kindergartens are in charge of 4 teachers. Some of the priests enlisted in the services of the army during the World War, and many soldiers of the diocese were decorated.

Gran, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See ESZTERGOM.

Granada, ARCHDIOCESE OF (GRANATENSIS), in Spain. This see was filled by Most Rev. José Meseguer y Costa from 27 March, 1905, until his death 9 December, 1920. He was succeeded by Most Rev. Vicente Casanova y Marzol, born in Borja, Spain, 1854, served as a pastor and visitor of the religious communities, appointed Bishop of Almeiria, 19 December, 1907, promoted 7 March, 1921. In 1919 he was appointed a corresponding member of the Royal Academy of History. The Church of St. John of God was erected into a minor basilica 20 December, 1916, and granted special indulgences 12 June following. The archdiocese comprises an area of about 3261 sq. miles and a Catholic population of 454,000. The 1920 statistics credit it with 246 parishes divided among 16 archpriests and 450 priests, 247 churches, 312 chapels or sanctuaries, 66 convents with 180 religious and 935 Sisters, 1 university and 1 seminary founded by St. Cæcilius in 1492, with 150 pupils, and a seminary of theology and canon law at the Abbey of Sacro Monte (founded in 1610), with 150 students.

Granada, DIOCESE OF (GRANADENSIS), in the Republic of Nicaragua, Central America, is dependent on Managua. On 2 December, 1913, the diocese of Nicaragua, hitherto dependent on Guatemala, was dismembered and three dioceses and a vicariate apostolic were formed, one of which, comprising four civil provinces, was Granada, where the episcopal seat is situated in the province of the same name. The first bishop of Granada was Rt. Rev. José Candida Pinol y Batres, b. in Guatemala 2 February, 1878, elected 10 December, 1913, resigned and transferred 10 July, 1915, and published 9 December following as titular bishop of Phaselis. The second and present bishop is Rt. Rev. Canuto José Reyes y Balladares, b. at Leon, Nicaragua, 24 September, 1863, ordained in 1887, and elevated to the bishopric 12 July, 1915.

There are twenty-five parishes, three of which lie in the episcopal city and which include the church of St. Francis, in use as a temporary cathedral while the cathedral proper is being erected. There are no permanent missions established, but the Jesuit Fathers hold missions in those places where there is no parish priest. There are 4 houses for religious communities of men, the Jesuits having 2, the Salesians 1, and the Capuchins 1. There are 5 convents for women, 2 of the Sisters of Our Lady of Help, and 3 of the Sisters of St. Joseph of Mexico. There are a diocesan seminary and 5 colleges, 2 for boys, one of which is conducted by the Jesuits and the other by the Salesians, and 3 for girls, 2 of which are in charge of the Sisters of Our Lady of Help, and 1 of the Sisters of St. Joseph of Mexico. There are 2 hospitals, 1 in Granada and 1 in Rivas. The Government contributes to the support of some of the Catholic schools and institutions, especially the colleges. Practically all of the inhabitants of the diocese are Catholics, except a few Protestants, who have come from other places. There are 4 religious organizations among the laity and 4 monthly papers are published, one of which has as its aim the fostering of religious vocations.

Grand Island, DIOCESE OF (INSULAE GRANDIS), was erected as the Diocese of Kearney 27 January, 1913, out of a portion of the Diocese of Omaha. Owing to the lack of a suitable railroad center for the episcopal see, and to apportion more equally the scattered Catholic population, the boundaries of the diocese had to be extended, and in May, 1916, the Holy See decreed that the mother diocese should cede four additional counties (Arthur, Wheeler, Greeley, and Howard), including the city of Grand Island. This was made the see city instead of Kearney, and the name of the diocese was changed to Grand Island. It is still administered by the first bishop, the Rt. Rev. James Albert Duffy, who, while still resident at Kearney, succeeded in erecting a parochial school there, through offerings from Cardinals Gibbons and Farley and several bishops and congregations of other dioceses.

On 5 July, 1918, the diocese lost one of its oldest clergy by the death of Rev. Dean Wunibald Wolf, pastor of St. Mary's Church in Grand Island for over thirty years. During the World War the laity were creditably represented in military service, and one of the small number of clergy, the Rev. James P. McMahon, gave his services as a chaplain. The women of the diocese worked enthusiastically for the Red Cross, and all patriotic appeals for funds were met with a generous response.

By the present (1921) statistics the Catholic population of the diocese numbers 22,000, of whom about 4000 are Polish and 3000 Mexicans, scattered over an area of some 40,000 sq. miles. It comprises 45 parishes, 46 missions and 22 stations, 91 churches, 49 secular priests, 128 Sisters, 5 high schools with 23 teachers and an attendance of 358, 3 academies with 23 teachers, 1 normal school, 12 elementary schools with 50 teachers and an attendance of 1374. Charitable work is carried on by the Sisters of St. Francis, who have two hospitals, and the Holy Name Society and Knights of Columbus are organized in the diocese.

Grand Rapids, DIOCESE OF (GRANDORMENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-726c), comprises a portion of the lower peninsula of the State of Michigan, U. S. A., an area of 22,561 sq. miles.

Rt. Rev. Henry Joseph Richter, D. D., first bishop of the diocese, after an administration of thirty-three years, died 26 December, 1916, known as a very careful administrator and a particularly active promotor of the parochial school system. He was succeeded by his coadjutor, Rt. Rev. Michael Gallagher, D. D., who was in charge until his transfer to Detroit, 18 November, 1918. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. Edward D. Kelly, D. D., appointed 16 January, 1919, assumed charge of the diocese 20 May following. Bishop Kelly was consecrated in Ann Arbor, Michigan, 26 January, 1911, by the late Cardinal Gibbons, titular Bishop of Cestra and Auxiliary to the Bishop of Detroit, and was administrator of the diocese of Detroit after the death of Bishop Foley until the arrival of his successor. Immediately upon his arrival in this diocese he instituted a building program and within eighteen months opened a new preparatory seminary, churches, schools, hospitals, and has under way a college for young women which will be under the direction of the Sisters of Saint Dominic of the diocese. A Catholic weekly, the "Catholic Vigil," was founded by him in 1919.

During the World War the following priests of the diocese served as chaplains: Revs. A. Golden, Joseph Kaminski, J. A. Mulvey, J. F. Drew, F. W. Ryan, A. M. Fitzpatrick, D. D., J. D. Kenny. For his works in the Knights of Columbus activities Mr. Martin H. Carmody, a prominent layman of the diocese. A Catholic weekly, the "Catholic Vigil," diocese, was knighted by His Holiness, Benedict XV.

A convent of Discalced Carmelite Nuns, refugees from persecution in Mexico, was established in 1916 by Bishop Richter.

The Catholic population of the diocese (1921) is 149,919, comprising besides the American-born, Irish, Germans, Poles, Canadian-French, Hollanders, Belgians, and Indians. There are: 119 parishes, 230 churches, 111 missions, 35 stations, 1 monastery for women (Carmelite), 4 convents of women, 143 secular and 26 regular clergy, 2 lay brothers, 834 Sisters; 1 seminary, 126 seminarians, 21 high schools with 126 teachers, 4 academies, 2 normal schools, 92 elementary schools, 1 industrial school. The total attendance of pupils in Catholic schools is 21,513. The charitable institutions comprise: 1 home for the aged conducted by the Little Sisters of the Poor, with 148 inmates, 1 House of the Good Shepherd, 2 orphan asylums with 315 children, 1 home for infants, and 7 hospitals. The priests are permitted to minister in many of the public institutions. The Holy Name Society is established in this diocese.

Gravina and Montepeloso (or IRSINA), DIOCESE OF (GRAVINENSIS ET MONTIS PELUSII), in the province of Bari, Southern Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. Rt. Rev. Nicola Zimarino, born in Casaboldino, Italy, 1847, was transferred to this see 6 December, 1906, and filled it until his death in July, 1920. His successor has not yet been appointed. The latest statistics of 1920 credit Gravina with 22,000 Catholics and Montepeloso with 8000. Gravina has 5 parishes, 40 secular priests, 39 Sisters, and 25 churches and chapels; Montepeloso counts 4 parishes, 15 secular priests, 6 Sisters, and 10 churches or chapels.

Great Falls, DIOCESE OF (GREATORMENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-734c), is under the administration of the first bishop, Rt. Rev. Mathias Clement Lenihan, D. D., who has filled the See since 1904. Since 1909 the number of priests and hospitals and the Catholic population of the diocese has been doubled, the number of Catholic schools and teachers tripled, while the number of churches and missions has grown to four times its previous size. On account of the salubrious climate, the millions of irrigated farms, the natural mineral resources and the exhaustless coal, gas and oil lands that are being worked there is every prospect of greater prosperity and a rapid growth of Catholicity.

On 13 April, 1917, the chancellor of the diocese, Rev. James Molyneux died at Glasgow, Montana, and on 2 June, 1920, the diocese lost one of its most prominent citizens by the death of Dr. Francis J. Adams, prominent citizen and United States surgeon at Fort Assiniboine for six years. He had served as a major in the Spanish-American War and the World War and was on the staff of General Otis at Manila. During the World War another member of the diocese, the Rev. Wm. P. Callahan, served as a United States Army chaplain and went overseas as a lieutenant, while each parish gave its quota of young men to the service.

At the present time the Catholic population of the diocese is 33,000, made up of Americans, Irish, Austrians, Poles, Germans, and a few hundred Italians and Bohemians. It includes 86 parishes; 146 churches; 124 missions with 159 stations; 46 secular and 17 regular clergy; 6 lay brothers; 237 nuns; 22 ecclesiastical students; 1 college for women with 26 teachers and an attendance of 306, 4 high schools with 48 teachers and an attendance of 180 boys and 508 girls, 1 normal school with 8 teachers and attendance of 32, 13 elementary schools with 117 teachers and attendance of 2843, and 4 Indian Mission schools. The various charitable institutions are: St. Thomas Orphans' Home under the direction of 23 Sisters of Providence with 206 orphans, 8 hospitals and 8 maternity homes. The state industrial school for boys and girls at Miles City, permits the ministry of the priests of the diocese and St. Labre's Indian School is supported by the Government from the tribal funds of the Cheyenne Indians. Among the clergy the Priests' Eucharistic League, and among the laity the Association of the Holy Childhood and the Apostleship of Prayer, the Sodality of the Immaculate Conception of the B. V. M., Women's Catholic Order of Foresters, St. Ann's Altar Society, St. Mary's Aid, Men's Catholic Order of Foresters, Ancient Order of Hibernians, and K. of C. are organized.

The Great Falls "Catholic Monthly Magazine" is published in the diocese.

Greece (cf. C. E., VI-735b).—The present country of Greece includes Old Greece (25,014 sq. miles), which comprises continental Greece, the Peloponnesus to the south of the Gulf of Corinth, the Ægean Island of Euboea, the Cyclades, Sporades, and islands in the Ionian Sea, including Corfu, Zante, Santa Maura, and Cephalonia; New Greece (16,919 sq. miles), which comprises Macedonia, Epirus, Crete, and the other Ægean Islands; and the territorial acquisitions of the recent war, which according to the Treaty of London and of Athens, 30 May, 1913, are all those Ægean Islands occupied by Greece during the war, except Imbros, Tenedos, and Castellorizzo, and according to the Treaty of Sèvres, 1 May, 1920, all that was left of Turkey in Europe west of the Chatalja lines, western Thrace, and the Dodocanese Islands.

The Ministry of National Economy has given the following estimates of population (31 March, 1921): Population of Old Greece 2,897,000; of new provinces acquired in 1913, 2,110,000; of Thrace acquired in 1920, 600,000; total 5,607,000. No figures for the Smyrna district are given in the return. Definite figures for the following important towns have been obtained in the census of December, 1920: Athens 300,462; Piræus 130,062; Salonica 158,000 (District 396,958); Adrianople 145,490; Crete 96,309; Patras 46,500. In 1918-19 the number of emigrants to the United States was 813. The number would have been larger; but for the prohibition of the departure of men of several classes of the reserve, and also on account of the political situation. Emigration constitutes an asset in Greek finance on account of the large remittances sent annually to Greece.

EDUCATION.—Greek education has been chiefly in the hands of the ecclesiastical authorities and yet has tended to be of a too practically commercial type. At the present time the Ministry of Public Education recognizes three classes of schools (a) Demotic or Primary Schools; (b) Hellenic or Intermediary Schools; (c) Gymnasias or Superior Schools. For purposes of administration the country (Old Greece) is divided into twelve school districts, with a chief inspector of education in each center. All inspectors are appointed by the Minister of Education. School attendance is compulsory for all children between the ages of six and twelve. In 1917-18 there were 6799 primary schools with 8641 teachers and 476,695 pupils (174,805 girls). For secondary education there were 76 high schools, 425 middle schools, having 55,408 pupils (50,997 boys). There are two agricultural schools in Greece, besides a Trade and Industrial Academy and Government Commercial Schools in Athens, Volo, Salonica, and Patras; also two universities at Athens, the National University and the Capodistria University and a Polytechnical Institute. The cost of primary education is borne by the State and amounts to about 10,000,000 drachmai annually. The Ministry of Education is also charged with the Service of Antiquities, managed by an Archeological Council, which is responsible for the conservation and repair of ancient monuments. The British School of Archeology in Athens has been responsible for the excavations at Knossos in Crete, Milo, Sparta, and Thessaly. There are also similar French, American, Italian, Austrian, and German institutions.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—Within a decade Greece has trebled her area and population and the question naturally arises as to whether she is in a position economically to incorporate the new territory and to develop it culturally. In Greece proper, owing to the increasing despoliation of the forests, which have almost entirely disappeared, the soil cannot retain water and the agricultural yield suffers severely from drought. For this reason large districts remain uncultivated. Large estates are in the hands of peasant proprietors and métayer farmers. In 1918, 37,346,770 metric tons of wheat were produced on 1,104,608 acres; 31,738,560 metric tons of new wine on 411,130 acres; 15,803,250 metric tons of barley on 418,435 acres, 16,423,500 metric tons of maize on 423,807 acres. About 717,500 acres of olives were under cultivation; the production of olive oil was 31,702,800 gallons. In 1919 the nut crops were estimated at 4,486,185 tons. There are now in force about 35 mining concessions, embracing a total area of nearly 20,000 acres. Under the pressure of war every effort was made to develop lignite deposits. In 1915 the output was 39,745 tons; in 1916, 116,946 tons; in 1917, 157,956 tons; and in 1918, 208,797 tons. As an industrial nation, Greece is at a disadvantage, since, owing to the despoliation of her forests, water power is lacking and lumber is inadequate. In 1917 the country had 2213 factories, employing 36,124 hands, and valued at 260,363,647 drachmai. The imports in 1919 (valued at 1,608,324,000 drachmai (1 drachma = .193 normal exchange) came for the most part from England, France, and the United States, while the exports (valued at 726,536 drachmai) also went to those countries. The staple article of export is currants. In 1920 the Greek mercantile marine comprised 228 steamships and 1048 sailing vessels. In 1920 the railway mileage totaled 1507 miles. Before the war with Turkey (1912-13), Greece was completely isolated by land from the rest of Europe, but on 8 May, 1916, the railway was completed between Gida on the Salonica-Monastir line and Papapul on the Thessalian frontier, a distance of fifty-six miles, whereby Greece was linked with the European railroads. The railway system has been extended by the inclusion of the lines in Western and Eastern Thrace. The Government has also purchased from England for 2,000,000 francs the Salonica-Angista-Stavros line, seventy-five miles long, which was built by the British during the war. All the lines are State-owned and State-controlled.

FINANCE.—After the national bankruptcy in 1898 an International Finance Commission was appointed, without whose permission the country could issue no uncovered notes and no loans. The result was that the currency came into comparatively good order. The last wars and the Asia Minor Expedition, however, caused such huge demands to be made on the treasury that the Government found itself compelled to borrow 500,000,000 drachmai from the National Bank against Treasury Bills. The unfavorable trade balance and the serious depreciation of currency have increased the financial stringency. On 10 February, 1918, the Governments of Great Britain, the United States, and France agreed to advance to the Greek Government credits as follows: Great Britain £14,700,000, France 410,000,000 francs, and the United States $48,239,267. The control of the fund thus created was lodged in an Interallied Financial Commission and an Interallied Military Commission sitting at Athens. In 1920-21 the estimate of revenue was 597,011,196 drachmai; expenditure, 2,005,303,578 drachmai, leaving a deficit of 1,408,292,382 drachmai (over £28,000,000). According to the Minister of Finance, the Greek public debt on 31 December, 1920, was: internal debt 1,821,834,247 drachmai; foreign debt 2,241,676,806 drachmai; loan made to the Greek Government for the purchase of the Salonica-Constantinople Railway 144,752,500 drachmai; total, 4,208,263,553 drachmai. With an estimated total Greek population of about 6,000,000; this represents an average per head of about drs. 702, which cannot be considered as excessive.

ARMY AND NAVY.—Military service in Greece is compulsory and universal with a few exemptions. In 1918 the approximate strength of the army was 200,000 men, organized in four army corps and a reserve. Demobilization has not been completed on account of the large number of troops engaged in Asia Minor. The navy consists of two warships of 13,000 tons each, one of 10,118, three of 5000 each, and one of 2600 tons, besides thirteen destroyers, two submarines, and miscellaneous craft.

GOVERNMENT.—Greece is a constitutional monarchy, hereditary in the male line, or in case of its extinction in the female line. The Legislative Chamber of the Bulé consists of 316 representatives elected by manhood suffrage, one for every 16,000 inhabitants, for four years. The new constitution of 1911 re-established the Council of State whose functions are the examination of projets de loi and the annulling of official decisions and acts which may be contrary to law. About this time the quorum necessary for the transaction of business by the Bulé was reduced, reforms of procedure introduced, the electoral law widened, and future revision of the non-fundamental provisions of the Constitution facilitated. The king or heir apparent must belong to the Orthodox Greek Church. For administrative purposes Greece is divided into nomoi (provinces), each under a nomarches, an officer whose position corresponds to a French préfet, and démoi and koinότητες (communes) with démarchois and póedroi, or mayors. In Old Greece there are 16 nomoi; in the territory acquired by the Balkan Wars fourteen. The nomarches are appointed by the Minister of the Interior.

RECENT HISTORY (1908-1921).—On 7 October, 1908, the Greek population in Crete repudiated all connection with Turkey and declared for union with Greece. An executive committee of five persons was appointed to carry on the government provisionally in the name of the King, until his officials took it over. The interference of the powers and the prolonged opposition of Turkey produced a strong feeling of disgust and the young officers, convinced that the national interests had been sacrificed to the exigencies of party politics, began to form a "Military League," in 1909, making it the organ of the people in their struggle against the politicians. They demanded radical reforms, the reorganization of the army and navy, the exclusion of the royal princes from their military commands, and the bestowal of the Ministries of War and Marine upon officers. At this moment a new and powerful figure arrived upon the stage of Greek politics, M. Venizelos, a native of Crete. The political adviser of the League, he proposed the summons of a National Assembly to revise the Constitution. Upon the resignation of M. Dragoumes, after the opening of the National Assembly, he became prime minister to King George. The "Second Revisionary National Assembly" which met on 21 January, 1911, adopted the revised Constitution on 11 June. From this time the regeneration of the country is dated. Venizelos also brought about the Greco-Bulgarian treaty in 1912 and in the same year a declaration of war on Turkey. The Greeks obtained a victory at Sarantaporon in Southern Macedonia on 22 October, took Preveza, Metsovo, and Khimara in Epirus, hoisted their flag over Mount Athos, and prevented the Turkish fleet from leaving the Dardanelles and the Turkish transports from crossing the Aegean. They also took possession of most of the Turkish islands in the Aegean, including Mytilene and Chios, but not of the Southern Sporades (Dodecanese). Samos declared its union with Greece. A two days' struggle at Yenitsa ended in another Greek victory. On 8 November, 1912, the Greeks anticipated the Bulgarians by entering Salonica and ending the Turkish domination of 482 years over the city. Even after her three allies signed the armistice at Chatalja on 3 December, Greece continued hostilities, although participating in the Balkan Conference at London. Outside the Dardanelles the Greeks defeated the Turkish fleet; in Epirus they took Parga. Finally Yanina surrendered to them. The Greek forces occupied Samos and entered Argyrokastron. In the midst of these triumphs King George was assassinated at Salonica, 18 March, 1913, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Constantine.

By the treaty of London (30 May, 1913), Greece obtained all the Turkish territories west of the Enos-Midia line, except Albania and Crete. The dissatisfaction caused by the division of spoils led to a renewal of the war (30 June) by simultaneous Bulgarian attacks on the Servians and the Greeks, with the object of separating the two allies who on 1 June had signed the treaty of alliance, accompanied by a military convention which King Constantine, subsequently violated during the European War. The general staff ordered the Bulgarian troops garrisoning Salonica to lay down their arms and upon their refusal besieged their houses. A three days battle ended in a complete defeat of the Bulgarians. Advancing further, the Greeks took Doiran and Strumitsa and entered Seres, while their navy took Kavala and sent up a detachment to Drama. Soon Macedonia, with a large strip of the Thracian coast, including Dedeağatch, Makri, and Porto Lagos, was in their hands. The Treaty of Bukarest in 1913 made the mouth of the Mesta the eastern frontier of Greece, thus securing for her Kavala but leaving Xanthi for Bulgaria. By the decision of a commission appointed by the Powers, Greece lost part of northern Epirus, including Santi Quaranta, Khimara, Delvino, Premeti, Argyrokastron, and Koritsa, captured by the Greeks during the first Balkan War, together with the islet of Saseno in the Bay of Valona, which had belonged to Greece since 1864. The Powers recognized Greek sovereignty over the captured islands (except Tenedos, Imbros, and Castellorizzo, which were to be restored to Turkey) and those still occupied by the Italians, contingent upon the evacuation of the south of the new Albanian principality by the Greek forces. The northern Epirota, however, declared themselves autonomous, and formed a separate government. Although the Greek troops evacuated northern Epirus before the end of April, fighting continued between the Albanians and the autonomous forces. Finally a convention was signed on 17 May, 1914, entrusting the administration of the two provinces of Argyrokastron and Koritsa to the International Commission of Control for Albania.

The opening of the European War found Greece in the throes of a nationalistic feeling, hoping that by her timely aid she might be rewarded by the Greek-speaking cities of Asia Minor, then oppressed by Turkey. During the critical time at the Dardanelles, however, when the Allies would have welcomed the addition of Greek troops and ships, she hesitated, being dissatisfied with the promises of the Allies. Venizelos was ardently in favor of the Entente and eager to enter the war. On the other hand King Constantine, the husband of Queen Sophia, sister of the German emperor, declined to cede any territory to Bulgaria to satisfy the Bulgarian demand from the Allies and parted with his premier (15 March, 1915). In August, however, Venizelos came into power, for the question now concerned Serbia, who was being overwhelmed by Mackensen's forces, and to whom Greece was under treaty obligations. The Allies landed at Salonica 150,000 troops ready to strike at the Bulgarians. But Venizelos had reckoned without his king and was for the second time forced to resign. Armed neutrality was proclaimed. Throughout October and November the Allies continued to bargain with King Constantine and his puppet ministers. In November the king dissolved his troublesome pro-Venizelos Parliament. The armed neutrality made the situation of the Allies at Salonica very precarious, situated as they were between the Bulgarian troops and the uncertain Greek forces. Finally the Allies resorted to coercion and seized the Greek telegraphs and postal system, the navy being seized in October by the French, who landed troops at Piræus. Greece was blockaded. Venizelos repudiated his king, established a provisional government in Crete and Macedonia and on his own account declared war against Bulgaria (1916). In June, 1917, French and British troops entering Thessaly occupied Volo and Larissa and seized the Isthmus of Corinth. On 11 June Charles Jonnart, formerly French governor of Algeria and now named high commissioner of Greece, demanded the immediate abdication of King Constantine and the renunciation of the Crown Prince's right of succession. And so on 12 June Constantine abdicated the throne of Greece in favor of his second son, Alexander, and later Venizelos became Prime Minister. In July all diplomatic relations between the Central Powers were ruptured, and the Greek army stood ready for the great advance from Salonica. In September the troops attacked Bulgaria, seized Strumitsa, and opened the way to the triumphant Allies. Bulgaria suddenly sued for peace. The attention of the Greeks was now turned to national unity. At the Peace conference at Versailles in 1919 the Greek claim to the greater part of Aidin, including Smyrna in Asia Minor, was recognized and Greek troops were landed at that port with the approval of the powers. To her were also given the Dodecanese Islands which voted for union with Greece. With the consent of the Powers she has occupied part of Bulgarian (Western) Thrace.

The treaty of Sèvres which was handed to the Turkish delegates at Paris on 1 May, 1920, added greatly to Greek territory, as the Turks were to cede Thrace to Greece, except the sanjak (district) of Chatalja and the Derkos water-supply area, together with Tenedos and Imbros; to recognize as Greek those islands in the Ægean at present occupied by Greece; to abandon the administration of a considerable area in Asia Minor comprising Smyrna, Tireh, Odemish, Manisa, Akhissar, Bergama, and Aivali to Greece. The territory in question was to have a parliament of its own and could annex itself to Greece after five years, a plebiscite to be held after two years. The Nationalists under Mustapha Kemal refused to submit to the treaty in any form and drove the French out of Cilicia. So grave did the situation become that a Greek army, supported by French and British fleets, undertook to suppress the Turks in Asia Minor. The Allies refused to alter the Treaty of Sèvres and gave the Turks, under threat of ejection from Europe, ten days in which to sign it. The period was further extended because of the differences between Greece and Italy over Albania, Adalia, and the islands of the Dodocanese. In 1919 the two countries had entered into a convention defining their aspirations with regard to the Balkans and the Orient. If either failed to realize her aspirations, the convention was to be void. When Greek troops crossed into Adalian territory, on 22 July, 1919, Italy was aroused and denounced the convention. The matter was settled by the appointment of a special commission to delimit the Adalian boundary. Another convention signed on 10 August, 1920, between Italy and Greece, the two designated the Dodocanese as Greek with the exception of Castellorizzo and Rhodes, possession of which would be determined by a plebiscite at the end of fifteen years. Although the treaty of Sèvres was signed by Greece on the same day, the dissatisfaction which it caused was so profound that the Allies, together with delegations from Greece and the rival governments of Turkey, met in London on 21 February, 1921, to consider the advisability of revising the treaty. Their proposal to give the Sultan sovereignty over Smyrna on condition that he respect its rights and liberties and grant local autonomy to each nationality in its population and allow the Greeks to retain a garrison in the town, was spurned by Greece who in March, 1921, launched a new offensive in Asia Minor in a single handed effort to force the Turks to conform to the terms of the original treaty of Sèvres. She was unsuccessful and the war still continues, with hardly a hope of a military decision. The theater of war is so vast and so ill-provided with means of communication, compared with the maximum forces and transport that either side can muster that there is little prospect that either will be able to defeat its opponent. Greece is waging war overseas, plunging herself deeper into debt in order to purchase supplies for her army, while the Turks are fighting for their home and living off the land for their supplies.

Events in Greece during 1920 revolved about dynastic and imperialistic problems. The attempted assassination of M. Venizelos in Paris (12 August, 1920), which was part of a scheme to restore Constantine to the throne, led to severe rioting in Greece. On 25 October, 1920, King Alexander died as a result of a bite from a monkey. His younger brother Paul was designated as his successor, but he refused the throne, much to the consternation of the Allies and of Premier Venizelos, who was driven from power in the new elections. On 5 December the Greek people voted overwhelmingly for the return of Constantine, their exiled king. The Allies, especially France and Italy, chagrined at the turn of events, promptly cut off their financial support from Greece with the idea of throttling the nation. In 1922 Italy and France withdrew from Asia Minor, leaving Greece alone in the field.

CONSTITUTION OF THE CHURCH OF GREECE.—The organization of the Greek Church is at present in a transitional state, since there has not yet (1922) been time or opportunity to adapt or to modify its Constitution, as suited to the country before 1912, to meet the requirements of a population nearly twice as numerous and less homogeneous. According to the revised Constitution of 1911, "the religion prevailing in Greece is the religion of the Orthodox Eastern Church. Toleration is extended to all other recognized forms of worship; their services may be held freely and will enjoy the protection of law. Proselytism and all other activities detrimental to the prevailing religion are forbidden." An addition was made to Article 2, forbidding the translation of the Scriptures without the consent of the Church in Greece and the Ecumenical Patriarch.

For some years past the bishops, in pursuance of a policy of raising the social and intellectual standard of the clergy, have been slow to ordain new priests. A fund for ecclesiastics was established in 1910, and receives steadily increasing contributions toward securing a regular salary for parochial clergy and since the accession of the new Metropolitan of Athens (1918) no candidate is eligible for ordination unless he has a diploma from a theological school, of which four now exist in Greece. Parish priests must be married and are not as a rule, eligible to the higher offices of the Church, which are filled from the monastic or celibate orders.

The addition of Macedonia, Epirus, Crete, and the Asiatic Islands to Greece has seriously affected the religious conditions of the State. In the new provinces about 18 per cent were Moslems and 5 per cent Jews, the latter mainly in Salonica. Of the 76 per cent, who belonged to the Orthodox Church a considerable portion in Macedonia acknowledged the Bulgarian Exarch and were subject to Exarchist bishops; while others, the Koutso-Vlachs, were claimed by the Rumanian Church. The Vlachs were recognized by the Turks in 1905 as forming a separate millet, or religious nationality, and had schools and churches of their own. On the other hand those who belonged to the Greek Church were under the Ecumenical Patriarch at Constantinople. The relation of these to the Greek autocephalous Church in Greece is not finally established, nor has any complete assimilation taken place. The provinces added after the Balkan Wars brought the total number of dioceses up to seventy-four. During the war instead of a single synod there were two Synods working independently at Athens and Salonica, besides the independent Metropolitan of Crete.

A mixed commission of clergy and laymen was established in 1914 "for revising and collating ecclesiastical legislation," and published "a Draft of a Constitution for the Orthodox Church of Greece." By this draft the members of the Synod which administers the Greek Church were increased from six to twelve, the dioceses were remodeled and reduced from seventy-four to forty-six, the powers of the royal Commissioner to the Synod were defined so as to obviate friction, and various other reforms were indicated, but further action was delayed by the Great War. Additional confusion was caused by the dissension between the two provisional Synods, that of Athens, under the influence of the King Constantine, having excommunicated and cursed M. Venizelos, while that of the new provinces, meeting at Salonica, upheld the Venizelist Provisional Government. After the deposition of Constantine, the Metropolitan of Athens and other members of the Synod were relegated to monasteries; and the unusual step was taken of appointing as successor of the Metropolitan the Bishop of Kition, who belonged to the distinct autocephalous Church of Cyprus.

In August, 1920, the Preliminary Meeting of the World Conference on Faith and Order was held at Geneva, and rendered eventful by the official participation of the Eastern Churches in its sessions. For the first time after centuries of isolation they came in contact with the Anglican churches and the Protestant denominations and labored with them on the problem of the restoration of Christianity. The Greek Orthodox Churches were represented by seven bishops, monks, and laymen. The document on the relations between the Eastern and Anglican churches issued by the three delegates of the Greek Orthodox Patriarchate of Alexandria gives an idea of the conditions under which an understanding among the churches is possible; in the actual reunion of Christianity they seem to see a problem belonging to a far-distant future. They advocate a League of Churches, the very conditions of which only emphasize the irreconcilable barriers and the radical differences that preclude any union other than a theoretical one. To them the reunion of the churches requires a return to the ancient beliefs rather than a harem-brained adhesion to new and unsound systems. The League of Churches, by leaving untouched theological problems, could foster feelings of mutual friendship among the churches and make them useful to one another in social works, but it will not in the slightest degree promote the solution of the problem of reunion.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN GREECE.—Greece included (1922) the Catholic Archdiocese of Athens directly subject to the Holy See; the Archdiocese of Corfu to which the suffragan see of Zante and Cephalonia was united in 1919; the archdiocese of Naxos and Tinos with its suffragans Santorin (Thera), and Syra, and Chios in Asiatic Turkey; the diocese of Candia in Crete, suffragan of Smyrna. In 1919 the sees of Tinos and Mykonos were united to the archdiocese of Naxos. The Catholics in the country number 44,265 (1921). For detailed statistics see articles on dioceses mentioned above.

Green Bay, Diocese of (SINUS VIRIDIS; cf. C. E., VI-777a), is now under the administration of its sixth bishop Rt. Rev. Peter Paul Rhode, D.D., who was transferred to the diocese on 5 July, 1915, upon the retirement of Bishop Fox. Bishop Rhode was consecrated 29 July, 1908, when he was given the title of Bishop of Barca and appointed auxiliary Bishop of Chicago. He was born in the village of Wejherowo, Poland, on 16 September, 1871, and was brought to the United States when only nine years old. He received his early education at St. Stanislaus parochial school, Chicago, finishing at St. Mary's College, St. Mary's, Ky., St. Ignatius College, Chicago, and St. Francis Seminary.

The religious communities located in the diocese of Green Bay are: men: Capuchins Fathers, Franciscans, Premonstratensians, Alexian Brothers, Fathers of the Society of the Divine Saviour, and Oblate Fathers of Mary Immaculate; women: Sisters of the Good Shepherd, Sisters of St. Joseph, Sisters of Notre Dame, Sisters of Misericorde, Sisters of St. Francis, Franciscan Sisters of Christian Charity, Felician Sisters, Sisters of the Sorrowful Mother, and Sisters of the Divine Saviour. The diocese comprises an area of 11,583 sq. miles and has a Catholic population of 149,675. The present (1921) statistics show: 174 parishes; 44 missions; 218 churches; 4 monasteries for men and 4 for women; 198 secular and 58 regular clergy; 800 nuns; 2 colleges for men with 30 teachers and an attendance of 400, 1 academy for girls with 18 teachers and attendance of 225, 1 Indian school with 20 teachers and attendance of 225, 109 parochial schools with 800 teachers and attendance of 22,000. The various charitable institutions are: the McCormick Memorial House for Aged, 3 orphan asylums, 9 hospitals, 1 refuge, the Allouez Community House, and 1 day nursery.

Greene, EDWARD LEE, botanist, b. at Hopkinton, Rhode Island, on 20 August, 1843; d. at Washington, D. C., on 10 November, 1915; son of William M. and Abby (Crandall) Greene, descendants of the original white settlers in Massachusetts. About 1856 his family moved West and settled at Janesville, Wisconsin, when he came under the scientific influence of Knure Kumlein, the Swedish botanist. After serving in the Civil War in the 63d regiment of Wisconsin, he graduated in arts from Albion College and in philosophy from Jarvis College, Denver. Brought up a Baptist, he embraced the Episcopal Church about this time and entered its ministry in 1871, continuing meantime his botanical studies. Deep study of the history of the collapse of Luther's scheme of religion led him into the Catholic Church on 5 February, 1885. The reputation he acquired by his botanical review "Erythæa," founded in 1883, won for him a place in the faculty of natural science in the University of California. In his writings Greene established indisputably that the real founder of modern scientific botany was not Linnæus, but the Italian Cesalpino, who preceded Linnæus by more than a century. In 1887 he published his "Manual of Botany for San Francisco Bay," and the first volume of his "Pittonia" (completed in 5 vols. in 1903). In 1894 he was made chairman of an international commission for the reform of botanical nomenclature; in his researches he himself had discovered and named more than 5000 new species. He taught at the Catholic University of America from 1895 till 1904, when he became an associate in the Smithsonian Institution. Among his many other notable writings may be mentioned: "Some West American Oaks," "Flora Franciscana," "Leaflets of Botanical Observation," and his "Landmarks in Botanical History," only partly completed when he died.

Greenland (cf. C. E., VI-777d), a colonial possession of Denmark, has an area of 46,740 sq. miles and a population (census of 1911) of 13,459, of whom 384 were Europeans. Under Danish rule the population has more than doubled in the last 100 years. The affairs of the colony are in the hands of the Royal Greenland Board of Trade, a Government department, whose privileges were defined by a royal statute 18 March, 1776, which also closed the western coast to foreign ships from latitude 60 to 73. The object was to prevent the ruin of the natives through the introduction of infectious diseases and the importation of spirituous liquors and like goods. Strangers, including Danes, unless they are employed in the country, are forbidden to land without special permission from the Danish Government, which is granted only to applicants for scientific purposes. The country is divided into two provinces, North and South Greenland, each presided over by an inspector, the one for North Greenland residing at Godhavn on Disko Island, and the other at Godthaab. These provinces are subdivided into districts, the chief towns of which are called kolonier, where directors reside who are at the same time the political chiefs of the districts and trade managers. There are also district councils, which are composed of the missionary of the chief station, officials of the trade and mission, and members elected by the people. They meet twice a year and look after the needy poor, for whom they raise a fund by a tax of one-sixth on goods purchased from the natives within each district. Almost all the natives can read and write, and besides other elementary subjects they are taught the Danish language, in which, however, few are proficient, the majority adhering to their own Eskimo tongue with a few Danish words added. There is only one church in Greenland, the Lutheran Church of Denmark, which is supported by grants of £2000 a year from the Greenland Board of Trade and £880 from the Danish Government. It has churches and schools all over the colony and at Angmagssalik, and a station has been established at Melville Bay. All the Greenland Eskimos, except the Arctic Highlanders in the northwest, are nominally members of the Lutheran Church. As fishing is the chief industry, the exports consist largely of fish, although cryolite figures largely (3,573,900 kilograms valued at 1,009,000 kronen in 1919). The total imports in 1920 amounted to 3,229,000 kronen; the total exports, in 1919, to 2,358,000 kronen. The entire trade of Greenland is a government monopoly, and with the exception of cryolite is in the hands of the Royal Greenland Board of Trade. In 1921 King Christian of Denmark visited Greenland in commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the landing of Hans Egede, the Norwegian missionary, on its coast in 1721, where he founded the first colony of the second Scandinavian occupation in that country. This was the first royal visit to Greenland.

Grenoble, DIOCESE OF (GRATIANAPOLITANENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-26b), in the department of Isère, France, suffragan of the Archdiocese of Lyons. This see was filled by the present Archbishop of Lyons and Primate of Gaul, His Eminence Louis-Joseph Cardinal Maurin, from 1 September, 1911, until his promotion 1 December, 1916. He was the eightieth bishop of Grenoble, and the second to pass from this see to the primatial see of France. His successor was appointed in the person of Rt. Rev. Alexander Caillot, 22 March, 1917. Born in Doyet, France, 1861, he studied at the College of Izeure and the upper seminary, was ordained in 1884, served as a professor in the lower seminary of Paris, chaplain of the general hospital, inspector and director of liberal teaching and vicar general, and archdeacon of Moulins and La Palisse. By 1920 statistics the population of the diocese is 555,911, of whom 77,438 are in Grenoble proper; there are 51 first-class parishes, 530 succursal parishes and 130 vicariates formerly supported by the state.

Grey Nuns (cf. C. E., VII-31b).—The mother-house of the Sisters of Charity of the Hôpital Général of Montreal, called Grey Nuns because of the color of their attire, shelters 981 inmates, and is composed of the community, the novitiate, a home for the indigent poor, and industrial school for young girls, and a nursery for foundlings or abandoned children, where hundreds of infants are received yearly. There are also in the city of Montreal nineteen charitable institutions under the care of the Grey Nuns, namely orphanages, infant schools, homes for the aged and infirm, hospitals with training schools, working girls' homes, and an academy for the blind. They have houses in nine different parishes outside the city of Montreal, and nine others in different parts of the United States as follows: Boston, Lawrence, Cambridge, Worcester (Mass.); Nashua (N. H.); Toledo (Ohio); New Brunswick (N. Y.); Fort Totten (N. D.) In Northwestern Canada they have nine houses in Manitoba; six in Alberta; six in Saskatchewan; two in Ontario; four in Northwestern Territories. These include orphanages, hospitals with training schools, and parochial, boarding, and industrial schools. The present number of foundations under the Grey Nuns of Montreal is 64, with a membership of 1166 Sisters. The Grey Nuns of Quebec, of Ottawa, of St. Hyacinthe, of Nicolet, who are independent of the Montreal Institution (headquarters), have under their control 141 houses with a membership of 2734 Sisters.

Grey Nuns of the Cross (cf. C. E., VII-31d).—Since 1910 the educational and charitable work of the congregation has increased notably, and building space is not sufficient to accommodate the aged poor and orphans. Some 21,000 patients yearly receive treatment in the hospitals, to several of which are attached training schools for nurses. In a dispensary attached to the mother-house, three Sisters daily serve meals and give out baskets of food and clothing; they also make a daily visitation of the sick and poor in their homes. There are 20,045 pupils in the schools taught by the Sisters. The congregation is administered by a mother general, mother assistant, and three councillors. The present Mother General is Mother St. Albert, elected in March, 1918. Among distinguished members deceased are: Mother Teresa Hagan (b. 1828; d. 1912), the first postulant of the Grey Nuns at Ottawa (then Bytown), professed 1847, teaching until 1869, when she was appointed Superior of the educational institute on Rideau Street, golden and diamond jubilarian; Sister St. Teresa (d. 1914), for twenty-six years Superior of the City Orphanage in Ogdensburg, established the present hospital in that city; Sister Mary Camper (d. 1915), educator, founded the d'Youville Reading Circle at Rideau Street convent and organized the alumnae; Sister Rocque (d. 1915), principal of the French parochial schools in Ottawa; Mother Demers (d. 1920), fifth General Superior; Sister Stanislaus (d. 1921), Superior of Bishop Conroy's schools in Ogdensburg, N. Y., and founder of d'Youville College, Buffalo, N. Y. At present there are 1112 members, with 47 foundations. The Sisters educate young girls free of charge and train them in household work; they board young boys going to college or Brothers' schools and assist them in many ways. In the houses of refuge and orphanages more than three-fourths are not able to defray their expenses; the Government of Ontario gives seven or ten cents a day for the board and clothing of the inmates, and charitable societies lend a helping hand. The Sisters have under their charge 9 boarding schools, 7 academies, 1 normal school, 4 industrial schools, 60 parochial schools, 1 bilingual model school, 9 hospitals, 4 homes for the aged, and 3 orphanages.

Gronberger, SVEN MAGNUS, research worker in anthropology and zoology, b. at Soderköping, Sweden, 19 August, 1864; d. in Washington, 24 April, 1916. He was the son of a highly cultured family, all the members of which knew several languages and in which French was familiarly used. He received a broad education at home, but being ambitious to get on he came to America when about twenty. He worked for his living in a drug store, but proceeded with his studies and took up law. He felt that his vocation was in the line of scholarship and research, so he accepted a position on the library staff of the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, where his knowledge of the Scandinavian languages as well as French, German, Latin, and Greek made him very valuable. While working as librarian he devoted his leisure hours to research work in science. He wrote an exhaustive monograph on "The Frogs of the District of Columbia" and another on "Palearctic Birds of Greenland." His own experience as a librarian and student of the sciences enabled him to write a very valuable paper on "The Use of Museums for Popular Education," which attracted wide attention and had much to do with giving fresh impetus to the movement for taking advantage of our museums for educational purposes. He became very much interested in the origins of modern civilization and wrote a lengthy monograph on "The Origin of the Goths." The value of his work was recognized by the scientific groups connected with the Government institutions in Washington, and he himself felt the need of further education, so he devoted himself to graduate work. He was just about to receive his degree of Doctor of Philosophy from George Washington University when he died of cancer.

In his early years in America he had been drawn to the Catholic Church, in spite of the very deep prejudices which he had inherited in his native Sweden. The life and example of a Catholic employer who had been extremely kind to him and had taken almost a paternal interest in him while he was working as a drug clerk, had led him to study the history and dogmas of the church with a rather open mind. The final impulse to his conversion came while he was ill at St. Catherine's Hospital in Brooklyn, where the unfailing kindness of the Dominican Sisters, as he himself told, fairly won his heart. In the midst of his scientific work his faith instead of being weakened was strengthened, and he felt that the greatest consolation in life came to him as the result of his conversion. As a form of thank-offering for this benefit he wrote a lengthy sketch of the life of one of the patron saints of his native country, St. Bridget of Sweden. As the Brigittines, founded by St. Bridget, had a number of foundations in England in the pre-reformation days, the subject of the sketch was especially interesting for English speaking people. The sketch was published with some preliminary notes on Gronberger's life in the "American Catholic Quarterly Review" (January, 1917), and reprinted in the Publications of the Writers' Club of Washington (Vol. I, ii).

Grosseto, DIOCESE OF (GROSSETANENSIS), in Tuscany, Central Italy, suffragan of Siena. Rt. Rev. Ulysses Bascherini, born in Corvaia, Italy, 1844, and appointed to this see 8 July, 1907, retired and was transferred to the titular see of Amathonte, 8 March, 1920. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Gustavo Matteoni, born in Santa-Maria della Inereia, Italy, 1877, served as vicar general of San Miniato, and was appointed to this see 8 March, 1920. The 1920 statistics credit Grosseto with 30,250 Catholics; 26 parishes, 42 secular priests, 13 Sisters, 19 seminarians, and 57 churches or chapels.

Guadalajara, ARCHDIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., VII-42c; Guadalajara), in the state of Jalisco, Mexico. The metropolitan has as its suffragan sees the dioceses of Aguas Calientes, Colima, Tepic, and Zacatecas. The present archbishop in Francisco Orozco y Jimenez, b. in Zamora 18 November, 1864, studied at the Latin-American College, Rome, ordained 17 December, 1887, elected bishop of Chiapas 29 May, 1902, promoted at the Consistory of 2 December, 1912, to succeed Mgr. Ortiz at Guadalajara. The archbishop was forced to go into exile in 1914 when the Revolution put a price on his head. His cathedral was profaned, his palace converted into a barracks and 135 priests were imprisoned and later freed at the cost of 200,000 crowns. In 1917, in a pastoral letter, he addressed a vigorous protest against the new Mexican constitution which seized property of the Church. The Mexican bishops were allowed to return to their dioceses in 1919, where they were well received, and events in Guadalajara are gradually returning to their old status. Since then a Catholic workingman's congress has been held there for five days.

Mgr. Francisco Uranga y Saenez, b. in Santa Cruz de Rosales, Chihuahua, 14 November, 1863, ordained 5 March, 1886, elected Bishop of Sinaloa, 25 June, 1903, resigned and transferred 18 December, 1919, is auxiliary to the archbishop.

In the archdiocese there are 1,350,000 inhabitants; a cathedral chapter of 18; 106 parishes, 10 in the capital; 539 secular and 37 regular priests; 350 churches. There is a large seminary in Guadalajara which in 1914 had 1200 seminarians, two preparatory seminaries at Zapotlan and San Juan de los Lagos, besides 4 auxiliary ones founded by the present archbishop. Many of the churches have old and miraculous images which are venerated by the faithful, some of which have been crowned by papal authority; the sanctuary of Our Lady of San Juan de los Lagos is to have a collegiate church erected there. There are 7 hospitals in Guadalajara (1 under care of Hospitallers of St. John of God and 6 under Sisters), and 2 in neighboring towns. Among the Catholic social organizations are the Catholic Association of Mexican Youth and the Association of Catholic Ladies, both of which played such a brilliant rôle during the last revolution and which have centers in almost every parish. There are also the National Association of Fathers of Families with 28 centers, the Court of Honor of Our Lady of Guadeloupe, and the Order of Knights of Columbus. There are other social orders and many pious ones throughout the archdiocese. Among the Catholic papers published are "La Epoca," "Restauracion," "El Obrero," "La Mujer Catolica," "La Voz de Maria," "La Semilla Eucaristica," and various others, besides the bulletins of the different associations.

The religious communities of men in the archdiocese are the Franciscans with 5 houses; Augustinians, 1; Hospitallers of St. John of God, 2 hospitals; Jesuits, Institute of Sciences in Jalisco and Church of San Felipe; Josephites, 1; Salesian Fathers, 1; Marist Brothers, 2 colleges.

The religious communities of women are Adoratrices 2 convents; Sisters of Perpetual Adoration 1; Discalced Carmelites 1; Carmelites de la Hoguera 1; Dominicans 2 convents; Sisters of Divine Providence 1; Sisters of Our Lady of Guadeloupe 2; Josephites 2; Salesians 1; Minims 1; Religious of the Orfanatorio de la Luiz 1; Reparatrices 1; Sisters without vows in 3 hospitals; Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament of Sayula 1; Servants of the Poor 11; Servants of Mary 1; Servants of Jesus in the Blessed Sacrament 11; Third Order Regular of St. Francis 4; Third Order Regular of Carmel 1; Teresians 1; Sisters of the Incarnate Word 1; Sisters of the Eucharistic Heart 1.

The Catholic colleges are (1914): School of Jurisprudence of Catholic Society; normal schools

(1 for boys and 7 for girls), 6 elementary night schools for adults (3 for men and 3 for women), and 1 day school for girls; 7 private colegios for boys and 14 for girls; 3 mixed colegios; 1 school of trade and business attached to an orphanage for boys, 4 orphanages for girls; and other various asylums and orphanages for both girls and boys. Before the Revolution each parish had a primary school, all of which were closed during the Revolution but most of them have been reopened, many new schools have been founded, including a Teresian colegio, in which girls of the upper classes are educated.

Guadeloupe (or BASSE-TERRE), DIOCESE OF (GUADALUPENSIS; IMÆ TELLURIS), in the West Indies, directly subject to the Holy See, with residence at Basse-Terre. This diocese comprises four islands and the French portions of the islands of St. Martin and St. Bartholomew. The see is now (1922) filled by Rt. Rev. Pierre Genoud, C.S.Sp., born in Douvain, France, in 1860, studied at Evian-les-Bains, served as professor of theology in the colonial seminary in Paris, then as master of novices at the Scholasticate at Chevilly, and was appointed 31 May, 1912. By a Brief of 10 November, 1919, the canons of the diocese were authorized to wear a gold pectoral cross suspended on a red ribbon. The diocese comprises a population of 212,430 (1920 statistics), 37 parishes, 1 chaplaincy, 2 chapels of ease, 13 alms houses, 61 priests, and 38 churches.

Guadix, DIOCESE OF (GAUDICENSIS), in the province of Granada, Spain, suffragan of Granada. Rt. Rev. Timoteo Hernandez y Mulas, born in Morales del Vino 1856, and appointed to this see 19 December, 1907, died 19 March, 1921, and his successor has not yet been appointed. The diocese covers an area of about 1828 sq. miles and comprises a Catholic population of 189,098. The 1920 statistics credit it with 80 parishes, 5 archpriests, 160 priests, 62 churches, 88 chapels and 10 convents with 11 religious and 110 Sisters.

Guam, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., IX-660d, Mariana). The island of Guam is the largest and most populous of the Mariana group discovered by Magellan in 1521. As a result of the Spanish War Guam was ceded to the United States and has since been used as a naval station with naval commander serving as governor, while Spain sold the other islands in the group to Germany (1899). The island is thirty miles long and from four to eight miles wide. Situated in the Bay of Apia, latitude, N. 13° 26' 22"; longitude, E. 144° 39' 42"; Guam is 3428 miles from San Francisco, 1506 miles from Yokohama. The average temperature is 81° F., varying only slightly, with the highest point at 90° and the lowest 72°. The natives are called Chamorros and are of Malayan, Tagal, and Spanish blood. They are a peaceful, amicable people, respectful towards strangers and apt in learning the arts and sciences. The inhabitants number 14,090 natives and 408 Americans and foreigners. The capital, San Ignacio de Agaña, has about 10,000 inhabitants.

The principal agricultural products are the coconut which serves many purposes, maize, suni (sweet potato), bananas, federico from which they extract starch, and manga, a delicious fruit.

Since March, 1911, Guam has constituted a vicariate apostolic, entirely in the hands of the Spanish Capuchins. Formerly the island was part of the vicariate Apostolic of the Mariana Islands, but owing to the difference of nationality since the Spanish War, and to avoid future dissensions, the Vicariate Apostolic of Guam was created. The vicariate has been taken from the Apostolic Delegation of Australasia and added to that of the Philippines, 20 October, 1921.

The first vicar apostolic was Rt. Rev. Francisco Xavier Ricardo Vila y Maten, O.M. Cap., born in Arenys a Mar, Spain, elected titular Bishop of Adraa and vicar Apostolic of Guam, 25 August, 1911, died 5 January, 1913. His successor was Rt. Rev. Augustin Bernaus y Serra, O.M. Cap., born at Artesa de Segre, 16 August, 1863, missionary in Costa Rica in 1906, elected titular Bishop of Milopotamus and Vicar Apostolic of Guam, 9 May, 1913, and transferr'd to the Vicariate Apostolic of Bluefields in October, 1914. The present Vicar Apostolic of Guam is Rt. Rev. Joachim Felipe Olaz y Zabalza, O.M. Cap., born in Pampluna, 6 June, 1872, elevated to the titular bishopric of Docimium, and made Vicar Apostolic of Guam, 20 July, 1914, and consecrated 30 November following.

Rev. José Palomo Tones, a native of Agaña and son of one of the principal Chamorra families, exercised the functions of the priesthood there for fifty-seven years. He was pastor at Agaña and during his long priesthood he was called upon to defend the Faith against the dangers of Protestant heresies, showing his zeal for the faith and his care of his flock in such a manner that Pope Pius X rewarded him with the title of Monsignor. Respected by natives and foreigners, especially the Americans, whom he served in many ways, Mgr. Palomo died in July, 1918. Governor Smith expressed his thanks to the bishop for the aid rendered by the missionaries in the activities of the government during late war. In Guam there are 6 parishes, 10 churches, 6 stations, 3 regular priests, and 4 lay brothers. Six Sisters are expected to take a parish school in Agaña. Practically all the 14,000 natives are Catholics, as well as most of the 500 Spaniards, Americans, and Japanese.

Guarda, DIOCESE OF (ÆGITANIENSIS or ÆGITIANENSIS), in Portugal, suffragan of Lisbon. Rt. Rev. Manoel Vieira de Mattos, appointed to this see 26 June, 1903, was promoted to the Archdiocese of Braga, 1 October, 1914, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Jose Alves Mattoso, born in Coja, Portugal, 1870, served as chancellor of Coimbra and named bishop 3 October, 1914. The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with 289,774 Catholics, 357 parishes, 531 priests, and 936 churches or chapels.

Guastalla, DIOCESE OF (GUASTALENSIS), in the province of Reggio-Emelia, Northern Italy, suffragan of Modena. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Agostino Cattanco, born in Crema, 1853, served as secretary and episcopal chancellor, then professor of theology in the seminary of Crema and vicar general, was made a private chamberlain 21 September, 1901, and appointed bishop 15 March, 1910, to succeed Rt. Rev. Andrea Sarti, transferred to Pistoia and Prato, 29 April, 1909. According to 1920 statistics the diocese comprises 65,000 Catholics; 26 parishes, 75 secular priests, 51 Sisters, 25 Seminarians, and 58 churches and chapels.

Guatemala, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SANCTA JACOBI MAJORIS DE GUATEMALA; cf. C. E., VII-54a).—Since 16 December, 1743, the diocese of Guatemala has been raised to metropolitan rank, having four suffragans assigned to it. To-day the metropolitan has no suffragans, the dioceses of Nicaragua, Honduras, Costa Rica, and San Salvador having been raised to metropolitan rank. On 2 December, 1913, Nicaragua was detached as suffragan from Guatemala and divided into three dioceses and a vicariate, with metropolitan at Managua. San Salvador was created an archdiocese on 11 February, 1913. Honduras was divided 2 February, 1916, with metropolitan at Tegucigalpa; finally Costa Rica on 16 February, 1921, was divided into two dioceses with metropolitan at San José de Costa Rica.

Ricardo Casanova y Estrada, born in Guatemala, 10 November, 1844, studied civil law, canon law, and medicine, ordained 1876, was elected Archbishop of Guatemala, primate of Central America, 25 January, 1886, and died 14 April, 1913. His successor was Julio Ramón Riveiro y Jacinto, O.P., born at Coban, Guatemala, 17 February, 1854, expelled from the convent where he studied 7 June, 1872, ordained 1877, elected archbishop 8 April, 1914, consecrated in Rome, 10 May following and resigned in 1921. The present archbishop of Guatemala is Rt. Rev. Aloysius Munoz, S. J., who was born in Guatemala in 1859 and elevated to the archbishopric 30 July, 1921.

In the capital city of Guatemala there are a cathedral and 22 churches. In the entire country there are 115 parishes with 125 secular and 7 regular priests, the scarcity of clergy causing nearly 40 parishes to be vacant. The population of about two million is almost entirely Catholic. The Church maintains a preparatory seminary, 4 colleges for boys, 7 for girls, 1 high school, 1 normal school, 6 professional schools and some elementary schools. Besides, there are 4 asylums and 3 hospitals.

There are two societies organized among the clergy and many among the laity, while five periodicals and reviews are published under ecclesiastical auspices. There is no aid from the Government in any ecclesiastical work and the establishment of monastic and conventual institutions has been prohibited since 1872, when much church property was confiscated and disestablished.

Guaxupe, DIOCESE OF (GUAXUPENSIS), erected 3 February, 1916, from the northern part of the diocese of Pouso Alegre in the state of Minas Geraes, Brazil. The parishes of Poços de Caldas, Campestre, and Machado form the southern boundary. It comprises an area of 9432.4210 sq. miles, and has 300,000 inhabitants. The first bishop was Rt. Rev. Antonio Augusto de Assis, consecrated titular Bishop of Sura and auxiliary of Pouso Alegre in 1907, succeeding to the see of Pouso Alegre in 1909, and transferred to Guaxupe in 1916. He resigned in 1919, and was succeeded 3 July, by Antonio Correa, the present Bishop of Guaxupe.

Within the diocese there are 300,000 Catholics, 37 secular and 12 regular priests; 50 churches, 10 convents for women, 2 colleges for men with 10 teachers and 90 students, 8 colleges for girls with 50 teachers and 600 students, 2 high schools with 12 teachers and 70 pupils, 7 homes, about 70 organizations or societies for the laity, and three Catholic periodicals. A seminary is at present under construction. By special legislation of the state of Minas Geraes the priests are permitted to teach the Catholic religion in their own homes to the pupils of the public schools, commonly called "Grupos Escolares." About 10,000 pupils of these schools are thus receiving Catholic instruction.

Guayaquil, DIOCESE OF (GUAYAQUILENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-54d), suffragan of Quito, in Ecuador, South America. The diocese contains 208,000 inhabitants, including 93,370 Catholics and 2000 Protestants, 34 parishes, 52 churches and chapels, 30 secular priests, and 28 regulars. In the city of Guayaquil there are 80,000 inhabitants, 5 city parishes, 7 rural parishes, 6 rural deaneries. The following orders of men and women have foundations in the diocese:

Dominicans (1 house), Franciscans (1), Augustinians (1), Fathers of Mercy (1), Jesuits (1), Lazarists (1), Christian Brothers (1), Sisters of Charity (8 houses in Guayaquil, 1 at Babahoyo, 1 at Machala), Sisters of Providence and of the Immaculate Conception (1 house), Sisters of Marie Auxiliatrice (1), Sisters of the National Congregation of Blessed Mariana of Jesus (1 house at Guayaquil, 1 at Babahoyo).

The present bishop is the Rt. Rev. Andrés Machado, S.J., b. at Cuenca, 16 August, 1850, entered Society of Jesus 19 July, 1866, provincial of Ecuador, elected bishop of Riobamba 12 November, 1907, published 19 December following, transferred to Guayaquil, 26 April, 1916, published 4 December following. He succeeded Rt. Rev. Juan Maria Riera, O.P., who administered the diocese 1912-1915. At the present time Mgr. Machado, like Bishop Riera before him, is administrator of the diocese of Porto-Viejo.

Gubbio, DIOCESE OF (EUGUBINENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-55b), in the province of Perugia, in Umbria (Central Italy). This diocese was originally directly subject to the Holy Sec, but in 1563 became a suffragan of Urbino. In 1918 Gubbio reverted to the direct jurisdiction of the Holy Sec.

In 1907 Giovanni Battista Nasalli-Rocca, b. in Piacenza, 27 August, 1872, was elevated to the bishopric of Gubbio. On 7 December, 1916, Mgr. Nasalli-Rocca was appointed titular Archbishop of Thebes and succeeded by Carlo Tacetti, b. in Sanniniatello, 19 November, 1861, consecrated Bishop of Gubbio on 22 March, 1917. Mgr. Tacetti died 6 April, 1920, and was succeeded by Leonardo Navarro Pio, b. in Segni, 22 September, 1877, who was elevated to the bishopric 16 December, 1921.

During the years of the war a casa del soldato was founded in Gubbio and both clergy and laity were always foremost in assisting and organizing the various undertakings that arose from needs of war. The most notable event of the diocese in recent years was the translation in 1919 of the incorrupt body of the diocesan patron, Saint Ubaldo, from his church on Mount Ingino to the cathedral, the restoration of the church on the mountain and the conferring of the title of basilica by Pope Benedict XV. On 21 August, 1919, the body of Saint Ubaldo was again solemnly translated to his church, just as it had been moved there 725 years before, and was buried under the new main altar.

The see has 65 parishes, 43,606 souls, 1 monastery for men, 1 abbey for men, 4 convents for men, 79 secular priests, 16 regular priests, 7 monasteries for women, 7 convents for women, 97 nuns, 4 lay brothers, 259 churches, 1 seminary with 15 seminarians, 1 college for men, 2 colleges for women, and 4 elementary schools. The missionary work of the diocese includes 2 homes, 3 asylums, and 5 hospitals.

Guiana, BRITISH (or DEMERARA), VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., VII-62d), comprises British Guiana and Barbados and is under the care of the Jesuits. Rt. Rev. Compton Galton, S.J., titular Bishop of Petenissus and vicar Apostolic since 1901-1902, resides at Georgetown.

The Catholic population, numbering about 25,000 (1922), is composed of British, Portuguese, blacks, mixed, East Indians, Chinese, and aboriginal Indians.

Gregorio Bettencourt, great benefactor to the cathedral, Knight of St. Gregory, died in 1919. Rev. Paul Miller, S.J., head master of St. Stanislaus College died in 1921 and Rev. Francis O'Donnell, S.J., who had been laboring for thirty-two years in the missions died in 1921.

In 1910 a mission was started among the Macushi Indians in the far interior. That year the Vicar Apostolic visited the Indian missions in the interior. The cathedral was destroyed by fire in 1913. In 1915 the foundation stone of the new cathedral was laid and by 1921 a portion of the edifice was opened for service on Passion Sunday. The priests of the vicariate are admitted to minister in the three public hospitals, Leper and Lunatic Asylums, Government Industrial Schools and the Penal Settlement. Twenty-eight elementary schools are aided by the government and also the girls' orphanage. Three conferences of St. Vincent de Paul have been organized among the laity, and a periodical "The Catholic Standard of British Guiana" is published.

The vicariate has 12 parishes, 3 missions, 37 churches, 10 stations, 4 secular priests, 17 regular priests, 10 convents for women, 40 nuns, 30 sisters, 1 high school with 60 boys attending, and 32 elementary schools with 135 teachers and 5237 pupils. There are two orphanages, one for boys and one for girls.

Guiana, DIOCESE OF. See SAINT THOMAS OF GUIANA.

Guiana, DUTCH (or SURINAM), VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., VII-63a), has a spiritual jurisdiction over 20,900 Catholics under the charge of Rt. Rev. Theodore Van Roosmalen, C.S.S.R., titular Bishop of Antigone, who resides in Paramaribo. Bishop Van Roosmalen, born at Bois-le-Duc, 27 July, 1875, and elevated 23 August, 1911, was appointed by decree the following November to succeed Bishop Meeuwissen, C.S.S.R., who had resigned and retired to a convent at Amsterdam. The colony is entirely in the hands of the Redemptorists and the schools and other Catholic institutions receive government support. Among the laity the Association of the Holy Family has been organized with 194 men and 766 women members; also the Association of the Blessed Sacrament with 626 members, the Confraternity of the Living Rosary with 1057 members; the Sodality of the Sacred Heart with 1517 members, and the Confraternity of Our Lady of Perpetual Help and St. Alphonsus with 1795 members. In the vicariate two periodicals are published, "De Surinamer," which is issued twice a week and "De Katholieke Waarschuwer," every two weeks.

In the city of Paramaribo there are 4 parishes and outside of the city 4 quasi-parishes. In the whole vicariate there are 10 convents for men and 6 for women, 53 churches and chapels, 8 stations, 33 regular priests, 35 lay brothers, 109 Sisters, 2 high schools with 21 teachers and 624 students, 2 normal schools with 6 teachers and 10 students, 29 elementary schools with 90 teachers and 3680 students, 2 industrial schools with 5 teachers and 134 pupils, 1 home for the aged, 2 orphanages, 1 asylum, and 9 schools for the poor with 675 pupils.

Guiana, FRENCH (or CAYENNE), PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (GUYANÆ GALLICÆ SEU CAYENNÆ), in South America. This territory was entrusted to the Fathers of the Holy Ghost in 1816, but owing to the hostility of the Government they were forced to abandon it. A large portion of the Catholic population are convicts, as Cayenne, the residence of the prefect apostolic is a penal settlement, no longer used for white convicts however, owing to the frequency of yellow fever. Rev. Justin Fabre was named prefect apostolic in January, 1914, after having served as administrator apostolic. The Catholics number about 36,000, of whom 12,000 are convicts, and the remainder of the population is made up of 8000 to 10,000 pagans (Indians, Redskins, and Negroes), and 4000 to 5000 heretics. The mission is served by 21 priests, there being 15 churches with resident priests and 15 without priests, 26 stations and 9 schools with 1300 pupils.

Guinea, FRENCH, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (GUINEE GALICAE), comprises a French colony of the same name in Western Africa. By a Decree of 17 April, 1920, this territory was raised from a prefecture apostolic; it is entrusted to the Fathers of the Holy Ghost, Rt. Rev. Raymond-René Le Rouge being vicar apostolic. Born in Chaise-Baudouin, France, 1876, he came to French Guinea in 1901, was made prefect apostolic in 1911, promoted to be first vicar apostolic and consecrated titular Bishop of Selga, 22 April, 1920. He resides at Konakry, which has developed into one of the most important cities of the western Coast of Africa, connected by railway with Niger and the Sudan, and ranking among the first commercial cities of that country. Mohammedanism was brought into this country many centuries ago, but numerous Fetishist tribes remain, among the most important of which Christianity has been established. Bishop Le Rouge has been largely instrumental in the religious progress, but he is handicapped by the lack of a church in Konakry in keeping with the importance of the city and the colony, however he hopes to accomplish this soon. One of the great difficulties that has to be overcome by the missionaries in this country is the diversity of language, where every tribe and every village has a different dialect. In spite of the war the missionaries have founded a new station at Kurussa in the northeastern part of the vicariate, a position of great importance. The native city is divided into clans, each under a Mussulman master. Their captives, according to the Koran, are not allowed to practice the religion of Islam, and consequently many thousands of these pagans will be given to the Christians if the masters can be compensated. The remainder of the territory served by this new station, the region between Baffa and Boké, includes more than 200,000 souls, the tribes of Baga, entirely Fetishist and the Fulah Mussulmans.

According to latest statistics there are 2,000,000 people included in this vicariate and of this number 5600 are Catholics, 4127 catechumens, 700 heretics, 300,000 mussulman, and 700,000 pagans. The mission comprises 9 principal stations, 5 secondary stations, 65 posts of catechists, and 319 Christianized villages; it is served by 22 priests, 66 native catechists, 6 stations, 14 French schools, 1 school of catechists, 12 orphanages, 1 lower seminary, 3 agricultural schools, 3 industrial schools, 7 pharmacies, 1 village of freedmen, 3 Brothers, 9 European Missionary Sisters, and 4 native Sisters.

Guiney, LOUISE IMOGEN, poet and essayist, b. Boston, Mass., 7 January, 1861; d. at Chipping Campden, England, 2 November, 1920. She was the daughter of Gen. Patrick Robert Guiney, a soldier in the Union Army during the American Civil War, and was educated at a private school in Boston and at the Convent of the Sacred Heart, Elmhurst, Providence, R. I., from which she was graduated in 1880. Her earliest literary work appeared in the Boston "Post" and the Boston "Courier." In 1887 she was a contributor to "Harper's," "Scribner's," and "The Atlantic Monthly." The last sixteen years of her life were spent at Oxford, England. Among her best known writings are "Patrins," "The White Sail," "Monsieur Henri," "Edmund Campion," and "Robert Emmet." She edited the works of Mathew Arnold, Mangan, Henry Vaughan, and other writers. Her poetry was delicate and elevated, and yet virile, and her prose had a rare distinction of thought and diction.

Guisasola y Menéndez, VICTORIANO, Cardinal, Archbishop of Toledo, and Patriarch of the East Indies, b. at Oviedo, Spain, April 21, 1852; d. at Madrid on 2 September, 1920. He was first a lawyer and then a priest, and was appointed secretary of the Bishop of Orihuela and head of the cathedral school of the diocese. In 1884 he was canon of Compostella; in 1893 Bishop of Osma. In 1897 he was transferred to Madrid, then to Valencia, and finally to the Archbishopric of Toledo. He was created cardinal in 1914, receiving the biretta at the hands of Alphonso XIII; the hat was conferred later (8 September). He was the cardinal of the factory-lands and country-folk, and devoted himself especially to them, founding a number of guilds for their spiritual and material betterment. As he was the national chaplain of the Spanish army he was buried with military honors.

Gulf of St. Lawrence, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (SINUS SANCTI LAURENTII), in Canada, suffragan of Quebec. This territory first erected into a prefecture apostolic, in 1882, was entrusted to the Eudists in 1903 and raised to a vicariate apostolic 12 September, 1905. The official residence is at Seven Islands, Saguenay County, Canada, but as yet no vicar has been appointed to succeed Rt. Rev. Patrice-Alexandre Chiasson, who was appointed titular Bishop of Lydda and vicar apostolic 10 March, 1919, and transferred to the diocese of Chatham, 9 September, 1920. This vicariate covers an area of 54,000 sq. miles and comprises a total population of 11,000, of whom 9650 are Catholics, including 2000 Indians. According to 1920 statistics it counts 19 regular priests, 12 stations with resident priests, 28 stations without priests, 19 chapels, 19 oratories, 950 children in Catholic schools, and 19 religious of the Infant Jesus.

Gurk, DIOCESE OF (GURCENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-88c), a prince-bishopric of Carinthia, Austria, suffragan of Salzburg, with residence at Klagenfurt. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Adam Heftner, born in Prien, Bavaria, 1871, appointed 5 February, 1915, succeeding Rt. Rev. Balthazar Kaltner, promoted to Salzburg, 25 May, 1914. According to 1921 statistics the diocese comprises a Catholic population of 376,051; 19,668 Protestants, 244 Jews, and 596 of other religions; 200 parishes, 380 secular and 128 regular clergy.

Győr (German RAAB), DIOCESE OF (JAURINENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-94c).—The diocese of Győr, suffragan to the Archdiocese of Esztergom, lies in the former Kingdom of Hungary with two cathedral chapters, one at Győr and the other at Sopron. By the treaty of St. Germain the Odenburg or Sopron district was lost by Hungary to Austria, and to-day the diocese is divided between the two Governments, with a cathedral chapter in each country.

During the late war twenty-seven priests and most of the clergy were called to the colors, some were chaplains for the troops on the front, others cared for the wounded in hospitals, and some took up arms for the defence of the country. Those who remained at home worked for those at war, consoled widows and orphans, and nursed the wounded and sick. Ladislaus Prince Batthany-Strattmann and Prince Elemer Lonyay during the whole time of the war, and the cathedral chapter of Győr, for a year and a half, with their own resources supported a hospital for wounded and sick soldiers.

The bishop supported in the Szany orphanage twelve orphans, whose fathers died for the country.

During the Communistic dictatorship the press of the diocese, although not strictly Catholic, bound the various Christians together in defense against the common foe and the leading papers, especially the "Dunantuli Hírlap" of Győr and the "Soproni Hírlap" presented a united Christian opinion against the dangers of Communism.

Rt. Rev. Nicholas Széchényi, born at Sopron, 6 January, 1868, elected Bishop of Győr, 16 December, 1901, was transferred to the diocese of Nagy-Varád, 20 April, 1911, and on 18 June, 1911, Rt. Rev. Leopold Árpád Várady, born in Temesvár, Diocese of Csanád, 18 June, 1865, was consecrated bishop of Győr in the cathedral, which post he held until 25 March, 1914, when he was promoted to be Archbishop of Kalocsa. After a few months Rt. Rev. Anthony Fetszer, born at Nagy Karolydior, in the Diocese of Szathmar, 14 January, 1862, elected titular Bishop of Paleopolis and auxiliary at Nagy-Varád was transferred 20 April, 1911, to the diocese of Győr. Under Bishops Széchényi and Várady (1907-1913) the greater part of the cathedral at Győr was restored. A new seminary for the clergy of the diocese was erected in 1910.

On 21 October, 1913, Rt. Rev. Ernest Kutorátz, titular Bishop of Martiana and auxiliary of Győr, born at Siglo in the diocese and elevated to the bishopric 19 April, 1897, died. Nicholas Prince Esperházy, patron of 81 parishes in the diocese and leader of the noblemen of Hungary, who had always labored for the Church and had been a good example to all Christians, died in Sopron in 1920. His wife, born Countess Margarita Cziráky, who died in 1910, a real mother of the poor and patron of the Church, is still remembered with benediction. In 1914 occurred the death of Anthony Ruschek, titular abbot and canon of the cathedral of Győr, and in 1916 that of Anthony Mobil, bishop-elect of Serbia; both were the authors of many books and translations. During the days of the Communist strife in Hungary two priests perished. Anthony Szemelliser, pastor of Füles, was shot 9 April, 1919, and Francis Wohlmuth, pastor of Császár, was hung 5 June, 1919, martyrs to the Catholic religion and to their country.

The diocese includes 241 parishes with 379 churches and 296 chapels. There are, however, in the diocese 48 Lutheran churches, 27 Calvinist churches, 35 Jewish synagogues, and 1 Greek Orthodox church. The religious orders of men include: 1 congregation of Premonstratensians, 2 monasteries of Benedictines, 2 houses of the Order of Pious Schools, 1 convent of Dominicans, 2 convents of Franciscans (O.F.M.), 1 convent of Capuchins, 1 convent of Discalced Carmelites, 1 convent of Servants of Mary, 1 convent of Hospitalers of St. John of God. The religious orders of women have: 2 monasteries of Ursulines, 1 convent of Discalced Carmelites, 10 houses of Daughters of St. Vincent de Paul, 1 house of Franciscan Sisters, 1 house of Sisters of the Holy Cross, 26 congregations of Daughters of the Divine Redeemer, with a mother-house in Sopron and 1 house of Sisters of the Divine Savior. There are 82 regular and 390 secular priests, 20 lay brothers, 147 nuns, and 307 Sisters. The number of Catholics is 495,000, of whom the greater part are Hungarians, although about 150,000 speak German, 50,000 Croatian and 4000 Slovakian.

There are in the diocese 2 seminaries with 72 seminarians, 379 normal or elementary schools with 511 laymen, 147 laywomen, and 96 religious instructing 67,900 pupils. There are so-called public schools for girls with 25 teachers and 660 pupils; 5 preparatory schools in which teachers are trained for work in elementary and public schools and taking care of children with 41 ecclesiastical instructors and 380 scholars; 5 gymnasias, two for boys under the Benedictines, two for boys under the Order of Pious Schools, and one for girls under the Ursulines with 48 religious as instructors and 1470 scholars. There are 27 day nurseries in charge of the Sisters, who also conduct 10 hospitals and orphanages.

The elementary, public, and preparatory schools supported by the Government come under the rule of a local board, whose members are nearly always pastors or other priests, so that in this way the clergy have influence in the schools. Moreover in the gymnasias, normal and business schools, sustained by the Government, the pupils are instructed by catechists named by the bishop, who are either entirely supported or receive some salary from the Government. Two ecclesiastical papers, "Evangelium," a theological paper, and "Eucharistikus Ertesito," are published in the diocese

H

Haarlem, DIOCESE OF (HARLEMENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-95a), a suffragan of the Archdiocese of Utrecht in Holland. Augustin Joseph Callier, born at Flessingue in this diocese 20 May, 1849, for eleven years vicar general, was elected bishop 11 September, 1903. Bishop Callier had been instrumental for many years in the erection of the new cathedral, which is the glory of the diocese of Haarlem. The Catholics number 700,000. There are two seminaries with 120 and 300 students. The diocese counts (1921) 261 parishes, 290 churches, 60 convents for men, 195 for women, 584 secular and 187 regular priests, two colleges with 1091 students, 376 elementary schools with 84,490 pupils, 184 training schools with 21,213 pupils, 5 industrial schools with 1368 pupils. Thirteen Catholic papers are published. The Government contributes to the support of all Catholic schools.

Haeckel, ERNST HEINRICH, zoologist and philosophic writer, b. at Potsdam, Prussia, on 16 February, 1834; d. at Jena on 9 August, 1919. He studied in Berlin and Würzburg under Virchow, Kölliker, and Müller, graduating in medicine in Berlin in 1857. After practicing medicine for a short time he gave himself up to natural history, and in 1861 was appointed lecturer in zoology at Jena, and full professor in 1865. The fruit of a voyage to Messina was a monograph on radiolaria which attracted considerable attention. Among the many scientific studies by Haeckel may be cited the well-known "Challenger," reports on "Deep-Sea Medusae," "Radiolaria," "Siphonophoræ," and "Deep-Sea Keratosa." Haeckel now came forward as a champion of Darwinism and wrote his "General Morphology of the Organism" (1866), which was followed in 1868 by his "History of Creation," and in 1874 by his "Evolution of Man." After 1896 Haeckel, wandering from the realm of biology, became almost exclusively a vehement apostle of Monism and issued his "Riddle of the Universe," which was welcomed by the free-thinkers and the mass of untrained readers. This atheistic attack was completely broken down by Father John Gerard, S.J.'s "The Old Riddle and the Newest Answer." In many of Haeckel's writings his disregard for truth led him to manipulate facts to suit his theories, and in this way he succeeded in popularizing his theory of Evolution. But because his hatred was reserved for religion, because his forgeries were favorable to atheism and free-thought, because he denied free-will and yet advocated the emancipation of man from the fetters of dogma and morality, his dishonest methods were condoned by the universities and the press in Germany, England, and America. There was a limit, however, to this prostitution of science in the judgment of a few scientists, and finally Haeckel's frauds were mercilessly exposed by Erich Wasmann, S.J. A detailed exposé of his deceit is contained in "Haeckel's Frauds and Forgeries," by Assmuth and Hull.

Haileybury, DIOCESE OF (HAILEYBURENSIS), in Canada, is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Ottawa. It was erected 31 December, 1916, from the Vicariate Apostolic of Temiskaming, the boundaries remaining the same. The present incumbent and first bishop of the diocese, Rt. Rev. Elie-Anicet Latulipe was born at St. Anicet, 1859, ordained in Montreal, 1885, appointed titular Bishop of Cotenna and vicar apostolic of Temiskaming 1 October, 1908, consecrated 30 November following, transferred to Haileybury 17 January, 1916. In May, 1919, the Diocese of Haileybury was divided and a portion of it erected into the Vicariate Apostolic of Northern Ontario.

At the present time (1921) the Catholic population of the diocese is approximately 41,633, divided as follows: French-Canadian, 37,945; English speaking 3731; Indians, 1427; and other nationalities, 500. The diocese lost a prominent clergyman by the death of the Abbé Wilfrid Gagné, who was a victim of the forest fire 29 July, 1916. By present statistics there are 43 parishes, 45 churches, 27 missions, 18 convents for women, 55 secular and 4 regular clergy, 19 Brothers, 181 Sisters, 16 seminarians, 8 secondary schools for girls with 90 teachers and 800 pupils, 1 academy for boys with 13 teachers and 800 pupils, 115 elementary schools with 6957 pupils; some of these elementary schools receive a small appropriation from the Government. Among the charitable institutions are 4 hospitals and 2 orphanages and all the public institutions are open to the priests.

Haiti (cf. C. E., VII-114b), a republic embracing the western portion of the island of Haiti, has an estimated area of 10,204 sq. miles and a population of about 2,000,000, ninety per cent of whom are negroes. The largest city, Port-au-Prince, has an estimated population of 101,272; Cap Haïtien 18,952; Cayes 12,000; Gonaïves 30,000; Port-de-Paix 10,000.

EDUCATION.—Public education is free, the country being divided into 15 inspectors' districts. The sum allotted for public instruction amounts to nearly $1,000,000, but education is in an unsatisfactory state, especially in the small districts. In the treaty between Haiti and the United States (1915) no provision was made for the Department of Education as there was for the sanitary and engineering departments. Although education is compulsory; there is insufficient money to maintain an efficient system of education. The Catholics are the most frequent benefactors and are doing by far the greater part of the work of education, in the way of private schools under religious or part-religious supervision. In 1918 there were 854 public primary schools with 61,956 pupils, 29 secondary schools with 4816 pupils, 1 normal school, a school of law and one of medicine with 102 students.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—The revenue of Haiti is derived almost exclusively from customs paid in American gold on exports and imports. On 1 January, 1920, the debt of Haiti consisted of gold loans amounting to 149,894,087 francs; the internal debt amounted to $2,918,080. The total interest of the foreign debt now due is 28,417,632 francs. In 1918-19 the revenue amounted to $5,115,930; the expenditure to $2,918,080. From 1 October, 1919, to 30 June, 1920, the foreign trade of the republic amounted to $38,577,652 (imports, $17,117,608; exports, $21,460,044). In 1920 the exports to the United States were valued at $8,973,534; the imports from the same country at $19,990,380.

GOVERNMENT.—Haiti is a republic, with a constitution dating from 12 June, 1918. The legislative power is vested in a Chamber of Deputies on the basis of one member for each 60,000 inhabitants, the 42 members being chosen for two years by direct popular vote, and in a Senate of 15 members, chosen for 6 years, also by popular vote. The president is elected for four years by the two Chambers, and receives an annual salary of $24,000. Under the protectorate established by the United States in November, 1915, there is an armed constabulary, both urban and rural (established in 1916) which is drawn from the United States Marine Corps.

HISTORY (1911-1921).—From the establishment of the Dominican Republic in 1843 to 1914 Haiti was the scene of constant revolutions. Corrupt politics, incompetency and bad faith in public business brought about a deplorable state of affairs. Finally, in 1915, a new revolution occurred in which the government of Davilmar Théodore was overthrown and General Vilbrun Guillaume was elected president. Civil war broke out again in a few months; the president fled to the French Legation, where he was killed, and 150 political prisoners were put to death. The United States intervened, landing the United States Marine Corps to preserve order. In November, 1915, a convention was signed between the United States and Haiti, and a receivership of customs and Haitian resources for ten years was established under the control of the United States, and a native constabulary under United States officers was formed.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.—Ecclesiastically the Republic of Haiti is divided into the Archdiocese of Port-au-Prince and the dioceses of Gonaïves, Cayes, Cap Haïtien, and Port-de-Paix. Gonaïves is administered by Archbishop Conan of Port-au-Prince; Cayes is administered by Archbishop Pichon, auxiliary of Archbishop Conan; and Port-de-Paix is administered by Bishop Kersuzan of Cap Haïtien. The Holy See is represented in Haiti by Mgr. Frederico Fioretti, chargé d'affaires since the papal nuncio was transferred to Belgrade in 1920.

The Church has been the one creative force in Haiti since the signing of the Concordat with Rome in 1860. In a country hampered by poverty, illiteracy, and an unstable administration, the Catholic Church has striven for education and progress. The clergy and religious have suffered great hardships due to the system of graft prevalent in the republic, and the extreme poverty of the people. In the years 1906 to 1919 fifteen Christian Brothers died from starvation or its effects, because they had received no salaries and had no means of subsistence. Frequently the destruction of churches and schools by fire has been due to revolutionary incendiarism. In spite of these obstacles great strides have been made. This is evidenced by statistics for Port-au-Prince in 1864, giving 14 parishes, 1 annex, and 9 priests, and in 1920 giving 28 parishes, 28 priests, and a Catholic population of 736,920. Throughout the republic there are now 100 parishes and 350 chapels. These chapels have no resident priest, but are served about once every month by the parish priest, or one of his assistants, who spend one to two weeks instructing the people. To about 100 chapels are attached rural schools. Churches are built by an appropriation of the government, and furnished by the clergy, which last is a difficult task in the face of great poverty. Masses are said at four o'clock and at eight, the former to suit the convenience of the poorer people, and the latter for the higher classes. The clergy are held in great respect by the people. A seminary established at Petionville for native clergy has been turned to other ecclesiastical uses, as there were no students, but Archbishop Conan is now conducting a theological school for natives and has educated Haitian priests.

The minister of education of the Haitian Government estimates illiteracy at 80 per cent, and only 8 per cent of the population of school age attend school. Against this condition the Catholic Church has labored unceasingly. The Christian Brothers opened their first school at Port-au-Prince in 1864; of the 300 boys who applied for admission only 150 could be accommodated. A second school was opened at Jacmel in 1866, in which year the school at Port-au-Prince was burned down. Another school opened in 1867 was also destroyed by fire. The Brothers were obliged to abandon their educational work in Haiti until 1871, when a school was again opened at Jacmel. This was followed by foundations at Port-au-Prince and elsewhere, until in 1881 there were 46 Brothers teaching 12 schools with an average attendance of 2700 boys. By 1887 they were assisted by 9 native teachers. Meantime the Brothers were suffering untold hardships from lack of food, clothes, and books, and many had died from yellow fever and other causes. But the work of education continued. In 1897 there were 98 Brothers teaching 5467 boys. A succession of hardships, such as incendiarism and entire lack of funds, required the closing of many schools from 1902 to 1912, when the St. Louis de Gonzague College and chapel were partly wrecked in the blowing up of the National Palace. In 1914, 26 Brothers of military age enlisted in the World War. In 1917 there were 57 Brothers, assisted by 23 native teachers, conducting 8 Government schools and the St. Louis de Gonzague attended by 3078 boys. After the armistice (1918) 6 schools were reopened. According to a convention signed by the Brothers and the Haitian Government in 1921 and approved by the financial adviser under the treaty of 1915, the Brothers are now receiving a salary of $50 a month, which will enable them successfully to continue their work. There are three Catholic colleges in Haiti: Our Lady of Perpetual Help at Cap Haïtien; Little Seminary and College, of St. Martial; and St. Louis de Gonzague at Port-au-Prince. There are 12 schools for boys, 11 supported by the Government, and the primary department of St. Louis de Gonzague for pupils who pay for tuition. These schools are conducted by about 80 Christian Brothers and 31 laymen. The average attendance at the colleges is 1100 to 1200; Christian Brothers schools from 2900 to 3000.

The Sisters conduct 45 schools. Under the direction of the Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny are 21 schools and 3 Government hospitals. The Daughters of Wisdom have 23 schools and 5 Government hospitals. The Daughters of Mary conduct 2 domestic science schools. The average attendance at the girls intermediate or high schools is 1000 to 1100; Sisters' schools from 4000 to 4100. General ecclesiastical statistics for the Republic of Haiti are: secular clergy 162, priests and Brothers of the Congregation of the Holy Ghost 19, priests and Brothers of the Company of Mary 18, Christian Brothers 73, Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny 171, Daughters of Wisdom 203, Daughters of Mary 8.

An event of recent interest was the testimony of Fr. Louis Marie Le Sidaner, rector of Thoma-seau, before the hearings of the Senate Committee 2 December, 1921. He testified against the occupation of Haiti, and cited numerous incidents of importance. The temporary chaplain of the U. S. Navy and Marine Corps in Haiti (of whom one-third are Catholic) is Fr. Marcas, C.S.Sp. General religious statistics give: Episcopians 2500, Wes-Ieyans 2500, Baptists 2000, Methodists 1500, Seventh Day Adventists 300.

Hajdu-Dorogh, DIOCESE OF (HAJDU-DOROGHENSIS; cf. C. E., XVI-35d), Greek Rite, suffragan of Esztergom, Hungary. The episcopal see is at Hajdu-Dorogh, but the residence is at Debrecsin; the liturgical language is ancient Greek. The first and present bishop is Rt. Rev. Stephen Miklossy, b. at Rakoez, 22 August, 1857, ordained 1884, pastor of Satoraljanhely, diocese of Munkacs, dean of the countship of Zenplen, elected bishop 23 June, 1913, and consecrated the following October. In 1914, an assault having been made upon the bishop, he transferred his residence to Nyiregyháza. In 1913 there were in the diocese 73,225 Catholics, of whom 14,220 were Rumanians.

Hakodate, DIOCESE OF (HACODATENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-116a), in Japan, is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Tokio. On 12 February, 1915, this diocese ceded part of its territory to the Prefecture Apostolic of Sapporo and part to the Prefecture Apostolic of Nygata. It now (1921) comprises 1 province and 4 departments; Oshima, of which province Hakodate is the capital, Aomori, Iwate, Niyugi, and Fukushima, and extends from 37° to 42° north latitude, and from 139° to 142° east longitude. The total population numbers 4,500,000, all Japanese with the exception of a few families of Russian refugees and a few foreign business representatives.

The Aino aborigines, who were originally found in this diocese, belonged to the territory which is now a part of the Prefecture of Sapporo. The present incumbent and first bishop of Hakodate, Rt. Rev. Alexander Berlioz, member of the Society of Foreign Missions, to whose care this diocese is entrusted, was born in the Diocese of Chambéry, France, 1852, ordained 1875, went as a missionary to Japan, 1879, appointed titular Bishop of Calinda and Vicar Apostolic of Hakodate 24 April, 1891, and made bishop of Hakodate 15 June following, consecrated at Tokio, 25 July, 1891.

The two principal events of the diocese during recent years have been the return of the missionaries who were mobilized during the World War, and the visit of the papal delegate, Mgr. Fumasoni-Biondi, in August, 1920. This event happily coincided with the celebration of the tercentary of the sending of Hasekura Tsunenaga in 1620 as envoy from the Japanese court to the courts of Spain and the Vatican, where he was baptized. The papal delegate was invited by the civil authorities to participate in this celebration, which was religious as well as patriotic, since the seventeenth-century hero thus honored was called upon to publicly defend the Faith, and his son died for it.

A most prominent member of this mission, and a noted botanist as well, Rt. Rev. Urbain Faurie, (q.v.), d. in the Island of Formosa, 4 July, 1915. He was one of the pioneers in the study of Japanese plant life and was held in high esteem by the personnel of the Botanical Garden of Tokio, as well as in other countries to which he sent specimens.

The religious communities established in this diocese, in addition to the members of the Society of the Foreign Missions, are: the Trappists with 54 religious, Trappistines with 60 religious, the Sisters of St. Paul of the Cross with 18 religious, and the Cistercians with 60 religious; all of these orders have a number of native members. By present statistics the Catholics of the diocese number 2718, showing a slight diminution since 1919, owing mostly to emigration caused by the poverty in this territory. There are 17 parishes, 17 distinctly Christian districts, but in general the Christians are scattered, 26 churches and chapels, 17 of which are blessed, 1 preparatory seminary, 2 seminarians, 21 European and 3 native priests. The State reserves all jurisdiction over primary schools, and obliges all other schools to teach the classics, but the universities are allowed comparative liberty. However, there is 1 Catholic school for boys which is tolerated because of the almost deserted region in which it is located, and in this there are 12 pupils. There are three schools for girls under the Sisters of St. Paul of the Cross, which follow the official program and which are practically self-supporting; 1 of these schools is situated at Hakodate with 162 pupils, 1 at Morioka with 230 pupils, 1 at Sendai with 220 pupils. Various charitable institutions include, 1 orphanage under the Trappist Fathers with 14 children, 1 under the Trappistines with 35 children, 3 dispensaries conducted by the Sisters of St. Paul of the Cross which cared for 46,224 cases in 1921, and two farms. During the past year (1921-22) there were in this diocese 116 baptisms of pagans, 78 of whom were at the point of death, 146 baptisms of infants at the point of death, 67 Christian children, 1128 first confessions and 1111 first communions.

Halicz, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See LWOW.

Halifax, ARCHDIOCESE OF (HALIFAXIENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-117c), comprises the peninsula of Nova Scotia, with the exception of three counties, and the Bermuda Islands. There are 300,000 inhabitants, 55,000 Catholics, 74 secular priests, 26 regulars, 32 seminarians, 37 parishes, 86 churches, 10 chapels, 2 congregations of men and 4 of women, 300 religious, and 4000 children in the Catholic schools. The present archbishop is Most Rev. Edward J. McCarthy, consecrated 1906. On 15 December, 1920, was celebrated the centenary of the diocese; the actual date of erection was 1842, but the Acadian territory was separated from Quebec in 1817, and the first vicar apostolic, Mgr. Burke, was consecrated in 1818.

Hamburg (cf. C. E., VII-121b).—A city in the former empire of Germany and now called the Free City of Hamburg in the Republic of Hamburg. According to the census of 1919 there were 1,064,000 inhabitants in the state and 999,000 in the city. In 1910 there were 51,200 Catholics and 19,500 Jews in the state. The state of Hamburg consists of the Hanseatic Free City itself and 4 Landherrenschaften: 1 Landherrenschaft der Geestlande, 2 Landherrenschaft der Marschlande, 3 Landherrenschaft Bergedorf, 4 Landherrenschaft Ritzelbüttel. The Protestant population is divided into 5 church districts with 33 parish churches, 6 chapels and about 100 clergymen. The Catholics in the Vicariate Apostolic number 50,000. There are 8 Catholic parishes, the oldest of which is St. Ansgar, which dates from the seventeenth century and is generally known as Little St. Michael's. Next comes St. Boniface's Church, dating from 1910. About 25 priests are engaged in caring for the needs of these churches. Until 1920 the State refused to support the Catholic schools. According to the new constitution the state is compelled to contribute to their maintenance, which it does in a considerable measure, the deficiency being made up by the Catholics of the vicariate.

There are altogether 173 elementary or public schools (Volkschulen), and of these 11 are Catholic parochial schools. The secondary schools include 1 Catholic high school for boys, 1 Höhere Schule (9 year curriculum, mainly classics, for boys); 1

Realschule (Latin, science, and modern languages); 1 Progynasium (6 year classical course). Among the 50 girls' high schools one is Catholic, and is conducted by the Ursuline Sisters. A Catholic lyceum has been opened at Holsdamm. Hamburg belongs to the Vicariate Apostolic of the Northern Missions under the Bishop of Osnabruck (q.v.).

HAMILTON, DIOCESE OF (HAMILTONENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-123a), in Ontario, suffragan to the Archdiocese of Toronto, is under the administration of its fourth bishop, Rt. Rev. Thomas Joseph Dowling, D.D. Bishop Dowling has filled the see since 1889, having been transferred from Peterborough, where he was consecrated in 1887. On account of his great number of years in the episcopate he is Dean of the Canadian bishops, and on the occasion of the golden jubilee of his priesthood in 1914 he was made an assistant at the Pontifical Throne.

During the World War the scarcity of priests in the diocese was so great that a number had to be borrowed from London. Only one of the enlisted priests, however, was sent overseas, but the Catholics of the diocese went far beyond their percentage in enlistments, the number from the Cathedral parish alone being 676 before conscription went into effect, and all the other parishes show similar records.

On 9 May, 1918, the diocese lost its vicar general by the death of Rt. Rev. Mgr. John M. Mahoney, D.C.L., and domestic prelate. He was one of Ontario's most distinguished priests, and a well known authority on school law as well as a public spirited citizen, active in charitable and patriotic work.

The present statistics of the diocese (1921) show 50 parishes, 93 churches, 43 missions with 10 stations, 1 convent of Christian Brothers, 12 convents for women, 56 secular and 20 regular clergy, 200 nuns, 21 seminarians, 1 college for men with 15 teachers and attendance of 250, 1 high school with 10 teachers and attendance of 250 (110 boys and 140 girls), 2 academies with 18 teachers and attendance of 300, 50 elementary schools with 700 teachers and attendance of 8000. The various charitable institutions of the diocese are: 1 Infants' Home at Hamilton, 1 orphanage at Hamilton and 1 at St. Agatha, 1 hospital at Hamilton and 1 at Guelph, 1 refuge home at Dundas, 1 at St. Agatha, and 1 at Guelph. All the public institutions admit the priests of the diocese to minister in them and a government grant is made to the Catholic hospitals, homes and orphanages. Among the clergy the Priests' Eucharistic League is organized, and among the laity the Holy Name Society and the Catholic Women's League. The "Catholic Magazine" is published monthly in the diocese.

Hansjacob, HEINRICH, writer of Black Forest village stories (Schwarzwaelder Dordichter), b. at Haslach, Baden, 19 August, 1836; ordained priest at twenty-six; for fifteen years pastor at Hagnau, a small village on the Bodensee; transferred to Freiburg, 1884, where he has since remained as Stadtpfarrer in charge of Saint Martin's. From 1871 to 1881, Hansjacob was a member of the Landtag of the Grand Duchy of Baden, and twice, in 1870 and in 1873, suffered imprisonment because of his staunch defense of liberty during the Baden Kulturkampf. His writings comprise over thirty volumes, mostly narratives and memoirs, with travels and two historical novels. The most popular are "Ausmeiner Jugendzeit" (Heidelberg, 1880); "Wilde Kirschen" (1888); "Schneeballen" (3 vol., 1892-93), and "Waldleute" (Stuttgart, 1897). These have been published widely in America, as serials in secular weeklies, and are representative of Hansjacob's style and his charmingly original method in the village story. The Dorfgeschichte was perhaps, first introduced by Jeremias Gotthelf and Alexander Weill, and later made popular by the great success of Berthold Auerbach's "Schwarzwaelder Dorfgeschichte" (1843), and now has its most original representative in Heinrich Hansjacob, whose striking and entertaining character sketches of Das Volk, in which he excels, are always from life, and in their real names and locations. These sketches are so remarkable in the simple straightforward, good humored manner of the people he describes, and are so reliable, that they have served as sources of information to students of the sociology and political economy of the romantic Schwarzwald. Hansjacob follows no school of writing and recognizes no principles of narration. He will have none of the "gray theory" of books of rhetoric, but insists that he will follow only life and custom as he finds them among the people. His point of view is consistently idealistic, but in his treatment, which is so personal as to be almost universally biographical, he is an unerring realist. The restraint and dignity of his language, and his chaste and unembellished sentences, are suggestive of the classics. Hansjacob represents, as perhaps no other living writer, the very soul of the people of the German highlands.

VINCENT HENRY HUCK.

Harbor Grace, DIOCESE OF (PORTUS GRATIAE; cf. C. E., VII-133c), suffragan of St. John's, Newfoundland, comprises the northeast portion of the Island of Newfoundland, and Labrador. The Indian missions in the interior of Labrador are attended from Harbor Grace. There are 23 secular priests in the diocese, 40 churches, 94 stations, 5 convents (3 of the Sisters of the Presentation and 2 of the Sisters of Mercy), 2 academies, and a total of 115 schools with 129 teachers. The Catholic population is 24,000, and the Protestant population is 74,000. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. John March, consecrated 1906.

Harrisburg, DIOCESE OF (HARRISBURGENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-143a), ceded three of its original counties, Fulton, Center, and Clinton, to the Diocese of Altoona, which was formed in 1901. It now comprises 15 counties with an area of 7565 sq. miles, and where it originally contained 25,000 Catholics with 22 priests and 40 churches, it now contains a Catholic population of 80,252, comprising English-speaking people, German, Croatian, Polish, Slovak, Magyar, Lithuanian, and Italian.

After seventeen years in the See of Harrisburg, the Rt. Rev. John Walter Shanahan, third bishop of the diocese, died on 19 February, 1916. At the time of his death the number of parishes had increased to 74 and 120 priests were administering to approximately 80,000 Catholics. Bishop Shanahan was succeeded by the Rt. Rev. Philip R. McDevitt, consecrated 21 September, 1916. He was born in Philadelphia on 12 July, 1858, and was superintendent of the parish schools of that diocese from 1899 to 1916. On 30 January, 1917, occurred the death of Rt. Rev. Mgr. John Jos. Koch, D.D., vicar general of the diocese, pastor of St. Edward's Church, Shamokin, and for fifty-three years a pioneer missionary in Central Pennsylvania. Born in the province of Lorraine, France, on 5 February, 1840, he came to America early in 1862, after completing his preparatory studies in the college of Pont-à-Mousson and the Grand Séminaire of Nancy. He received minor orders from Mgr. Darboy, afterwards Archbishop of Paris, and later assassinated in the time of the Commune, and after completing his studies at St. Charles Borromeo Seminary, Philadelphia, was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Wood 27 February, 1863.

On 29 September, 1918, the golden jubilee of the diocese was celebrated, and a memorial to Bishop Shanahan erected in the cathedral was unveiled by the Most Rev. John Bonzano, D.D., Apostolic Delegate. During the World War the diocese gave four chaplains and two auxiliary chaplains to the service, and the laity responded promptly to all patriotic calls.

Religious in the diocese of Harrisburg include: Men: Franciscans, Minor Conventuals, Fathers of the Holy Ghost, Redemptorists, Irish Capuchins, and Friars Minor; Orders of women: Sisters of Mercy, Sisters Servants of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, Sisters of St. Joseph, of the Holy Cross, of Charity (of Mt. St. Vincent), of Christian Charity, of Third Order of St. Francis, of St. Francis, O. M. C., Felician Sisters, O. S. F., of Sts. Cyril and Methodius, of St. Casimir, and Sisters Adorers of the Most Precious Blood. Priests number 103 secular and 20 regular; ecclesiastical students 37; churches with resident priests 75; missions 18; parish schools 48 with 12,450 pupils; orphan asylums 3 with 297 inmates; hospital 1; academies 3 with 243 pupils, 2 high schools with 8 teachers and attendance of 144 (51 boys, 93 girls), 2 training schools with 11 teachers and attendance of 43. All public institutions admit Catholic priests. Among the clergy the Clerical Purgatorial Association and the Priests' Eucharistic League are organized, and among the laity the K. of C., A. O. H., K. of St. George, Blessed Virgin's Sodality, Holy Name Society, St. Vincent de Paul, and Altar Guilds.

Hartford, DIOCESE OF (HARTFORDIENSIS; cf. C. E., VI-144a).—John J. Nilan, the seventh and present Bishop of Hartford, was born at Newburyport, 1 August, 1855. He received his early education in the elementary and high schools of his native town, made his classical studies at Nicolet, Canada, and his course of philosophy and theology at St. Joseph's Seminary, Troy, New York, where he was ordained 21 December, 1878. He exercised the sacred ministry in several parishes of the Archdiocese of Boston, where his zeal and efficiency won for him a promotion to the permanent rectorship of St. Joseph's Church in Amesbury. It was during his pastorate in Amesbury that he was chosen to fill the vacancy in the see of Hartford. He was consecrated in the cathedral at Hartford on 28 April, 1910, the diocese having been vacant since the death of Bishop Tierney (5 October, 1908).

From the very outset of his episcopal career he gave evidence of that zeal and energy which always characterized his work in the sacred ministry. Under his leadership and direction the diocese has been enriched by 1 large infant asylum, 2 academies for young ladies, 40 parishes, 17 parochial schools, and splendidly equipped additions to 4 hospitals. He established a Diocesan Bureau of Social Service, with headquarters in Hartford and branches in several of the large industrial centers, and he has infused new life and vigor into the Holy Name and St. Vincent de Paul Societies. He applied for an auxiliary in 1919 and received Rt. Rev. John Gregory Murray, D.D., titular Bishop of Flavia, who had been his chancellor for nine years. Bishop Murray was born at Waterbury in the diocese of Hartford, 26 February, 1877, student at Louvain, where he was ordained 14 April, 1900, and was elected bishop 18 December, 1919, and consecrated at Hartford by Mgr. Bonzano 28 April, 1920.

PRESENT CONDITION OF THE DIOCESE.—Within the limits of the State of Connecticut there are at present 545,147 Catholics, while the non-Catholic population is 859,924 (1921). They are ministered to by 450 priests. The number of parishes in the diocese is 211; of these 157 are English-speaking churches, 13 French, 6 German, 2 Hungarian, 10 Italian, 6 Lithuanian, 1 Maronite, 19 Polish, 4 Slovak, 1 Slovenian. There are also missions for the Syrians and Chaldeans. There is a preparatory seminary with 163 students, while 150 students are making their course of philosophy and theology in Canada, Europe, and the United States. The religious orders of men are represented by the Dominican Friars at New Haven, Franciscan Friars Minor at Winsted, Franciscan Conventuals at Bridgeport, Jesuits at South Norwalk, Missionaries of La Salette at Hartford and Danielson, Fathers of the Congregation of St. Charles Borromeo at New Haven, Vincentian Fathers at Derby and New Haven, and the Fathers of the Holy Ghost at Darien and Ridgefield. There are two seminaries of religious orders with 54 students.

There are 1680 religious women in the diocese, representing 24 communities. The Sisters of Mercy (721 in community) conduct 2 academies, 37 parochial schools, 1 infant asylum, 1 orphan asylum, and 1 home for the aged. They care for and instruct 22,900 persons. The Sisters of Charity of Our Lady Mother of Mercy (105 in community) conduct 1 hospital, 1 academy, and 4 parochial schools. The total number of people under their care is 2954. The Sisters of Charity of Emmittsburg (46 in community) have the care of 1 hospital, 1 day nursery, and 3 parochial schools; they care for 2010 persons. The Sisters of St. Joseph (243 in community) have charge of 2 hospitals, 1 academy, 1 school for boys, and 8 parochial schools; they are responsible for the care of 3700 persons. The Sisters of the Congregation de Notre Dame have 1 academy in which they train 200 pupils. The Sisters of St. Dominic conduct 1 academy and 1 parochial school, having under their charge 333 pupils. The Little Sisters of the Poor maintain 1 home for the aged poor, which has accommodation for 168 inmates. The Sisters of the Holy Ghost (168 in community) conduct 2 homes for working girls and 8 parochial schools. They also care for the sick poor in their homes. They are responsible for the care of about 4000 people. The Daughters of St. Vincent de Paul conduct 1 hospital and 1 day nursery. The Sisters of the Good Shepherd have charge of 1 house of correction for wayward girls. The Missionary Apostolic Zelatrices Sisters of the Sacred Heart conduct 1 orphanage and 2 day nurseries, in which they care for and instruct 265 children. Other religious communities which furnish teaching staffs for parochial schools in the diocese are: the Felician Sisters of St. Francis, Sisters of SS. Cyril and Methodius, Sisters of Divine Charity, Sisters of the Holy Family of Nazareth, Sisters of the Holy Cross and of the Seven Dolors, Sisters of the Assumption, Schools Sisters of Notre Dame, Polish Sisters of St. Joseph, Sisters of the Resurrection, and Sisters of St. Francis.

Hartmann, FELIX VON, Cardinal, b. in Westphalia 15 December; d. at Cologne on 11 November, 1919; he was ordained priest in 1874, and then became chaplain of Santa Maria dell'Anima in Rome. In 1880 he was Vicar at Havizbech and then private secretary of Mgr. Dingelstadt at Emmerich and subsequently Vicar General, Dean and Prothonotary in 1907, and consecrated Bishop of Munster 6 June, 1911. In 1913 he succeeded Cardinal Fischer in the see of Cologne, receiving the Grand Cross of Malta in 1914. He was a member of the Prussian House of Lords in 1916, and was created Cardinal Priest 25 May, 1914, with the title of St. John at the Latin Gate. He died on the first anniversary of the signing of the armistice.

Hauran, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See BOSTRA AND HAURAN.

Havana (SAN CRISTOBAL DE LA HABANA), DIOCESE OF (AVANENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-153c), suffragan of Santiago de Cuba, comprises the provinces of La Habana and Matanzas, with an area of 2818 square miles. The Catholic population is 500,000 and there are: 100 secular priests, 80 regulars, 8 colleges for boys with 1730 pupils; 14 boarding schools for young girls with 2200 pupils; 5 asylums, including 1 home for old people; 1 hospital; 2 houses of the Good Shepherd; 60 schools for catechumens; 57 parishes; and 55 churches and chapels. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Pedro Gonzalès y Estrada, born in Havana, 1865, appointed 16 September, 1903, and consecrated 28 October following.

Hawaii, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XIII-438a), formerly known as SANDWICH ISLANDS (SANDWIGIENSIS IN OCEANIA), comprises the Hawaiian Islands which now belong to the United States. According to the last census the entire population numbered approximately 256,912, comprising native Hawaiians, Portuguese, Spaniards, Porto Ricans, Filipinos, Chinese, Koreans, Japanese, Caucasians. About 50 per cent of the native Hawaiians are Catholic and in all there are from 70,000 to 75,000 Catholics in the vicariate.

At the present time (1921) the vicariate is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Libert Hubert Boeynaems, consecrated 25 July, 1903. The Church is constantly gaining ground in this territory, but the many different tongues spoken on the islands is one of the greatest handicaps. On 20 November, 1921, word was received that the pope had approved the transfer of the Hawaiian Islands by the Congregation of the Propaganda to the jurisdiction of the Apostolic Delegation at Washington. The islands were formerly under the jurisdiction of the Apostolic Delegation of Australia. Since 1912 the vicariate has lost many zealous workers from the ranks of the clergy. Among these was Rev. Wendelin Moeller, of the Congregation of the Sacred Hearts, successor to Father Damien in the Leper Settlement, born in Germany 21 March, 1850, ordained in Paris 26 May, 1877, transferred to Hawaiian Islands 1884, died 1 September, 1914. During the World War many of the citizens were drafted and one of the priests of the territory served as their chaplain, but none of these men were sent overseas. However, numbers of the men volunteered, and of these many gave up their lives.

In all there are 30 churches and about 95 chapels and missions, attended by 39 Fathers of the Sacred Hearts and 1 priest of the Society of Mary. Works of education and charity are conducted by the Brothers of Mary (from Dayton, Ohio) numbering 58, Franciscan Sisters (from Syracuse, N. Y.) numbering about 24, and 7 Brothers of the Sacred Hearts.

Very marked progress has been made in education in recent years, and now St. Louis College in Honolulu, under the Brothers of Mary, has an enrollment of 1015 boys, their school in Hilo (Island of Hawaii) has 319 boys, and in Wailuku (Island of Maui) 359 boys; under the Sisters of the Sacred Hearts there are, in Honolulu, a free school for the poor and a select school and boarding department with 552 girls; in Kaimuki an academy with 250 girls; under the Franciscan Sisters a school for girls in Hilo with 325 children. Among the charitable institutions there are: 2 orphanages, the Kapiolani Home for non-leprous girls, the Bishop Home in Molokai for leprous girls and women, and the Baldwin Home for boys and men on the same island, the Father Louis Home for boys in Hilo, and the Malulani Hospital (County Hospital). In addition to these institutions there is a colony in Honolulu of 55 girls, born of leper parents but not themselves afflicted, under the care of the Franciscan Sisters, and in Hilo Rev. Father Aloys has gathered together some 53 orphan and suffering boys. All the public institutions admit the priests and they are permitted to give religious instruction to the Catholic children in the public schools after classes are dismissed. The government gives financial support to the leper homes and the home for children of leper parents.

The Apostleship of Prayer, Confraternities of the Holy Rosary and Holy Scapular, Sodality of the Blessed Virgin, Propagation of the Faith, Society of the Holy Childhood, Third Order of St. Francis, Columbus Welfare Club, Young Men's and Young Ladies' Institutes, Holy Name Society and Catholic Ladies Society are established in the islands.

Healy, JOHN, Archbishop of Tuam, historian, b. at Ballinacfad, Sligo, Ireland, on 14 November, 1841; d. at Tuam on 16 March, 1918. He entered the diocesan college at Summerhill, Athlone in 1860, and proceeding thence to Maynooth for philosophy and theology, was ordained in 1867. He next taught for two years at Summerhill, and then spent seven years in pastoral work. In 1879 he qualified for the chair of classics and the chair of theology at Maynooth College; selecting the latter he lectured there till 1883, when he was appointed prefect of the Dunboyne Establishment. The following years he was made titular Bishop of Macra and coadjutor to Dr. Duggan of Clonfert, whom he succeeded in 1896; and in 1903 he was transferred to Tuam. Archbishop Healy, who was only less interested in the temporal than in the spiritual welfare of the Irish people, was an able administrator. He was a member of the commission that reported to Parliament on the Irish University question, and it was largely due to him in conjunction with Archbishop Walsh that a solution of that problem, satisfactory to Catholics, was reached. He was also a member of the Senate of the National University of Ireland, a Governor of University College, Galway, vice-president of the Society of Antiquaries of Ireland, a member of the Irish Board of Agriculture and of the Royal Irish Academy. Brought in touch with nature in its wild and varied moods in Connaught, his natural gift of oratory rendered him a charming extempore speaker, while some of his studied addresses, like his speech on the occasion of Edmund Burke's centenary and his address at the Eucharistic Congress in London were brilliant.

From his boyhood Archbishop Healy had an enthusiastic devotion for St. Patrick, and to this love we owe his excellent "Life and Writings of St. Patrick," and the revival of the ancient pilgrimage to the summit of Croaghpatrick, overlooking the Atlantic, where St. Patrick prayed and fasted forty days and nights (cf. C. E., 509-10). In addition he is the author of "Ireland's Ancient Schools and Scholars," a work which has enjoyed great popularity; "A Record of the Maynooth Centenary Celebrations," and a volume of "Papers and Addresses." His "Irish Essays, Literary and Historical," contain invaluable information about Ireland's ruined monasteries and shrines. Though he was conservative in his politics, as in his theology, one of his poems, "Red Hugh's Address to his Soldiers before the Battle of the Curlew Mountains," is so full of patriotic fervor that the children's reader in which it was printed was banned from the National Schools by the authorities. Archbishop Healy, as the founder and president of the Catholic Truth Society of Ireland, did excellent work in helping to popularize good healthy literature in his country.

Heart of Mary, CONGREGATIONS OF THE—

CONGREGATION OF THE IMMACULATE HEART OF MARY (CONGREGATION OF SCHEUTVELD; cf. C. E., VII-167c).

—The Constitutions of the Congregation, approved ad experimentum in 1888, were definitively approved by papal decree, 20 July, 1900. The Congregation came under the jurisdiction of the Sacred Congregation of Propaganda, 18 March, 1921. Ven. Théophile Verbiest, founder of the order, was succeeded by Mgr. Vranckx, who remained at the head of the Congregation until 1888. The general superiors since 1888 are: Van Aertselaer (1888-98); Van Hecke (1898-1908); Albert Botty (1908-09); Florent Mortier (1909-20); Joseph Rutten (1920-). The Congregation now numbers 680 members. There are 171 Fathers in the Vicariates Apostolic of Central, Eastern, and Southwestern Mongolia and in the Vicariate Apostolic of Northern Kansu and the Prefecture Apostolic of Southern Kansu, China. They are assisted by 46 native priests and in charge of 122,904 Catholics and 44,201 catechumens, 469 churches and chapels, and 733 elementary schools with 18,297 children. The three Vicariates Apostolic of Mongolia have each a seminary with a total of 195 seminarians. There are 5 normal schools with 202 aspirant-teachers, and 10 colleges and boarding schools with 373 pupils.

In Africa, in Belgian Congo, the Congregation is in charge of the three Vicariates Apostolic of Leopoldville, New Antwerp, and Kassai, where 114 priests and 47 lay brothers attend 157,716 Catholics and 155,372 catechumens. There are 270 schools with 7,381 children and 39 churches and chapels. At the hospital in Kangu 250 sick people are attended daily, and 33 lazarets are established, especially for those afflicted with the sleeping sickness. In 1907 the first band of Scheut Fathers landed in Manila, Philippine Islands. They were on their way to the Mountain Province, to start the evangelization of the pagan tribes. They now number 45 priests and 7 lay brothers in charge of about 10,000 Christians and 500 catechumens from the hill tribes, and also of about 92,000 Catholics converted by the Spanish Friars and living in the lowlands in some parishes around Manila and in the Dioceses of Nueva Sagovia and Tuguegarao in Northern Luzon. They have 75 churches and chapels and 56 schools with an attendance of 7,654 pupils. At the end of 1919 the Congregation sent a missionary to the Indians on the Mississippi; two Fathers are established at Philadelphia, in the Diocese of Natchez, Miss.; and a procurator of the Congregation is living in New York City.

During the war many Fathers and students took refuge in England, and devoted themselves to the spiritual care of the numerous Belgian refugees.

At the invitation of the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster three Fathers have remained in England and do some parish work among the Belgians of London. In recent years the Congregation lost two of its distinguished members: Rt. Rev. Bishop Bermyn (d. 1915), Vicar Apostolic of Southwest Mongolia and immediate successor of the martyred Bishop Hamer; and Rev. Albert Botty (d. 1919), former superior general. The organ of the Congregation is edited in Flemish ("Missiën van Scheut"), and in French ("Missions de Scheut").

DAUGHTERS OF THE IMMACULATE HEART OF MARY (cf. C. E., VII-167b).—This association is resident in six or seven small communities at Peunes, France.

DAUGHTERS OF THE MOST HOLY AND IMMACULATE HEART OF MARY (cf. C. E., VII-167b).—Founded 2 July, 1848, at Olot in the Diocese of Gerona, Spain, by Very Rev. Joaquin Mosmitja y Puig, for the Christian education of young girls, and approved by the Holy See in 1849. The community prospered and houses were established in the Diocese of Gerona. In 1870 Rt. Rev. Thaddeus Amat, C.M., D.D., Bishop of Monterey and Los Angeles, in quest of a teaching sisterhood for his diocese, visited Gerona and appealed to the venerable founder of the Sisters of the Immaculate Heart. In the summer of the following year a party of ten Sisters left Spain, and in August of that same year began their work in California at Gilroy, the northernmost parish of Monterey and Los Angeles. The congregation achieved great success in the educational field and now numbers about 125 members in California, conducting the Immaculate Heart College in Hollywood, to which the mother-house is attached, two academies, one at San Luis Obispo and the other at San Bernardino, the cathedral high school and seven parochial grammar schools in Los Angeles and vicinity, the total enrollment in all being about 5,000.

HANDMAIDS OF THE MOST PURE HEART OF MARY, a congregation of colored Sisters founded by Fr. Ignatius Lissner in 1916. In September of that year Fr. Lissner gathered together a few pious young women, gave them a little house next to St. Benedict's School in Savannah, and instructed and directed them in the missionary work intended for them. Three years later he drafted a permanent constitution which received the approval of Bishop Kelly of Savannah, 12 March, 1919. The Sisters follow the Rule of St. Augustine, adapted to their works of charity and mercy. Their occupation is the practical education of colored children, visiting the sick and assisting them in every way if they are in need. They carefully watch over unprotected children, and provide work and employment for them, to enable them to become self-supporting. The Sisters at present teach children at St. Mary's School and St. Anthony's, West Savannah. The community numbers 6 professed Sisters, 4 novices, and 3 postulants. Mother Mary Theodore is the first Superior.

SISTERS OF THE SACRED HEART OF MARY (cf. C. E., VII-167d).—The Sisters' houses in Portugal were vacated by order of the Government in 1910. Three new foundations replaced these in 1911: two in Brazil (at Rio de Janeiro and Ciudad D'uba) and one at Tuy in Spain. All are flourishing academies. The nuns who had been secularized re-entered their convent at Oporto in October, 1920, and at Braga in May, 1921. A foundation was made at Cambrai in France, October, 1913, and on 1 October, 1921, an academy was opened in London. A Marymount Annex is in process of construction in Paris and is to be opened 1 October, 1922. The Sisters have under their care colleges, finishing schools, academies, training schools for teachers, technical schools, parochial schools, and orphanages. The terms of office of general and local superiors are in accordance with the new Code of Canon Law.

Hebrews, EPISTLE TO THE (cf. C. E., VII-181c).—On 24 June, 1914, the Pontifical Biblical Commission issued, on the subject of the authorship of the Epistle to the Hebrews, a decision which, whilst reaffirming, on the one hand, the canonical character of this epistle, declares, on the other hand, that it ought to be held as the genuine work of St. Paul. The reasons adduced in some quarters, namely, the absence of the apostle's name and customary introduction, the remarkable purity of diction and elegance of style, the manner of quoting and arguing from the Old Testament, and the alleged differences of doctrine with the well authenticated letters of St. Paul, afford no solid basis to a denial of the Pauline authorship; they are, moreover, outweighed by far by the striking similitude of the teaching and its wording and of the warnings and exhortations, nay even by the close resemblance in the wording and sentences with those of the other Pauline writings. To say that St. Paul is the author is, of course, to attribute to the apostle under Divine inspiration the conception and expression of all the ideas; but not necessarily the elaboration of the outward form of the epistle.

Hedley, JOHN CUTHBERT, Bishop of Newport, b. at Morpeth, England, 15 April, 1837; d. at Llanishen, near Cardiff, 11 November, 1915. He was the son of Edward A. Hedley, a physician, and at the age of thirteen was sent to the Benedictine College at Ampleforth in Yorkshire. On the completion of his college education he joined the English Congregation of Benedictines and was professed at St. Lawrence's Abbey, Ampleforth, on 10 November, 1855. Seven years later he was raised to the priesthood (19 October, 1862), and shortly afterwards he was sent to lecture in the house of studies at Belmont. On 29 September, 1873, he was consecrated by Archbishop Manning as Bishop of Casaropolis in partibus as auxiliary to his fellow-Benedictine, Dr. Brown, Bishop of Newport and Menevia, whom he succeeded on 18 February, 1881. In 1891 he was appointed assistant at the papal throne, and in 1896 was named president of the Catholic University Board; to him is largely due the approval given to Catholics attending Oxford and Cambridge. Bishop Hedley's influence on the Catholic life of England was important, for his advice was constantly sought by the members of the English hierarchy. He was sympathetic with those whose modern ways of thought rendered religious belief difficult. His great openness of mind is attributed by Wilfrid Ward—whose predecessor he had been for a time as editor of the "Dublin Review"—to the influence of Newman's works. "It needs a very rare and very sympathetic imagination to realize without personal contact an intellectual world wholly dissimilar to that in which you live. It is one of Bishop Hedley's triumphs that he did so to a remarkable extent." Dr. Hedley's sermons, which he was accustomed to deliver by reading, are real literature; they have been published in three volumes under the titles "Our Divine Saviour," "The Light of Life," and "The Christian Inheritance." Among the most memorable of his addresses are the funeral panegyrics on Cardinals Manning and Vaughan, and his oration at the opening of the Central Seminary of Oscott. The treatise "Lex Levitarum," as a commentary of the Regula Pastoralis of St. Gregory the Great, is of interest chiefly to religious, but "The Holy Eucharist" and "The Retreat" seem destined to enjoy a continued popularity among the laity as well.

Helena, DIOCESE OF (HELENENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-203c), suffragan of Oregon, comprises an area of 51,922 square miles and is one of the two sees in the State of Montana, U. S. A. Rt. Rev. John P. Carroll, the second bishop, was consecrated 21 December, 1904. He was born at Dubuque, Iowa, 22 February, 1864, and ordained 7 July, 1889. Under Bishop Carroll's direction the St. Helena Cathedral has been built (1908-1914), Mount St. Charles College and Preparatory Seminary has been erected and rapidly grown (1909-1921) and Catholic central high schools have been established in all important centers. The Jesuits who were pioneer priests in this territory, have several missions for Indians in this diocese.

During the late war Rev. J. G. Tongas and Rev. J. H. Ready rendered splendid service as chaplains. It is interesting to note that the percentage of volunteers exceeded that of other faiths and many men from the Diocese of Helena died on the battlefields. The State of Montana allows the ministry of priests in its public institutions, which are attended by a chaplain. There is a St. John's Ecclesiastical Society for infirm priests in the diocese and many organizations among the laity. Various parishes publish parish monthlies, and the college has a paper, the "Prospector." The House of the Good Shepherd, the Orphans' Home and the Infant Home receive compensation from the State for some of their inmates.

The communities of men in the Helena diocese are the Jesuits and the Premonstratensians, while the orders of women are Sisters of Charity of the B.V.M., Ursulines, Sisters of the Third Order of St. Dominic, Sisters of St. Francis of Perpetual Adoration, Sisters of Mercy and Sisters of the Good Shepherd. The diocese counts 50 parishes, 48 missions, 96 churches, 140 stations, 36 convents for women, 85 secular and 15 regular priests, 8 lay brothers, 330 nuns and sisters, 1 college and preparatory seminary with 12 priests and 5 laymen as professors, 27 seminarians and 126 students, 6 high schools with 54 teachers and 1038 pupils, 4 academies, 1 training school for nurses, 20 elementary schools with 5649 pupils, 1 orphan home, 1 House of the Good Shepherd, 1 Infant Home, 8 hospitals.

Helpers of the Holy Souls, SOCIETY OF THE (cf. C. E., VII-213a).—The Helpers offer up for the Holy Souls all the satisfactory part of their works of mercy among the poor, their vows and prayers, as well as indulgences applicable to themselves. Their chief work of mercy is visiting and caring for the sick poor. They also have numerous other works of zeal and charity, such as religious instruction for children and adults, and sewing classes from which the girls are allowed to take home the garments they have made. In 1921 over 84,000 general instructions were given to these sewing classes in New York. Here a modern settlement house was erected in 1914 on the site of the three old dwelling houses formerly used for the work in East 85th Street. There is a consequent enlargement of activities. The Marian Club for girls was organized in 1919 and now (1922) numbers 500 members. In 1917 the new convent and chapel in East 86th Street were erected. In San Francisco they have a new convent on Haight Street. In the past ten years new foundations have been made at Glasgow in Scotland, Bergamo in Italy, Lyons, Valence, and Rennes in France, Cheli in China.

A novitiate for England has been established at Marnhull, Dorset, and for Belgium at Overysche, near Brussels. An Italian novitiate has also been opened at San Remo, and the year 1922 will probably witness the beginnings of an American novitiate in the Diocese of New York. The Helpers do not engage in institutional work of any kind, although throughout the World War they operated ambulances in France and Belgium, and, as in 1870, ministered untiringly to the wounded as long as necessity required. At the general congregation of 1921 Rev. Mother Mary of St. Magdalen of Pazzi was re-elected superior general of the Society for a term of twelve years. The revised Code of Canon Law required few changes except a lengthened probation for postulants, six months being now the term instead of three as formerly. At present (1922) the Helpers have 43 houses in various parts of the world, with about 1000 members composing their communities.

Hemptinne, HILDEBRANDE DE, first Abbot Primate of the Benedictines, b. at Ghent on 10 June, 1849; d. at Beuron on 13 August, 1913. After serving in the papal army as a lieutenant of the Zouaves, he joined the sons of St. Benedict and was professed in the Abbey of Beuron on 15 August, 1870. He was ordained in June, 1872, and eighteen years later was elected Abbot of Maredsous, receiving the abbatial blessing at Monte Cassino on 5 October, 1890. Six years later he was appointed by Leo XIII primate of his order with the title of Abbot of San Anselmo de Urbe, with his residence in the new Benedictine international house on the Aventine, Rome. He was named consultor of several of the Sacred Congregations, procurator of the Greek College de Urbe and representative at Rome of the Greek Melchite patriarch of Antioch.

Herbermann, CHARLES GEORGE, teacher, author, and editor, b. at Saerbeck, Westphalia, Germany, 8 December, 1840; d. in New York 24 August, 1916. His father was George Herbermann of Glandorf, Hanover, the proprietor of the general country store at Saerbeck, and his mother was Elizabeth Stipp, born at Osnabrück, Hanover. At the age of nine Charles had completed the course at the local school, taught by a young priest, Vicar Hermes, and had commenced the study of Latin. To better the economic condition of the family, his father decided to become a citizen of the United States, and accordingly he emigrated with his family from Bremerhafen on 1 November, 1850, taking passage on the ship "Agnes." The family landed in New York on 21 January, 1851. During the unusually severe and protracted voyage the two youngest children had died. Charles was sent to the parochial school of St. Alphonsus in Thompson Street, which had been established by the Redemptorist Fathers for German-speaking Catholics. On 17 April, 1853, he enrolled as a student at the Jesuit College of Saint Francis Xavier in West Fifteenth Street, New York City. On the completion of the classical course in July, 1858, he was awarded the degree of A.B., not by St. Francis Xavier College which, founded only in November, 1850, had not yet received its charter, but by St. John's College, Fordham. From 1858 to 1869 he was a member of the teaching staff of his Alma Mater. His duties were first with the commercial department, in which instruction in arithmetic, bookkeeping, English, French, secondary mathematics, and physics was given. Later he also taught the Classics. He had a splendid baritone voice which, together with a considerable love for music, caused him to become a member of the choir of the Church of Saint Francis Xavier and at times to take part in the public recitals of the Mendelssohn Union, a notable organization composed chiefly of amateur musicians. He studied and received the degree of A.M. from St. John's in 1860 and that of Ph.D. from St. Francis Xavier in 1865. In later years he often spoke of his association with the distinguished members of the college faculty, Fathers de Luynes, Durthaller, Loyzance, Daubresse, Monroe, and Thébaud.

On 20 October, 1869, Dr. Herbermann, then barely twenty-nine years of age, was appointed Professor of the Latin Language and Literature at the College of the City of New York. The president of the college at that time was General Alexander S. Webb, who had distinguished himself on the field of Gettysburg. On 1 November, 1869, Professor Herbermann began his duties which were to last for forty-five years and to bring honor both to himself and to the college. As a teacher in the classroom, as an administrator of a department, and as a councillor in the faculty, he was successful from the beginning. In 1873 he added to his other tasks the congenial one of librarian of the college. The regard in which he was held by his "boys," men of different races and different creeds, many of whom had won distinction in professional or business life, was evidenced by a complimentary banquet tendered to him at the Hotel Astor on 12 January, 1911, at which his portrait in oil was presented to the college. Dr. Herbermann was a founder and the first president (1863) of the Xavier Alumni Sodality. He was also president of the Xavier Alumni Association, the Catholic Club, which he helped to establish, and of the German Catholic Congress, convened at Newark, New Jersey, in 1892. He lectured on German Literature at the Catholic Summer School, Cliff Haven, New York, in 1896, and again on the Kulturkampf in 1910. The United States Catholic Historical Society, projected by prelates and laymen attending the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, had, after the death of John Gilmary Shea, suspended activity. In 1898 a group of zealous Catholics undertook the restoration of the Society. Dr. Herbermann became president and also editor of the series of monographs and of the "Historical Records and Studies." Both of these positions he occupied until his death. Under his presidency the Society grew and under his editorship it made important contributions to the field of Americana, such as the "Unpublished Letters of Charles Carroll of Carrollton," and to the Church History of America.

In January, 1905, Dr. Herbermann was called to the editorship-in-chief of THE CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA, to be "an international work of reference on the constitution, doctrine, discipline, and history of the Catholic Church" in fifteen volumes with an index. To the performance of this task he brought a scholarship broad in content, often called "old-fashioned" on that account, and modern in method. His specialties were the classical Latin language and literature. He was learned in the English, French, German, and Greek literatures and in history, both civil and ecclesiastical. He had a good knowledge of philosophy, art, music, and general science. From 11 January, 1905, to 19 April, 1913, he presided over approximately one hundred and thirty-four formal sessions of the Board of Editors. He himself was in direct charge of the departments of literature, archaeology, art, civil history and civil law, music, national topics, and science. The first volume of the Encyclopedia appeared in the spring of 1907, and the fifteenth volume was copyrighted in 1912. The index volume was issued in 1914. Afflicted with glaucoma, Dr. Herbermann had suffered partial and finally complete loss of eyesight. His daughters, assisted sometimes by their brothers and occasionally by a friend, performed the task of readers and amanuenses for him in his labor as editor-in-chief.

Many academic and other honors were conferred on Dr. Herbermann in the course of his years of activity as a scholar. In 1882 his Alma Mater bestowed on him the degree of Doctor of Laws and in 1906 Holy Cross College of Worcester, Massachusetts, made him a Doctor of Letters, an honor repeated by the Catholic University in 1915. He received the Lætare Medal from the University of Notre Dame in 1913. He was twice honored by the Holy Father, Pius X; in 1909, when he was invested with Knighthood in the Order of Saint Gregory and, upon the completion of the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA in 1913, when he received the medal Pro Ecclesia et Pontifice.

In July, 1873, he married Miss Mary Theresa Dieter, a native of Baltimore. She died in 1876, leaving two little daughters, the older of whom died in 1887. In 1880 he married Miss Elizabeth Schoeb of New York City, a native of Marburg in Hesse. She became the mother of seven children, one of whom died in early childhood. She died in 1893.

In September, 1914, while teaching a class at the college, Dr. Herbermann was stricken with an attack of aphasia. Although he quickly recovered from this, he was unable again to resume his academic duties, and he was made professor emeritus on 1 February, 1915. He still continued to study in his library, to take his habitual daily walks with his children or friends, to contribute articles on American Church history to the "Historical Records and Studies." He took pleasure in the visits of his friends, many of whom were associates of a lifetime, and he enjoyed the constant care and companionship of his children and the caresses of his little grandchildren. An attack of bronchial pneumonia, in January, 1916, left him in an enfeebled condition. He died fortified by the rites of the Church.

Dr. Herbermann was the author of many papers, chiefly on educational and historical topics, which appeared in various magazines, including the "Catholic Quarterly Review," "Catholic World," the "Messenger," "America," and the "Catholic Historical Review." He edited nine volumes of "Historical Records and Studies" issued by the U. S. Catholic Historical Society (New York, 1898-1916). For the Society he also wrote numerous articles (see index to Vol. XI of "Historical Records and Studies" for a partial list), translated Torfaen's "History of Ancient Vinland" (1888, "Catholic Historical Magazine"), and, as editor, brought out the following monographs: "Unpublished Letters of Charles Carroll of Carrollton" (New York, 1902), Thébaud's "Three-Quarters of a Century," in three parts (New York, 1904, 1912, 1913), "Historical Sketch of St. Joseph's Provincial Seminary, Troy, N. Y." (New York, 1905), Waldseemüller's "Cosmographia Introductio" (New York, 1907), Lord Russell's "Diary of a Visit to the United States" (New York, 1910). He was the author of "Business Life in Ancient Rome" (New York, 1880). He edited Sallust's "Bellum Jugurthinum" (New York, 1886), and "Bellum Catilinæ" (Boston, 1890). He wrote "The Sulpicians in the United States" (New York, 1916). He was editor-in-chief of the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA (New York, 1907-1914).

Heresy (cf. C. E., VII-256a).—In the Code of Canon Law the term heretic means a baptized person who, while retaining the name of Christian, stubbornly denies or calls in doubt any truth which is to be accepted on Divine and Catholic Faith. All heretics incur ipso facto excommunication specially reserved in the internal forum to the Holy See; furthermore, unless they repent after being admonished, they are to be deprived of any ecclesiastical benefices, dignities, pensions or offices they have; they are to be declared tainted with infamy, and, if they be clerics, after a further fruitless warning they are to be degraded. Again, a similar excommunication is incurred by those who publish books written by heretics upholding and commending heresy, and by all who defend or knowingly and without due permission read or keep these or any other books prohibited by name by letters Apostolic. Formerly this censure was directed not against the publishers, but the printers. A "book" here means a volume of a certain size and unity (cf. III-524c); the word "knowingly" implies the knowledge that the book is by a heretic in defense of heresy and that it is prohibited; "letters Apostolic" means documents emanating directly from the pope, but not decrees of Roman Congregations, even if approved by the pope. Excommunication is no longer incurred by those who receive favor, or defend heretics. Those who favor heresy incur excommunication, which is, however, reserved to the Catholic ordinary and not as formerly reserved specially to the Holy See; they are: Catholics (a) who personally or by proxy go through the marriage ceremony before a non-Catholic minister, whether after or before the Catholic service, except where the minister is acting merely as a civil official, and the civil formality must be complied with and the parties intend merely a civil effect; (b) who marry with an agreement expressed or implied to bring up any of the children as non-Catholics; (c) who knowingly presume to hand over their children to a non-Catholic for baptism; and (d) who knowingly send their children or wards to be educated in a non-Catholic religion. The suspicion of heresy is attached (1) to the groups (b), (c), and (d) just mentioned, also to those (2) who knowingly and willingly aid in propagating heresy or who communicate with heretics in non-Catholic rites—for instance, joining in the singing of prayers at a Protestant service; merely passive or material presence, e. g. at funerals, may be tolerated for grave cause, as a mere act of courtesy or civil respect. Non-Catholics, of course, are admitted to all Catholic services, but not to the reception of the sacraments, or (3) who desecrate the Sacred Species; or (4) who appeal from the decrees of the reigning pope to a general council; or (5) who obstinately remain for a year under excommunication; or (6) who are guilty of simony in administering or receiving the sacraments. If persons who are suspected of heresy on being warned do not remove the grounds for suspicion they are incapacitated from performing canonical "legal acts," and if they be clerics and do not heed a fresh warning they are to be suspended a divinis; when six full months have passed after they have been penalized, if they are still recalcitrant, they are to be deemed heretics and punished accordingly.

Heresy renders a person irregular ex delicto; it is an impediment to marriage with a Catholic, and where such a marriage has been allowed by dispensation the offspring would be prohibited by law from receiving orders as long as the parent remained in his or her error—though, of course, this prohibition could be removed by dispensation. It also renders one incapable of acting as sponsor, or of receiving ecclesiastical burial or of acquiring or retaining the right of patronage.

Hermopolis Magna, DIOCESE OF (HERMOPOLITANENSIS COPTORUM; cf. C. E., VII-289b), a see for the Coptic Rite, erected in 1895, with residence at Minieh in Upper Egypt. There are in the diocese 11 parishes, 11 churches, 2 missions, 3 stations, 3 convents of religious orders of men, 3 convents of nuns, 15 secular priests, 7 regulars, 5 lay brothers, 12 seminarians in the national seminary at Tahta, 16 elementary schools with 38 teachers and 1130 pupils. The schools receive no government aid. There are two associations among the laity. The Catholic population is 7565, of whom 5000 are Catholic Copts and 2565 Catholics of other rites. Mussulmans number 2,046,377; Orthodox Greeks 182,289, Protestants 10,258, Jews 826, other non-Christian sects 660, other Christians 1589. The first and present bishop is Rt. Rev. Joseph Maxime Sedfaoui, born in Akkum, 1863, studied at Beyrouth, and was ordained 1889, served as a pastor, professor at the College of St. Francis Xavier at Alexandria, and appointed 6 March, 1896; named vicar general of the Patriarchate of Alexandria in 1908. This see is titular for the Latin Rite and the present bishop is Rt. Rev. George Glossauer, auxiliary Bishop of Prague, consecrated 8 September, 1917.

Hertling, GEORG F., COUNT VON, Catholic philosopher and Chancellor of the German Empire, b. at Darmstadt on 31 August, 1843; d. at Ruhpolding, Bavaria, on 4 January, 1919; son of Jakob and Antonie (von Guaita) Hertling. After studying in Münster, Munich, and Berlin, he passed some time in Italy, and in 1869 married Anna von Biegeleben. He obtained a lectureship and later a professorship in philosophy in Bonn, and in 1880 was called to a similar position in Munich. From 1875 till 1890 and again in 1896 he was a member of the Reichstag. In 1909-11 he was leader of the Center Party, and in 1912 he was appointed first Centrist president of the Bavarian ministry. He refused the imperial chancellorship when von Bethmann Hollweg fell during the war, but after the failure of Michaelis he accepted. His appointment was an innovation, as the preceding German chancellors had all been Prussians and Protestants. In his initial speech he discussed President Wilson's "fourteen points," and professed Germany's readiness for a peace of reconciliation based on a recognition of the integrity of the empire. Having failed to persuade the Allies to negotiate on terms of equality, he resigned his office on 30 September, 1918. He was active in the promotion of Catholic interests and social legislation in Germany, and secured the establishment of a Catholic theological faculty in Straßburg. He was a founder and later president of the Görres Gesellschaft and the German Society of Christian Art, and was a member of the Bavarian Academy of Science from 1899. With Clemens Bäumker he founded the Beiträge zur Geschichte der Philosophie des M.A. Among von Hertling's writings the following are noteworthy: "Materie und Form, und die Definition der Seele bei Aristoteles" (1871), "Über die Grenzen der mechan. Naturerklärng" (1875), "Hypothese Darwins" (1879), "Albertus Magnus" (1880), "Aussätze und Reden sozialpolit. Inhalts" (1884), "John Locke und die Schule von Cambridge" (1892), "Descartes' Beziehungen zur Scholastik" (1897-99), "Das Prinzip des Katholizismus und die Wiss," "Augustin" (1902), and "Erinnerungen aus meinen Leben."

Hesse (cf. C. E., VII-298c), a free state in the Republic of Germany, has an area of 2968 sq. miles, and a population of about 1,291,249 (1919). The largest cities are (1919): Mayence (Mainz), with a population of 107,930; Darmstadt, the capital, 82,368; Offenbach 75,380; Worms 44,290; Gießen 33,409.

EDUCATION.—In 1920 there were 979 public elementary schools, with 4282 teachers and 204,709 pupils; the continuation schools had 28,259 pupils. Hesse had 11 gymnasias, 3 progymnasias, 3 realgymnasias, 9 oberrealschulen, 18 realschulen, 1 agricultural college, and 22 incomplete realschulen, 7 higher girls' schools with 4408 pupils, and 49 private schools with 5029 pupils. The University of Gießen had 2143 students and the Technical High School at Darmstadt 2206 students.

ECONOMICS AND AGRICULTURE.—Of the area 63.4% is under cultivation; 31.5% is forests; 5.1% is uncultivated. Arable land occupies 923,403 acres; meadows and pastures 252,602 acres; vineyards 36,087 acres, and forests 599,790 acres. Of the latter, 186,382 acres belong to the State, 123,155 acres to the communes. In 1919 rye was the principal crop, with a yield of 99,717 tons from 135,070 acres. The 33,245 acres under vines yielded 7,388,480 gallons of wine valued at 213,021,796 marks.

RECENT HISTORY.—Hesse with the other territories acquired by Prussia in 1866 formed the Prussian province of Hesse-Nassau until 1918, when after the overthrow of the Empire it was proclaimed a State (lander) in the Republic of Germany. Its constitution was adopted on 20 December, 1919, and provides for a Landtag of 70 members. For administrative purposes, the republic (state) is divided into 3 provinces, 18 circles, and 983 communes.

RELIGION.—Ecclesiastically Hesse belongs to the Diocese of Mainz (q.v.).

Hexham and Newcastle, DIOCESE OF (HAGULSTADENSIS ET NOVOCASTRENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-318c), comprises the counties of Northumberland, Durham, Cumberland, and Westmoreland, in the North of England. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Richard Collins, born in Newbury, England, 1857, studied at Ushaw and was ordained in 1885, served in various missions and was made administrator of the cathedral at Newcastle in 1895, chancellor of Hexham in 1897, and appointed titular Bishop of Selenus and auxiliary bishop 1905, elevated to the see 1909; the episcopal residence is at Newcastle-on-Tyne. The total population of the diocese (1911 census) is 2,396,380, and the Catholic population is 227,486. The Benedictines, Dominicans, and Redemptorists are established in the diocese, as are also the Carmelites, Daughters of Wisdom, Daughters of the Cross, Dominican Nuns, Faithful Companions of Jesus, Sisters of the Good Shepherd, Little Sisters of the Poor, Poor Clares, Poor Sisters of Nazareth, Sisters of Charity, Sisters of Charity of St. Paul, Sisters of Marie Reparatrice, Sisters of Mercy, Sisters of St. Thomas of Villanova, Sisters of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary, Society of the Sacred Heart, and Ursulines. St. Cuthbert's College is at Ushaw, and St. Cuthbert's Grammar School at Newcastle-on-Tyne. There are boarding schools for girls at Darlington, West Hastingpool, Berwick-on-Tweed, Sunderland, and Newcastle. The Society of the Sacred Heart conducts a training school for teachers at Newcastle-on-Tyne. The Central School at Jarrow is under the Daughters of the Cross. There are in the diocese 270 clergy, of whom 221 are secular priests and 49 regulars; 188 churches; 46 convents; 2 industrial schools for boys; 1 industrial school for girls; 1 poor-law school for girls from workhouses; 29 elementary schools for girls conducted by religious; 119 public elementary schools receiving government grant; 2 secondary schools for boys; 9 secondary schools for girls; 1 hospital conducted by Dominican Sisters; 2 houses of mercy in charge of the Sisters of Mercy; 1 orphanage for boys conducted by the Sisters of Charity; 1 orphanage for girls conducted by the Sisters of Nazareth; 2 refuges for penitents; 3 homes for the aged poor under the care of the Little Sisters of the Poor. The following associations are represented in the diocese: Catholic Needlework Guild, Catholic Women's League, Catholic Truth Society, Society for the Propagation of the Faith, and Society of St. Vincent de Paul.

Hildesheim, DIOCESE OF (HILDESHEIMENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-353b), in Germany. Since 1915 the see has been administered by the Rt. Rev. Joseph Ernst, b. at Grossalgermissen 8 November, 1863, ordained 2 August, 1886, elected 26 May, 1915, consecrated 26 September following. In 1920 there were 213,850 Catholics in the diocese and 2,000,000 inhabitants who belonged to other denominations. It contains 120 parishes, 16 deaneries, 27 curacies, 230 churches and chapels, 230 secular priests, 10 regulars, of whom 3 are Augustinians, and 7 Franciscans. The Ursulines have convents at Duderstadt, Hildesheim, and Hanover, with 49 professed, 27 lay nuns, and 9 novices; the Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul have 53 establishments (mother-house at Hildesheim), with 475 Sisters and 35 novices.

Hilgard, EUGENE WOLDEMAR, pioneer in scientific agriculture in the United States, b. in Bavaria in 1833; d. in California in 1916. The youngest of a family of four sons and five daughters he came to this country with his father, Judge Hilgard, at the age of three, when they settled on a farm near Belleville, St. Clair County, Illinois. So many Germans of good education, which included a knowledge of Latin, had settled there that it was called "the Latin settlement." Eugene and his brothers received their early education from their father, who prepared them for entrance to the university. At the age of sixteen Eugene went to the University of Heidelberg. When just past twenty he graduated there, receiving the degree of Doctor of Philosophy with honor summa cum laude. This degree was reissued to him in 1903 as a "golden degree" in recognition of a half century's good work for science. He made some graduate studies at the University of Zurich and at Freiberg in Saxony. After this he spent nearly two years in Spain, and then returned to America at the age of twenty-three to take up scientific work here. He had specialized in geology and chemistry, and accepted the position of assistant State geologist of Mississippi 1856. He remained in the South but for two years, but his genius for observation impressed itself deeply on the geology of the region, and he laid the foundation upon which is built the knowledge of Gulf Coastal Plain Geology. Professor E. A. Smith, State Geologist of Alabama, says that Doctor Hilgard "laid the foundation on which most subsequent work in the 'Mississippi Embayment,' as he named it, securely rests." Later he was to come back to the study of this region when he was put in charge of the Cotton Culture Reports of the tenth census. This for the first time introduced scientific principles into cotton growing, and his reports are still consulted with confidence by those who are interested in the subject. His favorite subject was chemistry, however, so when offered the position of chemist in charge of the laboratory of the Smithsonian at Washington he accepted and spent some two years there. During this time he became a convert to the Catholic Church, and remained ever after an ardent Catholic.

During the Civil War he was employed as a chemist in charge of certain work required by the Southern Confederacy, and immediately after the war he was offered the position of State geologist of Mississippi and professor of science at the University of that State. He spent some six years there, when his growing reputation led to an invitation to teach at the University of Michigan, where better opportunities for research were afforded him at a much higher salary. Here he developed the department of agriculture and became the pioneer exploiter of the doctrine that agricultural studies must count correspondingly to other subjects in the university curriculum. From Michigan he went to the newly organized agricultural department of the University of California, where he spent all the rest of his life. He made a series of most important investigations on the soils of that State in connection with their native vegetation and the prospect they provided for the growth of other plants. He published a book, "Soils of Arid and Humid Regions," and came to be the recognized expert in the United States on "alkali soils," and especially on their reclamation. Through him the regions that used to be set down in the geographies of two generations ago as desert regions were transformed into fertile lands and the so-called Great American Desert disappeared.

He was a very broadly educated man, knowing Latin and Greek as well as most of the modern languages very well. He kept closely in touch with foreign work in his specialty and related scientific investigations. He was looked up to as the most distinguished authority in scientific agriculture. The universities of Mississippi, Michigan, and California, in recognition of his work in those states, as well as Columbia, conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Laws for agricultural science. The Royal Academy of Sciences of Munich awarded him the Liebig medal. The International Exposition at Paris (1900) awarded him a gold medal. During a long life of successful devotion to science there was only one rival in his interest, and that was his devotion to the Church, of which he was a very faithful member and to which he gave considerable time, for charitable and other religious interests. He declared toward the end of his life that nothing had given him more satisfaction than his membership in the Church.

Hilgers, JOSEPH, theological writer, b. at Kuckhoven, Rhenish Province, Germany, on 9 September, 1858; d. at Rome in 1918; son of Joseph and Josephine Hilgers. He was educated in the German College in Rome, and won his doctorates of philosophy and theology. He was ordained in 1882, and a year later entered the Society of Jesus. After teaching for ten years he devoted himself entirely to writing, being an authority on indulgences and the Index. He was a frequent contributor to the "Stimmen aus Maria-Laach," "Linzer theologische Quartalschrift," "Civilita Cattolica," "Zentralblatt für Bibliothekswesen," and collaborated on Herder's "Kirchenlexikon" and "Konversationslexikon," and the "CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA." Among his most notable works are "Der Index der verbotenen Bücher" (1904), "Maria der Weg zu Christus" (1907), "The Roman Index and Its Latest Historian," "Das Goldene für Priester und Volk," "Die katholische Lehre von den Ablässen" (1913); he succeeded Beringer in publishing "Die ablässe," his last edition of which contains a valuable history of indulgences.

Historical Societies, Catholic, IN THE UNITED STATES.—So far as is known, eight such Societies have been organized since 1884, with the object of making better known the Catholic past of the United States. They are: The American Catholic Historical Society, founded at Philadelphia in 1884; the United States Catholic Historical Society, founded in New York in 1884; the Ohio Valley Catholic Historical Society, founded in 1884—now disbanded; the Brooklyn Catholic Historical Society, founded in 1901—now disbanded; the New England Catholic Historical Society, founded in 1901—inoperative; the Catholic Historical Society of St. Paul, Minn., founded in 1905; the Maine Catholic Historical Society, begun in 1913; the Catholic Historical Society of St. Louis, founded in 1917. All these societies limit the field of their study to American History.

AMERICAN CATHOLIC HISTORICAL SOCIETY OF PHILADELPHIA.—This Society, the oldest Catholic historical society in the United States, was established on 22 July, 1884, at the hall of the Cathedral Total Abstinence Beneficial Society. The call for the organization of the Society was dated 4 July, and was signed by the Rev. P. A. Jordan, S.J., the Rev. John J. Elcock, the Rev. Dr. Thomas Middleton, O.S.A., the Rev. Ignatius F. Horstmann, D.D., P. Beresford, Charles N. A. Esling, Francis T. Furey, W. J. Campbell, M.D., J. Carroll McCaffery, F. X. Reuss, John H. Campbell, and Martin I. J. Griffin. A charter was granted to the Society on 26 December, 1885, by Judge Russell Thayer. Pope Leo XIII extended his blessing to the Society on 10 January, 1886, and on 6 September, 1886, Archbishop Ryan gave it his formal approbation. The Society's first public meeting was held on 30 April, 1885, with Archbishop Ryan presiding.

Early in 1887 came the first fruit of the Society's promise to publish Catholic historical papers, volume I of its "Records"; the year 1889 saw the appearance of the second volume, and 1891 brought the third volume—in all, up to that time, over 1200 pages of American Catholic historical sources. With volume IV the "Records" became a quarterly publication, and in 1921 it completed its thirty-second volume. Meantime, in 1913, the Society took over and combined with its "Records" the "American Catholic Historical Researches," which had been started by Dr. A. A. Lambing, of Scottsdale, Pennsylvania, in 1884, and which had been issued by Martin I. J. Griffin from 1886 to the time of his death. Sets of the "Records" have been placed in nearly all the reference libraries of the United States, thus preserving against loss and making available for students of history a great wealth of American Catholic chronicles and documents theretofore unpublished.

Until early in 1889 the Society's work was carried on in a small room of the Philadelphia Philopatrian Institute. These quarters were then found inadequate, and the Society migrated to the Athenæum Building, where it occupied the room which for forty years had been the abode of the Pennsylvania Historical Society. Within six years the Catholic Historical Society had again outgrown its quarters and in 1895 moved into a home of its own at 715 Spruce Street, a spacious old Colonial structure of many historical associations. The occasion was celebrated by a reception to His Excellency, Archbishop Satolli, first Apostolic Delegate to the United States. Each of the four succeeding Apostolic delegates has been publicly received at the Society's headquarters and presented to the prominent people, Catholic and non-Catholic, of the city and State.

The Library and Cabinet of the American Catholic Historical Society, housed in its own building, is reputed to be among the foremost collections of Catholic Americana. It contains, besides books, many valuable manuscripts and documents bearing on the early history of America and the contribution of Catholics and Catholicity to our best American traditions and civilization. It has also a cabinet of historical relics of interest to Catholics, and prints and paintings of kindred value. The library is in part classified and catalogued and available for research work. The reading-room is open to the public, who have access there to a rich file of Catholic newspapers and magazines.

Many activities akin to its immediate Catholic historical purposes have been sponsored by the Society. In 1892 it led the movement for the celebration of the quadricentennial of the discovery of America, in which all the organizations of the Archdiocese of Philadelphia took part. In 1895 a course of illustrated Catholic historical lectures were given under the Society's direction in the Academy of Music, Philadelphia's ranking public hall. Other series of lectures by leading European and American scholars have been given by the Society in its own hall or in the Academy of Music. In 1896 the Society established an archivist in Rome in the person of the Rev. F. Kittell, who copied for publication in the "Records" a series of invaluable State and Vatican papers bearing on the foundation and development of the Church in America. This important work had to be suspended on account of the Society's inadequate resources. In 1906 the president and board of managers lodged a vigorous and scholarly protest against the use of certain mural paintings in the capitol at Harrisburg, on the ground of the historical misrepresentations of the pictorial decorations.

In its constitution the Society states its object to be the preservation and publication of Catholic American historical documents, the investigation of American Catholic history, especially that of Philadelphia, and the development of interest in Catholic historical questions. Its accomplishments may be categorically enumerated as follows: first, it has created the nucleus of a reference library and cabinet; second, it has established and published a Catholic historical magazine; third, it has encouraged the foundation of similar societies by its example; fourth, it has maintained the idea of American Catholic history in concrete form before the world; fifth, it has stimulated the production of Catholic literature.

The list of presidents of the American Catholic Historical Society, with their term of office, follows:

Very Rev. Thomas Cooke Middleton, D.D., O.S.A., 1884, 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890; Rev. Ignatius F. Horstmann, D.D., 1891-1892; Dr. Lawrence F. Flick, 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896. The Rt. Rev. Mgr. Hugh T. Henry, Litt. D., 1897-1898; Mr. Walter George Smith, 1899-1900; Mr. Samuel Castner, Jr., 1901; The Rt. Rev. Mgr. H. T. Drumgoole, 1902-1903; Mr. Francis A. Cunningham, 1904-1905; Mr. William V. McGrath, Jr., 1906-1907; Mr. Ignatius J. Dohan, 1908-1909; The Right Rev. Philip R. McDevitt, D.D., 1910, 1911, 1912; Dr. Lawrence F. Flick, 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896; The Rt. J. Lallou, 1915-1916; Mr. James M. Willcox, 1917-1918; Mr. Edward J. Galbally, 1919, 1920, 1921; The Rev. John E. Flood, LL.D., 1922.

CATHOLIC HISTORICAL SOCIETY OF ST. LOUIS.—The Church of the Middle West, centering in St. Louis, has an eventful history, but the whole story of toil, sacrifice and glorious achievement has yet to be told. The historical archives of the Archdiocese of St. Louis hold a rich and varied treasure of material for the making of that story. With these things in mind, the Most Rev. John J. Glennon, on February 7, 1917, suggested the foundation of an historical society and invited the following clergymen of the diocese to become charter members of the new association: Right Rev. Mgr. J. A. Connolly, V.G., Right Rev. Mgr. J. J. Tannrath, Right Rev. Mgr. Patrick W. Tallon, Very Rev. M. S. Ryan, C.M., Revs. Charles L. Souvay, C.M., Francis Gilfillan, Joseph Wenker, F. G. Holweck, John Rothensteiner, F. X. Wilmes, E. J. Lemkes, Joseph Selinger, J. T. Shields, and Henry Hussman. The proposition met with unanimous and enthusiastic support. Within a few weeks the organization of the Catholic Historical Society of St. Louis was perfected, with Archbishop Glennon as president, and Revs. Dr. Charles L. Souvay and F. G. Holweck librarians and archivists.

The object of the Society is: "To collect and preserve materials of all kinds, such as books, pamphlets, papers, manuscripts, maps, documents, pictures, and other objects of historical interest relating to the Catholic history of the Diocese of St. Louis and of whatever territories and places were at any time associated with St. Louis in the same ecclesiastical division; to institute, carry on and foster historical research on subjects pertaining to the field of inquiry above described and disseminate such information." Any person of good character, in sympathy with the work and aims of the Society, is eligible to membership on payment of $5.00 annual dues, or $100 for life membership. In its sixth year the Society has 94 members, of whom 2 are life members. Regular meetings of the Society are held in January, March, May, September, and November. At these meetings original papers on historical subjects are read and discussed. As the Society has no building of its own at present, the archives are kept at the diocesan chancery, 209 Walnut Street, where a fire-proof filing cabinet has been provided for the documents, letters, and other manuscripts.

In order to promote the objects of the Society it was decided to issue an historical publication quarterly, and in 1918 the Rev. Dr. Charles L.

Souvay was elected editor-in-chief of the "St. Louis Catholic Historical Review." The first number of the "Review" appeared October, 1918. Each number devotes space to some constructive historical essays on subjects appertaining to the special field of the Society. Under the general caption of "Notes," historical news, current events of interest to readers, and the recent activities of the Society are chronicled. To this set of "Notes" another is added, strictly bibliographical, in the form of an index of historical items and articles on subjects written within the Society's sphere, published in current literature.

"Documents" from the archives of the Society complete each number. These documents are given in their original text, with an English translation. Volume I of the "Review" contains a catalogue of the more important documents, petitions and letters in the historical archives of the Archdiocese of St. Louis, which His Grace the Archbishop placed in the care of the Society. The series of letters exchanged between Bishop Dubourg and the Congregation of Propaganda is published in the first three volumes of the "Review." This series is being followed by the publication of Bishop Rosati's "Diary," in which daily events in the prelate's life are recorded for more than fourteen years.

ILLINOIS CATHOLIC HISTORICAL SOCIETY.—This Society was established in Chicago 28 February, 1918, and was indirectly inspired by the celebration that year of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Union. For this event the Illinois Centennial Commission, appointed by the governor, prepared a series of celebrations and a six volume original history of the State. In this history, which was in preparation for several years, the achievements of Catholics and the Church were conspicuous principally by their absence, although for the first hundred years of Illinois history Catholics were pioneers and later played a prominent part in the development of the State. Rev. Frederic Siedenburgh, S.J., and Judge Thomas F. Scully, both of Chicago, were members of this commission, and found that due to the scarcity of Catholic historical material and the inaccessibility of documents it was impossible to give adequate representation of Catholic achievement.

By accident it was learned that Mr. Joseph J. Thompson of Chicago had in preparation a "Catholic History of Illinois," and after several conferences with him it was proposed to organize an historical society, with the chief purpose of publishing a quarterly review which would collect documents and publish monographs and encourage Catholic Illinois history. With the approbation of the Archbishop of Chicago and the suffragan bishops the Society was organized in the School of Sociology of Loyola University, and Mr. William J. Onahan was elected the first president of the Society, and Mr. Joseph J. Thompson was chosen the first editor of the "Illinois Catholic Historical Review."

The Society, although only in its fourth year, has over 600 members and has already made a permanent contribution in the historic field of the old Illinois country, inasmuch as it has stimulated original research and prompted the conservation and publication of reliable historic data and records. It has also begotten a new interest and appreciation among Catholics for their own history. Up to April, 1922, the Society published four volumes of 528 pages each, concerned primarily with the earlier periods of the Illinois country. At the present time Rev. Frederic Siedenburgh, S.J., is president of the Society, with offices in the Ashland Block, Chicago.

Hobart, ARCHDIOCESE OF (HOBARTIENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-380d), comprises Tasmania, Bruny Island, Maria Island, and the islands in Bass Straits. The present archbishop is Rt. Rev. Patrick Delany, b. at Tonacor, Ireland, 1 February, 1853, ordained 1879, left for Australia 1885, elected titular bishop of Laranda and coadjutor to the Archbishop of Hobart 15 June, 1893, succeeding to the see 29 December, 1907. Increased labors caused the archbishop to petition the Holy See for a coadjutor, and in August, 1919, Most Rev. William Barry, b. in Middleton, Ireland, 1 January, 1872, ordained 1898, elected 7 April, 1919, titular bishop of Pessinus, was consecrated in Sydney.

The population of Tasmania is estimated at 218,000, and the Catholics number about 35,000. The archdiocese is divided into 22 parishes with 72 churches and 39 stations. Besides the archbishop and his coadjutor there are 29 secular and 2 regular (M.S.H.) priests, 13 Irish Christian Brothers, and 169 nuns. There are 2 colleges in charge of the Christian Brothers, St. Virgil's at Hobart with 157 students, St. Patrick's at Launceston with 120 students, 1 boarding school for boys and 3 for girls, 4 superior day schools and 25 primary schools with 3450 children, 1 orphanage with 51 children, 1 Magdalen Home under the care of Sisters of the Good Shepherd with 130 inmates. Two convents are registered for the training of teachers. The communities of Sisters, who have charge of every school but one, are Sisters of Charity, Order of the Presentation B.V.M., Sisters of St. Joseph, Sisters of Mercy, Sisters of the Good Shepherd, and Sisters of the Sacred Heart.

The "Catholic Standard," the official organ of the archbishop, is Tasmania's Catholic paper. The Government does not support the Catholic schools, which are subject to inspection and examination by State school inspectors, and every school and teacher must be registered. State endowments to religion were withdrawn in 1869, but sums of money were voted according to the number of adherents to the churches, and that set aside for Catholics yields about £1400 a year. Allowance is made for children sent to the orphanage by the Government. The usual sodalities are organized among the laity and several societies, including the Hibernian, St. Vincent de Paul, and Catholic Federation. One priest went to war as a chaplain, and the Catholics had more than their proportion of volunteers and active men in the service. Monsignor Gillevan, vicar general for many years, died in 1919, and Archpriest Henneboy, who arrived in 1866, died in 1921. The Catholics are mostly of Irish origin, but native born, but there are also some English and Scotch.

Hogan, EDMUND IGNATIUS, historian and Gaelic scholar, b. near Cobh, Ireland, 23 January, 1831; d. at Dublin on 26 November, 1917. Entering the Society of Jesus at the age of sixteen he was ordained nine years later. Endowed with a phenomenal memory, a keen historical sense, and untiring energy he devoted himself to the history, antiquities, and language of Ireland. He was one of the small body of brilliant scholars, grouped around Eugene O'Curry and John O'Donovan, who laid a scientific foundation for the present-day revival of the Irish language and culture, the source of inspiration of Ireland's recent fight for independence. As the youngest of these savants, Edmund Hogan was the connecting link between them and the twentieth century workers who are now holding up a rigorous Gaelic culture. After teaching in the Sacred Heart College, Limerick (of which he was one of the original staff), from 1859 to 1865, he went to Rome to gather material for the story of the Jesuits in Ireland in the penal days. For twenty years he filled the chair of Irish in the Royal University of Ireland, and for three years he delivered the Todd Memorial Lectures in the Royal Academy of Ireland, of which he was a council member and honorary secretary of foreign correspondence. He was likewise an original governor of the School of Irish Learning, and was one of the commissioners for the publication in the Rolls Series of the Brehon Laws, the ancient laws and institutes of Ireland. In the linguistic field Hogan's most notable achievement was probably his contribution to our knowledge of neuter nouns in Old Irish, of which he identified more than three thousand, at a time when they were almost unknown to scholars. Hogan's writings, which all relate to Ireland, are authoritative and are the fruit of deep research. His magnum opus is his invaluable "Onomasticon Gædelicum Locorum et Tribuum Hiberniæ et Scotiæ," a dictionary of Gaelic names of places and tribes, compiled from all the old Irish manuscripts and published early texts, with identifications based on the citations from the texts. On this work he spent the last ten years of his active literary career. Among his other writings (a bibliography of which is given by John MacErlean in "Studies," 1917, pp. 668-671) may be mentioned as specially interesting and important: "Ibernia Ignatiana, seu Ibernorum Societatis Jesu Patrum monumenta" (1880), "Life, Letters and Diary of H. Fitzsimon, S.J.," "Distinguished Irishmen of the Sixteenth Century" (1894), "Irish Phrases Book" (1891), "A Handbook of Irish Idioms" (1898), "Outlines of the Grammar of Old Irish" (1900), "Luibhleabhrán" (1900), a dictionary of Gaelic names of herbs, plants, etc., "History of the Irish Wolf Dog" (1897), "The Irish People: Their Height, Form and Strength" (1899), and his editions of "Vita Sancti Patricii" (1882), from the Book of Armagh, "Cath Ruis na Ríg for Borim" (1892), and "The Irish Nennius" (1895).

Holland (cf. C. E., VII-386d).—The area of Holland is 12,582 sq. miles, and according to the census taken in December, 1920, the population was 6,841,155. The largest towns with their populations on 31 December, 1919, are: Amsterdam 647,120; Rotterdam 506,067; the Hague 359,610; Utrecht 138,334; Groningen 89,030. In 1919 there were 164,447 births, 89,646 deaths, 58,270 marriages. In the same year the emigration, mostly to North America, was 2439. On 14 June, 1918, a law was passed for the purpose of forming a new province by the draining of the Zuiderzee to the extent of 523,000 acres, a work which is expected to take fifteen years and to cost 66,250,000 florins (1 florin=$0.402 normal exchange).

GOVERNMENT.—Holland is a constitutional monarchy, with executive power vested in the sovereign, Queen Wilhelmina, and legislative power in the Sovereign and the Parliament or States-General, which consists of two chambers, the upper chamber having 50 members elected for nine years by the states, and the second or lower chamber of 100 deputies elected directly for four years. The Electoral Reform Act, passed 12 December, 1917, provides for universal suffrage and proportional representation. According to the electoral reform act, passed 9 August, 1919, the members of the lower house directly elected by citizens of both sexes who are Dutch subjects not under twenty-three years old. It was stipulated, however, that until further regulations are introduced, the members of the second chamber will be elected only by the male citizens of the kingdom who are twenty-five years of age. The Government and the second chamber only may introduce new Bills, the function of the upper chamber being restricted to approving or rejecting them without the power of inserting amendments. The executive authority, vested in the sovereign, is exercised by a responsible Council of Ministers. There is a State Council, Raad van State, of fourteen members appointed by the sovereign, of which the sovereign is president and which is consulted on all legislative and a great number of executive matters. The territory is divided into 11 provinces and 1110 communes. Each province has its own representative body, the Provincial States, the members of which are elected for four years directly from among the Dutch inhabitants of the province. The provinces are allowed to make ordinances concerning the welfare of the people and to raise taxes, but the ordinances must be approved by the Crown. Each commune has a council.

EDUCATION.—The new educational provisions of the constitution which have recently come into force in Holland provide that private general elementary education shall be paid for by public money on the same basis as public education, and that the freedom of private education in the choice of books and equipment and the appointment of teachers shall be respected. Thus the private church schools are placed on a par with the State schools. The law of 1917 forbids school children under sixteen years of age to do any farm work between 9 in the evening and 5 in the morning. The school age is from six to thirteen. In 1918-19 there were 3424 public elementary schools with 19,757 teachers and 620,737 pupils; 2466 private elementary schools with 14,795 teachers and 443,258 pupils; 208 public kindergartens and 1147 private kindergartens. Besides there are 6 universities, and 34 classical (public) schools, 525 schools for working people, 13 navigation schools, and 139 middle class schools.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—Production.—In 1919 the total cultivable and forest area was 6,078,947 acres; there were 141,340 acres under wheat, with a production of 774,918 quarters; under rye 502,676 acres with 1,296,293 quarters; barley, 57,784 acres and 311,833 quarters; oats 380,270 acres and 2,388,823 quarters. Owing to lack of coal to operate the factories, in 1919 the output of beet sugar was only 175,000 tons, compared with 259,550 tons in 1916-17. The coal output in 1919 was 3,401,346 tons, valued at 70,909,000 guilders (1 guilder = $0.402, normal exchange). Most of the mines belong to the State. On 24 October, 1920, a law went into effect establishing as the legal maximum of labor 45 hours a week, an eight-hour day with half holiday on Saturdays. Sunday labor is permitted only by order of the government and the employment of children under the age of thirteen is prohibited. The result has been to curtail production. Industry has suffered also from the fall in foreign exchange, German competition, and excessive wages. The total imports of the country (not including the transit trade) had in 1920 a value of $1,122,490,600 as compared with $1,318,434,000 in 1919 (including the transit trade). The total exports had in 1920 a value of $582,837,800 (not including the transit trade). The imports of the country in the past four years have reached a total of 7,730,954,200 guilders, and its exports only 4,313,219,600 guilders, leaving an adverse balance of 3,417,734,600 guilders, or at normal exchange, $1,459,189,800. During the war Holland held geographically the position of lying across the path of traffic between the belligerent countries and the world's food resources. She was dependent entirely on imports conditioned on an exchange of exports and was generally viewed with suspicion by the opposing nations. Within her borders unscrupulous profiteers did not hesitate to sell available food stocks to foreign buyers to an extent that threatened depletion and famine. There are four principal railroad lines in Holland, all privately operated and owned, with the exception of one which is Government owned but operated by a private company. A movement is now on foot to consolidate all four roads in one organization, to be publicly supervised but privately operated. In 1919 the total mileage was 1830, and the revenue amounted to 36,606,000 guilders.

FINANCE.—In 1919 the total revenue was 760,091,000 guilders; the total expenditure, 1,024,676,000 guilders. It is estimated that the deficit of the Netherlands budget will be approximately 250,000,000 guilders in 1922, some 20,000,000 higher than the deficit in 1921. In 1921 the total funded national debt was about 2,575,000,000 guilders; a little over half of this amount arises from direct and indirect war costs, called "crisis expenditures."

RECENT HISTORY.—During the World War the position of Holland as a neutral nation was extremely difficult. At the outbreak of the war in August, the Government issued a proclamation of neutrality and mobilized its army of 125,000 men in order to be ready for any emergency that might arise. Thousands of Belgian refugees poured across the frontiers into Holland, and with 22,000 interned Belgian soldiers and 1560 British Marines to support, the Government was involved in great expense. Holland's shipping losses were large, and her trade suffered greatly during the World War due to the system of control exercised by Great Britain, the United States and Germany. England stopped all Dutch vessels carrying contraband, demanded that they be used in certain ways. Germany retaliated by refusing safe-conduct to Dutch vessels which conformed to English rules and when the United States entered the war, she backed England in taking drastic steps to prevent the importation of cereals in order to prevent Germany from obtaining any food during the blockade. Most of the present trade consists of goods on transit from and to Germany, notably the imports of silk goods and metal goods. In 1919 relations between Holland and Belgium became strained when the latter demanded that Limburg, Zeeland, and a part of Staats Vlaanderen be surrendered to it. This demand was finally presented to the Peace Conference and was refused. At the same time the Dutch ships which had been seized in the United States during the war were returned.

In April, 1915, the International Congress of Women to denounce war and to demand peace was held at the Hague. After the Revolution in Germany, Holland became the refuge of the abdicating Emperor Wilhelm II. On 15 January, 1920, the Supreme Council demanded that the former Emperor of Germany be surrendered to the Allies for trial, in accordance with the Versailles Treaty. Holland firmly refused, on the ground of the international law of asylum for political refugees, and said that she would take necessary precautions to prevent the ex-Kaiser from endangering the world's peace.

COLONIAL EMPIRE.—Holland's colonial possessions include the following: Java and Madura, 51,000 square miles; Sumatra, 163,000 square miles; Dutch Borneo, 214,000 square miles; Celebes Islands, 73,000 square miles; Molucca Islands, 44,000 square miles; Timor Archipelago, 154,000 square miles; other islands, 27,000 square miles. The colonies are administered in the name of the ruler of Holland by a Governor-General, who has his headquarters in Java. He has both legislative and executive powers but is subject to the acts of the States General and the regulations and instructions of his home Government. In 1916 was created the People's Council (Volkraad) of 39 members, of whom 19 are nominated by the Governor General and the others elected by members of local councils. For administrative purposes the colonies are divided into 2 sections: Java with Madura and the outlying islands. Dutch enterprise has for three centuries benefited enormously from the island empire; the sale of the products of Government industry yielding a handsome surplus over the expenses of administration, but the withdrawal of the Government from business, the cost of native wars, and the necessity of carrying out public works and introducing reforms have converted a profit into a loss which has to be made good by the tax-payer.

THE CHURCH IN HOLLAND.—On 20 May, 1915, Premier Cort Van den Linden, realizing the importance of the Pope as a political and international power, presented to Parliament a project for temporary representation to the Holy See, which was approved the following month and Jonkheer Octave Van Nispen Tot Sevenave, member and former president of the Second Chamber of the States General was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Holy See. Later the representation was made permanent and in May, 1921, Mgr. Roberto Vincentini, titular Archbishop of Eleonopolis, was sent as internuncio to Holland.

In the general election of 1918, held for the first time on the principle of proportional representation, the Catholics were numerically the strongest faction in the Second Chamber and were called upon to form a Cabinet, in which five out of nine members are Catholic. They have proved themselves skilful leaders and statesmen of high purpose and have made many economic reforms. To-day in Holland those who fifty years ago were treated as social and political outcasts are now counted as the strongest props of law and order and the most resolute defenders of constituted authority.

The passage of the new Education Law 30 June, 1920, marked for Catholics the end of a struggle for equality before the law that had lasted for fifty-two years, and that was won by tenacity of purpose, firm convictions, and prayer. Slight gains had been made in 1905 and 1912, and by the provisions of the new De Visser Law no handicap of whatever sort exists for private denominational schools, which are to receive the same support as the State schools. A day of thanksgiving for the favorable outcome of this fight for children's souls was appointed by the archbishop of Utrecht. Three-quarters of the expenses of private high schools are to be borne by the State, and Catholics are now turning their resources to the founding of a Catholic University, for which large sums are already pledged and which is to be situated at Nymegen. The project has been blessed by the Holy Father. Another evidence of the progress of the Church in Holland is the splendid organization of Catholic laboring men, who instead of falling a prey to Socialism are carefully organized in exclusively Catholic unions, and are thus in the main safeguarded from radicalism. The Dutch League of Peasants, established to champion the cause of the farmer and owing its prosperity largely to the priests, attends to every aspect of the peasants' well-being. The League banks number 1147, with deposits in 1918 of $189,596,000; there are co-operative dairy plants and the co-operative marketing of produce, purchasing of seeds, farm implements, cattle-feed, breeding stock, and insurance of all kinds. In August, 1921, 4000 delegates from all the active sodalities of the Blessed Virgin in Holland held a Congress at Maestricht, celebrating at the same time the fiftieth anniversary of the Workingmen's Sodality of Maestricht, which has 1800 members. There is an effort being made in Holland to develop Catholic missions in her overseas possessions. Though she has 935 missionary priests, 391 Brothers, and 971 Sisters in the foreign mission field, only about 200 of them are ministering in her own colonial possessions, owing to Calvinistic bigotry on the one hand and Masonic hatred of all things Catholic on the other, which have never ceased to antagonize the Church and in spite of the broad-minded spirit animating the home Government continue to do so. Prominent among the Catholic statesmen of Holland is Mgr. Nolens, who, the acknowledged leader of a political party, brought together the strongest and best coalition ministry Holland has ever known. He was a delegate to the International Labor Conference in Washington, 1919, and brought about the triumph of sane democratic claims when the Conference seemed about to break up without reaching any practical conclusion. Later he was the preponderant influence as Holland's delegate to the Sailors' International Conference in Genoa. In the death (1922) of Father De Groot, O.P., saintly priest, brilliant orator, director of the Catholic intellectual élite of his country, and professor of Thomistic philosophy at the University of Amsterdam, the Church in Holland sustained a severe loss. From his lecture hall as well as from his cell he exercised a fruitful apostolate, especially amongst the youth of his country. One of his most recent converts was Dr. Frederic Van Eeden, well-known physician, novelist, poet, playwright, lecturer, and socialist leader. For Catholic statistics see articles on the Archdiocese of Utrecht and its suffragans.

Holy Child Jesus, SOCIETY OF THE (cf. C. E., VII-400c).—The work of the Society in the past decade, both in England and America, has been more on the line of consolidation than of expansion, owing to the changes in educational programs and the pursuit of studies for the reception of degrees. The succession of the general superiors since the death of the foundress in 1879 has been as follows: Mother Angelica Croft, under whom the rules and constitutions were approved and confirmed (1893); Mother Gonzaga Snow, who founded the house of Cherwell Edge, Oxford, intended as a house of studies for Catholic women; and the present superior, Mother Mary Tolhurst. The houses opened since 1910 are as follows: Portland, Oregon; Waukegan, Ill.; Holy Child College, Rosemont, Penn. (established 1921). The present number of foundations (1921) is twenty. Of these eight are in England: Mayfield (mother-house), St. Leonards-on-Sea, Mark Cross, London, Oxford, Preston, Blackpool, Harrogate. The twelve houses in the United States are in Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts, Illinois, Wyoming, and Oregon. There are 300 members of the Society in England and 271 in America.

In addition to the work of education in parochial schools, high schools, and academics, the Sisters have undertaken evening classes for domestic science and needlework, and extension courses for those otherwise engaged during the day. They also have Sodalities of Children of Mary, Alumnae Societies, and Christ Child meetings, while their alumnae in both countries have undertaken settlement work in London and New York. With regard to college work, the first woman in Oxford to receive her M.A. was one of the Sisters of the Holy Child Jesus, while the first B.A. was a student of their Oxford house. A great loss to the Society in America was the death, in 1903, of Mother Mary Walburga White, first provincial in the United States. Two young sisters gave their lives nursing the sick in their homes and in hospitals during the epidemic of influenza in 1918. They were Mother Marie Aloysia and Sister Mary Immaculata.

Holy Childhood, ASSOCIATION OF THE (cf. C. E., VII-299d).—Three years after its foundation, that is, in 1846, the Holy Childhood was introduced into New Orleans and Baltimore, from which cities it slowly branched out and took root in a number of other places in the United States. In the interests of this Association the founder, Bishop Forbin-Janson, traveled and lectured in France, Belgium, and in England, but not in the United States, though he may have had this in mind, for he died unexpectedly at his home near Marseilles 12 July, 1844, at the age of fifty-nine years. In 1866 Rev. Theodore Thiry, S.J., was appointed by his superiors to undertake to extend the Association in the United States. At this time he was attached to St. Francis Xavier's Church, New York City. He succeeded in introducing the society in many new parishes, edited the "Annals," made the annual reports, and accounted for the money received and transmitted to the Paris headquarters. Associated with him were Rev. B. Piott, of Baltimore, Rev. Edward Joos, V.G., of Michigan, Mgr. Henry Muehlsiepen, V.G., of St. Louis, and Rev. Andrew Daniel, Agent for the Sulpician Fathers in the United States and Canada. The total amount collected by Fr. Thiry during the twenty-three years that he supervised the work was $162,601.85. His last work was to compile the report of the Holy Childhood for the year 1888. He died in New York City, 13 March, 1889, at the age of sixty-six years. After his death a number of centers continued the work, but as they lacked leadership and inspiration, interest began to wane and the receipts greatly diminished. At the urgent request of the director general of the Association, Mgr. Demimuid, Very Rev. Joseph Strub, C.S.Sp., undertook to reorganize the work in 1889. In February, 1890, he appointed Rev. Anthony J. Zielenbach, C.S.Sp., director of the German branches. He was assisted in an executive capacity by Mr. Charles J. Jaegle, who later in 1916 was knighted by Pope Benedict XV for his services to the Church and the Catholic press. With the appointment Fr. Zielenbach, Pittsburgh became the central bureau of the Association in America. Rev. Andrew Daniel, S.S.S., remained director for Canada and the English branches. In 1893 the entire work was entrusted to the Holy Ghost Fathers. In August, 1897, Rev. John Wilms, C.S.Sp., succeeded Fr. Zielenbach. He extended the society to 32 dioceses, had it incorporated in New York City in 1912, and raised during his directorship over $417,900. He died 3 January, 1914. The work was continued by Rev. Francis Retka, C.S.Sp., until the following October, when Rev. Edward J. Knaebel, C.S.Sp., was placed in charge. He greatly extended the sphere of the Holy Childhood and put system into its management. During the six years of his directorship he raised $664,888.95. The work increased so rapidly that in 1920 an assistant director became necessary, and Rev. Joseph Rossenbach, C.S.Sp., was appointed. He continues to labor in this capacity. In 1920 Fr. Knaebel, wishing to labor directly in the missions, resigned the directorship and departed for old Calabar, Nigeria, B.W.A. Rev. Lawrence A. Farrell, C.S.Sp., succeeded him in office in October, 1920, but owing to ill health had to resign the following year. In September, 1921, Rev. Wm. F. Stadelman, C.S.Sp., succeeded to the national directorship. The work is now established in 55 dioceses in the United States, and the membership is over 500,000. The amount collected from March, 1921, to March, 1922, amounted to $168,005.70.

It is estimated that at the present time there are enrolled in the Association throughout the world about 20,000,000 Catholic children. The total number of pagan infants rescued and baptized from 1843 to 1921 is 24,411,701. The total amount contributed for this noble purpose by the children of all countries for the same period is 194,125,435.03 francs, which at pre-war rate of exchange amounted to $38,825,087. In the various heathen countries 285 missions are assisted, 1550 orphanages are maintained, and 11,750 workshops are operated. During 1913 the last normal year before the war, there was collected in the whole world $862,094.12. In 1914 the amount dropped to $295,363.13. During the war (1914-19) Germany and Austria discontinued to contribute, which in part explains the decrease. In 1920 the total sum collected in the whole world was 8,001,441.71 francs, which at the rate of pre-war exchange amounted to $1,600,288, but in reality was less on account of the fluctuating values of French money. Of this there were contributed in francs by: North America, 2,347,013.20; France, 1,547,806.69; Germany, 1,030,080; Holland, 670,483.48; Belgium, 633,022.74; Italy, 427,048.14; Switzerland, 327,037.76; South America, 233,760.93; Ireland, 228,285; Spain, 154,494.55; England, 108,625; Scotland, 104,500; Asia, 68,011.79; Oceania, 57,855.80; Malta, 28,976.25; Africa, 18,920.34; Denmark, 6320; Portugal, 4375.75; Norway, 3201.29; Greece, 1623.

On 17 December, 1913, Pius X said of the Association: "We desire greatly that all Catholic children join the pious and beneficial Association of the Holy Childhood. This would contribute much to their education, and bring upon them and their homes Heaven's choicest gifts. We heartily bless them and their beloved parents." On 13 September, 1914, Benedict XV said: "Like our regretted predecessors of blessed memory, we are anxious to see the membership of the Holy Childhood increased." And Pius XI likewise encouraged and blessed the Association.

Holy Communion (cf. C. E., VIII-402).—Any priest may bring Holy Communion to a sick person privately with the leave—at least presumed—of the priest who has care of the Blessed Sacrament. Holy Communion should be given under the form of unleavened or leavened hosts according to the Rite of the minister, except in case of necessity, when there is no priest of the proper Rite present; under such circumstances, however, the minister is to observe the ceremonies of his own Rite. Secret sinners who desire to receive Holy Communion privately are to be refused if the minister knows they are unrepentant, but not if they approach publicly and cannot be passed by without scandal. All those who have reached the use of reason are obliged to receive Holy Communion their spiritual director for just reasons tells them munion at least about Easter each year, unless to refrain temporarily. This Easter precept is to be fulfilled between Palm Sunday and Low Sunday, but the local ordinary may extend the time from the fourth Sunday of Lent to Trinity Sunday, if circumstances so demand. The Paschal Communion may be received in any parish, but preferably in the recipient's; those who receive it outside of the parish should tell their pastor that they have fulfilled their duty. If for any reason the Paschal Communion has not been received within the proper time, the obligation of going to communion still remains; the precept, of course, is not fulfilled by a sacrilegious communion. The faithful may receive Holy Communion according to any Rite, but it is desired that they should fulfil the Easter precept in their own Rite. Holy Communion, which may be distributed only during the hours may now be received by the faithful on Holy Saturday, but only during Mass or immediately after. A priest saying Mass must not give Holy Communion during Mass to persons at such a distance that he cannot see the altar; it may be given wherever it is permitted to say Mass, even in a private oratory, unless the local ordinary for just causes prohibits that in particular cases.

Holy Cross, CONGREGATION OF (cf. C. E., VII-403a).—The history of the congregation during the Holy Cross, CONGREGATION OF (cf. C. E., VII-403a).—The history of the congregation during the second decade of the twentieth century is a story of continuous development and gratifying progress. In the province of Eastern Bengal there has been a notable increase, both in the number of missionaries engaged in the work and in the material resources upon which that work largely depends. A monthly magazine, "The Bengalee," published in Washington, D. C., is successfully enlisting the sympathy of thousands of readers in behalf of the missionaries and their flocks; and a foreign mission seminary, soon to be established in Detroit, Mich., will have for its exclusive end the training of youthful Americans for service in Bengal. In the province of Canada the outstanding feature of the decade has been the somewhat remarkable development of the "Oratory of St. Joseph" at Mount Royal Ward, Montreal. The crypt of a proposed magnificent basilica has been completed at a cost of more than a quarter of a million dollars, the gift of thousands of pilgrims to the shrine made famous by hundreds of miracle-like cures, which have been secured through the intercession of St. Joseph, invoked by his devoted client, Brother André. The work of the Oratory has the fullest approbation of the ecclesiastical authorities; and, as a place of pilgrimage, St. Joseph's shrine on the flank of Mount Royal already bids fair to rival the Canadian shrine par excellence, Ste. Anne de Beaupré. Development in the province of the United States has taken the form of an increase in the number of high schools conducted by the Brothers of Holy Cross, and the establishment of Moreau Seminary at Notre Dame, Indiana. The severest blow to fall upon the congregation for the past quarter of a century was the death, in 1921, of the Very Rev. Andrew Morrissey, Coadjutor-General of the Congregation. Father Morrissey had been president of the University of Notre Dame for a dozen years, and Provincial Superior of the province of the United States for a subsequent period of a decade and a half. His lamented death occurred less than a year after his appointment as Coadjutor-General by the General Chapter, held at Notre Dame, Indiana, in 1920. At this same General Chapter, the rules and constitutions of Holy Cross were thoroughly revised and brought into complete harmony with the New Code of Canon Law. The members of the congregation in the opening year of the century's third decade include some 240 priests, 140 professed seminarians and ecclesiastical novices, 375 professed brothers, and 50 novice brothers.

Holy Cross, SISTERS OF THE (cf. C. E., VII-405c).

—The work of the Holy Cross Sisters is chiefly educational, but they also devote themselves to the care of orphanages and hospitals for the sick. They had charge of military and naval hospitals during the Civil War, and cared for the soldiers in the camps during the Spanish-American War. On 30 November, 1919, with appropriate ceremonies marble markers, ordered by the Federal Government, were placed on the graves of the Sisters who had been nurses during the Civil War. On 22 December, 1920, Mlle. Louise d'Orbessains, in religion Sister M. Eugenie, C. S. C., professor of French language and literature at St. Mary's, was declared a member of the French Academy by the Department of Public Instruction and Fine Arts of the French Republic. Commandant G. E. Dubreuil, military attaché of the French Embassy at Washington, D. C., presented her with the decoration, awarded 26 June, 1921.

The Sacred Congregation of Religious approved of the changes made in the constitutions in conformity with the revised Code of Canon Law, 28 April, 1921. The mother-house of the community is St. Mary's College and Academy, Notre Dame P. O., near South Bend, Indiana. The present Superior General is Mother M. Aquina, elected 25 July, 1919, succeeding Mother Perpetua (1901-19), Mother Annunciata (elected 1895; d. 1900), Mother Augusta (1882-95), and Mother Angela, the virtual foundress of the order in the United States. Fifty seven Sisters, of whom 38 are dead and 19 living, are Jubilarians, having lived fifty years after their religious profession. There are 1055 Sisters working in the Archdioceses of Baltimore, Chicago, Cincinnati, Dubuque, New York, Oregon City, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Santa Fé, and in the various dioceses. They conduct 74 institutions, including 1 college, 2 normal schools, 19 boarding schools, 44 parochial schools with 13,290 pupils, 7 hospitals with 14,662 patients, and 4 orphan asylums with 169 orphans.

Holy Cross, SISTERS MARIANITES OF THE (cf. C. E., VII-405b).

—This congregation, with mother-house and novitiate in New Orleans, La., numbers 150 Sisters, who are in charge of 2 orphanages, 1 home for boys, 19 academies and schools in the Archdiocese of New Orleans and in the Diocese of Natchez, and have under their care 5500 children. Attached to the mother-house in France is the novitiate in New York, in which archdiocese there are 70 professed Sisters and 1 novice, in charge of 5 schools with 832 pupils.

Holy Cross College.—The oldest Catholic college in New England was founded in the year 1843, by the Rt. Rev. Benedict Joseph Fenwick, second bishop of Boston. The bishop was aided by the Rev. James Filton, who in 1838 had established the Seminary of Mt. St. James on the hill which now bears that name, but was then known as Pakachoag, "Hill of Pleasant Springs." Father Filton presented this institution to the bishop in 1842, and on 2 November, 1843, classes were organized in what was still known as the Seminary of Mt. St. James, and on 13 January, 1844, the first college building was completed.

The Fathers of the Society of Jesus were invited by the bishop to organize the courses of study according to the curriculum of their college at Georgetown. Bishop Fenwick died 10 August, 1846, and was buried in the college cemetery. A few days before his death, however, on 6 August, he had ceded full control and possession of the institution with buildings and grounds free of incumbrance to the Fathers.

On 14 July, 1852, a fire destroyed the entire central building, and the very existence of the institution was threatened by this serious loss. However, the Rt. Rev. John B. Fitzpatrick, then Bishop of Boston, determined that the college should not perish, and on 3 October, 1853, it was ready, enlarged, and remodeled to receive students. Nevertheless, the effect of the calamity on the young institution is evident in the interruption of graduating classes from 1852 to 1858.

The new college encountered difficulties in obtaining a charter, and although the petition was presented in 1849 the charter was not granted until 1865, when the influence of the Civil War had caused all differences of opinion regarding it to be set aside. However, during this period the students were not deprived of the benefits of graduation, as Georgetown College conferred degrees on all who were graduated from 1849-52 and from 1858-65. In 1895 a new building was completed containing a thoroughly equipped gymnasium, and in 1905 and 1913 two more buildings were added to the college. The graduates of the college from 1849 to 1920 inclusive number 2165, and in 1920-21 the college registered 733 students. The Rev. James J. Carlin, S. J., president of the college, is assisted by a faculty of 54 members.

Holy Family, CONGREGATION OF THE (cf. C. E., VII-407d).—This institute, founded by Abbé Noailles in 1820, now comprises three branches which have their own government and their own life. They are: (1) Sisters of St. Joseph, whose special aim is the adoption and education of young orphans. This congregation, which has at all times met with the warmest sympathy from all classes of society, directs orphanages in France and Spain. The mother-house is in Bordeaux. (2) Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, whose principal work is the education and instruction of youth of the different classes of society. In France, Spain, England, Belgium, Asia, and Africa they direct houses of higher education, boarding schools for the middle class, high schools, elementary and kindergarten schools, houses of refuge, and workrooms. In some localities they visit the sick and the poor. The mother-house is in Bordeaux. (3) Sisters of Hope, whose chief end is the nursing of the sick, either in their homes or in hospitals and clinics. To these chief works is added another entirely charitable work: the Sisters visit the sick poor, nurse them, and watch by them as far as the case requires. In populous centers they associate with themselves charitable ladies whose co-operation enables them to help a greater number of poor. They are established in the chief towns of France, Spain, England, Italy, Ceylon, South Africa, and the two Americas. The mother-house is in Bordeaux.

The last establishment of the founder was the work of the Solitary Sisters, devoted to contemplation. He founded them with a view to setting up a living and permanent votive offering of thanksgiving for the great Eucharistic miracle of 3 February, 1822. On this date the officiating priest at Benediction in the Convent of the Ladies of Loreto, at Bordeaux, beheld an apparition of Our Lord within the monstrance which held the Sacred Host, this miraculous appearance being testified to by the altar-boy, the superioress of the house, and the majority of those present during Benediction. The Sisters keep up perpetual adoration and recite every day in Latin the liturgical office of Our Lady. By their life of piety and solitude they constitute the praying portion of the Holy Family, which is a wholly active congregation.

In communities requiring it, lay Sisters, designated by the name of Sisters of St. Martha, are especially devoted to manual labor. They share in all the privileges of the religious state and of community life in the same way as all the members of the Holy Family.

To supply these works with subjects qualified to secure the aim the founder had in view in instituting them, novitiates are established at Talence, near Bordeaux; Hortaleza, near Madrid; Rock Ferry, England; Rome, Italy; Bellair, Africa; and in Canada. As a consequence of persecution and war, a certain number of houses having been closed in France, the institute has at present (1921) 202 houses with 3618 Sisters in charge of 30,000 children and 15,000 poor and sick.

Holy Family, LITTLE SISTERS OF THE (cf. C. E., VII-408b).—This congregation, with mother-house at Sherbrooke, P. Q., Canada, numbers 44 missions, 794 professed Sisters, 49 novices, and 21 postulants. There are 8 establishments in the United States.

Holy Family, SISTERS OF THE (New Orleans; cf. C. E., VII-408a).—This congregation of colored Sisters, with novitiate at New Orleans, La., conducts establishments in the Archdiocese of New Orleans and the Dioceses of Galveston, San Antonio, and Mobile. There are 145 Sisters, 11 novices and 2 postulants with 3100 pupils under their instruction.

Holy Family, SISTERS OF THE (San Francisco; cf. C. E., VII-408c), founded in San Francisco in 1872 by Miss Elizabeth Armer, who became in religion Sister M. Dolores, under the guidance of the Most Rev. J. S. Alemany, then Archbishop of San Francisco, and the Very Rev. J. J. Prendergast. The special work of the Sisters is: the catechetical instruction of public school children, the assisting of pastors in Sunday schools, the seeking out of children of neglectful or indifferent parents to induce them to attend classes of Christian Doctrine, and the establishment of day homes for the care of little children whose mothers are obliged to work during the day. At the present time the Sisters have under their spiritual care thousands of children. They assist in 23 Sunday schools in the city and suburbs of San Francisco, besides conducting several large day homes. Houses were established in San José in 1907 and in Oakland in 1911. The Los Angeles foundation in 1921 is the first established in Southern California.

Holy Family of Nazareth, SISTERS OF THE (cf. C. E., VII-408a).—The mother-house of this congregation is at Rome, Italy, and the provincial house for America is at Des Plaines, Ill. In the United States the Sisters conduct institutions in the archdioceses of Boston, Chicago, and Philadelphia, and in the dioceses of Brooklyn, Cleveland, Columbus, Detroit, Erie, Fort Wayne, Hartford, Peoria, Pittsburgh, Scranton, Springfield, and Syracuse. There are in the United States 1030 professed Sisters, 75 novices, and 40 postulants, in charge of 57 parochial schools with 50,000 pupils, 2 orphanages, 2 hospitals caring for 186 patients daily and 4957 during the year, 1 academy with 32 boarders and 307 day scholars, and 1 day nursery.

Holy Ghost, CONGREGATIONS OF THE.—I. CONGREGATION OF THE HOLY GHOST AND OF THE IMMACULATE HEART OF MARY (cf. C. E., VII-416d).—The mother-house and house of general administration of the congregation is at Paris, where the superior general resides. Mgr. Le Roy, Archbishop of Alinda, has been superior since 1896. At Rome the Fathers direct the French Seminary. The congregation numbers six provinces: France, Ireland, Germany, Portugal, the United States, and Belgium-Holland, and the vice-province of England. The dioceses, vicariates apostolic, and prefectures apostolic confided to it number 25. They are, in Africa: Angola and Congo, Lower Congo, Senegal and Senegambia, Sierra Leone, Zanzibar, Upper Cimbébasia, Lower Niger, Loango, Gaboon, Kamerun, Ubanghi, French Guinea, Bagamoyo, Ubanghi-Shari, Kilima-Najaro, Southern Katanga; near the African continent: Diego Suarez (Northern Madagascar), Mayotte Islands and Nossi-Be and Comoro, Réunion, Port Louis (Mauritius); in America: Saint-Pierre and Miquelon, Guadeloupe, Martinique, French Guiana, and Tefé. The congregation also has important colleges near Ottawa, Canada, at Port au Prince, Haiti, and at Port of Spain, Trinidad, and directs at Pittsburgh, Penn., the Duquesne University with more than 2000 students. In the United States the Fathers are established in 15 dioceses and have 38 houses, of which 16 are especially devoted to work among the colored people. The preparatory college is at Cornwells Heights, Penn., and the novitiate is at Ferndale, Conn. According to the latest statistics (1921) the congregation comprises 2888 members, of whom 1726 are professed and 1162 aspirants, with a total of 272 houses. In March, 1922, the Holy Ghost Order was officially recognized by the Colonial Office of the British Government.

II. CONGREGATION OF THE DAUGHTERS OF THE HOLY GHOST (cf. C. E., VII-417d).—At the death of Mother Saint George, Superior General from 1913 to 1919, her predecessor, Mother Marie-Alvarez, was re-elected and actually governs the congregation. Previous to the publication, in 1918, of the new Code of Canon Law, the Daughters of the Holy Ghost made perpetual vows after having completed two years of religious novitiate. Now the duration of the probation is one year, at the completion of which they make temporary vows for three years and then perpetual vows. The number of members is over 2000.

III. MISSIONARY SISTERS, SERVANTS OF THE HOLY GHOST (cf. C. E., VII-418a).—This congregation was founded at Steyl, Holland, in the year 1889, by the late Very Rev. Arnold Janssen, founder of the Society of the Divine Word. Its principal aim is work in home and foreign missions, especially in those which are in charge of the above mentioned society. Its chartered title is "Missionary Sisters, Servants of the Holy Ghost." It numbers (1920) 1034 professed Sisters, 119 novices, 67 postulants, and 70 candidates. The congregation possesses 7 novitiates, as follows: 2 in Holland, at Steyl and at Uden; 1 in Germany, at Vallendar, Rld.; 1 in Austria, at Stockerau, near Vienna; 1 in Argentina, at Crespo; 1 in the U. S. A., at Techny, Ill.; 1 in Yen-chou-fu, South Shantung, China. In the home and foreign missions the Sisters take up all kinds of work suitable to their state: the teaching in schools for elementary and higher education, the conducting of hospitals, dispensaries, orphanages, boarding schools, homes for the aged, asylums, sanatoria, etc. They have 14 houses in Holland, 9 in Germany, 6 in Austria, 19 in Argentina, 10 in Brazil, 14 in the U. S. A., 3 in the Philippine Islands, 5 in China, 4 in New Guinea, 2 in Japan, 2 in Dutch E. Indies. Up to 1918 the congregation was represented also in the mission of Togo, West Africa, and in Mozambique, on the east coast of Africa. These two missions, comprising four and three stations respectively, are forsaken at the present time, by reason of the deportation and repatriation of the priests as well as the Sisters. At the first General Chapter of the congregation, which convened in 1910 at Steyl, Holland, Mother Theresia was elected Superior General. At this time the first constitutions were revised and adapted according to the then published decrees of the Sacred Congregation of the Affairs of the Religious. A change was made in the color of the religious garb from light blue to dark blue, except for the missionaries in the tropics, who continue to wear white habits. In 1920 the formation of the European houses into provinces took place, and the following provinces were erected: Holland, Germany, and Austria. The next General Chapter is in preparation for May, 1922, when the Superior General will be elected and another revision of the constitution will be made to conform to the new Canon Law.

The first provincial superior of the United States was Sister Leonarda. The present Provincial Superior is Sister Willibalda. The Holy Ghost Institute, Techny, Ill., is the provincial house, the seat of the novitiate and postulate. Connected with it is a boarding school for girls. The number of religious in the United States is 199, including 169 professed Sisters, 19 novices, and 11 postulants. The Sisters conduct five schools for colored children in Jackson, Meridian, Vicksburg, Greenville, Miss., and in Little Rock, Ark. They have an average of 1500 pupils in the elementary grades, in high school, commercial and music departments. The community is in charge of two hospitals, at Watertown, Wis., with a training school for nurses in connection, and at New Hampton, Iowa, with 500 and 300 patients per annum. At the St. Ann's Home at Techny, Ill., 130 aged people are cared for. Since 1910 up to 15 Sisters left Techny to go to the missions among the Igorots on the island Luzon, P. I. On 24 November, 1921, the first four American Sisters departed from Techny for the mission among the Papuans, in New Guinea, Oceania.

Holy Humility of Mary, INSTITUTE OF SISTERS OF THE (cf. C. E., VII-418b).—The Sisters devote themselves to the care of the sick, orphans, and homeless children. The postulantship of six months is followed by a novitiate of two years, at the end of which time triennial vows are made. At the expiration of these vows the Sisters make perpetual vows. The mother-house is at Villa Maria, Lawrence Co., Penn., and the community is attached to the Diocese of Cleveland. In 1911 the Sisters were given charge of a new diocesan hospital opened at Youngstown, Ohio. At present 18 Sisters are assigned there. The congregation numbers (1921) about 275 members. They conduct two high schools and a school for poor children, the latter situated at the mother-house, and also have under their care parochial schools, one hospital, the diocesan seminary, and St. Anthony's Home for Working Boys.

Holy Savior, SISTERS OF THE MOST.—This congregation, called also the Daughters of the Divine Redeemer or Sisters of Niederbronn, was founded in 1849 for the care of the sick and poor at Niederbronn (Alsace) by Elizabeth Eppinger, a peasant girl. The foundress was in poor health and thirty-five years of age. She was aided in her work by the zealous and prudent devotion of Fr. Jean David Reichard, pastor of Niederbronn, who later resigned his parish to devote himself entirely to the congregation. The Bishop of Strasburg, Msgr. Raess, gave his paternal interest and entire sympathy to the work from its beginning. The congregation obtained legal rights and recognition by imperial decree of 6 November, 1854. The Holy See granted it the decree of praise 7 March, 1863, the decree of approbation 11 April, 1866, and approved its constitutions 30 July, 1877. By decree of the Sacred Congregation of Religious of 3 December, 1919, it was divided into four provinces, two French and two German. The constitutions, changed to conform to this new division and to the new Code of Canon Law, have been submitted to the Holy See for approbation.

The congregation spread rapidly in the Diocese of Strasburg, and since 1851 has been established in other dioceses of France, in Germany, Austria, Belgium, and Luxemburg. In 1866 a schism separated from the mother-house of the congregation the houses in the Dioceses of Wurzburg in Bavaria, Vienna in Austria, and Oedenburg in Hungary, which the respective bishops constituted as independent and autonomous congregations. In 1880 the mother-house with the novitiate was transferred from Niederbronn to Oberbronn. The congregation has at the present time three novitiates; one at Oberbronn in the Diocese of Strasburg for the two French provinces of Alsace-Lorraine and of the Interior; another at Buhl in the Diocese of Freiburg-im-Breisgau for the German province of Baden-Hesse; the third at Neumarkt in the Diocese of Eichstatt for the German province of Bavaria. The three novitiates have a total of 207 novices. The number of members of the congregation has steadily increased since its origin. Professed Sisters numbered 600 in 1872, 1800 in 1900, 2424 in 1910, 2871 in 1922. The number of houses in the four provinces is 367. There were 268 in 1900, 122 in 1880, 72 in 1860, and 9 in 1850. The primary work of the congregation is the care of the sick, especially the sick poor, in their homes, in hospitals, and in convalescent homes. The Sisters also have under their care orphanages, hospices, and refuges for the poor, workrooms for young girls, housekeeping schools, kindergartens, and day nurseries.

Holy Sepulchre, CANONESSES REGULAR OF THE SEE CANONESSES REGULAR.

Holy Sepulchre, FRANCISCAN GUARDIANS OF THE (cf. C. E., VII-427b).—A band of six or seven Franciscan Fathers and as many Brothers chosen from the community of St. Saviour to keep watch over the Holy Sepulchre and the sanctuaries of the basilica, to which they conduct a daily pilgrimage. The Friars lead a difficult confined life. At midnight, while chanting their Office, they go in procession to incense the tomb of the Saviour whilst they intone the Benedictus. The rest of the community of St. Saviour, which generally numbers about 25 Fathers and 55 Brothers, are engaged in the various activities of the convent, which comprise, besides the church of St. Saviour (the Latin parish church of Jerusalem), an orphanage, a parish school for boys, a printing office, carpenter's and ironmonger's shops, a mill run by steam, and the largest library in Palestine. While the taking of Jerusalem from the Turks by the British forces on 9 December, 1917, tended to alleviate the severe privations suffered by the Guardians of the Holy Sepulchre in common with their brethren throughout the Custody of the Holy Land, it nevertheless failed to mark the end of their humiliation in having Mohammedan doorkeepers at the Tomb of the Saviour. General Allenby, on assuming formal possession of the Holy City, regarded this galling condition in the light of a quasi-religious right belonging traditionally to certain Turkish families, and confirmed their position until such time as the status of the religious questions in Palestine should be defined. This difficult task was entrusted by the Treaty of Versailles to a commission to be appointed for the purpose. Remarkable deliberation has been manifested in this important matter, for after two years' delay no visible progress has been made toward the bare nomination of the commission. Until the decisions of this future body are approved by the League of Nations, the many injustices to Catholic rights that came into being during the long Turkish rule in the Holy Land are to remain unremedied.

Holy Union of the Sacred Hearts, CONGREGATION OF THE, founded in France, in Cambrai, by Jean Baptiste Debrabant, secular priest of that diocese. As early as the year 1824 the work had been begun in Douai, under the protection of Monsignor Wicart, afterwards Bishop of Laval. In 1826 the Abbé Jean Baptiste Debrabant, animated with zeal for the glory of God and deeply affected by the great moral evils brought about by the principles of the French revolution, accepted the spiritual and temporal responsibility of the work already begun in 1824, and established in the Diocese of Cambrai a pious Congregation of Sisters who should procure the glory of God and the salvation of souls, by the sanctification of its members and the Catholic and social education of youth. Thus the Abbé became the founder of the congregation to which he gave the name of "The Holy Union of the Sacred Hearts." The congregation spread rapidly, and at the present day it has convents in several parts of the world. After a laudatory brief, given on the recommendation of the bishops, the congregation received its first decree of approbation from the Sacred Congregation of Bishops and Regulars, 30 May, 1853. On 18 December, 1877, another decree of the same sacred congregation granted the final approbation of the Holy See. This important decree facilitated its extension in foreign countries. Already established in France, Belgium, England, and Ireland, it was in 1882 introduced into South America, in 1886 into North America, and in 1890 into the West Indies.

It was on the recommendation of Rt. Rev. J. McNamee, of Brooklyn, that this congregation was introduced into the United States. This worthy priest, having a near relative a member of the congregation, advised the late Rev. M. McCabe, of Fall River, Mass., to invite the Sisters to take up the work of the parochial school in his parish of the Sacred Heart. The invitation was accepted, and the Sisters came to Fall River from Douai in October, 1886. In December of the same year a young ladies' academy was opened on Prospect Street, and later on a boarding school was established. Other foundations succeeded each other in due course: in Taunton, Mass., Pawtucket, R. I., North Cambridge, Mass., South Lawrence, Mass., and Chelsea, Mass. The novitiate for the American province is in Fall River, Mass. The congregation is placed under the authority of a superior general, who is elected by the general chapter and who resides in Tournai, Belgium. Before the expulsion of the religious from France, in 1902, the mother-house was situated in Douai. The superior is assisted by a council of six members, besides a secretary general and a bursar general.

Homicide (cf. C. E., VII-422c).—A member of the laity who is guilty of homicide is thereby rendered incapable of legal ecclesiastical acts and is excluded from any office he may have held in the Church.

Ho-nan, EASTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (HONANENSIS ORIENTALIS), in China. The vicariate was erected 21 September, 1916, when Ho-nan was divided for the third time into four instead of three dioceses as hitherto, the new vicariate being directly east of Western Honan. Bishop Noè Giuseppe Tacconi of the Foreign Missions of Milan, born at Pavia 23 September, 1873, came to China 27 September, 1896, was named Bishop of Aradus and vicar Apostolic of Southern Ho-nan, 18 September, 1911, and was transferred on 20 November, 1916, to the new see. With seven priests, five of whom were from the Foreign Missions of Milan, and two natives, the new vicar organized the vicariate. An imposing cathedral has been built in Kai-feng-fu, the episcopal seat.

On 24 November, 1920, six Sisters of Divine Providence from the United States of America arrived in Kai-feng for purpose of founding schools for girls and caring for orphans. In the same year three priests from America arrived to teach the boys of the vicariate, and in a few months had opened flourishing schools. The 8262 Catholics are Chinese and are attended by 11 secular priests. The vicariate has 8 parishes, 8 missions, 7 churches, 8 stations, 1 seminary with 25 seminarians, 2 normal schools with 15 teachers and 340 boys and 60 girl students, 32 elementary schools with 32 teachers and 459 boys and 215 girls, 144 catechumens, 1 home for the aged, 1 orphanage with 30 children.

Ho-Nan, NORTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (HONANENSIS SEPTENTRIONALIS), is one of the four vicariates in the territory of Ho-Nan, China. It is entrusted to the seminary of Foreign Missions of Milan, and the present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Martino Cholino, born in Volchiusella, diocese of Ivrea, in 1877, left for Northern Ho-Nan after having been appointed titular Bishop of Calama and Vicar Apostolic of Northern Ho-Nan 23 February, 1921, succeeding Rt. Rev. Giovanni Menicatti, born in Milan 18 September, 1866, came to China 1 April, 1889, was elected Bishop of Tanis and Vicar Apostolic of Northern Ho-Nan 12 September, 1903, consecrated in Peking 23 November, 1903. On the occasion of his sacerdotal jubilee, in 1913, the pope accorded him the usage of the throne and of the cappa magna, and the privilege to be named in The Canon of the Mass as if he were a resident bishop. In 1920 the bishop resigned from the vicariate and is now living in Milan.

By present (1921) statistics the Catholic population of the vicariate numbers 20,967, all Chinese, and there are: 15 parishes, 22 churches, 396 mission stations, 1 convent of women with 12 Chinese Sisters, 4 lay brothers, 1 seminary, 17 seminarians, 6 secondary schools for boys with 324 pupils, 1 secondary school for girls with 40 pupils, 1 professional school with 1 professor and 7 pupils, 1 French school with 9 teachers and 250 pupils, 447 elementary schools with 6900 pupils, 1 orphanage for boys with 24 orphans, 1 orphanage for girls with 92 orphans, and 1 infant asylum with 363 orphan children.

Ho-nan, SOUTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., III-677d).—Before 1844 the missions in Ho-nan were cared for by the Jesuits, but in 1844 a vicariate apostolic was created and placed in charge of the Lazarist Fathers, they being succeeded in 1869 by the priests of the Foreign Missions of Milan, directed by Bishop Simeone Volontieri, who greatly increased the number of Christians and missions. The vicariate was divided in 1882, all the territory of Ho-nan north of the Yellow River being formed into the vicariate of Northern Ho-nan and that south of the river into the vicariate of Southern Ho-nan. It was 1884 before the bishop for Northern Ho-nan took over his territory and the vicar apostolic of Ho-nan became vicar apostolic of Southern Ho-nan. In 1911 Southern Ho-nan was divided and the additional vicariate of Western Ho-nan was formed. Still another separation occurred in 1916, when the vicariate of Eastern Ho-nan was created.

At present the vicariate of Southern Ho-nan is under the direction of Rt. Rev. Flaminio Belotti, born at Serina, diocese of Bergamo, 9 February, 1874; ordained 8 October, 1899; entered the seminary of Foreign Missions at Milan 9 September, 1909; arrived at the mission of Southern Ho-nan 17 September, 1908, and was consecrated on 6 January, 1918, bishop of Sufeta and vicar of Southern Ho-nan to succeed Rt. Rev. Noè Giuseppe Tacconi, who was appointed 20 November, 1916, to take charge of the new vicariate of Eastern Ho-nan.

Important events since 1909 were the pacification of the Chinese during the revolution of 1911, and assistance rendered during the famine of 1919-20, in which American priests were of great aid to the missionaries from Milan. In the vicariate to-day there are 18 European and 13 native Chinese priests, 12 European nuns, and 1 convent with 30 Chinese Sisters. The population of the district is 8,000,000, of whom 17,782 are Catholics and 13,081 catechumens. There are 1 seminary with 7 theologians and philosophers and 50 Latinists, 139 schools for boys with 1563 pupils, 66 schools for girls with 885 pupils, 1 founding home with 335 infants, 2 orphanages with 358 orphans, 22 churches, 180 chapels, 317 primary stations, and 623 secondary ones.

Ho-Nan, WESTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (HONANENSIS OCCIDENTALIS; cf. C. E., XVI-83d), is one of the four divisions of the district of Ho-Nan, in China. It is bounded on the north by the Yellow River, on the west by the Shen-si, on the south by the vicariate of Southern Ho-nan, on the east by that of Eastern Ho-nan. The present Vicar Apostolic is Rt. Rev. Luigi Calza, b. at Rocco, Italy, 1879, ordained 24 May, 1902, appointed Prefect Apostolic of Western Ho-Nan 21 June, 1906, and Vicar Apostolic 18 September, 1911, consecrated titular Bishop of Termessus 21 April, 1912.

During the World War one missionary of this vicariate returned home to join the Italian Army and was wounded and decorated with the Italian war cross. In 1920-21 there occurred an invasion by the Peland and a terrible famine, which was especially severe in the western and southwestern part of the vicariate.

By present (1921) statistics there are 10 missions, 197 churches and mission stations, 2 convents of women, 1 Chinese and 1 European, 29 Chinese and 9 European Sisters of the Order of Josephines, 1 seminary, 18 seminarians, 1 college for boys with 9 professors and 50 students, 1 college for girls with 9 professors. Among the missionary works are: 83 catechism schools for boys with 1167 pupils, 16 catechism schools for girls with 567 pupils, 1 orphanage with 118 children, 119 men and 28 women under religious instruction, 2 dispensaries. Two societies are organized among the laity. The Chinese Catholic population numbers approximately 11,093, besides 6279 catechumens and about 100 Italians, French, and Belgians.

Honduras, BRITISH, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (HONDURENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-449d), is the only English dependency in Central America. It is attached to the Missouri Province of the Society of Jesus, and the episcopal residence is at Belize, the capital of the colony. The second and present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Frederick Hopkins, S.J., consecrated in St. Louis, titular Bishop of Athribis, 5 November, 1899. The same year Father William Wallace, S.J., was appointed regular superior and pro-vicar of the bishop. He was followed by Father William Mitchell, S.J. (1910), Father John Neenan, S.J. (1918), and Father Joseph Kammerer, S.J. (1921).

In 1918 a disastrous fire occurred in the colony which destroyed the principal Government building and resulted in the death of the governor. On 8 September of the same year the fiftieth anniversary of Bishop Hopkins' entrance into the Society of Jesus was celebrated; there was a semi-public celebration of the event in Belize, in which the acting governor and ministers of various religious denominations took part. The same year an epidemic of influenza spread throughout the vicariate and caused many deaths. A riot, attended by serious destruction of property, which occurred in July, 1919, caused troops to be sent from Jamaica and quartered in Belize until October, 1921, and also caused a heavy increase in taxation to compensate for the loss of property. An epidemic of yellow fever, which started in St. John's College, Belize, although it claimed only eight victims, brought great harm to the institution, as most of the boarding students went back to their homes and their return upon the reopening of the college in 1922 is doubtful. At its opening in 1921 the college had registered 244 students.

A great drawback to the spiritual progress of the mission is the language; outside of Belize and the two residences in the south, the language of the school is English, that of the church Spanish, while three-fourths of the Catholic population are either Spanish or Indian speaking. The result is that the missionaries, who, with the exception of two, are English-speaking, have to learn two or more languages before they can be of real service.

By present statistics the total population of this colony is about 45,317, the Catholic population about 25,000, and there are 19 priests, all Jesuits except 1, 4 scholastics and 4 lay brothers. There are 9 residences, 7 mission stations, and 5 convents of religious women, Sisters of Mercy, Sisters of the Holy Family, and Sisters of the Pious Missions, all of whom teach in the elementary schools. Besides St. John's College and 1 academy with 230 pupils, there are 32 public schools, so called because they accept the Government standards for the lay branches of instruction, submit to inspection, and receive government grants-in-aid; during the last year these amounted to $18,908.

The fruitful result of the missionaries' work for the past year is shown by the following record: 1120 baptisms of infants, 68 baptisms of adults, 209 marriages, 70,051 confessions, 982 confirmations, 93,290 Easter communions, 29,853 communions of devotion, 1714 catechists, 1521 boys and 1532 girls in parochial schools. There are 32 sodalities with a membership of 1737, the Apostleship of Prayer alone have 6659 associates.

Hong Kong, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., VII-450d), consists of an island which belongs to Great Britain and is situated at the mouth of the Canton River in China. The vicariate Apostolic contains about 24,945 Catholics, of whom 4000 are Europeans in Hong Kong. It has 54 churches with 33 principal mission stations, 233 smaller stations, 18 European secular priests, 13 lay brothers, 158 Sisters of whom 103 are Europeans and 55 natives, 1 seminary and 24 seminarians. The following colleges and schools exist in the vicariate: 2 colleges for boys (120 students), 3 colleges for girls (260 students), 8 secondary schools (1220 boys and 1030 girls), 74 common elementary schools (1464 boys and 1072 girls), 1 school for catechists (10 students), 3 schools for catechumens (93 students). Schools under the grant-in-aid system are assisted by the Government. In 1921 the following charitable institutions existed in the vicariate: 4 hospitals, 6 refuges with 248 inmates, 11 day nurseries. The hospitals and jails admit the ministry of priests and allow Catholic visitors. Two monthly magazines ("The Roek" and "Religio Patria") are published in the vicariate, and 3 associations exist among the laity: Catholic Men's Club (English), Catholic Union (Portuguese), St. Joseph's Society (Chinese). One of the principal benefactors of the Catholic Church in Hong Kong was Dr. A. S. Gomez, who died in 1921. He built the church of Our Lady of the Rosary and St. Anthony's Asylum, and had the distinction of being a Knight of St. Gregory. The vicariate is under the care of the Seminary of Foreign Missions of Milan and is administered by the Rt. Rev. Dominic Pozzoni, b. at Paderno d'Adda 22 December, 1861, joined the mission in 1885, elected bishop 19 July, 1905, consecrated at Hong Kong 1 October, made vicar apostolic of Hong Kong 26 May preceding.

Hospital Sisters of the Mercy of Jesus (cf. C. E., VII-488d), a cloistered institute and branch of the order founded by St. Augustine to care for the sick. The choir religious go daily to the hospitals to render some service to the sick poor. Two to six or more of their number, according to the case, take in turn the night-watch in each hospital. The chapter is formed of all who are ten years professed. They elect a superior triennially, but her charge may not be prolonged beyond six years. They also elect the principal officers and the council, which is composed, with the superior, the assistant, and the mistress of novices, of four other advisers. The officers may be retained as long as they have the majority of votes in the chapter. The Hospitalers have communities in France, at Dieppe, Rennes, Eu, Vitré, Château-Gontier-St. Julien, Château-Gontier-St. Joseph, Malestroit, Auray, Tréguier, Lannion, Guingamp, Morlaix, Pont-l'Abbé, Gouarec, Fougères, Harcourt, and Bayeux; in England, at Waterloo (Liverpool); in Canada, at Quebec (3 communities), Levis, Chicoutimi, and Roberval; in Africa, at Estcourt (Natal), Durban, Ladysmith, and Pietermaritzburg.

Hours, CANONICAL (cf. C. E., VII-500).—In religious houses of men or women who are bound to recite the office in choir, it must be said in common if there are present four members so bound and not at the time excused, or even when fewer are present, if it is so provided in the Constitutions. In such institutes solemnly professed members who have been absent from choir, except lay brothers, must recite the hours privately.

Hradec Kralove (KÖNIGGRÄTZ), DIOCESE OF (REGINÆ HRADECENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-688c), suffragan of Prague, Bohemia. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Charles Kaspar, b. 1870, elected titular Bishop of Bethsaida 8 March, 1920, and transferred to the Diocese of Hradec Kralove 13 June, 1921, succeeding Bishop Doubrava, who died 22 February, 1921. In 1918 the diocese comprised 475 parishes, 32 deaneries, 869 secular priests, 90 regular priests, and 495 Sisters. There are in the diocese 147,546 Catholics, 59,128 Protestants and other sectarians, 57 Schismatics, 10,062 Jews, and 2101 without any creed.

Huajuapam de León, DIOCESE OF (HUAJUAPATAMENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-505c), suffragan of Puebla, Mexico. The first and present bishop is Rt. Rev. Raphael Amador, consecrated 1903. There are in the diocese 30 parishes, 220 churches and chapels, 60 priests, and 1 seminary.

Huamanga, DIOCESE OF. See AYACUCHO.

Huánuco, DIOCESE OF (HUANUCENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-506a), suffragan of Lima, Peru. Rt. Rev. Pedro Pablo Drinot y Piérola, appointed to this see 8 June, 1904, retired and was transferred to the titular see of Basilinopolis 21 October, 1920, and his successor has not yet been appointed. The population of the diocese is 600,000, of whom the majority are Catholics. There are in the diocese: 8 deaneries comprising 58 parishes, 82 secular priests, 21 regulars, of whom 17 are Franciscans and 4 Canons Regular of the Immaculate Conception, 3 Marist Brothers, over 500 churches and chapels, 2 preparatory seminaries at Huánuco and Jauja, 9 seminarians at Lima, and 1 at the Latin-American College at Rome.

Huaraz, DIOCESE OF (HUARACENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-506c), suffragan of Lima, Peru. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Dominic Vorgas, O.P., b. 1869, professed 1887, lecturer in theology, master of novices at Lima and at Arequipa, elected bishop 26 August, 1920, succeeding Bishop Fanfan, appointed 5 March, 1907, transferred to Cuzco, 19 April, 1918. There are in the diocese: 1 rectorate and 16 deaneries comprising 52 parishes; over 1000 churches and chapels; 5 private oratories; 50 secular priests; 14 regulars (Franciscans); 2 preparatory seminaries at Huaraz and Carhuaz; 9 seminarians at Lima. Franciscan tertiaries with simple vows, founded at Huaraz in 1886, direct a college there, numbering about 80 young girls as students. Four Franciscan tertiaries are at the hospital at Huaraz. The Sisters of Providence of Vitteaux have 9 members in Huaraz, where they direct a college, numbering about 180 pupils. The total number of Sisters in the diocese is 24.

Huesca, DIOCESE OF (ORCENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-513b), suffragan of Saragossa, Spain. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Zacharius Martínez y Núñez, O.S.A., born in Banos de Valdearados, Spain, in 1864, provincial of the Province of the Sacred Heart, and professor at the College of Alphonso XII at Escorial, elected 1918 to succeed Bishop Supervia y Lostale, deceased. The area of the diocese is 1940 square miles and it has a population of 88,000 Catholics. There are 173 parishes, 12 annexes, 240 priests, 245 churches and chapels, 23 convents with 62 members of religious orders of men and 356 Sisters.

Hughes, JOHN J., superior-general of the Paulists, b. at New York on 6 December, 1856; d. there on 6 May, 1919. He was educated at St. Charles College, Maryland, and St. Francis Xavier's College, New York, graduating in 1878, and was ordained in 1884. He was assistant superior under Father Generals Deshon and Searle, and was himself chosen general twice, in 1909 and 1914. During his generalate new houses of the community were founded in Toronto, Canada; in New York, Portland, Oregon, and Minneapolis; and St. Paul's novitiate at Washington, D. C., established. He founded the "Paulist Monthly Calendar," which is now a feature of so many parishes in the United States. He was a man of keen perception and of a fine personality, uniting strength and simplicity, that attracted men to him and kept them at his side, bound by ties of admiration and affection. Such accounts for his success as director of the Spalding Literary Union and as vice-president of the Catholic Converts League of New York, of which he was one of the founders.

Hummelauer, FRANZ VON, exegete, b. in Vienna on 14 August, 1842; d. at Heerenberg, Holland, on 12 April, 1914. He entered the Society of Jesus and on completing his studies devoted himself entirely to Scriptural, particularly Old Testament, Exegesis. He collaborated with Cornely and his associate on the great Jesuit "Cursus Scripturæ Sacre," for which he wrote commentaries on Samuel (1897), Judges and Ruth (1888), Genesis (1895), Exodus and Leviticus (1897), Josue (1903), and I Paralipomenon (1905). In a second edition he modified some of the views he expressed earlier on the historicity of certain narratives in Genesis and Exodus, which were considered too advanced. Von Hummelauer was a member of the Pontifical Commissions for Biblical Studies, from its establishment in 1902 until his death. In addition to the work mentioned above, he is the author of: "Der biblische Schöpfungsbericht," "Das vor-mossaische Priestertum in Israel" (1899), and "Exegetisches zur Inspirations frage mit bsd. Rücksicht auf das alte Testament" (1904).

Hu-nan, NORTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (HU-NANENSIS SEPTENTRIONALIS), was erected 19 September, 1879, by a division of the original vicariate of Hu-nan into two vicariates. It is entrusted to the Augustinian Monks, its present vicar being Rt. Rev. Angel de Diego y Cartajal, b. at Nava, 1867, entered the Augustinians 1885, went to China 1894, appointed titular Bishop of Caloë and Vicar Apostolic of Northern Hu-nan 13 March, 1917; up to the present time he has refused episcopal consecration. In recent years the vicariate has lost three able missionaries through the deaths of Revs. Benito Gonzalez, Augustin de la Paz, and Ignatio Magaz. By latest statistics this territory counts 12,876 Christians, 19,051 catchumens, 23 churches, 111 chapels, 31 European and 2 native priests, 67 elementary schools with 71 teachers and 1766 pupils, and 3 asylums. During the past year (1921) 1070 adults, 498 children of Christian parents and 1419 children of pagans were baptized. A Catholic periodical is published.

Hu-nan, SOUTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (HU-NANENSIS MERIDIONALIS), was erected 19 September, 1879, by a division of the Vicariate Apostolic of Hu-nan in China. It is entrusted to the Italian Friars Minor, the present vicar apostolic being Rt. Rev. Jean-Pellerin Mondaini, O. F. M., b. at Verucchio 15 January; 1868, ordained 1890, went to China 1891, appointed titular Bishop of Synaous and Vicar Apostolic of Southern Hu-nan 23 January, 1902, consecrated 20 April of the same year.

The almost continuous civil war which has been waged in this part of China since 1916 has retarded the progress of religion. In spite of this, however, the number of Catholics in the vicariate has grown to about 23,562, and by present (1921) statistics there are: 40 churches, 202 chapels, 250 mission stations, 10 secular and 22 regular clergy, 1 convent of women, 9 Sisters, 2 seminaries, 29 seminarians, 8 secondary schools for boys with 24 teachers and 155 pupils, 2 secondary schools for girls with 6 teachers and 50 pupils, 1 normal school with 2 teachers and 20 pupils, and 68 elementary schools with 220 teachers and 2474 pupils. Among the charitable institutions are 1 asylum, 1 home, and 3 nurseries.

Hungary (cf. C. E., VII-574b), a monarchy, formed in 1918 after the fall of the Austro-Hungarian Empire. Its area, formerly 109,188 sq. miles is at present 35,164 sq. miles, and its population, formerly 18,264,533, is now, according to the census of 1921, 7,840,832. New Hungary is bounded on the north by Czechoslovakia, Poland, and Ukraine; on the east by Rumania and Ukraine; on the south by Jugoslavia, and on the west by Austria. The principal towns with their population are Budapest 184,616; Szeged 118,328; Debreczen 92,729; Kecskemét 68,424. It is estimated that 56% of the population live from agriculture and 30% from industry.

RELIGION.—In recent years there has been some anti-Jewish legislation, prohibiting Jews to own or to lease landed property, or to own more than one house, debarring all foreign Jews from entering the country and expelling those who had entered since 1914, forbidding Jews to hold positions in any school or theater, in the army, editorial office, or in the government or to have Gentile servants, limiting the Jewish enrollment in the universities to 5 per cent, and retiring or dismissing all professors of Jewish ancestry. For religious statistics see CHURCH in HUNGARY below.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—The assets of Hungary lie almost entirely in its capacity to produce foodstuffs. Owing to the lack of proper maintenance of the soil during the war the land has become to some extent impoverished, while for want of agricultural implements and fertilizers production has dropped off. The following is the official crop report for 1920: harvested area of wheat 1,463,731 jochs (1 joch = 1.16 acres) production, 7,930,270 quintals (1 quintal = 100 pounds), maize 1,331,937 jochs, 12,273,770 quintals; rye 877,649 jochs, 4,196,430 quintals; barley 844,733 jochs, 4,364,350 quintals; oats 588,270 jochs, 3,355,960 quintals. An Agrarian Reform Bill was passed in December, 1920, with the purpose of increasing the number of small-holders, but up to the present very little advantage has been taken of the measure. The coal production in 1920 amounted to 4,956,285 tons, equivalent to 78% of the output in 1913. Of this quantity, 4,458,694 tons were distributed, one-third used for transport, another third for industrial production, and the remainder for light, power, and domestic purposes. About 63,800 tons of coal and 151,970 tons of coke were imported. With the exception of five small mines, all the pits are privately owned, but are under official supervision. The partition of the former monarchy has so far had a disastrous effect on all Hungarian manufacture. Iron ore, timber, oil, hemp, flax, and cereals are now cut off from Hungary. There are about 4378 miles of standard gauge track (of which 1861 miles are owned by the state), 1717 locomotives, 2348 passenger coaches, 1048 luggage trucks, and 18,832 freight trucks. In order to meet the loss caused by depreciation of currency, railway passenger rates have increased 200 per cent and freight 300 per cent. The present condition of the track is adequate only for the requirements of the reduced traffic, and buildings and bridges are in urgent need of restoration. Traffic on the Danube is now internationalized.

FINANCE.—There has been no Hungarian State Budget since 1914-15. During the war thirteen interim provisions were made for the financial administration of a Special Act, but this simply meant the re-application of the 1914-15 budget. The Budget of 1917-18 did not receive legislative sanction. The Karolyi Government (30 October, 1918, to 21 March, 1919), spent 4,800,000,000 korona (1 korona = $0.2026) and received in revenue 400,000,000 korona; the Bolshevik Government spent 4,889,000,000 korona in five months and obtained 473,000,000 korona. The public debt of Hungary at the end of July, 1914, was 8,287,800,000 korona; debts contracted during the war, 32,631,000,000 korona, and debts contracted after the war, 13,524,100,000 korona, bring the total amount of debts to nearly 60 milliards of korona, equal to 7500 korona per head.

EDUCATION.—Public education in Hungary comprises infant schools, elementary schools, industrial and commercial apprentice schools, higher primary and primary schools, training colleges for teachers, middle or secondary schools, academies of law, institutions for religious education, universities, technical high schools, economic, mining, industrial, and commercial special schools. School attendance is compulsory for children between six and twelve. In Old Hungary, the prevailing language in 12,503 schools was Hungarian; in 428 German, in 304 Slovak; in 1707 Rumanian, in 1767 Croatian and Serb. In the middle schools the curriculum extends over eight years.

RECENT HISTORY.—For events up to 1918, see AUSTRIA. The collapse of the Dual Monarchy led Hungary to sever relations with Austria, and on 17 October, 1918, the Hungarian Diet declared Hungary to be entirely independent, except for the personal union through the Emperor. On 2 November the Hungarian Parliament styling itself a National Assembly decided for a republic with Count Michael Karolyi as Prime Minister. King Charles abdicated on 13 November, 1918, and the republic was proclaimed on 16 November, 1918. Unstabilized, with utter lack of cohesion between the various political factions and menaced by the encroachments of her neighbors, the new Hungarian Republic faced tremendous difficulties from its inception. The Rumanians and Serbs advanced for some distance into Hungarian territory, while the Czechs occupied Slovakia and the Danube district. Through these activities, Hungary lost the Banat region, the great source of her food supply and her northern coal mines, upon which her industrial life depended. Meanwhile Bolshevism was spreading and a Communist revolt under the leadership of Bela Kun broke out with such violence that the Government was forced to declare martial law and use troops to retake parts of the capital which had fallen under the control of the rebels. The Interallied Supreme Council in Paris decided to subject Hungary to military occupation and directed the Hungarians to withdraw to the Rumanian boundary, as fixed by the Rumanian Treaty of 1916, and established a neutral zone on the Hungarian-Rumanian border, 140 miles long and 40 miles wide, to be occupied by the Allied troops. On 22 March, 1919, the Allies announced that the Allied troops had occupied the greater part of Hungary, for the purpose of suppressing plundering bands of Bolsheviks. Angered by these actions, Count Karolyi appealed to the proletariat of the world for justice and support. The Budapest Workmen's Council immediately formed a Radical ministry with Alexander Garbai as President and Bela Kun as Minister of Foreign Affairs. This Soviet Government carried on almost continuous warfare with Rumania, Yugoslavia, and Czechoslovakia, all three of which sent troops into Hungarian territory. On 2 April the Paris Conference sent General Smuts to Budapest with power to negotiate a new armistice. In May the Hungarian troops had won numerous successes against the Czechs, but following an appeal for help by President Masaryk of Czechoslovakia, the Allies in an ultimatum on 9 June threatened to use "extreme measures to constrain Hungary to cease hostilities," if it did not refrain from further attacks on the Czech forces. After an ill-fated invasion of Rumania in July, 1919, the Radical government established under the leadership of Bela Kun came to an end, and was succeeded by that composed of moderate Socialists, headed by Jules Peidl. The new government was paralyzed when, in defiance of the Supreme Council, the Rumanians occupied Budapest on 5 August, 1919. Two days later it was overthrown by a monarchist coup d'état, Archduke Joseph proclaiming himself governor. The Archduke had the support of the monarchists and the peasantry, but was opposed by all the Socialist and Liberal groups. An ultimatum from the Supreme Council brought about the Archduke's retirement on 23 August. His Government continued, however, but was later forced to retire. In the plebiscite of 25 January, 1920, Admiral Nicholas Horthy was elected Viceregent (Lord Protector). In March, 1921, ex-King Charles made an attempt to regain his throne. Aided and abetted by the landed aristocracy and by the higher clergy, Charles entered Hungary on 26 March, 1921. Two days later the Council of Ambassadors (Allies) sent an ultimatum to Budapest demanding Charles' deposition and delivery to the Entente representatives. His fate, however, had been settled by the quick and determined action of Horthy. In an engagement near Budapest, Charles was completely defeated, and after ordering his troops to surrender to avoid further bloodshed, was himself taken prisoner with Queen Zita while in flight. Charles was exiled on 3 November by the Council of Ambassadors to Madeira. His death on 1 April, 1922, at Funchal, Madeira, resulted in the proclamation signed by eighteen prominent Legitimist leaders announcing the succession to the Hungarian throne of Prince Otto, his eldest son, and the regency of Queen Zita pending his coming of age. Cardinal Czernoch, the Prince Primate, endorsed the proclamation, but Horthy's Government refused to take cognizance of it. The Dethronement Act of 6 November, 1921, deposed the Hapsburgs from all future title to the throne of Hungary, cancelled the Pragmatic Succession Sanction contained in Acts I and II of the year 1723, which determined the successor of the throne of the House of Austria, thereby giving to the nation the right of free election to the throne; retained unchanged the ancestral constitution of a kingdom, but postponed the choice of a king until a later date.

In the Treaty of Peace between Hungary and the Allies, signed at Versailles on 4 July, 1920, it was provided that Hungary should formally waive claim to Fiume, and to all former Austro-Hungarian territory awarded to Italy, Rumania, Yugoslavia, and Czechoslovakia; limit her army to 35,000 men, assume a proportional share of the Austro-Hungarian debt, place no restriction upon the export of food-stuffs into Austria, and insure to Austrian purchasers terms as favorable as those given to Hungarians. The Treaty with Austria ceded West Hungary (Burgenland) to Austria, but the Hungarians did not accept the decision. The protocol of Venice (13 October, 1921) was an attempt to settle the difficulty, for it provided for the transfer of the territory to Austria and for a plebiscite in Oedenburg and its environs. The plebiscite resulted in a majority for union with Hungary. In the meantime the territory was governed by an international commission. On 29 August, 1921, a treaty establishing friendly relations between the United States and Hungary was signed.

THE CHURCH IN HUNGARY.—Before the war there were 9,011,000 Catholics in the kingdom of Hungary; 2,008,000 Uniat Greeks, 2,600,000 Calvinists, 1,007,000 Lutherans, 2,004,000 Orthodox Greeks, and 912,000 Jews. Since the signing of the Treaty of Versailles there are 4,708,000 Catholics, 158,000 Uniat Greeks and 466,000 Lutherans, 77,000 Orthodox Greeks and 466,000 Jews. In 1914 Catholics formed 48.3 per cent of the total population; to-day they are in the majority as they form 63 per cent of the total population. As a result of the war about 2,113,000 Catholics became subjects of Czechoslovakia, while 1,008,000 went to Rumania, 821,000 to Yugoslavia, 316,000 to Austria, and 45,000 to the state of Fiume. Catholic priests and nuns suffered much in Hungary during the Bolshevik regime of Bela Kun; unspeakable atrocities were committed by this Government, whose leaders were almost exclusively Jewish. More than $82,000,000 worth of ecclesiastical property was confiscated and liquidated; convents, hospitals, orphanages, and asylums, in addition to churches, were included among the institutions which the Bolsheviks seized. Great sums in cash were taken from benevolent, social, athletic and charitable organizations operating under religious auspices. The Catholic Church fared worst of all, and it is estimated that the liquidations of Catholic property aggregated $44,734,000. Amongst the difficulties that the newly-constituted Christian government of Hungary had to deal with was an excessive antipathy against the Jews; acts of retribution were committed against them in the period of rehabilitation by those who, inflamed by the memory of their sufferings, did not distinguish between Judaism as a whole and the excesses of some perverse Jews. Leading Catholics in political life and the Hungarian Catholic bishops lifted their voices in behalf of Judaism, but nevertheless the unscrupulous Masonic press raised a cry against the new Christian Government and by misrepresentation sought to prejudice world opinion against it. A most effective weapon of defence in Catholic hands is the Catholic press which, after ten years of effort on the part of few zealous Hungarian priests, was well established in 1918. A stock company with a capital of $2,000,000 had been formed to carry on its work, nearly all the bishops being shareholders, though the greater part was subscribed by the middle and poorer classes. During the revolution this Central Press Association was suspended, and under the Bela Kun Government its archives, records, and books were destroyed. When Christian principles finally triumphed in Hungary, the people clamored for a Christian press, managed on truly national lines. The Central Press Association met the demand and a month after the fall of Bela Kun (1919) had founded four journals and several reviews. In the following years it managed to buy the "Pallas" of Budapest, one of the largest printing presses in the world, and soon began to play an important part in the life of the country.

and to break the power of the anti-religious and anti-Christian press, which has tempered its language and abated much of its insolence. Without counting provincial sheets and reviews, the Central Press Association now issues the following dailies: "Uj Nemezedék" (the New Generation), "Nemzeti Ujság" (the National Journal), "Uj Lap" (the New Sheet), "Pester Zeitung" (Pest Journal), for German-speaking Hungarians. Catholic leaders in Hungary include Mgr. Molnar, deputy, who died in 1920; M. Haller, Minister of Ecclesiastical Affairs and Public Instruction; the former Premier Charles Huszar; and Margrave Palavinci, men highly respected even by their opponents.

The Apostolic Nunciature of Hungary was created in 1920, and Hungary is represented at the Vatican by Count Sonissich as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary. Mgr. Schioppo, titular Archbishop of Mocissos and auditor of the nunciature at Munich, was named nuncio to Budapest, and presented his credential letters 6 October, 1920, on which occasion he gave 50,000 crowns to the municipality for the poor. There are in New Hungary the following sees: the Archdiocese of Eger (or Erlau), the Archdiocese of Esztergom, with suffragans, Győr, Pécs, Szekesfehérvár (or Stuhlweissenburg), Szombathely, Vác, Veszprém; and the Archdiocese of Kalocsa-Bacs. For further statistics see articles on the above.

Hu-pe, EASTERN (HU-PE ORIENTALIS), in China, was erected in 1870 from a division of the original Vicariate Apostolic of Hu-pé. Rt. Rev. Epifanio Carlassara, O. F. M., who had filled this see for 25 years, died 24 April, 1909. He was born at Montecchio 1844, ordained priest 1866, sent to China 1870, appointed titular Bishop of Madaura and vicar apostolic of Eastern Hu-pé 18 June, 1884. He was succeeded by the present vicar apostolic, Rt. Rev. Bishop Genaro, titular Bishop of Jericho, and also a member of the Order of Friars Minor, to whose care this vicariate is entrusted.

Since the Revolution which broke out in Wuchang in October, 1910, causing the final overthrow of the Ta-Tsing dynasty, and the establishment of the republic, there have been constant small revolutions and internal wars which have retarded the progress of religion.

In addition to the 32 Friars Minor and 24 native priests in the vicariate, there are 8 Marist Brothers, 12 Franciscan Sisters of Mary, 44 Sisters of Charity of Canossa, 50 members of the Third Order of St. Francis, and 109 Catechists. By present (1921) statistics there are 267 churches and public oratories, 332 mission stations, 4 convents for men, 2 seminaries, 88 seminarians, 2 secondary schools for boys with 40 teachers, one of these, conducted by the Marist Brothers, is maintained by the French Government, 2 secondary schools for girls with 33 teachers and 275 pupils, 5 high schools with 18 teachers and 184 boys and 34 girls, 3 normal schools with 9 teachers and 120 pupils, 80 elementary schools with 462 teachers and 2710 boys and 1526 girls. The charitable institutions include 4 hospitals, one of which is an international hospital under the Franciscan Sisters of Mary, 5 dispensaries, 6 orphanages, and 2 asylums. The Catholic population numbers 43,914, all of whom are Chinese with the exception of about 205 French, Irish, Italians, Belgians, and Americans. During the past year there were 1729 baptisms of adults, 360 of these at the point of death, and 1232 baptisms of Catholic children.

Hu-pe, NORTHWESTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF, in China. Among those of note recently deceased arc: Rev. Francesco Luzi, O. F. M., d. 30 April, 1916, at the age of forty-three, sixteen years of which were devoted to the mission. For many years he was pro-vicar, director of the Holy Childhood, and superior of the Franciscan Missionaries. He supervised the building of the hospital at Laohokow; and with contributions from America enlarged the orphan asylum of the Holy Childhood. Rev. Fabian Landi, O. F. M., died 30 June, 1920, at the age of forty-eight, twenty-six years of which were devoted to the mission; for sixteen years he was titular Bishop of Tacnarum and Vicar Apostolic of Hu-pé; the development of the vicariate since 1900 may be attributed largely to his personal efforts. A man of great goodness and kindness, he won the hearts of even the pagans. His example stirred everyone to labor, for he performed at the same time the duties of bishop and missionary, hearing confessions and preaching whenever occasion arose. He compiled an Italian-Chinese dictionary, which was published by the Jesuits at Shanghai in 1920. Until the appointment of a new vicar the vicariate is being administered by Rev. Hermenegildus Ricci, O. F. M.

The following is the report of the activities of the mission from 1 August, 1920, to 1 August, 1921: Catholics 35,012, catechumens 18,000, missions 315, churches and chapels 145, 19 Franciscan priests from Europe, 18 native priests, of whom 3 are regulars, lay brothers 2, sermons to Catholics 3358 and to non-Catholics 2537, adult baptisms 1340, infant baptisms 950, annual confessions 17,057, and of devotion 62,915, annual communions 16,383 and of devotion 145,064, confirmations 122, marriages 181, extreme unctions 306, adult deaths 430 and of minors 244, elementary schools 89, 1 high school for boys with 24 pupils, 1 normal school for girls with 35 pupils, 1 college recognized by the Government with 5 professors and 54 students, 1 upper seminary with 14 seminarians, 1 lower seminary with 33 students, total number of students in the schools 1559 boys and 955 girls. The statistics affecting infants are: administrations of baptism 146, infants of non-Catholics baptized 4710, abandoned infants taken in charge 45, placed in the care of nurses 110; in the 2 orphan asylums for girls there are 43 natives belonging to the Third Order of St. Francis, 300 girls, 196 inmates placed in the care of nurses, 7 catechumens; 36 old and infirm, 57 deaths; in the hospital there are 7 Franciscan Sisters from Egypt, 606 infirm, 33,807 externs, to whom medical care was given, 90 adult baptisms, 397 infant baptisms, 383 deaths.

Hu-pe, SOUTHWESTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF, (HU-PE OCCIDUO-MERIDIONALIS; cf. C. E., III-678a), in China. The vicariate is confided to the Belgian Franciscans, and the present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Modestus Everaerts, O. F. M., consecrated titular Bishop of Tadama in 1905. The Franciscan Missionaries of Mary have an orphanage, catechumenate, hospital, and dispensaries at I-chang; industrial schools, home for old people, 2 dispensaries, 18 foreign Sisters and 16 Chinese Sisters of this order, and an orphanage at King-chau. Thirty-eight native Franciscan tertiaries are engaged in teaching at King-chau, Chang-kin-ho, and Hwa-lin. The population of the vicariate is 9,000,000, of whom 32,192 are Catholics. There are (1922) 9919 catechumens, 43 European priests, 11 Chinese priests, 4 lay brothers, 5 convents, 136 churches and chapels (in 1920), 2 seminaries with 8 students of theology and 21 in preparatory courses, 1 college with 23 students, 5 primary schools with 108 pupils, 93 parochial schools with 1846 pupils, 2 hospitals, 6 dispensaries, 5 orphanages with 498 orphans, 2 homes for old women with 43 inmates. Fr. Van Ruytegem, director of the orphanage at I-chang, died in 1917 in attempting to save some children from drowning.

Hyderabad-Deccan, DIOCESE OF (HYDERABADENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-592c), erected in 1886, suffragan of Madras, India. The diocese is entrusted to the Foreign Missions of Milan, and the present bishop is Rt. Rev. Dionisio Vismara, M.E.M., born in Milan 1867, ordained in 1890, joined the Indian mission immediately and was appointed bishop 11 May, 1909, succeeding Rt. Rev. Pietro Andrea Vigano, retired, and transferred to the titular see of Ezani. The population of the diocese is 12,000,000, of whom 21,017 are Catholics. There are: 9416 catechumens, 20 European missionaries, 8 native priests, 8 seminarians, 98 churches and chapels, 17 principal stations, 110 substations, 20 schools with 605 children, 6 orphanages with 317 orphans, 90 Sisters.

I

Ibagué, DIOCESE OF (IBAGUENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-613a), suffragan of Bogotá, Colombia. The first and present bishop is Rt. Rev. Ismael Perdomo, consecrated 1903. The diocese, founded in 1901, has mourned the deaths of several of the clergy who took part in building it up; Rev. Jesús M. Restrepo, who served as vicar general of the diocese of Tolima before its division into Ibagué and Garzón, Revs. Fausto Pardome, Francisco Hurtado, Francisco Gonzalez, Demetrio Luque, and José J. Villar. A new church is under construction in the city of Guame, financed through the generosity of the family of Caicedo Ibáñez, which promises, when completed, to be one of the most beautiful in the diocese. The Salesian Fathers have also undertaken the construction of a church which will be dedicated to Our Lady of Mount Carmel. Latest statistics credit the diocese with 42 parishes, 74 churches, 42 secular and 17 regular clergy, 10 Marist and 11 Christian Brothers, 43 Brothers of the Presentation and 4 Vincentian Brothers, 10 seminarians making higher studies and 35 making preparatory studies, 2 official higher schools for boys with 139 students, 7 for girls with 223 students, 2 intermediate schools with 60 pupils, 1 normal school for men with 26 pupils, 1 normal school for women with 46 pupils, 2 technical schools, one with 122 male students, the other with 72 female students, 1 conservatory of music, 1 private school, 364 official elementary schools with 9021 boys and 10,022 girls, 1 asylum under construction and 12 hospitals. The Society of St. Vincent de Paul is organized, and two periodicals, "El Meridiano" and "El Carmen," are published here.

Ibarra, DIOCESE OF (IBARRENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-613b), in Northern Ecuador, suffragan of Quito. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Alberto Ordoñez, born in Cuenca 2 November, 1872, elected 4 December to succeed Mgr. Perez y Quinones, transferred to Riobamba. On 8 December, 1917, the bishop entered his see. On 1 October, 1921, a school under the direction of Christian Brothers was opened in Ibarra, while another school is being prepared for the same Brothers in Tulcan. The Sisters of Charity have founded a school in Atuntaqui. The second semana social of all the Catholic circles in the diocese was held in Ibarra in 1921. According to 1920 statistics the diocese has 100,420 Catholics, 40,000 of whom are Indians, 28 parishes, 40 churches, 2 monasteries for men and 1 for women, 41 secular priests, 4 Christian Brothers, 17 Bethlehemites, 30 Sisters of Charity, 2 seminaries with 105 seminarians, 1 college for boys with 96 students, 2 for girls with 60 students, 5 elementary schools with 1500 pupils, 1 asylum, 1 hospital in Ibarra and 1 in Tulcan, 1 orphanage, 5 circles of Catholic workers, 1 Catholic paper, and organizations of the laity in all the centers of population.

Idaho.—The area of the State of Idaho is 83,888 sq. miles.

POPULATION.—In 1921 the population of the State was estimated at 431,866, and that of its capital, Boise, at 36,900.

RESOURCES.—The Idaho mines in 1918 produced minerals valued at $36,522,158; lead yielded $20,923,416; silver, $9,172,340; copper, $1,613,870; gold, $1,373,131.40; zinc, $4,109,716.

AGRICULTURE.—The latest irrigation project in the State, involving an expenditure of $100,000,000, will utilize the waters of the Snake River in reclaiming the desert of the southern portion of the State, and guarantee a supply of water to 2,500,000 acres. Statistics for 1919 give the value of farm products as over $126,000,000; wheat, being valued at $36,648,087; hay at $50,802,765; potatoes at $13,546,798. The alfalfa yield (1917) was 1,500,000 tons; oat yield (1919) 7,700,000 bushels.

OTHER INDUSTRIES.—In 1919 there were 194 saw mills and planing mills, with an output valued at $30,088,000. The State forest lands, including barren or grazing lands, young timber growth or merchantable timber, cover 723,000 acres. The total merchantable timber belonging to the State is approximately 10,130,000,000 bd. ft., valued at $30,000,000. In Idaho there were, in 1918, eight great sugar factories producing from sugar beets grown on irrigated lands 88,200,000 pounds of sugar. The total output of manufacturing plants in 1919 was $80,414,000, and 13,917 workmen were employed.

COMMUNICATION.—In 1915 the Celilo Canal on the Oregon side of the Columbia River was opened, giving Idaho a seaport, Lewiston. Vessels can pass for 480 miles from the Pacific to Lewiston. The railroad mileage in 1918 was 2,861.13 miles.

EDUCATION.—The State University has a faculty of 90 and a student body of 1330. In 1918 there were 3118 teachers in the public schools, and 93,236 pupils enrolled; the total expenditure for all education in that year was $5,369,965. For statistics of Catholic schools see Boise, DIOCESE OF.

State laws relative to private and parochial schools are as follows: no public money shall be used to help support any school or any other literary or scientific institution controlled by any church, or sectarian or religious denomination (IX-5); certificates are issued only to citizens or declarants; all holders of certificates must attend institutes.

RECENT HISTORY.—Recent legislative measures in the State provide for the initiative, referendum, and recall of State officers, excepting judicial officers, an increase in the membership of the House of Representatives, the creation of a public utilities commission (1913), the adoption of mothers' pensions, non-partisan judicial primary elections, the creation of a State highway commission, and the passing of an eight-hour law for public employees. By legislative enactment, approved on 3 March, 1915, Idaho became, on 1 January, 1916, a prohibition State. In 1914 a Workmen's Compensation Bill was passed, also a measure providing for the employment of convicts in the building of roads in mountainous districts. Under the Carey Act a new irrigation system and a parallel railroad leading from Boise into Bruneau County was developed, with the purpose of claiming about 75,000 acres for agricultural purposes. An Anti-Alien Bill was introduced in 1917 with the purpose of preventing the Japanese from owning land in the State. At the protest of the U. S. Secretary of State the bill was withdrawn. On 10 December, 1917, the U. S. Supreme Court upheld the prohibition law of the State, holding that a citizen has no constitutional right to possess liquor for his private use if the State wishes to forbid it. Idaho ratified the national prohibition amendment 8 January, 1919, and the woman's suffrage amendment 11 February, 1920. The budget in 1920 was $4,737,739, and the net debt $3,880,750.

During the European War Idaho contributed 19,016 soldiers, or 51 per cent of the U. S. Army. Its national guard formed a part of the 41st Division at Fremont, Cal.; its national army, of the 91st Division at Camp Lewis, Washington. Of all the force sent to France, the casualties were: deceased, 15 officers and 394 soldiers; prisoners, 9; wounded, 18 officers and 915 men. In 1918 Idaho sent 472 men to the U. S. Naval Reserve; 1234 to the U. S. Navy; 6 to the National Naval Volunteers; a total of 489.

RELIGIOUS FACTORS.—The membership of the Mormon Church in the State is 72,439; Catholics number 17,947; Presbyterians 6943; Methodists 11,373; Christian 5065; Baptist 5682; Episcopalians 2404; Congregational 2827.

In May, 1920, there were eleven councils of the order of the Knights of Columbus in Idaho. For Catholic information see Boise, DIOCESE OF.

STATE GOVERNMENT.—One of the most far-reaching reforms ever made in State administrative organization was effected in Idaho in 1919 by the enactment of the Administration Consolidation Bill. By this act the civil administration of the State is divided into nine departments, agriculture, commerce and industry, finance, immigration, labor and statistics, law enforcement, public welfare, public works, and reclamation. At the head of each department is a commissioner, appointed by the governor and removable by him. The governor is authorized to devise a practical working basis for co-operation of work, eliminating duplication and overlapping of functions. The commissioner of each department is empowered to prescribe regulations not inconsistent with law for the government of his department. Of peculiar significance is the Department of Law Enforcement.

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES.—On 30 November, 1920, the State penitentiary had 218 inmates, but the average for the year was 230. The Idaho industrial school has 221 inmates (1918).

Iglesias, DIOCESE OF (ECCLISIENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-638d), suffragan of Cagliari, Sardinia. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Saturnino Peri, elected bishop of Cotrone 16 June, 1909, transferred to this see 16 June, 1909, succeeding Bishop Dallepiane. The Catholic population of the diocese is 100,000. There are 24 parishes, 41 secular priests, 12 seminaries, 39 churches and chapels.

Ignorance (cf. C. E., VII-648).—Ignorance of invalidating or inhabilitating laws never excuses from their effects, in Canon law unless this is stated expressly. Ignorance or error about a law, penalty, one's own act, or the notorious act of another is as a rule not presumed; but till the contrary is proved it is presumed in regard to a non-notorious act of another. Affected ignorance of a law or of a penalty only does not excuse from penalties latae sententiae. If the law contains the words "presumes," "dares," "knowingly," "of set purpose," "rashly," or other such terms implying full knowledge and deliberation, whatever would lessen imputability, either on the part of the will or of the intellect, would excuse from penalties latae sententiae. If the law does not contain such words, however, crass or supine ignorance of the law or of the penalty alone would not excuse from penalties latae sententiae; if the ignorance were not crass or supine it would excuse from medicinal (as in excommunication), but not from vindictory, punishments latae sententiae. Ignorance of irregularities or impediments does not prevent one from contracting them.

Ilhéos, DIOCESE OF (ILHEOSENSIS), in Brazil, erected in 1913 by dismemberment of the Diocese of São Salvador de Bahia de Todos os Santos, of which it is now a suffragan. It comprises the 28 parishes of Ilhéos, Olivença, Cannarieiras, Belmonte, Santa Cruz, Porto Seguro, Villa Verde, Tramoso, Nossa Senhora de Lourdes do Angelim, Prado, Alcobaca, Caravellas, Villa Viçosa, S. José de Porto Alegre, Itabima, Barra de Rio de Contas, Marahie, Barcellos, Camanni, Igrapiuna, Santarem, Nova Boipeba, Boipeba Velha, Cayru, Taperoa, Serapuhy, Guarem, and Valença. The cathedral is dedicated to St. George. The first and present bishop is Rt. Rev. Emmanuel-Antonio de Paiva, consecrated 1915.

I-I (or KUL-DIA), a mission in China with residence at Sui-ting. This mission, which originally formed a part of the Vicariate Apostolic of Kan-su (comprising the Chinese province of Sin-Kiang), was separated from it in 1888. The superior resides at Kuldja, the principal city of the I-I district of the province. It comprises about 579,150 sq. miles, and is entrusted to the Congregation of Scheutveld, Rev. Joseph Hoogers being the present superior. Born in Horst, Holland, in 1867, he was professed in 1891, ordained in 1894, joined the Chinese mission in 1895, was named procurator at Shanghai in 1909, and superior of I-I 8 June, 1918. Out of a total population of 1,200,000 the mission counts only 300 Catholics, owing to the serious difficulties of evangelization in this part of China. According to 1920 statistics there are 75 catechumens, 4 European priests, some catechists, and 2 chapels.

Illinois (cf. C. E., VII-653c).—The population of the State of Illinois in 1920 was 6,485,280.

RESOURCES.—Agriculture and Coal.—The total acreage of the state is 35,867,520 acres. In 1919 31,974,775 acres were under cultivation. The total value of farm property in Illinois in 1919 was $6,666,767,235, and the value of the produce in 1919 was $864,737,833, and in the same year the acreage given to the leading crops was as follows: wheat, 4,103,035 acres; oats, 4,291,066 acres; corn, 7,908,385 acres; hay, 4,013,476 acres; rye, 319,636 acres; barley, 176,792 acres.

The total coal output in 1918 was 89,291,105 tons; the number of mines was 967; the total value of the coal at the mines was $206,860,291. The coal field area is 42,900 sq. miles.

Banks and Communication.—The total number of national banks in Illinois in 1919 was 473, with a capitalization of over $83,937,000, and a surplus of $59,823,000; while there were 905 State banks with a capitalization of $101,189,000 and a surplus of $67,135,000.

In 1911 Illinois awoke to the necessity of good roads in the State, and in 1913 the Tice law provided for a $60,000,000 bond issue for the construction and maintenance of a 16,000 mile system of State aid roads out of a total of 95,000 miles of country highways in the State. The bonds and interest are to be retired from the proceeds of the motor license fees. In addition, the State and Federal governments have appropriated $6,600,000. Only one state in the Union, Texas, has greater railway mileage than Illinois, in 1917 its total track mileage being 12,132 miles of steam railway track-age compared with 15,931 miles in Texas.

Manufactures.—In 1919 the amount of money invested in manufactures was $3,513,700,000; the number of wage earners was 653,900, and to these $801,610,000 was paid as wages. The manufactured products had a value of $5,874,007,000; the cost of materials was $3,490,021,000, and the number of establishments 18,596. Thirty-five cities in the State are the seats of manufacturing establishments. The value of manufactured products in Chicago in 1919 was $3,658,740,000, as against $1,483,498,000 in 1914. In 1919 the Lake traffic in Chicago was 12,194,194 tons in and out, as against a tonnage of 9,582,000 for London (excluding coastwise trade), 13,671,000 for Liverpool (including Birkenhead), and 8,918,667 for Hamburg. There were 5,048,780 tons of iron ore received at the port of Chicago during the year 1919. Illinois had 5898 oil wells 1 January, 1918, with a total product in 1917 of 15,770,641 barrels.

EDUCATION.—The endowment fund of the State University amounted to $649,012 in 1918. It has 51 buildings, 751 professors, and a student body of 7157. There are six normal schools at Carbondale, Normal, Chicago, De Kalb, Charleston, and Macomb. In 1918 there were in Illinois 11,889 public elementary schools, in which there were 33,653 teachers, of whom 4656 were men and 28,997 were women. The male teachers received (1916) about $106.24 per month, and the females $88.18. In the year 1918 the total cost of the public schools was $51,506,043, which is a cost of $39.29 for every pupil. In the same year there were 651 high schools, enrolling 112,557 pupils and 4476 teachers. Recent legislative changes include statewide pensioning of teachers and a free public high school education for every pupil in Illinois (1915). Bible reading in the public schools is excluded by decree of the Supreme Court (20 July, 1910). The assets of the University of Chicago are $32,000,000. In the scholastic year 1919-20 the number of enrolled students was 9032. The university has a library of 570,000 volumes. In 1919 Northwestern University had 4759 enrolled students. In the same year there were in Illinois 35 collegiate institutions with 2495 instructors and 24,875 students.

CATHOLIC EDUCATION.—For parochial school statistics see CHICAGO, ARCHDIOCESE OF; BELLEVILLE, DIOCESE OF; ALTON, DIOCESE OF; PEORIA, DIOCESE OF; ROCKFORD, DIOCESE OF. Loyola University (q.v.) Chicago, is the largest Catholic educational institution in Illinois. De Paul University, Chicago, is conducted by the Vincentians. These and other institutions around the city will be affiliated with the University of St. Mary's of the Lake, now under construction at Area, a Chicago suburb, which is planned to be the greatest Catholic educational center in America. This university, founded 1844, went out of existence during the Civil War, but its charter was never revoked, and it is being revised in the $10,000,000 project now in course of execution. The Augustinians, Benedictines, Franciscans, Resurrectionists, Carmelite Fathers, Clerics of St. Viator, and Fathers of the Order of Charity also conduct colleges in Illinois. The total number of colleges and academies for boys in the State is 17, with an attendance of 8007; for girls 41, attendance 7894; there are 533 parochial schools with 180,652 pupils. Figuring the cost of educating every Catholic pupil at $39.29, which is the cost under the public school system, there is an annual saving to the State by the Catholic educational system of $7,097,817.08.

The State laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: no public appropriation shall ever be made in aid of any school controlled by any church or sectarian denomination (VIII. 3); instruction in the elementary branches of education in private schools shall be in the English language; every organized university, college, academy, seminary, or other educational institution, whether incorporated or unincorporated, shall submit such report to superintendent of public instruction as he may require.

RECENT HISTORY.—The year 1911 will always be remembered in Illinois history for the political bitterness rising out of the accusation of election bribery brought against Senator Lorimer. A resolution was offered in the United State Senate to declare his seat vacant on the ground that he had not been duly or legally elected. The Senate refused to unseat him by a vote of 46 to 40. Later the investigation was re-opened and Senator Lorimer was finally deprived of his seat in July, 1912. Partial woman suffrage was granted in 1913, also mothers' pensions, ownership of public utilities, and workmen's compensation. In 1917 a fierce race riot broke out in East St. Louis between the whites and the negroes who had immigrated into the North from the South to take advantage of war-stimulated industries in the manufacturing district. In 1920 a referendum from the voters brought a decision in favor of making the initiative and referendum, as well as municipal ownership of public utilities, a part of the State constitution. The State Legislature ratified the national prohibition amendment 14 January, 1919, the twenty-sixth State to do so. The Federal suffrage amendment was ratified 10 June, 1919, but an error in the State's certification caused a re-ratification 17 June, 1919.

Illinois put into the national service a total of 314,504 men and boys; 24,663 in the navy, 3,678 in the marines, and 286,163 in the army, the thousand volunteers who entered the service as officers through the various training camps being excluded. While the Selective Draft Act was adopted, 56.6 per cent of the men who went from Illinois (178,143) volunteered, and only 43.3 per cent (136,361) were drafted. With but 5.5 per cent of the population of the United States, Illinois took 7 per cent of the nation's loan. Of the expeditionary force 201 officers and 4065 men died, 12 officers and 192 men were taken prisoners and 504 officers and 13,290 men were wounded. The 1918 war crop was the greatest in money value ever produced by any State in America.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.—In the ecclesiastical province of Chicago, co-extensive with the State of Illinois, there were (1921): 1 archbishop, 6 bishops, 1,680 priests, 230 ecclesiastical students, 972 churches, 63 missions without churches, about 120 chapels, 4 training schools for boys, 5 industrial schools for girls; 1 school for mutes, 8 infant asylums, 1 industrial and reform school, 187,136 young people under Catholic care, 1 working boys home, 3 working girls homes, 14 homes for the aged, 55 hospitals and a Catholic population of 1,486,216.

Principal Religious Denominations.—The religious census of 1916 gives a total population of 6,152,257, of whom 3,629,884 did not attend any church. Members of all denominations numbered 2,522,373, of whom 1,171,381 were Catholics; of Greek Orthodox there were 15,050; Methodists of all kinds, 324,783; Lutherans of all kinds, 223,874; Baptists, 180,807; Presbyterians, 170,271; Disciples, 116,639; German Evangelists, 71,274; Congregationalists, 57,926; Protestant Episcopalians, 40,725; Unitarians, 1593; Quakers, 1849; others, 1,201,299. The total number of church organizations (parishes, etc.), in Illinois in 1916 was 9294; church edifices 8584; value $103,613,316; debt $12,953,904.

PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS.—The two new hospitals for the insane were recently opened at Dunning and Alton; a colony for epileptics has been established in the town of Dixon.

LEGISLATIVE CHANGES.—The Legislature passed an act in 1915 authorizing the construction of the Illinois Waterway. Of greater importance is the new administrative Code Bill (1917), consolidating the many boards and commissions of the State government into nine departments. The same Legislature passed the constitutional resolution which placed the proposition of the calling of such a convention before the voters in 1918. In 1917 was created the Department of Public Welfare, with one man as director over all the charities, the three penal institutions and the courts of Pardons and Paroles.

Images, VENERATION OF (cf. C. E., VII-664).—Extraordinary images may not be exposed in any church or other holy places unless with the approval of the local ordinary; he must not, however, authorize for public veneration images out of harmony with the approved custom of the Church. If the images represent erroneous dogma, or are unbecoming, or might lead the unlearned into dangerous errors, they must be forbidden or removed. The blessing of images exposed for public veneration is reserved to the ordinary, but he may delegate this power to any priest. Images, noted for their antiquity, art, or as objects of devotion, if exposed in churches or public oratories for the veneration of the faithful, must not be restored or renovated without the written consent of the ordinary, who before granting it is to consult with the persons of good judgment and experts in art. Such images cannot be validly alienated or transferred perpetually to another church without leave of the Holy See.

Immaculate Conception, CONGREGATIONS OF THE.—

I. MISSION PRIESTS OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION (cf. C. E., VII-681b).—This congregation, called the Missionaries of Rennes, has ceased to exist since the dissociation of religious orders in France.

II. SERVITES OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION (cf. C. E., VII-681c).—The second general superior and successor of the founder, Peter Carisarian, was Stephen Ghiorogadzé, who was succeeded in 1905 by Benedict Vardizé, now pastor of Our Lady of Lourdes in Constantinople. The fourth and present general superior is Pius Balizé, elected in 1911, to remain superior until the rule of the congregation is approved by Rome. The congregation is considered Oriental and is consequently not submitted to the Latin Code of Canon Law, although most of its members are Latins, Rome not having yet decided what Rite they must follow. Distinguished members deceased are: Fr. Michael Tassarati (d. 1911), historian; he published in French the history of the Georgian Church. Fr. Dominic Mughasavili (d. 1912), editor of the first Catholic paper in Georgia; Fr. Anselm Mghetrisvili (d. 1921), a good preacher; he built a beautiful church at Batoum, and translated the "Imitation of Christ" into Georgian. There are fifteen members of the congregation, and they have under their care 4000 parishioners of the Latin parish of Ferikeuy (mother-house) in Constantinople, three parishes in Georgia, and two in Russia.

III. SISTERS OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION, founded at Labadieville, Louisiana, in the Assumption parish 11 July, 1874, by Fr. Cyprien Venissat. Zealous for the advancement of the kingdom of God and aware of the great need of a religious community in the parish which he had founded, Fr. Venissat endeavored to secure religious from France to instruct the young children of Labadieville. After many fruitless endeavors he, with the consent of Archbishop Perche, resolved to found a community bearing the name Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, and composed principally of virtuous young girls and pious widows of Louisiana who would strive to imitate the humility, purity, and perfect obedience of the Immaculate Queen at Nazareth. The foundress, Miss Elvina Vienne of New Orleans, La., a woman of great ability and sanctity, was a pupil of the Ladies of the Sacred Heart and had had a private school in New Orleans prior to becoming Superior General of the new order of the Sisters of the Immaculate Conception. The chief work of the community lies in the educational field. Its religious inculcate solid Christian principles in the young children confided to their care, preparing them also to earn a livelihood. Fr. Venissat's desire to establish an orphan asylum at Labadieville has not yet been realized, due to a lack of finances. To-day the Sisters are found in Labadieville, New Orleans, which is the mother-house, Lockport, White Castle, and Church Point.

IV. MISSIONARY SISTERS OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION, founded in 1902 at Notre Dame des Neiges, near Montreal, by Abbé Bourassa, and erected into a religious community in 1904 by Mgr. Bruchesi, Archbishop of Montreal, with the approval and blessing of Pope Pius X. The specific aim of the institute is the conversion of pagan nations through a life of prayer, of love of God, and zeal for His glory, sacrifice and labor for the welfare and salvation of souls, especially infidels. The Sisters undertake the following works in the infidel countries: formation of Chinese religious; formation of virgin catechists who go among the families in the districts teaching Christian doctrine; organization of "baptizers," who go everywhere baptizing the dying, especially children in danger of death; nurseries, caring for babies found, ransomed, or entrusted; orphanages where orphans are given religious instruction and education; houses of refuge for aged women, blind, idiots, cripples, etc.; schools where there are taught the elements of letters, sciences, and arts; instruction of catechumens and neophytes; assistance of the dying, pagans or Christians; hospitals, dispensaries, lazarettoes, etc.; workrooms where domestic economy, trades, and arts are taught. In Christian countries the Sisters spread the devotions to the Childhood of Our Lord, the Blessed Eucharist, the Holy Ghost, and the Immaculate Conception; endeavor to obtain members of the Associations of the Holy Childhood and the Propagation of the Faith; circulate publications making known the missions; procure resources for the missions by the reception of alms and gifts, and by certain industries, such as the making of Church vestments, sacred linens, and artificial flowers; conduct schools for pagan children; give courses of religious instruction for pagans; and assist those dying.

The Sisters have the following foundations in Canada: at Outremont, near Montreal, are the mother-house, novitiate, procure for the missions, diocesan office of the Holy Childhood, workrooms for painting and the making of Church vestments for the maintenance of the mother-house and novitiate; at Montreal are a school for Chinese children of both sexes (founded 1916) and a hospital for the Chinese (founded 1918), and the Sisters also give language and catechism courses for Chinese adults, and visit the Chinese sick in Catholic and Protestant hospitals, when they are called, teaching them Christian doctrine or serving as interpreters; at Rimouski (founded 1918) are a postulate, diocesan office of the Holy Childhood, closed retreats for young girls, and apostolic school for aspirants to the missions; at Joliette (founded 1919) are a postulate, diocesan office of the Holy Childhood, and adoration of the Most Blessed Sacrament; at Quebec (founded 1919) are a postulate, diocesan office of the Holy Childhood, and closed retreats; at Vancouver (founded 1921) is a school for Chinese sick in their homes and in hospitals. In China the Sisters have schools for Christian and pagan children, nurseries, an orphanage, a dispensary, refuge for aged women, and catechumenate at Canton (founded 1909), a lazaretto caring for 900 male and female lepers at Sheklung near Canton (founded 1912), and a nursery caring for 3200 babies annually at Tong-Shan, near Canton (founded 1916). The Sisters opened a Chinese general hospital at Manila, Philippine Islands, in 1921.

Immaculate Heart, SISTERS SERVANTS OF THE (cf. C. E., VII-167c).—One of the pioneer educational orders of the United States, first established in Monroe, Michigan, by Fr. Louis Gilet, a Redemptorist. Bishop Lefevre, of Detroit, had asked the Redemptorists of Baltimore for aid in work among the French Canadians, and Fr. Gilet was appointed to found a mission at Monroe, a French Canadian settlement without priests. Nor were there any schools, and realizing this need Fr. Gilet asked Teresa Maxia, of Baltimore, who had signified to him her desire to consecrate her life to God, to undertake the education of the children of Monroe. She arrived in the summer of 1845 and was soon joined by Charlotte Ann Schaaf, also of Baltimore, who was desirous to undertake the same work. Their modest dwelling was a log cabin, and here they earnestly prepared for the religious life. They made their vows 30 November, and were established under the patronage of the Immaculate Conception as Sisters of Providence. They were given a rule founded on the rule of St. Alphonsus, prepared by Fr. Gilet and approved by Bishop Lefevre. Their habit was patterned on that of the Notre Dame Sisters, with scapular added. The third member of the community was Teresa Renauld, whose home was nearby, and who made her vows 8 December. The school was opened in a log cabin adjoining the Sisters' dwelling on 15 January, 1846. Their first benefactor was Mme. Josette Godfroy Smith, sister of the mayor of Monroe, who disposed of her estate in favor of the community, and became a member of it as Sister M. Alphonsine 26 May, 1846. This gift and the proceeds of a mission given by Fr. Gilet in New Orleans enabled the Sisters to erect a new convent in 1847. Two more novices were received in 1849, and gradually the number of members was increased to twelve in 1855 and twenty-six in 1863. The Sisters were under the spiritual direction of Fr. Gilet, and sustained a great loss upon his return to Baltimore in 1847. He later crossed to Europe, and as Fr. Mary Celestine became a Cistercian (1858) in the Abbey of Hautecombe, Savoy, where he died in 1892. His co-laborer in the foundation of the young community in Monroe was Fr. Francis Poilvache, who succumbed to the epidemic of fever in 1849. His cause of beatification is being advanced in Rome. The Sisters came under the spiritual direction of Fr. Smulders (d. 1900). They petitioned him in 1847 to give them a title that would distinguish them in their devotion to the Immaculate Conception. The unanimous choice of the community was the name Sisters Servants of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, by which they were henceforth known. In April, 1855, the Redemptorists left Monroe, and there was no stationary priest for seven months. In November, 1857, Fr. Joos was appointed director of the Sisters.

Their first parochial school was opened in connection with St. Michael's Church, and their first mission outside Monroe was at Vienna, Michigan, where they labored from 1855 to 1858. In the latter year they were called to the Pennsylvania missions. At the request of Fr. Vincent O'Reilly and with the permission of Bishop Neumann of Scranton, and Bishop Lefevre of Detroit, the Sisters under Sister M. Magdalen took charge of St. Joseph's Academy, Penn., and opened a novitiate there. A novitiate, parochial school for boys and girls were established at Reading, Penn., in 1859. In that same year the Sisters became diocesan. Reading remained the mother-house and novitiate for all the Sisters of the Immaculate Heart in Pennsylvania, until 1871, when a new foundation was made in the Scranton Diocese under Bishop O'Hara. The novitiate and mother-house for Scranton, temporarily located at Laurel Hill Academy, Susquehanna, was transferred to St. Cecilia Academy, Scranton (1872), and to St. Rose's Convent, Carbondale (1876), and permanently fixed at Mt. St. Mary's in 1902. The novitiate and mother-house for Philadelphia were transferred from Reading in 1872 to Villa Maria Academy, West Chester, erected in that year. In an effort to effect a reunion of the houses in Pennsylvania with the mother-house at Monroe, Mother M. Teresa, foundress of the congregation, went to the convent of the Grey Nuns of Ottawa, where she remained eighteen years, but finally rejoined her community at Villa Maria, where she died in 1892.

The first orphan asylum was erected at Monroe in 1860; St. Patrick's Orphanage at West Scranton was erected in 1875. The Sisters' work was thus extended to the care of orphans, and in 1890 they established St. Joseph's Foundling Home in Scranton. The care of children of Slovak and Lithuanian immigrants, who had come in large numbers to the United States during the latter part of the nineteenth century, was also included in their work, and with their aid were founded the Daughters of Sts. Cyril and Methodius (q.v.) for the Christian education of Slovak children, and the Lithuanian Sisters of St. Casimir (q.v.). The Sisters also undertook the aid of foreign missions in training the Teresian Sisters in religious life. For this purpose three of the community, with Sister M. Stanislaus (d. 1917) as mistress of novices, spent two years at Maryknoll. The work was then given over to Dominican nuns. Novices of the Oblates of Divine Providence (q.v.) are received into the novitiate at Marywood, and are there trained as efficient teachers and religious to labor among their own colored people. The Sisters are now asked to co-operate in the foundation of a new congregation of religious to care for foreigners, to follow the Passionists' rule, conduct homes for foreign girls, take care of orphanages, and teach catechism to children, preparing them for the Sacraments.

In the pursuit of higher education the Sisters take summer courses at universities, and a very large percentage of them hold degrees from colleges and universities of international standing. They conduct St. Mary's College for women (chartered 1906) at Monroe, Mich., Marywood College, Scranton (chartered 1917), and Villa Maria College, Immaculata (chartered 1920). The Sisters opened their first house in New York in 1913, when they took charge of St. Alphonsus' School. St. Michael's Industrial School at Falls, Wyoming Co., Penn., was erected in 1916 for the care, education, and general training of the homeless, dependent boys of the Scranton Diocese. The care of the Most Blessed Sacrament School in Trenton, N. J., was accepted by the Sisters of Villa Maria for January, 1922, and during the summer of 1921 arrangements were completed for the opening of an academy at Lima, Peru. Their social service work includes the establishment by the Scranton community at Altoona, Penn., of the Casa Regina, a home for self-supporting girls. St. Joseph's Shelter for Women, founded in Scranton in 1915, was given in charge of the Sisters in 1920, and a day nursery opened. The Sisters aided in the influenza epidemic in 1918 by nursing the sick in their homes. For a few days in the early summer young women's retreats are held.

Dependent on the mother-house at Monroe are establishments in the dioceses of Cleveland and Detroit. These are in charge of 461 Sisters and 80 novices and postulants, and comprise 1 college, 1 academy, 1 boys' boarding school, 33 parochial high schools, 1 normal school, 1 orphan asylum, 41 parochial elementary schools, with 22,239 pupils.

There are 748 Sisters, 92 novices, and 26 postulants in the community with mother-house at Villa Maria, West Chester. They have a summer-house in the Diocese of Trenton and the following establishments in the Archdiocese of Philadelphia and the Diocese of Harrisburg: 1 college, 3 academies, 4 high schools, 62 parochial schools, 2 nurseries, 2 houses for settlement work, a Catholic Children's Home Bureau. They have 32,000 pupils under instruction.

The community with mother-house at Scranton numbers 438 Sisters, 48 novices, and 13 postulants, with the following foundations in the Archdioceses of New York and Oregon City and the Dioceses of Altoona, Boise, Harrisburg, Pittsburgh, Syracuse, Scranton, and Seattle: 1 college, 6 academies, 14 parochial high schools, 32 parochial elementary schools, 1 boys' industrial school, 3 orphan asylums, 1 infant home, 1 day nursery, 1 sodality home.

The Rules and Constitutions approved in 1889, received the "Decretum laudis" in 1913, and were finally approved by the Holy See, 26 July, 1920. The Diamond Jubilee of the Congregation (10 November, 1920), was publicly celebrated in May, 1921.

Immigrants, CATHOLIC CARE OF. See AMERICANIZATION.

Imola, DIOCESE OF (IMOLENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-692d), in Central Italy, suffragan to Bologna. The present administrator of the diocese is the Rt. Rev. Giovanni Tribbioli, b. at Cortona, 13 December, 1868, ordained 28 June, 1891, elected 9 April, 1913, consecrated at Rome 4 May following, published 25 May, 1914. During the World War 60 priests and 11 seminarians joined the army. Of these 4 were killed, many wounded and divers were decorated. A permanent home was established for the soldiers, also an asylum for the war orphans. The following clergymen of note have died since 1910: Francesco Baldassari, Bishop of Imola, distinguished scholar and art critic in November, 1912; Rev. Domenico Selvatici, well known theologian and man of letters; Rev. Marco Morelli, writer and founder of the Society of the Handmaids of the Agonizing Heart of Jesus; Canon Luigi Albertazzi, writer and theologian; Rev. Giovanni Biondi, a zealous and saintly pastor; Canon Sante Minganti, liturgist; Rev. Eduardo Betelli, famous Latinist and Giovanni Gambetti, doctor of sociology.

In 1921 the diocese contained 125,000 Catholics, 123 parishes, 154 churches, 5 monasteries and 1 convent for men, 4 monasteries and 18 convents for women with 246 Sisters, 236 secular priests, 28 regulars and 10 lay brothers. There is in the diocese 1 diocesan and interdiocesan seminary with 30 seminarians, also 4 colleges for men (154 students), 17 for women (257 students). The following charitable institutions exist in the diocese: 10 hospitals, 5 asylums, 5 refuges all of which permit the ministry of priests. Two Catholic papers are printed in the diocese.

Impediments, CANONICAL (cf. C. E., VII-695b).—Matrimonial impediments can be abrogated, derogated from, or dispensed from only by the Holy See, or by inferiors enjoying that power by common canon law or special Apostolic indult. Any custom introducing a new impediment—this happened, for instance, in the case of disparity of worship—or opposed to those now existing is reprobated. The following impediments have been abolished by the Code of Canon Law: (a) consanguinity in the fourth degree of the collateral line; (b) lawful affinity in the third and fourth degree of the collateral line; (c) unlawful affinity in all cases; and (d) public honesty or decency arising from betrothal or valid marriage. Important changes have been introduced also regarding the impediments of forbidden times, age, adoption, disparity of worship, abduction, spiritual relationship and crime. Formerly an impediment to marriage was called public or occult, according as there was little or much difficulty in proving it; but now, if it can be proved in the external forum, irrespective of the case or difficulty of doing so, it is considered public, otherwise it is occult.

Some matrimonial impediments are of the minor grade, others of the major: those of the minor grade are: (a) consanguinity in the third degree of collateral line; (b) affinity in the second degree of the collateral line; (c) public honesty or decency in the second degree; it may be noted in passing that the Code has introduced new concepts of affinity and public honesty, the former now arising only from any valid marriage, while the latter arises only from any invalid marriage, or from notorious or public concubinage; (d) spiritual relationship; (e) crime arising from adultery with a promise of, or an attempt at, marriage, even by a merely civil contract, with the associate in sin. All other impediments are of the major order. The distinction between the two orders of impediments is a matter of importance only when a dispensation (q.v.) is being sought.

While the supreme ecclesiastical authorities have the exclusive right of establishing prohibitive or diriment impediments for baptized persons, by way of universal or particular law, bishops may forbid marriage to any person residing in their territory and to their own subjects while away from their diocese, but they can do so only in a particular case, temporarily, and as long as a just cause lasts. As examples of just causes canonists cite the probable existence of a hidden impediment, the danger of scandal, the fear of stirring up enmities. A bishop, however, can only forbid the marriage under penalty of sin; he can not render it invalid, unless he has been specially authorized to do so by the Holy See. (Cf. also the separate articles on the different impediments.)

481-94; Idem, Diriment Impediments, loc. cit., XII (1919), 121-140; Petrovits, The New Church Law on Matrimony (Philadelphia, 1921) pp. 67-108; DE SMET, De sponsalibus et matrimonio (Bruges, 1920), II; VLAMING Praelectiones juris matrimonii, pars iv (1919), and for dispensations from impediments, op. cit., pars v (1921).

Incapacity, a vindictory punishment, which can be inflicted by the Holy See alone on the faithful, in virtue of which a culprit is disqualified from receiving or holding an ecclesiastical office or benefice, or from enjoying ecclesiastical favors not exclusively clerical, or from obtaining academic degrees conferred by ecclesiastical authority. It can be remitted only by the Holy See, except under the circumstances in which an ordinary is permitted to absolve in occult cases from censures reserved simply to the pope. It is incurred by a person by the very fact that he becomes infamous by law; or by one who knowingly consents to his election to a benefice or office in which a laic or the secular power has illegally intervened; or who usurps an ecclesiastical office or benefice or takes possession thereof before showing his letters of confirmation to the proper authority; or who knowingly accepts a benefice or office and allows himself to be put in possession before it becomes legally vacant; or who, being a cleric, usurps or retains personally or by another the property or rights of the Roman Church; or by anyone who presumes to convert to his own use any ecclesiastical property, or to prevent the lawful holder from enjoying its fruits; or by a priest guilty of solicitation. The penalty is to be imposed on a reverend mother or any of her subjects, who induces any member of the community to conceal the truth when she is questioned by the visitor, or who annoys a member for having answered the visitor, and, likewise, on a reverend mother who after the visitation transfers a member of the community to another house against the wish of the visitor.

Incardination and Excardination (cf. C. E., VII-704).—Every cleric must be attached to some diocese or religious institute, incardination in a pious place being now forbidden. By first tonsure he is incardinated in the diocese for the service of which he has been promoted. Letters of excardination and incardination are invalid unless signed by the ordinaries authorized to grant them; a vicar general requires a special mandate to issue them; so does a vicar capitular, unless the see has been vacant more than a year; and even then he requires the consent of the chapter. However, if a cleric receives a residential benefice from the ordinary of another diocese, and has the written consent of his own ordinary either to accept it or to leave the diocese permanently, he is thereby incardinated in the new diocese. A cleric is excardinated from his diocese by perpetual religious profession. If a religious in sacred orders has thus lost his diocese and afterwards in virtue of an indult of secularization gives up the religious state he may be received by a bishop unconditionally or on trial for three years. In the former case he is thereby incardinated; in the latter at the end of the time of trial, which the bishop may extend, but not beyond another three years, if he has been dismissed he is by the very fact incardinated in the diocese. A religious who has thus left his order or institute legitimately may not exercise his orders until he has found a bishop to receive him, unless the Holy See has provided otherwise, but this prohibition does not now bind religious who have made only temporary vows and who have been secularized or did not renew their vows—they are to return to their own diocese and are to be received by their bishop. This right of the bishop to receive, on trial a former religious, even one who has been expelled, is an innovation.

Codez. jur. can., 111-117.

Incarnate Word, SISTERS OF CHARITY OF THE (cf. C. E., VII-705c).—The Constitutions of the congregation with mother-house at San Antonio, Texas, received the decree of final approbation of the Holy See, in April, 1910. Mother M. Alphonse was then the superior general, and in 1912 was re-elected for another period of six years. In 1918 she was succeeded by Mother Mary John, the present superior general, who was elected at the General Chapter of the Congregation held that year. Mother Mary John had been the assistant general since 1906, and for thirteen years previous had been mistress of novices. The congregation has grown rapidly as evidenced by the number of its institutions and its personnel. Since 1910, 21 new foundations have been made. At present, the institution numbers 700 members, and has care of 69 houses, namely 1 college, 18 academies, 31 schools, 5 orphanages, 12 hospitals, and 2 homes for the aged. There are 4940 students in actual attendance at the educational institutions of the congregation; 400 orphan children instructed and cared for; a total yearly average of 6450 sick persons in the aforesaid hospitals; and 110 inmates of the homes for the aged. These foundations are distributed throughout the States of Texas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Louisiana, and the Republic of Mexico.

Incarnate Word and Blessed Sacrament, ORDER OF THE (cf. C. E., VII-706a).—The houses of this order are independent of one another. There are in the United States 154 Sisters, 10 novices, and 14 postulants in charge of 4 academies and 7 schools. These are all in the State of Texas.

Incest (cf. C. E., VII-717).—Lay persons who have been legally declared guilty of this crime are thereby infamous; if the culprits are clerics in minor orders they may be expelled from the clerical state, while those in major orders may be deprived of their benefices and deposed.

India (cf. C. E., VII-722d), consisting of the whole Indian peninsula and certain countries which are beyond that area, and which are in close relation with India. Including only the native states the area is about 1,802,629 sq. miles. According to the census of 1921 the population was 319,075,132, an increase of 12% since 1911. Of this 164,056,191 were males and 155,018,941 were females. The ratio of births in British India per thousand of the population under registration in 1919 was 30.24; of deaths, 35.87. The registered deaths in 1919 numbered 8,554,178, of which cholera accounted for 578,426; plague 74,284; dysentery and diarrhoea 291,643. The number of coolie emigrants from India in 1917-18 was 869. The emigration of unskilled labor has been prohibited. The only colony in which indentured emigration still prevails is Trinidad, the system for various reasons having almost come to an end. There has been discussion of assisted emigration. The largest cities in India, with their respective populations, are: Calcutta 1,222,313; Bombay 979,445; Madras 518,660; Hyderabad 500,623; Rangoon 293,316; Lucknow 259,798.

EDUCATION.—In 1910 a Department of Education was established in the Government of India with an office of its own and a member to represent it in the Executive Council. Thanks to the free instruction imparted in the monasteries and the absence of the pardah system which hampers the education of females in other parts of India, Burma has 222 literate persons to each 1000 of the population. In the Central Provinces and Berar the proportion ranges from only 6 per thousand in the Chota Valley to 54 in the Nerbudda Valley. Bengal's rate is 77 and Madras's 75. Education is more widely diffused in British provinces than in native states. Of the different religious communities, excluding the Brahmans and Aryas, the Parsis rank the highest with 711 literates per 1000. The total number of literate persons has risen during the last decade from 15,700,000 to 18,600,000, or 18%. In 1918-19 there were in India for males, 134 arts colleges, students 49,815; 1803 high schools, students 584,270; 129,805 primary schools, students 4,821,611; for females, 12 arts colleges, students 915; 183 high schools, students 29,980; and 20,468 primary schools, students 1,119,871. The total expenditure from public funds was 71,726,000 rupees (1 rupee = $0.324); from fees and other sources 58,137,000 rupees; total 129,863,000 rupees. There are eight universities, at Patna, Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Allahabad, the Punjab, and Mysore, all organized on the examining body system, having affiliated to them a large number of teaching colleges. A Hindu University for students from all India has been established at Benares. In 1922 the University of Visva-bharati Parishat at Shantiniketan, Bengal, was founded by Sir Rabindranath Tagore. Its purpose is to bring together the scattered cultures of the East and to provide for the exchange of knowledge between the East and the West. In 1917 the commission appointed to inquire into the conditions and prospects of the University of Calcutta made drastic recommendations in regard to the position of the Government in the matter of education. The one every serious defect of the educational system is that, in conformity with the neutrality of the State in all matters of religion, it has addressed itself almost exclusively to the intellectual development of the young Indian. The result is that, whilst Western knowledge necessarily shook the foundations of his old beliefs, it substituted no wholesome restraints for those that it loosened. Nor was any attempt made to bring his Western education into direct relation with his home life, which continued to move on an altogether different plane, so that his home influences either insensibly defeated the educational purpose in the shaping of character, or else he cast them off prematurely without having anything to put in their place. The same conditions were discussed in the report of the Industrial Commission (1919), which summed up its findings as follows: "The Commission finds that India is a country rich in raw materials and in industrial possibilities, but poor in manufacturing accomplishments. Her labor is inefficient, but for this reason capable of vast improvement. The non-existence of a suitable education to qualify the Indians for posts requiring industrial or technical knowledge was met by the importation of men from Europe, who supervised and trained illiterate Indian labor in the mills." The educational system may be judged from the fact that while the expenditure of the United States on education per head is $4.00 and that of England and Wales, $3.20, India is allowed only 2½ cents. With the introduction of the new constitution in 1921 education, with the exception of the universities becomes a provincial subject.

ECONOMICS.—About 72% of the population or 226,000,000 people in India are engaged in agriculture. The total acreage under the chief crops and the production in 1919-20 was: wheat, 29,976,000 acres, 10,092,000 tons; rice, 78,394,000 acres, 34,199,000 tons; cotton, 23,063,000 acres, 5,845,000 bales;

jute, 2,821,600 acres, 8,428,000 bales; sugar cane, 2,695,000 acres, 2,989,000 tons. During 1919-20 the total area irrigated by all classes of works in India, excluding the areas irrigated in the Indian states, amounted to over 28,000,000 acres. Thirteen per cent of the cropped area was irrigated by Government irrigation works and the estimated value of the crops so irrigated amounted to nearly 2½ times the total capital expended on the works. The area under tea plucked in 1920-21 was about 691,000 acres, and the production was about 377,055,600 pounds. The cultivation of opium, which is a government monopoly, has diminished as a result of the agreement with China to restrict the output. In 1918-19 there were in British India, 235 cotton mills with 267,669 persons employed daily; 575 rice mills with 47,724 persons employed; 1405 cotton ginning, cleaning, and pressing mills and factories with 100,981 persons. On 31 March, 1919, there were 2789 joint stock companies incorporated in India under the India Companies Act of 1913, and the Mysore Companies Regulation III of 1895 (repealed in 1917), and in operation with a capital of £71,076,000. The total value of the minerals produced in British India and the Indian states during 1918, was £15,771,085; of this, £6,017,089 came from coal, £2,060,152 from gold, £1,131,904 from petroleum. In 1919 the production of petroleum was 305,651,816 gallons; of coal, 22,628,037 tons. In 1918 practically all the coal trade was under the Coal Controller. In the same year the average number of persons working in or about the mines regulated by the Indian Mines Act was 237,738, of whom 150,064 worked underground. The commerce of India in 1920 included imports valued at $674,819,900, and exports valued at $1,060,986,599 (Indian goods, $1,003,308,500, foreign goods, $57,677,800), thus leaving a balance of $386,166,600 in India's favor.

FINANCE.—The total revenue in the fiscal year 1920-21 was £134,825,900; the total expenditure £132,311,100. In addition there was an estimated capital expenditure on State railways and irrigation works of £13,852,100 and £735,000 initial expenditure on the new capital at Delhi. In 1917-18 India's contribution to the war was £100,000,000, which was met partly by making over to the British Government the proceeds of the Indian war loans raised in 1917 and 1918, and partly by taking over a portion of the British war debt.

DEFENCE.—At the outbreak of the World War the Indian Army consisted of 76,953 British troops and 239,561 native troops. Up to the date of the armistice, 1,161,789 troops were recruited during the war. The Defence Act, passed in 1917, was abandoned in 1920 as a result of the Escher report; the army was reorganized in four commands instead of two and in place of compulsory service for European British subjects, an Auxiliary Force was raised on a voluntary basis.

RELIGIONS.—The following statistics are taken from the India Year Book (1921): Hindus, 217,586,892; Brahmans, 217,337,943; Aryas, 243,445; Brahmans, 5504; Sikhs, 3,014,466; Jains, 1,248,182; Buddhists, 10,721,453; Zoroastrians (Parsis), 100,096; Mussulmans, 66,647,299; Christians, 3,876,203; Jews, 20,980; Animists, 10,295,168; minor religions and religion not returned, 37,101; not enumerated by religion, 1,608,556.

Catholic troops are allowed the ministrations of Catholic priests, but the expenditure is very small, in that respect, amounting only to Rs. 430,923 per annum (the rupee varies from 30 to 32 cents). An instructive commentary on this part of the subject is furnished by the figures of expenditure in the Bombay presidency. The Church of England costs Rs. 296,734; the Church of Scotland Rs. 45,881; while the Catholic Church receives only Rs. 35,252.

In some respects, it is true, the Government has departed from a strict neutrality, as in the case of giving a guaranteed number of posts in Government service to Moslems. The Mohammedans were given special representation with separate electorates in 1909, and regard these as their only adequate safeguards. The Hindus' acquiescence was embodied in an agreement between the political leaders of the two communities. To be fair to the Sikhs, a distinct and important people, supplying a valuable element to the British army, but forming a minority and virtually unrepresented, the Montagu-Chelmsford report recommended one constituency.

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE PEOPLE.—There has arisen in India of late years a wave of national aspiration, which is by some viewed with alarm, and by others with indifference. It originated or first manifested itself by the formation of the Indian National Congress in 1886, which began to hold annual meetings wherein "to give voice to our aspirations and to formulate our wants" (Gokhale in 1905). In 1904 a party-protest against the partition of Bengal was followed by an attempt to force the hand of the Government by the boycott of imported goods in favor of Indian manufactures (Lwadeshi movement), which in turn developed into an effort after "national revival." This movement caused a certain amount of seditious writing, systematic spread of disaffection among the masses and even resort to antiarchistic methods such as the use of bombs, etc. Outside of Bengal attempts to quell the disaffection by the ordinary law were successful, and though recourse was had to the deportation of persons without reason assigned to it under an Act of 1818, special Acts had to be passed to meet the situation, viz.:—an Explosives Act, a Prevention of Seditious Meeting Act, etc. Concurrently with these, steps were taken to extend representative institutions. In 1907 a Hindu and a Mohammedan were appointed to the Secretary of State's Council, and in 1909 a Hindu was appointed to the Viceroy's Council. The legislative Councils were reconstituted and given wider powers of discussion. More trouble occurred in September, 1914, when a riot at Budge-Budge among a number of Sikh emigrants returned by unwilling Canada, revealed the wide influence of the "Ghadir" conspiracy and its German affiliations. That plot had little influence on the general attitude of India to the Great European War. The Indian Expeditionary Forces, including the British garrisons and native troops served in good stead during the critical winter of 1914-15. Again, the brilliant victory of Armageddon in Palestine was largely the triumph of Indian troops. For the first time Indians were admitted into the innermost councils of the Empire and sat at the war conferences in London. However, India was at no time included in the theatre of war except when the "Emden" bombarded Madras, though shipping off Bombay was severely affected by mines laid by the enemy.

In 1917 Mr. Montagu, who succeeded Mr. Chamberlain as Secretary of State, visited India with the purpose of determining what steps should be taken in the direction of establishing government responsible to the peoples of various provinces. The result was shown in a joint scheme of reform evolved, for the Secretary of State, Mr. Montagu, and the Viceroy, Lord Chelmsford, aimed at carrying into effect the announcement made in Parliament 20 August, 1917, that "the policy of His Majesty's government is that of the increasing association of the Indians in every branch of the administration and the gradual development of self-governing institutions with a view to the progressive realization of responsible government in India as an integral part of the Empire." Shortly after this report there was issued another by the Special Committee of Inquiry into seditious crime in India, over which Mr. Justice Rowlatt presided. The Committee recommended that the Government of India should arm itself with special powers to deal with such crime, to come into operation when it attained proportions dangerous to public safety. The result was the Rowlatt Act (1919) introduced into the Legislature and carried against the solid opposition of the unofficial members. This was the signal for violent agitation throughout the country. Riots occurred at Calcutta, Delhi, and Amritsar, the sacred city of the Sikhs. At Bombay the Passive Resistance League (Satyagraha) was formed under the leadership of Mahatma Ghandi, who had successfully championed the cause of Indian laborers in South Africa.

In the meantime the Montagu-Chelmsford report was bearing fruit. It advocated immediate establishment of responsible government in the provinces, through committing certain branches of the administration to Indian Ministers chosen from the Legislative Councils and the eventual liberalization of the government of India. A Bill framed on the lines of this report passed both Houses of Parliament and received the Royal Assent in December, 1919. This Government of India Act (1919) makes several important constitutional changes more particularly in the government of the provinces. The various functions of government are classified as Central and Provincial subjects, the latter being practically definitely committed to the Provincial Governments, which for purposes of convenience, Central subjects, such as the collection of income tax, are to be dealt with by the Provincial Government at the discretion of the Central Government. The inauguration of the new Government, met with determined opposition from the Nationalists under the leadership of Mahatma Ghandi, anti-English agitator and disciple of Tolstoy. At the Indian National Congress held 8 September, 1920, Ghandi's program of passive resistance to the British included gradual withdrawal of Indian children from British schools and colleges, gradual boycott of British courts and the establishment of private arbitration courts for the settlement of industrial disputes, refusal to serve in the Government service, or army, or in any of the Reformed Councils, and boycott of British goods. Despite all obstacles, the new Government was organized, appointment of governors made in August, 1921, and Sir William Meyer became first High Commissioner of India. On 8 February, 1921, the Parliament or Advisory Assembly was opened at Delhi by the Duke of Connaught. The visit of the Prince of Wales to India in 1922 was the occasion of rioting in Bombay which drew the attention of the whole world to conditions in that country and to the extensive hatred of British rule. Ghandi was arrested on 18 March, 1922, sentenced to six years' imprisonment. The war between India and Afghanistan was ended with the treaty of peace signed on 8 August, 1920. It began in 1919 with the declaration of Amanullah of Afghanistan to free India from the horrors of revolution and from the tyranny of British rule. Despite the treaty, the Wazira and Mahsuds, two frontier tribes, renewed their attacks in October, 1920, and since that time desultory fighting has ensued. The war cost India about £14,736,000.

PRESENT POLITICAL ORGANIZATION.—India is at present divided into British territory and native states. British India has eight large provinces and six lesser charges, each of which is termed a local government. The eight major provinces are the Presidencies of Madras, Bombay, and Bengal; the Lieutenant-governorships of the United Provinces, the Punjab, Burma, and Mehar; and the Chief Commissionerhips of the Central Provinces. The minor provinces are Assam, the North-West Frontier Province, Baluchistan, Coorg, Ajmer, Merwar, and the Andaman Islands. The status and area of these provinces have been varied from time to time to meet the changed conditions of the day, the final adjustment being made in 1911 when the newly created province of Eastern Bengal and Assam disappeared, and Bengal was divided into the Presidency of Bengal, and the Lieutenant-Governorship of Behar and Orissa, and the Chief Commissioner-ship of Assam, whilst the Government seat was moved from Calcutta to Delhi and the city of Delhi with an enclave of territory was taken under the direct administration of the Government of India. The native states vary in size from petty states at Lawa in Rajputana with an area of 19 square miles to states like Hyderabad as large as Italy with a population of 13,000,000. They include the inhospitable regions of Western Rajputana, Baroda, Mysore, and Kashmir. The control which the Supreme Government exercises over the Indian States varies considerably in degree, but they are all governed by Indian princes, ministers, or councils. The princes have no right to make war or peace, or to send ambassadors to each other or to external States; they are not permitted to maintain a military force above a certain specified limit; no European is allowed to reside in their courts without special sanction; and the Supreme Government can exercise control in case of misgovernment. Within this limit the more important princes are autonomous in their own territories. Some are required to pay tribute. They have freedom of trade with British India, except in rare cases and levy their own customs. The political powers of the British Government are exercised through the Political officers who reside in the States. The Governor-General in Council retains certain powers of control over the Provincial Governments, where it is necessary to safeguard Central subjects or to decide questions where two or more provinces are concerned. Certain sources of revenue are to be definitely allocated to the provinces which will be required to contribute to the Central Government certain annual sums which are to be the first charge on their revenues. The new Provincial Governments, consisting of an Executive Council and a Legislative Council, are to be based on a dualized form of government. Under this plan official acts will be carried out by the Governor-in-

Council, while on the popular side the Government will consist of the Governor and Ministers who are to be elected members of the Legislative Council. These ministers will have charge of certain departments of Government, known as "transferred subjects," while others, the "reserved subjects," are to be administered by the Governor-in-Council. The Governor's Executive Council must include a member qualified by twelve years' public service. The Legislative Council, meeting for three years, contains not more than 20 per cent of official members and at least 70 per cent elected members and exercises general financial control. The provinces are usually formed in divisions under Commissioners and then divided into districts, at the head of which is an executive officer, responsible to the governor of the province. The central administration of India is entrusted to a High Commissioner, and a Secretary of State, assisted by a Council of not less than eight and not more than twelve members, appointed for five years by the Secretary of State. At least half must have resided in India for ten years. The Under-Secretaryship is held by Lord Sinha of Raipur, the first Indian to hold office. The supreme executive authority is vested in the Governor-General in Council, or Viceroy, appointed by the English Crown. There is an Indian Legislature consisting of the Governor-General and two Chambers, the Council of State and the Legislative Assembly. The Council of State consists of 60 members (33 elected, 27 nominated by the Governor-General). The Legislative Assembly consists of 142 members, 40 nominated by the Governor and 102 elected, and is presided over by a President appointed by the Governor-General. This legislature has power, subject to restrictions, to make laws for all persons within India and the Native States. The salary of the Secretary of State and the cost of the India Office for other than agency services, may now be borne by the British and not as formerly, by the Indian Exchequer. After ten years' trial a committee will go out to India and advise on the success of the experiment. If its report is favorable the progress will go on until further responsible government is established, and the transitional system of dualism is superseded by a unified popular administration. The success of these reforms depends largely on the attitude of the native intellectual leaders. The task of the government is that of educating the people to autonomy without sharpening religious jealousies.

THE CHURCH IN INDIA.—There are (1921) 3,000,000 Catholics in India, speaking more than two hundred different languages and five hundred dialects. These are ministered to by priests from thirteen religious orders and foreign mission societies, by Brothers from twelve orders and congregations, and by Sisters from sixty-four orders and societies. The national spirit now awakened in India is in one way detrimental to the success of the missionaries, who are looked upon as foreigners and share in the hostility shown towards everything not purely Indian. The different pagan religions are united against the Church, even certain Christians are influenced by the Buddhist leaders and recognize in the Church only a vague authority. On the other hand the unrest is forcing Catholics to better organization, and in causing the crumbling of the Hindu caste system is doing away with a hitherto impregnable barrier to India's evangelization. The future of the Church in this country will be in the hands of the native priests, the training of whom is one of the chief tasks of the foreign missionaries. To that end there are 26 preparatory and 26 theological seminaries for native secular priests, 10 novitiates and seminaries for natives aspiring to become religious. The native clergy number 1500 and are already in charge of three dioceses. The appointment of Mgr. Francis Vazapilly, the first purely native bishop, as Vicar Apostolic of Trichur, is the first step in the formation of a native hierarchy, the establishment of which was promised to India by Benedict XV. In spite of divergent opinions as to the missions in India, statistics prove that they are by no means at a standstill, and that the rate of missionary progress has increased enormously in recent years. The average number of yearly conversions is 14,000, and the chief means of apostolate are educational and social service work. There are 28 colleges for boys, 2 for girls, 90 orphanages for boys and 119 for girls, and 100 foundling asylums. With the authorization of the Congregation of the Propaganda children of unbelievers are admitted to the schools and colleges, thus procuring for Catholics a social influence otherwise unattainable and introducing their doctrines into circles where they destroy prejudices and make converts, even amongst the Brahmins. In fact, non-Christians form the major portion of the students in these schools and colleges, due to the poverty of the Catholics. Educational leagues have been formed to help Catholic students, notably that of Bengal, which in six years spent 107,567 rupees for the education of 843 students.

The missionary priests are greatly aided in their work by the medical missionaries, whose work in India is the most highly developed of Catholic foreign missionary medical work in the world. Yet there are only one foreign male doctor, four foreign women doctors, and 200 native Catholic women doctors. There are many missionary Sisters, however, engaged as nurses in the hospitals and dispensaries. Women doctors are essential in India, and a movement in their favor has been inaugurated by Dr. Margaret Lamont, and the first contribution of Americans to the work will be in behalf of the medical apostolate. The Catholic press established by the missionaries in this country is well organized. In 1912 there were 6 establishments and 2 have since been added. From 1919-20, 400,000 pamphlets and about 300 works in one or several volumes were published, many of them translations into Annamite and other native tongues.

The most significant event from a Catholic point of view that has recently taken place in India was the Marian Congress held in Madras, January, 1921, its object being the conversion of India and the Orient. It was the first Marian Congress ever held on the continent of Asia. A hall was especially built for the occasion, and it was crowded with 12,000 people of many races. The Apostolic Delegate, Mgr. Pisani, presided, surrounded by thirty bishops and about three hundred priests. It is estimated that 50,000 Catholics participated in this notable demonstration of love for the Mother of God, which gave a new impetus to religion. In November, 1921, the golden jubilee of St. Joseph's Cathedral at Allahabad was celebrated. The Delegate Apostolic again presided, assisted by four bishops, Father Albert, the Provincial of the English Province of the Capuchin Order and representatives from all the Capuchin missions of Northern India. Protestant missionaries are active in India, having 125 societies, 50 of which are from the United States, chiefly Baptists. The white missionary evangelists number 500, the native evangelists 1500, and native catechists about 7000. There are 100,000 Protestant educators, 65,000 pupils in the colleges and high schools, 200,000 grade pupils, and a Protestant population of 2,000,000.

Indiana (cf. C. E., VII-738b).—The area of Indiana is 36,453 sq. miles or 23,167,560 acres, which places it thirty-seventh among the states of the Union. In 1920 the population was returned as 2,930,544.

It now ranks seventh in the production of wheat and fifth in that of corn and oats. In 1919 it produced 46,020,000 bushels of wheat from 2,886,000 acres; 60,225,000 bushels of oats from 1,825,000 acres; 175,750,000 bushels of potatoes from 100,000 acres; 60,000,000 tons of hay from 50,000 acres, besides an important yield of other crops such as tomatoes, clover, tobacco, peas, onions, clover-seed, butter, cheese, poultry, eggs, and apples. The assessed valuation of its farms is $1,089,135,238. In 1917 its total taxable property equalled $2,305,392,201. In the same year there were 31,000 miles of gravel and macadamized roads, of steam railroads 7475 miles and 2463 miles of electric interurban roads. In 1919 there were 7918 factories representing an investment of $1,335,851,000 with 277,600 wage earners. In 1918 the bituminous coal output was 28,244,498 tons; its oil wells produced 877,558 barrels of oil valued at $2,028,129; the product value of oolitic limestone was $1,961,154.

EDUCATION.—According to the latest estimates (1918), the total value of public school property is $67,675,607, the number of teachers is 19,928, of enrolled pupils 557,376. The state public school fund (including the university) is $12,253,938. The State University at Bloomington now has a faculty of 140 and about 3200 students. Purdue University at Lafayette has 183 professors, over 2600 students, and 29 buildings, the campus and farm covering 692 acres. It is estimated that by its various courses and features including its regular course Purdue gave instruction to about 1,500,000 people in 1919.

In 1918 Wabash College at Crawfordsville had 219 students; Earlham College near Richmond had 400 students; De Pauw University at Greencastle had 1062 students; Butler University near Indianapolis had 756 students, and Hanover College near Madison had 224 students.

A statute enacted in 1919 increased to fifty acres the untaxable land on which is situated any building used and set apart for educational, literary, scientific, or charitable purposes, and to fifteen acres the untaxable land owned by a church and used for religious purposes. All property belonging to the Young Men's Christian Association, the Knights of Columbus, the Young Men's Hebrew Association and the Young Women's Christian Association is tax exempt, as are all dormitories owned by any Church and used by students of any university. Sunday baseball is permitted by statute after 1 o'clock, and not within 1000 feet from a church. There are strict statutes against obscene pictures or literature.

State laws relative to private and parochial schools are as follows: In every city of this state having a population of more than one hundred thousand, it shall be the duty of the board of public health and charities to make a medical inspection from time to time of all persons attending or employed in or about all public, private, and parochial schools in such city; inspectors shall confer with private school authorities and advise them for the purpose of improving and standardizing schools; all private and parochial schools shall be taught in the English language only. The teaching of religion in German is prohibited; no money shall be drawn from the treasury for the benefit of any religious or theological institution; the general assembly shall provide for the taxation of all property, excepting such only for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious or charitable purposes as may be specially exempted by law (X-1); county superintendents are expected to furnish statistical and other reports relative to private high schools, elementary schools, colleges, and other institutions of learning; to comply with regulations of the Compulsory Education Act, the term or period of private and parochial schools may not be shorter than that of public schools; the Board of Education may prescribe courses of physical education for all private, elementary and high schools (ed. Laws, 1919, p. 31); the state board may refuse to admit to the accredited list a normal institution not requiring a suitable course of physical education, according to an opinion of the attorney general of the state, members of the Catholic Sisterhoods are eligible to teach in the public schools; after September 1, 1921, all youths between the ages of 14 and 17 years or 14 and 18 years, who are regularly employed, may be compelled to attend part-time school not less than four nor more than eight hours per week, between 8:00 a. m. and 5:00 p. m., during the school term.

For statistics of Catholic schools and colleges see: INDIANAPOLIS, DIOCESE OF; FORT WAYNE, DIOCESE OF; NOTRE DAME, UNIVERSITY OF.

RECENT LEGISLATIVE CHANGES.—The legislature of 1909 provides for the abolition of the convict system of contract labor in 1920. In 1913 a tract of 1584 acres in Putnam County was purchased for a state farm for male offenders, not felons. By an Act (1917) the General Assembly provided for the election of delegates to a convention for the revision of the constitution, which Act was declared null and void, since the Legislature had exceeded its authority, inasmuch as the question of calling a constitutional convention had not been submitted to referendum vote. In 1918 the governor was authorized to appoint an unpaid commission of five persons to investigate child welfare and social insurance. Prohibition and woman suffrage became effective that year. Later legislation provides for the establishment of a farm colony for the feeble-minded, the registration of voters, the extension of workmen's compensation to include coal miners, and a grant to the counties giving them the right to construct and maintain highways. The new tax code limits the amount of annual taxes in any taxing unit to a sum not greater than the tax yield of the preceding years, and the total rate for all purposes to one and a half per cent, unless the tax commissioners permit a higher rate.

RELIGION.—The accompanying table shows the latest statistics for the various forms of religion represented in the State.

RECENT HISTORY.—In 1911 Indianapolis, the capital, was the scene of wholesale indictments of the officials of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Workers of America for dynamiting several large buildings in the United States. These acts were a part of the warfare against employers who refused to accede to the demands for closed shops. The climax came in the destruction of the Los Angeles Times, by the McNamara brothers, who were in the employ of the union, which had its headquarters at Indianapolis. In 1914 it was discovered that certain Bills had been signed by the governor under a misinterpretation. They had been passed in one house and defeated in another and presented to the governor as having passed both houses. Indictments of the Lieutenant-Governor and of the Speaker of the House followed, but no intention to defraud was discovered. Another election scandal occurred in 1915, when the mayor, sheriff, and chief of police were convicted of election frauds.

In recent times Indiana has furnished many prominent names to the literary history of America, the poets, Joaquin Miller, John Hay, James Whitcomb Riley, and the fiction writers, General Lew Wallace, Meredith Nicholson, Booth Tarkington, and Annie Fellows Johnston.

During the European War Indiana furnished 106,581 soldiers or 2.83 per cent of the United States Army, and 5516 to the United States Navy. In the number of volunteers for the Navy she led all the other States on the basis of population. Besides these the State raised and drilled an extra regiment of artillery for the National Guard and offered it to the Federal Government. For some unknown reason it was rejected as a unit, but went into active service through volunteer enlistment. The first American soldier killed in battle in France was an Indiana man, Corporal James Bethel Gresham, of Evansville. The first shot fired against the Germans by an American gunner was fired by Sergeant Alex. Arch, of South Bend, Indiana. The summary of casualties among the Indiana members of the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 57 officers and 1453 men; prisoners, 3 officers and 53 men; wounded, 146 officers and 5054 men.

Indiana ratified the Federal suffrage amendment 16 January, 1919, the twenty-sixth State to do so, and the prohibition amendment 14 January, 1919, the twenty-seventh State to do so.

Indianapolis, DIOCESE OF (INDIANAPOLITANA; cf. C. E., VII-744a), comprises the southern half of Indiana. The population of the diocese (1920) is 1,531,458, of whom 133,719 are Catholics, and of these 1000 are Italians and 3000 are Slovenians and Slovaks. During the war most of the parishes were active in welfare work, such as the Red Cross, Liberty Bond sales, comfort kits, and books for soldiers. The honor roll of the diocese shows 6738 enlisted in the war, of whom 95 were killed or died. Five diocesan priests were chaplains in the service of the United States. Rt. Rev. Denis O'Donaghue, auxiliary Bishop of Indianapolis, was transferred to Louisville in 1910. Bishop Francis Silas Chatard died 8 September, 1918, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Joseph Chartrand, b. 1870, ordained 1892, consecrated titular Bishop of Flavia and coadjutor Bishop of Indianapolis 15 September, 1910, elevated to the see of Indianapolis 25 September, 1918. Established in the diocese are the Benedictines, Franciscans, Friars Minor Conventuals, Brothers of the Sacred Heart, and Brothers of the Holy Cross. Religious orders of women are: Sisters of St. Benedict, Sisters of Charity, Poor Clares, Sisters of St. Francis, Sisters of the Good Shepherd, Sisters of St. Joseph, Little Sisters of the Poor, Sisters of Providence, Ursulines, and Sisters of Mercy. The diocese comprises: 145 parishes, 222 churches, 54 missions, 11 stations, 1 Benedictine Abbey (St. Meinrad's) with 107 religious, 2 convents of men with 56 religious, 191 secular priests, 82 regulars, 21 lay brothers, 2763 Sisters, 3 seminaries with 83 seminarians, 2 colleges for men with 17 teachers and 174 students, 1 college for women with 16 teachers and 185 students, 4 high schools for boys with 17 teachers and 724 students, 8 academies for young ladies with 40 teachers and 973 students, 2 normal schools with 17 teachers, 122 elementary schools with an attendance of 20,163, 1 industrial school with 20 teachers and 200 students, 2 homes for the aged, 2 orphan asylums, 5 hospitals. The Catholic Community Center at Indianapolis is a settlement house. Public institutions admitting the ministry of priests and Catholic visitors are the state prison, state reformatory, and insane hospitals. Organizations among the clergy are St. Michael's, for deceased members, and the Clergy Relief Union for the support of disabled priests. Many of the laity belong to the Knights of Columbus. Catholic periodicals are the "Indiana Catholic," of Indianapolis, and "The Grail," published at St. Meinrad.

Indies, EAST, PATRIARCHATE OF THE (INDIARUM ORIENTALIMUM; cf. C. E., VII-758d), erected in 1886. The present patriarch is His Excellency Mateo de Oliveira Xavier, who succeeded His Excellency Antonio Sebastiano Valente, deceased 1909.

Indies, WEST, PATRIARCHATE OF THE (INDIARUM OCCIDENTALIUM), erected in 1520, and in 1886 united to the Archdiocese of Toledo. The purely honorary title of Patriarch of the West Indies was transferred from the Archbishop of Toledo to the Bishop of Sion, Chaplain General of the Spanish Army, by Apostolic Letter of 9 December, 1920.

Indo-China (cf. C. E., VII-765b).—The territory of this peninsula of Southern Asia is divided politically into Upper and Lower Burma, the Malay Peninsula, the Empire of Siam, and French Indo-China. For particulars concerning the first three see BURMA; INDIA; SIAM.

FRENCH INDO-CHINA, a colony of France, with an area of 256,000 sq. miles and a population of 16,990,229 (1914), of whom 23,700 were European (excluding military forces), consists of the colony of Cochin-China and the protectorates of Tong-king, Annam, Cambodia, and Laos. The territory of Kwang-chau-wan, which was leased from China for 99 years, is to be returned to China (1922). The inhabitants of Indo-China consist largely of Annamites (12,000,000), who are numerous in Cochin-China, Annam, and Tong-king; Cambodians (1,500,000) in Cambodia, and in provinces west of Cochin-China; the Thais in Tong-king and Laos, where they still form a large portion of the mountain population; and the Chinese whose superior commercial aptitude has given them command of the trade and minor industries.

Government.—The French power is represented in the colony by the governor-general, who is also supreme military authority. He is assisted by the Superior Council of thirty-two members, which meets once a year, generally at Hanoi, and considers the budget of Indo-China and the five different states; when not in session the council delegates its functions to a permanent commission of thirteen members. It corresponds to a legislative council, and is composed of the governor-general as president, the military and naval commanders-in-chief, the secretary-general of Indo-China, the governor of Cochin-China, the residents superior of Tong-king, Annam, Cambodia, and Laos, the heads of departments of the government-general, the president of the Colonial Council of Cochin-China, the presidents of the various chambers of commerce and agriculture, two high native officials, and the chief of cabinet of the governor-general, who acts as secretary to the council. Each of the five states has its own organization, at the heads of which are the residents superior, who are answerable to the governor-general. Throughout Indo-China Europeans can only be tried for serious criminal offenses by French judges at specified centers. There are native tribunals from which there is an appeal to the two courts at Saigon and Hanoi. In these two courts the European judges, in matters affecting the natives, are assisted by Annamite mandarins. Each state, province, and municipality has its budget. The revenue and expenditure of the general budget in 1920 balanced at 57,092,640 piastres. The outstanding debt in 1920 was 403,000,000 francs. The military force totals 25,514 men, and the naval force 2 gunboats, 4 torpedo boats, and 21 dispatch vessels. The recent policy of France has been to give the natives as large a share in the government as they are capable of bearing. During the World War France received from Indo-China not only an important contingent of troops, but large supplies of money, boats, provisions, and raw materials. After the war the native judicial code was reorganized, and new legislation introduced. A recrudescence of the revolutionary movement took place in Annam in 1917, but in general the natives have accepted with apparent placidity the rule of the French.

Economics and Agriculture.—The tenure of the land is either in the hands of the natives who pay a tax to the State as rent, or in the hands of the French colonists who have received concessions amounting to over one million acres. The concessionaries lease the land to the natives, and provide them with the necessary materials for agriculture, receiving in return a percentage of the products; or if they directly exploit the lands themselves, they pay a certain percentage of profit to the State and reward the natives with a proportion of the produce. Mining concessions are granted by the government (218 in 1918), foreigners being forbidden to own mines. Foreign capital does not directly play a conspicuous part in the development of Indo-China. The chief minerals are coal (636 tons in 1918), lignite, antimony, tin (604 tons in 1918), wolfram and zinc (28,000 tons in 1918). The chief error in the past has been too exclusive a concentration on the cultivation of rice to the neglect of the many other possibilities of the country. It is the chief export, forming about 70 per cent of the total (1,475,775 tons in 1918). In 1918 2714 vessels of 2,241,746 tons entered, and 2568 vessels of 2,196,064 tons cleared. Of those entered 332 were French, 281 English, and 258 Japanese. The oldest railroad is that from Saigon to Mytho; at the end of 1918 the total length of line, two-thirds Government owned, was 1300 miles.

COCHIN-CHINA, a direct colony of France, has an area of about 20,000 square miles, and a population (1919) of 3,452,248, of whom 6301 were Europeans. In 1919 Saigon, the capital, had a population of 64,496, of whom 4161 were Europeans, exclusive of 2200 troops. Cholon, the largest city, had 190,085, of whom 97,211 were Chinese. As a French colony Cochin-China is represented in France by a deputy elected by the French citizens. It is directly administered by a governor, assisted by a privy council. The Colonial Council of sixteen members, of whom six are Annamites and the rest French, decides the law of the colony and votes on the budget. The head of each province is assisted by a provincial council of natives, and votes on the budget of the province. The cantons are administered by the chiefs, and are divided into communes, each directed by a council of twelve notables. The towns of Saigon and Cholon form a separate community. In Saigon the mayor, who is elected, heads a municipal council, composed of twelve French residents and four natives. In Cholon he is nominated by the governor-general, and his Commission Municipale is composed of three French notables, chosen for three years by the governor from a list of ten, selected by the Chamber of Commerce; four Annamites (elected) and three Chinese, chosen by the governor from a list presented to him by the Chinese congregation. Justice is administered in French courts by French justices. There are five magistrates, nine Courts of First Instance at different centers, and a branch of the Court of Appeal for Indo-China, sitting at Saigon. The judges of the Courts of First Instance also exercise the functions of magistrates. There are, in addition, four criminal courts. Natives are not allowed to sit as judges.

Education.—There are about 867 schools with 1325 teachers and 51,452 pupils. Secondary education is given at the College Chasseloup-Loubat of Saigon, at College of Gia Dinh, and at the College of Mytho. In 1918 was created the Scientific Institute at Saigon, to which was united the Botanical Institute, the agricultural stations at Girai, and the arboretum at Tranybuam.

Economics and Agriculture.—The total area of Cochin China is 5,011,277 hectares (1 hectare=2.47 acres), of which 1,975,725 hectares are cultivated and 3,488,611 hectares are uncultivated (1,748,694 hectares being forest). About 1,665,000 hectares are devoted to the culture of rice. In 1920 the farm animals comprised 12,383 horses, 435,489 buffaloes, 277,473 pigs, 2553 sheep and goats. There are 10 rice mills at Saigon and Cholon, turning out from 450 to 900 tons a day, also 2 sawmills, 2 soap factories, and a varnish factory. Cochin-China has a Department of Agriculture and a Chamber of Commerce. During 1919, 589 steamers of 895,592 tons entered the port of Saigon, 114 of which were British. The total exports in 1919 were valued at 980,777,780 francs; the imports, 84,202,744 francs. In the same year the local budget balanced at 9,086,358 piastres. For Catholic statistics see COCHIN CHINA, WESTERN, VICARLATE APOSTOLIC OF.

ANNAM, a kingdom under French protectorate, has an area of 52,100 square miles. In 1919 the population was 5,592,000, including 2117 Europeans (exclusive of military forces). The population is mainly Annamite. The ports of Tourane, Qui-Nhon, and Xuan Day are open to European commerce, and the customs revenue conceded to France. French troops occupy part of the citadel (Manga-Ca) of Hué, the capital (population 60,611). Binh-Dinh, the largest town, has 74,400 inhabitants.

Education.—At the end of 1920 the official schools of Annam were reorganized and placed under the direct control of the French Protectorate. There were 685 village schools with 14,438 pupils, 98 elementary schools with 5985 pupils, 16 secondary schools with 5058 pupils, 1 higher secondary school at Hué with 562 pupils, 1 higher secondary school for native girls with 289 pupils, 1 professional school with 125 pupils, and 1 school of law and administration with 55 pupils. Higher education is given at the college of Quoc-Hoc at Hué.

Economics and Agriculture.—The Phanrang River has been utilized to irrigate 100,000 acres, and similar works are being carried on in Central Annam. Cattle raising is an important industry, there being in Annam, in 1919, 681,000 head of cattle. In the same year the exports, which consisted chiefly of rice, cotton, silk, tea, and pepper, were valued at 51,556,788 francs; the imports at 9,243,059 francs. In 1919, 117 ships, totaling 97,942 tons, cleared the port of Tourane.

Government.—The King of Annam, who is an absolute sovereign, is assisted by a Conseil secret (comat), composed of seven ministers, each of whom is assisted by a council of three mandarins. A conseil de censure, nominated by the king, controls the work of the functionaries. The kingdom is divided into provinces, circumscriptions, cantons, and communes. The provinces are controlled by the tong-doc, assisted by the quan-bo (chief of the administrative service), the an-sat (chief of the judiciary service), the doc-hoc (inspector of schools), and the lanh-binh (military commander). The circumscriptions are directed by the quan-huyen, or quan-fu, who are at once administrators and judges.

Then come the canton chiefs and sub-chiefs and the communal councils. The resident general, who represents the French Government to the king, presides over the co-mat, and also directs the great public services depending upon the French administration (agriculture, customs, and excise duties, post and telegraph, public works, etc.). He is assisted by a conseil de protectorat; he is the master of the budget of the protectorate, and himself defines the receipts and expenditures. He also oversees the native provincial administration through his intermediaries, one of whom is placed at the head of each of the thirteen provinces, several being French delegates. Annam has a mixed Chamber of Commerce and Agriculture.

Recent History.—In 1908 occurred the revolt of the "Tondus" against the excessive taxation, and in 1916 that of Duy-Tân against French rule. The latter ended in the dethronement and exile of the king, who was succeeded by Khai-Dinh, a cousin of Thanh-Thai. Under his rule the country prospered greatly, and during the European War the Annamites showed their loyalty to France by sending soldiers for the great struggle. Annam has its own budget, which is drawn up by the resident general and approved by the conseil des ministres. The assessed taxes include chiefly those payable on alcohol, mineral oils, matches, opium, salt, and the customs revenues. The budget for Annam in 1919 was 5,723,139 piastres (1 piastre equals about 2.50 francs).

For Catholic statistics see COCHIN-CHINA, EASTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF; COCHIN-CHINA, NORTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF.

LAOS has an area of 98,000 sq. miles. In 1914 the population was 640,877. In the country there are three protected states, Luang-Prabang, Bassac, and Muong-Sing. The king is resident in his government by a French administrator (resident superior), who resides at Vien-tian and is assisted by twelve commissioners. Each province is administered by the tiao-mumong, who is assisted by three mandarins. The canton is ruled by the tasseing, and the commune by the phoban. The cost of the Laos administration is borne by Cochin-China (six-thirteenths), Tong-king and Annam (five-thirteenths), and Cambodia (two-thirteenths). The local budget for 1918 was 1,747,000 piastres. The prevailing religion is Buddhism, with traces of Brahmanism in court circles. The temples are not so numerous as in Cambodia, the priests are more ignorant, and in practice Buddhism is reduced to external signs of deference to the priests and sacred places. For Catholic statistics see LAOS, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF.

TONG-KING, French protectorate, has an area of 46,400 sq. miles, and is divided into 21 provinces. The population in 1919 was 6,470,250, of whom 6875 were Europeans (exclusive of military forces). The chief town is Hanoi, which had, in 1919, a population of 109,500.

Government.—The chief French official is designated as resident superior, and is assisted by a Protectorate Council, composed of the heads of departments and delegates of the Chambers of Commerce and Agriculture. He represents the governor-general and carries out the execution of the laws and decrees. The French judges with extensive powers sit at Hanoi, Hai-fong, and Nam-dinh. The resident of each province exercises the jurisdiction of a magistrate, but he takes cognizance only of cases in which Europeans, French subjects, and foreigners are concerned. The local budget for 1921 balanced at 13,131,390 piastres.

Education.—There are 14 grammar schools (1920) with 4967 pupils. The University of Hanoi, founded on 28 April, 1918, includes schools of medicine and pharmacy, education, science, engineering, agriculture, forestry, maritime engineering, navigation, and veterinary science.

Economics and Agriculture.—The enormous limestone quarries made possible in 1917 the large exportation of 67,567 tons of cement. In the same year 290,000 tons of hard coal were exported. In 1919 186,685 tons of rice, valued at 117,045,000 francs, were exported, chiefly to Hong-Kong. The principal port, Haiphong, was visited in 1919 by 588 steamers (187 British).

For Catholic statistics see Vicariates Apostolic of Central, Maritime, Southern, Western, Eastern, Northern, and Upper Tong-king.

CAMBODIA, a French protectorate, has an area of 45,000 sq. miles, and is divided into 42 provinces. In 1919 the population was estimated at 2,000,000, of whom 1100 were Europeans, 100,500 were Annamites, and 140,000 were Chinese. The chief towns are Pnom-Penh (population 85,000), the capital, Battambang, and Kampot.

Government.—The present king, Sisowath, is assisted by a council of five ministers and of thirteen assistants. Each province is ruled by a governor, each commune by a municipal council, presided by a mekhum. France is represented by the resident general, who presides over the Council of Ministers and the Council of Protectorate, prepares the budget and sees to the execution of the laws. The budget for 1920 balanced at 6,500,000 piastres, including a sum of 525,000 piastres, allowed for the civil list of the king and princes. There are 60 schools with 4000 pupils.

Economics and Agriculture.—The chief product is rice, of which 300,000 tons are exported yearly. Pepper is extensively grown in 61 villages by 4800 planters, the production being 800,000 kilogrammes annually. In 1920, 4236 vessels of 179,874 tons entered, and 10,806 vessels of 312,166 tons cleared the ports of Cambodia. The export trade is carried on mostly through Saigon.

For Catholic statistics see CAMBODIA, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF.

KWANG-CHAU-WAN, on the eastern coast of China, was leased from China by France in 1898. In 1900 it was placed under the authority of the governor-general of Indo-China and divided into 3 administrative districts, the Chinese communal organization being, however, maintained. It has an area of 190 sq. miles, and a population of about 168,000. The port is a free port. The budget for 1918 was 404,960 piastres. The French have developed the resources of the territory, and when China recovers Kwang-chau-wan she will get back a country greater in value than the territory she leased to France. At the Washington Disarmament Conference the territories which they had leased from France in 1922 the French offered to return the territory to China, provided the other powers re-china.

Indulgences (cf. C. E., VII-783).—All matters relating to indulgences are now under the jurisdiction of the Sacred Apostolic Penitentiary. No one but the pope can (a) grant others the power of conceding indulgences, unless that privilege has been conceded expressly by Apostolic indult; or (b) grant indulgences applicable to the dead; or (c) annex indulgences to any pious act, thing or sodality membership to which other indulgences have been granted by the pope or other person, unless new conditions to be fulfilled for gaining them are imposed. Those who have obtained from the pope a concession of indulgences for all the faithful are obliged to present an authentic copy of the concession to the sacred penitentiary, otherwise the concession becomes invalid. New indulgences granted to churches, even to those of regulars, which have not been promulgated in Rome must not be made public without the local ordinary's knowledge; so, too, in publishing in books, pamphlets, etc., collections of indulgences for prayers or pious works must the license of the ordinary or of the Holy See be obtained, as is required by the law of censorship.

Plenary indulgences granted for the feasts of Our Lord or the Blessed Virgin can be gained only on the feasts that are contained in the universal calendar; so, too, those granted for the feast of an Apostle can be gained only on the feast commemorating his death. A plenary indulgence granted as quotidiana perpetua or ad tempus (daily and perpetually, or temporarily) for visiting a church or public oratory can be gained by each of the faithful, on any day, but only once a year, unless it is otherwise expressly stated in the decree. Indulgences granted for feasts or for pious practices performed for three days, a week, or for nine days, before or after a feast, or during the octave are transferred to any day to which the feast has been legally transferred, if the feast transferred has an office with a Mass without solemnity and external celebration and if the translation is perpetual, or if the solemnity and the external celebration are transferred either temporary or perpetually. If a visit to a church or oratory is annexed as a condition for gaining an indulgence on any day, the visit can be made any time between noon on the preceding day and midnight terminating the day mentioned. If a church to which an indulgence has been annexed is entirely destroyed the indulgence does not cease if the church be rebuilt within fifty years in the same or almost the same spot and under the same title. Indulged beads or objects lose their indulgence only when they are entirely destroyed or sold.

A plenary indulgence is so granted, that if one fails to gain it entirely, he can gain a partial indulgence according to his disposition. A plenary indulgence for a given pious exercise can be gained only once in a day, whereas a partial indulgence can be gained as often as the exercise is repeated, unless in either case the contrary is expressly stated. Unless the contrary is expressly stated indulgences granted by a bishop can be gained by any one actually within his diocese. No one can gain indulgences for another living person, but all papal indulgences are applicable to the dead, unless the contrary is stated. To gain indulgences one must be baptized, not excommunicated, and in the state of grace at least when finishing the works prescribed; moreover, one must have at least a general intention of gaining them and must perform the works prescribed at the time and in the manner laid down. Those who for religious purposes or for the sake of education or even health are living in community life in houses erected with the ordinary's consent, but which have no church or public chapel, and all others living there in their service, may fulfil the obligation of visiting a church or a public oratory, when no special one has been mentioned as a condition for gaining an indulgence, by visiting their own domestic chapel in which they can satisfy the precept of hearing Mass. If confession is a condition for gaining an indulgence it can be made within the octave immediately preceding the day for which the indulgence is granted, and the Communion may be received on the vigil; or either condition may be fulfilled within the octave following the appointed day. In like manner the confession and Communion required for gaining the indulgences granted for the pious exercises of a triduum, novena, etc., may be made within the octave immediately following the exercises. The faithful who are accustomed to go to confession at least twice a month unless lawfully prevented, or who receive Holy Communion in the state of grace with a right intention daily, even though they may refrain once or twice a week, may gain all indulgences without the actual confession annexed as a condition, except indulgences granted for the ordinary or an extraordinary jubilee or for some similar case. An indulgence cannot be gained for doing anything that is already enjoined by law or precept, unless the contrary is expressly stated in the concession; however, if in sacramental confession a work to which perchance an indulgence is attached is imposed as a penance, it is possible to gain the indulgence and perform the penance at the same time. More than one indulgence may be annexed to one and the same thing or place on divers grounds; but more than one indulgence cannot be gained for performing one and the same work to which the indulgences have been annexed on divers grounds, unless the work enjoined is confession and Communion, or unless the contrary has been declared. If prayers for the pope's intentions are a condition for gaining an indulgence, mental prayer alone is not sufficient, but any vocal prayer will satisfy the obligation unless a specific prayer has been ordered. If a particular prayer is assigned the indulgences may be gained no matter in what language it is said, provided the fidelity of the translation is declared by the sacred penitentiary or by one of the local ordinaries of the place where the language is spoken; but any addition, omission, or interpolation nullifies the indulgence. For gaining indulgences the prayers may be said alternately by those praying together, or one may say the prayers and the other follow them mentally. If without fault on one's part it is impossible to perform the works enjoined for gaining an indulgence, a confessor is empowered to commute them into others. Those who are dumb can gain indulgences annexed to public prayers, if they are present with the other faithful at the prayers and raise up their thoughts and affections to God; in the case of private prayers it suffices for them to repeat them mentally or peruse them with their eyes.

Infamy (cf. C. E., VIII-1).—Infamy is the loss of one's good name. In canon law infamy is twofold: (a) infamy by law, that is when the Church declares one infamous on account of a crime which he has committed; (b) infamy by act or of fact, when one owing to his ill deeds loses his reputation in the sight of prudent serious persons. Neither species of infamy affects one's kindred; however, the Code provides that a parish priest who lives with relatives who have lost their good name may be transferred from his parish if he refuses to send them away. Infamy by law is incurred ipso facto by those who profane the sacred species, or who desecrate the bodies or graves of the dead, or lay violent hands on a pope, cardinal, or papal legate, or who participate in duels as principals or seconds, or who marry again even civilly in disregard of their valid marriage bond, or who are guilty of certain immoral deeds; it is to be imposed by sentence on recalcitrant apostates, heretics, or schismatics after due warning, and on clerics guilty of certain vices.

Infamy by law can be removed only by permission of the Holy See, but infamy by act ceases when in the opinion of the ordinary the sinner has by his continued good life regained the esteem of prudent serious-minded persons.

Infamy by law constitutes an irregularity ex defectu; it disqualifies entirely for benefices, pensions, offices, dignities, for ecclesiastical legal acts, for the exercise of ecclesiastical rights, for any ministry in sacred functions, or for sponsorship. Infamy by act impedes one temporarily from receiving holy orders, or benefices, offices or dignities, and from the exercise of sacred ministry or of ecclesiastical legal acts. Furthermore, after a sentence pronouncing infamy the culprit cannot vote at elections, or exercise the right of patronage, or validly act as sponsor. Finally, no one who is tainted with infamy may testify in ecclesiastical suits, and if he is notoriously infamous he must not even be allowed to receive Holy Communion.

If any one fears that his testimony will entail infamy on himself or on his kindred in the direct line or in the first degree collateral, he is exempted expressly by law from confessing the truth to a judge who questions him in an ecclesiastical court. If by observing a vindictory penalty or censure latæ sententiæ a guilty person would betray himself and incur infamy and cause scandal, in an urgent case any confessor can in the forum of confession suspend the obligation of observing the penalty, on condition that he imposes on the culprit the obligation of having recourse at least within a month by letter and by his confessor, if possible without grave inconvenience, his name being concealed, to the sacred penitentiary or to a bishop possessing the requisite faculties and of obeying his commands; if in any extraordinary case such recourse is impossible the confessor, except in case of the censure for solicitation, can grant the dispensation, but he must impose a fitting penance and satisfaction with the penalty of again incurring infamy if the penance or satisfaction is unduly delayed.

Infant Jesus, SISTERS OF THE.—Founded at Neuchâtel (Sarthe), 1835, and transferred to Le Mans, 1888, the Congregation of the Infant Jesus is approved for teaching and nursing, non-cloistered. They came to America, 21 October, 1905, and are incorporated under the title Nursing Sisters of the Sick Poor, with mother-house in Brooklyn. At present the community numbers 63, and in the past fifteen years has served over 4000 patients. The novitiate has been transferred to St. Joseph's Villa, Hempstead, L. I., where the Sisters are trained in the hospital and prepared for their work. A small branch house was recently opened in Long Island City and ministers to the poor of that section. The works of the congregation are the education of children in orphanages, industrial schools, and homes for working girls; the conducting of clinics, hospitals, homes for the aged; and the nursing of the sick in their homes. In America the work of the Sisters is the nursing of the sick poor in their homes. The Sisters form a family without distinction, wear the same religious habit, and observe the same discipline, regardless of their origin or education. For the continuance and extension of their work they depend solely on the charity of others, for they accept no remuneration whatever for their services. During the year 1921 the Sisters attended 392 new cases, spent 1592 whole days, 1044 half days, and 72 nights on cases, made 1700 visits to cases new or still pending, attended 41 at the hour of death, procured admission to hospitals for 35, gave food supplies to 3320, distributed 3363 new garments, 4865 used garments, 179 Christmas red stockings, and gave 85 Christmas dinners.

Innsbruck, UNIVERSITY OF (cf. C. E., VIII-24b).—The war and its aftermath have produced a great many problems in the solution of which the University of Innsbruck was involved. The award of a substantial portion of the Province of Austrian Tyrol to Italy under the Treaty of St. Germain, when under the pressure of the first great economic crisis it was proposed, in order to create credits in foreign countries, to sell the national works of art, the Academic Senate of the university entered vigorous protest, laying stress upon the fact that such means should be adopted only after all the resources of the State had been directed toward forcing the profiteers and their accomplices and conscienceless manufacturers to disgorge that which was really due to the Government. The university opposed the establishment of the compulsory association of university professors, which was directed by an order of the Ministry of Education, on the ground that such action on the part of the Government constituted an undermining of the basic autonomy granted by law to the universities. The Academic Senate also opposed an increase in the tuition fees, as well as re-introduction of the practice of payments by students direct to the professors as an additional fee for attendance upon the courses given by such professors. An attack was also made upon the time-honored practice of using Latin formulas in the conferring of Academic Degrees. While the university recognized that the language of such promotion formulæ were antiquated, and in many instances did violence to the scientific feelings of the philologists, nevertheless because of the fact that the question is by no means of basic importance, and because the Academic Senate in these times of radical change felt it desirable to adhere to a conservative course, the movement to abolish such formulæ and standards has not thus far been successful.

For the first time in decades an academic celebration, which hitherto had been impossible because of the political and religious cleavage in the student body, was held on 4 December, 1919, to celebrate the return of the students who had participated in the war. The university and the Ministry of Education vied with one another in order to find ways and means to facilitate the education and instruction of these returning soldiers. As a consequence credit was given to such students for service in the army as far as possible, an extra semester was added and the requirements of examinations were reduced as far as it was compatible with the feeling of responsibility of the academic teacher. The lightening of the financial burdens of the students was accomplished through the establishment of a Mensa Academica, where meals are served to needy students, either without charge or for a nominal consideration. Support was given to this undertaking through large donations on the part of the professors, through suitable contributions, and principally by the National Auxiliary Council of Tyrol, as well as a large gift from the Convention of German Cities through the instrumentality of the Municipal Councils and the Government of Tyrol. However, these means were not sufficient to relieve the great needs of the students and help from abroad was necessary. As the result of a gift from Holland it was possible to provide the students a daily breakfast prepared by their female fellow students. Contributions from Sweden, Switzerland, and America, as well as from the Quakers, provided means for furnishing luncheon and dinner to the students. In addition to the above a contribution which arrived in the summer of the year 1920 from Rochester, New York, and Chicago, Illinois, consisting of lard, bacon, flour, rice, corn beef and condensed milk, valued at 100,250,000 cronin, relieved anxiety, supply of necessities for months, and removed a tremendous financial burden. Free meals at the Mensa Academica were supplied during the winter semester to eighty students, and during the summer semester to ninety-three students.

Below is given a table showing the apportionment of the instructional staff at the university:

	Professors Ordinary	Professors Extraordinary	Private Dozenten	Dozenten	Lecturer	Instructors and Assistants
Theology	10	4	1
Law	13	1		3
Medicine	16	6	10	1		40
Philosophy	33	5	10	2	5	8
Totals	72	16	21	6	5	48

Entire total, 168.

During the year 1919-1920 the following was the attendance at the lectures given by the various faculties:

	Winter Semester	Summer Semester
Theology	85	66
Law	117	114
Medicine	185	195
Philosophy	290	304
Total	677	679

The university has also undertaken a series of popular lectures which are open to the public without charge. These lectures were given on a variety of subjects, for instance, philosophical, social, historical, scientific, medical and legal. The total attendance at these courses was 1428.

Inquisition, CANONICAL (cf. C. E., VIII-38b).—Though the special inquisition preliminary to entertaining a charge of crime against a cleric may be held by the local ordinary, it is usually entrusted to one of the synodal judges, or for special reasons to another priest. The inquisitor must be delegated specially on each occasion and for a single case only, and can never act in the same trial as judge. When his report indicates that the denunciation is without solid foundation, a record of this fact is to be kept in the secret archives; if, however, there are indications of a crime having been committed which are insufficient for citing the cleric for trial, the record is to be similarly preserved and the conduct of the suspected party is to be kept under supervision; finally, if the evidence is certain or at least probable and sufficient for formulating an accusation, the cleric should be summoned to appear.

Institute of the Brothers of the Christian Schools (cf. C. E., VIII-56a).—Members of this congregation take annual vows at the end of their novitiate, triennial vows at twenty-two years of age, and are admitted to perpetual profession at the age of twenty-five. The present superior general is Brother Imier de Jésus Lafabrègue, born in 1855, entered the institute in 1869, provincial visitor to the United States, assistant general in 1907, and elected superior general in 1913, replacing Brother Gabriel-Marie, who resigned because of his advanced age. There are: in Belgium 85 establishments conducted by the Brothers, comprising about 66 popular free schools, boarding schools, official normal schools, and trade schools known as St. Luke schools; 35 houses in Germany, Austria, Hungary, Bohemia, Galicia, Albania, Bulgaria, and Rumania; in Spain, including the Canaries and the Balearic Isles, 136 houses of the institute, of which about 111 are popular gratuitous schools; in Italy 37 houses, of which 9 are in Rome; in the Levant, Turkey, Syria, and Egypt, 50 houses which are centers of Christian education and influence and are liberally patronized by the people of those countries; in the district of England and Ireland 35 houses, the Brothers for the most part being engaged in the national schools; 95 houses in Mexico, Cuba, Ecuador, Colombia, Panama, Argentina, Chile, Venezuela, Peru, Bolivia, and Brazil; and 66 houses with nearly 24,000 pupils in Canada. In the United States the institute has four provinces, Baltimore, New York, St. Louis, and San Francisco. In the Baltimore province the Brothers conduct establishments in the Archdioceses of Baltimore and Philadelphia, and in the dioceses of Newark, Richmond, Savannah, Scranton, and Wheeling. The Brothers number 225, novices 30, scholastics 9, junior novices 33, pupils 7136, orphans 720, pupils in industrial schools 839. In the New York province the Brothers conduct 38 establishments in the archdioceses of New York, Boston, and Halifax, and in the dioceses of Albany, Buffalo, Brooklyn, Detroit, Manchester, Fall River, Syracuse, and Providence. There are 460 Brothers, 15 novices, 7 scholastics, 40 postulants, 16,000 pupils. In the St. Louis province the Brothers conduct establishments in the archdioceses of Chicago, St. Louis, and St. Paul, and in the dioceses of Kansas City, St. Joseph, Duluth, Nashville, and Winona. The Brothers number 208, novices 13, postulants 37, scholastics 9, pupils 3300, colleges 2, high schools 12, parochial schools 2. In the San Francisco province the Brothers conduct establishments in the archdioceses of Oregon City and San Francisco, and in the dioceses of Sacramento and Los Angeles. There are 80 Brothers, 1 scholastic, 4 novices, 18 postulants, 2562 pupils, 1 college, 4 high schools, 3 parochial schools, 1 orphanage and industrial school, 1 scholasticate and normal training school, 1 novitiate, 1 juniorate.

Institute of Mary (cf. C. E., VIII-54a).—Owing to the political disturbances in Europe during the last three centuries, the Institute of Mary has been split up into several generalates. At the present day (1922) there are subject to the Institute in Bavaria 126 houses: 107 in Bavaria itself, 5 in England, 3 in Italy, 5 in Rumania, and 6 in India. Of these 13 are new foundations. The total number of members is 3345. In Bavaria the number of pupils is 38,860; in Rumania, 3300; in India, 980; in England, 580; in Italy, 490. In 1911

Mother Elise Blume was succeeded as general superior in Nymphenburg by Mother Isabella Wild. Mother Magdalen Grémion, foundress of the first house in Rome in modern times, died in 1913. The Austrian branch of the Institute consists at present (1922) of 12 houses, 3 of which are new foundations. It has 739 members, 52 schools with 7800 pupils. The house in Prague had to be sold to the Government during the World War; the house at Zara was taken over by another Congregation in 1921. In 1913 Mother J. Castiglione was succeeded by Mother Barbara Gottlieb as general superior in Austria. Mainz, a separate generalate since the time of Napoleon, has now 8 dependencies with 277 members, 25 educational establishments, and 3759 pupils. Mother Thaddae Lechner was succeeded in 1919 by Mother Paula Rang as general superior.

In 1913 new Constitutions according to the Normæ were approved for the Irish branch of the Institute, which is now divided into provinces. In 1919 Mother Raphael Deasy succeeded Mother Michael Corcoran, who for thirty years governed as mother general the houses dependent on Rathfarnham. Distinguished members deceased were: Mother Teresa Ball (d. 1911), assistant general for nineteen years; Mother Gonzaga Barry (d. 1915), foundress of the Institute in Australia and first provincial; Mother Stanislaus Murphy (d. 1919), foundress of the Institute in Spain and first provincial; Mother Attracta Coffey (d. 1920), who devoted her musical talent to the perfecting of Church music, leaving a tradition in Rathfarnham as to the correct singing of plain chant. Rathfarnham has 49 dependencies, 6 of which are new foundations. In 1911 a hostel in Dublin, and in 1918 one in Melbourne were established for students attending the respective universities. The number of members subject to Rathfarnham is 1031. The number of pupils is 14,153.

There are four houses of the Institute in the United States. Canada has 12, four of them being new foundations. Since 1910 it has had four general superiors: Mother Ignatia Lynn, the connecting link between the pioneers of the Institute in America and their successors of the present day; Mother Victorine Harris; Mother Stanislaus Liddy; and Mother Pulcheria Farrelley, the present mother general. In 1911, at Toronto, the seat of the Generalate, Loreto Abbey College was founded as a woman's department of St. Michael's College, one of the four federated colleges of the University of Toronto. Of these four, University College is undenominational, Victoria is Methodist, Trinity is Anglican, and St. Michael's is Catholic. The first three are co-educational, and each maintains a woman's residence in connection with it. At St. Michael's a principle of segregation prevails, consequently Loreto students enrolled there, attend lectures at Loreto Abbey College, thus enjoying the unique advantage of pursuing their studies in a Catholic college and of obtaining their degree from a university whose high standing is recognized both throughout the British Empire and in the United States. The number of members subject to Toronto is 350. They have 33 schools with 7804 pupils.

Among prominent ecclesiastics anxious to advance at Rome the cause of Mary Ward, foundress of the Institute, are Cardinal Bourne and Cardinal Gasquet. In the preface to "Mary Ward, a Sketch," recently published by the Catholic Truth Society, Cardinal Bourne expresses the hope that "an increased knowledge of her life may lead to a greater appreciation of her work; may it be the means of uniting into one great organization the widely scattered branches of her Institute; may it bring about in God's own day her publicly authorized invocation."

Institution, CANONICAL (cf. C. E., VII-65).—The right of instituting parish priests belongs to the bishop, unless the parish has been reserved to the Holy See, all customs to the contrary being reprobated. Canonical institution to a benefice cannot be granted by a vicar general without a special mandate.

Intendencia Oriental y Llanos de San Martín, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., VIII-69a), in Colombia. The present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. José Maria Guiot, consecrated titular Bishop of Augustopolis in 1908. The vicariate comprises 34,749 square miles, and has a population of about 30,000 Indians. There are 5 residences or parishes, 2 vice-parishes, and 14 religious. Several Sisters of Wisdom are active in the vicariate.

Inter-Church World Movement. See PROTESTANTISM.

Interdict (cf. C. E., VIII-73b).—The right of imposing any general interdict, affecting a diocese or state is reserved to the Holy See; but a general interdict affecting a parish or its parishioners, or a particular local or personal interdict may be imposed by the bishop also. Externs and exempted individuals are obliged to observe a local interdict.

The sacraments and sacramentals can always be administered to the dying in spite of a local interdict; moreover, except it is expressly forbidden, if the interdict is general and local: (a) priests not personally indicated may perform all Divine services in any church or public oratory privately, in a low voice, without bells, and with closed doors; (b) in the cathedral church, parish churches or in the only church in a town, and only in these, it is lawful to say a daily Mass, reserve the Blessed Sacrament, administer baptism, Holy Communion, penance, assist at marriages, though the nuptial blessing is prohibited, hold funeral services without any solemnity, bless baptismal water and the sacred oils, and preach. In these ceremonies there must be no music, singing, or pomp; the Viaticum is to be carried privately to the sick. Though local interdicts are suspended on certain great feasts, still the prohibition against ordination or the solemn blessing of marriage remains in force. Interdiction of a church involves neighboring chapels, but not the cemetery; interdiction of a cemetery involves the oratories in it, but not the neighboring church.

The following interdicts are incurred ipso facto: (1) Universities, colleges, chapters, and all other legal persons who appeal from laws, decrees or mandates of the reigning pope to a general council; this interdict is reserved specially to the Holy See. (2) Those who knowingly celebrate or cause to be celebrated the Divine offices in interdicted places; and those who admit clerics who have been excommunicated, interdicted, or suspended by a declaratory or a condemnatory sentence, to celebrate the Divine offices from which they have been excluded by censure, incur ipso jure an interdict against entering the church, which remains in force until in the judgment of the person whose authority was condemned they have made due satisfaction. It should be noted that what is penalized here is the admission to celebrate the Divine offices, not attendance at them. By "Divine offices" is meant those functions of the power of orders which by the institution of Christ or of the Church are ordained for the worship of God and can be exercised only by clerics. The interdict would not be incurred unless the reason why the party should have been excluded was that he had been censured by sentence, formerly the motive for exclusion was excommunication by name. (3) A personal interdict falls on those who have furnished cause for a local interdict or for an interdict affecting a community or college. This interdict not being reserved, the party affected can be absolved sacramentally by any confessor. (4) An interdict from entering the church, reserved to the ordinary, is incurred by anyone who willingly gives ecclesiastical burial to infidels, apostates from the Faith, heretics, schismatics, or other persons who are excommunicated or interdicted, in violation of the ecclesiastical regulations governing Christian burial. Naturally, as the pastor or rector of the church is the only person who authorizes the ceremonies of Christian burial, it is he alone, and not those who request him, that incurs this censure, which is reserved to the ordinary.

In addition to these four cases in which interdict is explicitly mentioned we may note that Catholics who dare to contract mixed marriages, even if the marriage is valid, without a dispensation from the Church are ipso facto excluded from the sacraments until a dispensation has been granted by the ordinary. Moreover, a personal interdict is to be imposed on those who mutilate corpses or violate graves for an evil purpose, and also on those who while still bound by the marriage bond have attempted to contract another marriage, even a civil marriage, and who continue this unlawful union after being warned by the ordinary.

Formerly, the Council of Trent in order to force bishops to reside in their dioceses imposed on metropolitans the duty of denouncing those who failed to do so to the Holy See, if they had absented themselves for more than a year. If the metropolitan did not do so, he incurred an interdict against entering his church. Chapters, also, were forbidden under penalty of interdict to grant dimissorial letters during a vacancy—except in the case of those who had to be ordained on account of a benefice; and, later, an interdict against entering church was imposed on bishops who illegally took over the administration of their dioceses. These penalties, however, are no longer in force.

Iowa (cf. C. E., VIII-93c).—The State of Iowa has an area of 56,147 sq. miles or 35,934,080 acres. During the ten years from 1908 to 1918 the average extremes of temperature were 106° above and 34° below zero. During the same period the average rainfall was 27 inches. For the year 1918 the mean temperature was 49.2°; the highest temperature was 113° (4 August), in Clarinda, Knoxville, and Shenandoah in the southern part of the State; the lowest temperature was 40° below zero (20 December) in Washta, Cherokee County, in the northern part of the state. The average amount of rain and melted snow for the year was 32.78 inches.

INDUSTRIAL AND GENERAL SOCIAL CONDITIONS.—The value of the agricultural products of the State in 1919, according to the United States Department of Agriculture, was $861,338,000. This includes 416,000,000 bushels of Indian corn, valued at $499,200,000, and 196,182,000 bushels of oats, valued at $125,556,000. The state now ranks first in the production of oats and corn and in the number of swine and horses. The value of dairy products for the year 1919 was $100,000,000. The mineral output for the same year was 8,192,195 tons, valued at $24,703,232. In the year 1918 the value of clay products was $5,313,394. The value of the output of manufactures for the last statistical year, 1919, was $746,774,000. The total mileage of railways in the State in 1918 was 9,837.7, and the total mileage of electric interurban railways was 887.1. According to the Federal Census of 1920, the population of Iowa was 2,403,630; that of Des Moines, the largest city, 126,468. The next largest cities in order are Sioux City, Davenport, and Dubuque. The Federal Census of 1916 gives the membership of the various churches as follows: Methodist Episcopal, 325,959; Catholic, 206,701; Lutheran, 107,523; Presbyterian, 47,159.

Education is compulsory for children between the ages of seven and sixteen years inclusive. In 1917 the number of school houses was 13,227, the number of teachers, 27,227; the enrollment of pupils, 532,060, and the total appropriation for educational purposes for the year $32,395,988. There are 905 high schools in the State. In 1919 the State University had 260 professors and instructors, and 2889 students enrolled. There are in the State 226 private denominational and higher educational institutions. The State laws relative to private and parochial schools are as follows: the medium of instruction in all secular subjects taught in all the schools, public and private, shall be the English language, and the use of any language other than English in secular subjects in said schools is hereby prohibited, provided, however, that nothing herein shall prohibit the teaching and studying of foreign languages as such; private schools must furnish attendance reports; the common branches of elementary education must be taught in private schools. Instruction in citizenship must also be given; private high schools may be designated to conduct normal training courses.

Catholic Education.—In the year 1920 there were in the State 33,845 pupils attending parochial schools, and 6929 students in academies and high schools. Dubuque College, diocesan, formerly St. Joseph's, has 165 students and St. Ambrose College, also diocesan, has 302 students.

RECENT HISTORY.—During the European War, Iowa contributed 98,000 soldiers, 10,000 sailors, and 600 marines, all of whom accredited themselves honorably. Headquarters First Iowa Brigade was reorganized into the 67th Brigade Headquarters, 34th Division, entrained at Camp Cody, New Mexico, and arrived in France, where they were skeletonized at Le Mans, along with the First Iowa Infantry (133rd Infantry) and the Second Iowa Infantry. The Third Iowa Infantry (168th U. S. Infantry) 42d or Rainbow Division, arrived at Rimaucourt, France, on 12 December, 1917, entered the line in February, and participated in the battles of Badonviller, Lorraine, Champagne, Chateau Thierry, Sergy, St. Mihiel, and Argonne. The rest of the Iowa men, organized into the 34th Division entrained at Camp Cody, arrived in France in 1918 and saw little service. The summary of casualties of the Iowa members of the American Expeditionary Force was as follows: deceased, 42 officers and 2199 men; prisoners, 8 officers and 86 men; wounded, 106 officers and 4950 men.

For details of the Church in Iowa see DUBUQUE, ARCHDIOCESE OF; SIOUX CITY, DIOCESE OF; DAVENPORT, DIOCESE OF; DES MOINES, DIOCESE OF.

In the state there were (1921) 586 churches, 621 priests, 34 different religious orders, 35 hospitals and asylums, and a Catholic population of about 262,690.

LEGISLATIVE CHANGES.—The Legislature of Iowa was one of the first to organize the commission form of government for cities and the system of the city government adopted by Des Moines in 1907, became known as the Des Moines system. In 1911 it created the office of commerce counsel to investigate railroad rates and matters pertaining to commerce. In the same year the office of dairy and food commissioner was created. A stringent child labor law was passed in 1915. The contract prison labor system was recently abolished. Iowa has a workman's compensation law and laws providing for safety in coal mines. There is a pure food law, conforming in its requirements to the national law. There are statutory provisions for direct primaries, for direct election of senators, and for non-partisan nomination of judges of the supreme district, and superior courts. The property rights of husbands and wives are equal, each upon the death of the other inheriting one-third of his or her real estate, while neither is responsible for the debts of the other. The State ratified the Federal suffrage amendment, 2 July, 1919, and the prohibition amendment, 15 January, 1919, the thirty-first State to do so.

Ireland (cf. C. E., VIII-98b).—The history of Ireland since 1913 centers chiefly around the death of the Home Rule movement and the sanguinary struggle for independence during and after the European War, which was professedly fought to dethrone might as the basis of right and to liberate subject nationalities. Ireland is a distinct and separate nation, the oldest in Europe, except Greece. It has a population of more than 4,500,000, and in that surpasses Norway, Denmark, and Switzerland. It has an area of 32,531 sq. miles, and is larger than Belgium, Holland, Denmark, or Switzerland, or any two of them combined. In 1918-19 the British Government collected $170,000,000 in taxes in Ireland, and spent there $65,000,000, reaping a net profit of $105,000,000. The cost of government in other small countries before the war was: Servia, $26,000,000; Greece, $27,000,000; Switzerland, $35,000,000; Bulgaria, $35,000,000; Norway, $36,000,000; Denmark, $47,500,000. In 1917 Portugal did a business of $115,000,000; Norway, $210,000,000; Denmark, $325,000,000; Sweden, $375,000,000; while Ireland did a business of $820,000,000. In view of these figures and of the fact that the Irish had never voluntarily accepted any union with England, it was but natural for the Irish to accept the statements and professions of the governments of the world and insist on their right to freedom. The present movement in Ireland for independence was linked up with an unending series of wars and revolts against English rule, since the first attempt to subdue the island. It originated at the moment when the agitation for Home Rule had failed in circumstances of extreme humiliation. The many times reiterated promise of a very limited measure of self-government had been violated and the British Government had virtually pledged its word, on the contrary, to divide Ireland for the first time in history. When it seemed probable that some measure of Home Rule would have to be given to Ireland, the British supporters in N. E. Ulster had been encouraged and permitted to organize well-armed volunteer forces to resist Home Rule. When the Irish, to meet this menace, began their volunteer movement and attempted to secure arms, the British interfered and peaceful citizens were wantonly fired on by the British military on the last Sunday in July, 1914. Meanwhile the workingmen of Dublin were forming their citizen army, while Countess Markiewicz had founded the Fianna na h-Éireann or Irish boy scouts, two bodies that made the 1916 revolt possible. When the war broke out a few days later, the Irish, forgetting the past, enlisted voluntarily in the British Army, in response to a plea by the British imploring them to enlist to help Belgium, where the nuns and priests were being slain, they declared, and the churches destroyed by the German Protestants. When it was believed that the war would not last long, the parties responsible for the arming of N. E. Ulster against Home Rule made vigorous efforts to discourage the Irish Catholics from enlisting, lest they should learn the use of arms, and so be in a position to meet any pro-British rising in N. E. Ulster in case Home Rule was granted. The authorities at the War Office in London refused Redmond's offer of his Irish volunteers as an Irish unit for a similar motive. Dazzled by the thought of fighting to liberate small nationalities, Ireland had come near losing her own soul, when on Easter Monday, 24 April, 1916, Patrick Pearse, James Connolly, Thomas Clarke, Joseph Plunkett, and their associates, rose in sudden revolt in Dublin, proclaimed the independence of Ireland, and unfurled the Irish tricolor. For a week a bitter fight was staged, the British violating the internationally accepted Red Cross regulations. The revolt was crushed, but only after heavy losses had been inflicted on the British. Less than 1100 Irish soldiers, and these included women like Countess Markiewicz in their ranks, participated in the active fighting; of these 58 were killed, while 16 leaders were court-martialed and shot. The revolt took the populace by surprise, and was not in general approved at first. Archbishop Harty and Bishops Hoare, Gilmartin and Morrisroe condemned it severely. Bishop O'Dwyer, however, and later Archbishop Mannix of Melbourne, won the affection of Irish race by their protests against the cruelty of the British commander-in-chief and by upholding Ireland's rights to self-determination. The public was shocked by the method of executing the leaders by twos or threes over an extended period, and particularly by the execution of James Connolly, the noted labor leader, who, having been severely wounded in the fighting, was nursed back to health sufficiently to allow him to be carried out on the chair to face the rifles of the firing squad.

About 4,000 Irishmen, mostly leaders of the patriotic party, were deported to England after the suppression of the revolt. An attempt made by the Irish Nation League in August, 1916, to induce the people to consent to remain in the British Empire failed. The national consciousness of the nation was awakening. In February, 1917, Count Plunkett, father of Joseph Plunkett, won a striking victory at an election in which his platform was complete Irish independence. This victory was followed by a convention of the public bodies in Ireland, which re-asserted the nationality of Ireland and pledged itself to use every means to secure independence. The British premier, Lloyd George, thereupon proposed a convention of Irishmen exclusively to arrange a settlement of the Irish question and pledged the British Government to accept any solution of the Irish question upon which the convention could reach a substantial agreement, with the sole exception that Ireland must remain within the empire. The proposal was accepted by the Unionists and Parliamentary Nationalists, but was rejected by the Sinn Féin party, who refused to be present unless all the delegates should be elected by adult suffrage, and unless the convention should be free to decree independence. The term Sinn Féin, meaning "ourselves," was originally given by Arthur Griffith to his movement to have Irishmen abandon the British Parliament and rely on themselves to improve their conditions, but it had come to mean the patriotic party that demanded complete national independence. The convention met without the Sinn Féin party on 25 July, 1917. There were 101 delegates, none of whom was chosen by election. Meanwhile Eamonn de Valera, who had made a brilliant defence of his position in the revolt of 1916, and who had been sentenced to death, a penalty commuted later to penal servitude for life, was elected for East Clare on the Irish Republic ticket. On 25 October, 1917, he was chosen president of the Sinn Féin organization, which pledged itself to make it impossible for England to hold Ireland. As was expected, Lloyd George, on 25 February, 1918, intervened in the convention and declared that Great Britain must control the Irish customs and excise. The convention failed, partly because of the attitude of the Unionists of N. E. Ulster, and partly because of the new limitations imposed by Lloyd George in violation of his pledge. The Nationalists and the other Unionists, had agreed to accept limited self-government; but before reading their report Lloyd George announced he had decided to conscript the Irish. His threat was met at once by a union of the Sinn Féin, Labor and Parliamentary parties to defeat this attack on the nation's prerogative, and an appeal to the Irish to resist by force. The answer was unanimous, and the hierarchy declared their resistance by force to be morally justified. A month later the British replied, deporting and imprisoning about 100 of the leading Irishmen without any legal formality. To justify himself in the eyes of the world, especially of America, Lloyd George said he had discovered an Irish-German plot. He was at once challenged by the Irish to substantiate his charge, but he failed to do so; the British viceroy in Ireland at the time, Lord Wimborne, admitting publicly that the plot was a mere fiction. It was seen soon that the enforcement of conscription would be a physical impossibility, and Sinn Féin continued to spread rapidly.

In December, 1918, a general election was held in Ireland. The nation had a chance to make a deliberate choice. The result was phenomenal: the Republicans triumphed everywhere, except in the N. E. corner of Ulster, where the British "planters" were in a majority. The Republicans, however, refused to sit in the British Parliament, as that would have involved an oath of allegiance to England, and forfeited thereby a deposit of $700 for each of their members. The Republicans established a parliament of their own—the Dáil Éireann—issued a declaration of independence and elected De Valera president of the Irish Republic.

In 1919 the British began a policy of brute force. Republican leaders were seized and their organizations declared illegal; but the local elections in 1920 showed the country was solid for independence. The Republican victories in the rural elections in June were followed by a Reign of Terror. For nearly a year the lives and property of the Irish were at the mercy of the constabulary and a body of special auxiliaries from England (popularly called Black and Tans, from their uniforms), some of whom were criminals specially pardoned on condition that they would go to Ireland and do what they were told without questioning. The Irish volunteers, whose supplies had to be smuggled into Ireland in spite of the vigilance of the British Navy, and transported through it, despite the fact that the country was swarming with British soldiers, adopted guerilla tactics and carried on a magnificent fight for over a year.

Their success was due to the fearless coöperation of the peasantry and the heroism of the women and girls of Ireland. The atrocities reported from European countries during the war were now reenacted in Ireland in cold blood with the knowledge and coöperation of the British authorities. Cork City with its library was burned, as were large areas in Limerick, Granard, and Balbriggan and a hundred villages and hamlets; 1355 stores or shops; 52 coöperative creameries; 31 factories; 985 private residences; and 139 halls and clubs were among the buildings destroyed by the British without military necessity, merely as reprisals or intimidation, between January, 1920, and July, 1921. The destruction of property was surpassed by the atrocities committed on non-combatants—a massacre at Croke Park, Dublin, during a football game; of women and girls assaulted; young mothers slain; priests assassinated; prisoners tortured before execution; unprintable, unnatural tortures inflicted on the prisoners in the Irish gaols; the assassination of the Lord Mayor and ex-Lord Mayor of Limerick; the murder of Lord Mayor MacCurtain of Cork, which was followed by the remarkable sacrifices made by Lord Mayor Terence MacSwiney, who, refusing to eat while a prisoner of the British lest his doing so should be accepted as a sign that he acknowledged their right to hold him a prisoner, died in Brixton prison, England, after a fast of more than 70 days. Thousands of young Irishmen were flung into unsanitary, vermin-infected concentration camps, without being told the why or wherefore. In August, 1920, Archbishop Mannix was seized on the high seas by the British Navy and excluded from Ireland.

It had become apparent in the middle of 1921 that England could not suppress the guerilla warfare except by exterminating the whole Irish people. Foreign nations were becoming outspoken in their condemnation of her cruelty. An American commission had declared that England had substituted an organized anarchy for the orderly government of the people's choice, justly established in face of opposition. Vigorous protests were made by British generals, like Major-General Sir Herbert Gough, British women like Lady Mark Sykes and Mrs. Annan Bryce, sister-in-law of Viscount Bryce, by the Anglican hierarchy and leading nonconformist clergymen. While the Irish hierarchy has repeatedly protested against the injustice and atrocities being committed by the British Government, and condemned the excesses of some of the Republicans, they refused formally to recognize Ireland's independence or the legitimacy of the Dáil Éireann. On 12 December, 1920, Bishop Cahan decreed the censure of excommunication ipso facto on anyone who should "within the diocese of Cork organize or take part in an ambush or in kidnapping," which practically forbade the Irish to conduct their guerilla warfare in the district; and in January, 1921, Archbishop Gilmartin of Tuam declared the fight against the British to be a violation of the moral law and therefore sinful.

At last a truce was called. Lloyd George and De Valera met, but failed to agree. Meanwhile the Dáil Éireann assembled openly, and on 16 August, 1921, all its members swore allegiance to the Irish Republic in the following terms: "I . . . do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I do not and shall not yield a voluntary support to any pretended Government, Authority, or Power within Ireland hostile and inimical thereto; and I do further swear (or affirm) that to the best of my knowledge and ability I will support and defend the Irish Republic and the Government of the Irish Republic, which is the Dáil Éireann, against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; and that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, so help me God." The oath was administered in the Irish language. A new conference was arranged a little later, and Messrs. Griffith, Collins, Barton, Duggan and Gavan Duffy were authorized by the Dáil on 7 October "as envoys plenipotentiary from the elected government of the Republic of Ireland to negotiate and conclude on behalf of Ireland with the representatives of His Britannic Majesty, George V, a treaty or treaties of settlement, association, and accommodation between Ireland and the community of nations known as the British Commonwealth." This parley took place and on 6 December, 1921, a series of articles of agreement were signed by the plenipotentiaries. As the articles provided for the inclusion of the Irish within the British Empire and accepted the partitioning of the country, the delegates in affixing their signatures acted contrary to their instructions. They explained later, however, that they had done so only after Lloyd George had confronted them with the alternatives of immediate signature or immediate renewal of the Reign of Terror in an intensified form. Under the proposed agreement Ireland is to accept the position of a Free State within the British Empire, with N. E. Ulster remaining a separate state. The Irish Government is to have control of constabulary, army, education, taxes, excise, postoffice, telegraph and telephone; the British Government is to be permitted the use of certain Irish ports for navy purposes and sites for aeroplane stations; the members of the Irish Parliament are to swear allegiance to the Irish Free State as by [British] law established and fidelity to the British king; finally, the king is to be represented by a Governor appointed by the British Cabinet. A constitution is to be drawn up by the Irish Provisional Government, and if it is in conformity with the articles of agreement, and approved at an Irish general election, the British Parliament will incorporate it in a bill and enact it by law. The terms of the December agreement were accepted later by the Dáil by a small majority, in spite of the opposition by President De Valera. Meanwhile the Provisional Government is preparing to hold the election in the twenty-six counties, of which the future Irish Free State is to be composed. Just when a radical and dangerous difference of opinion regarding the election had manifested itself between the Free State and the Republic adherents Collins and De Valera reached an agreement which secured an equitable and peaceful solution.

By the acceptance of partition, which Archbishop Walsh and the hierarchy had opposed so vigorously in 1917 the Catholics in N. E. Ulster, without being consulted or given any guarantee of civil or religious liberty, have been handed over to the mercy of fanatical Orangemen, over 20,000 of whom in Belfast alone have been armed to crush Catholicism. During the Reign of Terror the convent in Lisburn had been wrecked and the nuns forced into exile in England, the parochial home was burned to the ground, and the houses of Catholics destroyed, all in one outbreak when £500,000 damage was done. Since July, 1920, over 8000 Catholic workmen in Belfast, more than 1500 of whom had fought for the Allies in the World War, have been driven from their work under threat of death, without any redress; while their wives and children have been saved from starvation only by the generosity of the Irish abroad especially in the United States. Conditions in Belfast have steadily grown worse. Under the auspices of the Orange authorities a systematic program has been carried on without government interference. Catholic houses have been burned, Catholic men, women, and children have been murdered, merely because they were Catholics; repeated attempts have been made to destroy Catholic churches; if the Catholics are found armed for defense they are liable to be flogged; they have been flung into gaol in such numbers that the N. E. Ulster government has been obliged to lease an additional gaol in Scotland to which they are to be transported. The Sisters of Mercy and of Nazareth cannot appear in the streets for fear of assassination; and the Catholic schools have been threatened with secularization. All the while in virtue of the acceptance of partition the other Irish Catholics have been rendered incapable of helping them by political measures.

Among the events of religious importance or interest in Ireland in recent years, in addition to the annual pilgrimage to Croaghpatrick are the following:

The grant of special plenary and partial indulgences and privileges to members of the Irish League of Daily Mass (16 September, 1915), and the Catholic Truth Society of Ireland (12 April, 1917). The establishment of a feast of All the Saints of Ireland on 6 November (23 February, 1916); the extension of the feast of St. Columbanus, 26 November, to all the Irish dioceses (29 January, 1916); the restoration of St. Patrick's Day as a holy day of obligation, with a dispensation from fast and abstinence (13 May, 1919). The introduction on 12 February, 1915, of the causes of canonization of 258 Irish servants of God, slain by the English, and of Fathers Fiacre Tobin and John Baptist Dowdall, Franciscans (23 July, 1919), similarly done to death in the penal days; the beatification of Oliver Plunkett, martyred Archbishop of Armagh (27 March, 1920). The approval of the Holy See given (13 June, 1917), to the project of establishing a mission house to prepare candidates for an Irish mission in China; departure of the first band of Irish priests on 27 March, 1920, for that mission, and their arrival at their headquarters, Hang Yang in Houpe, on 29 June following. The approval given by the Holy See on 9 March, 1921, of a litany of the Saints of Ireland for public use in all Irish churches. The formation of the League of St. Brigid on 10 January, 1920, to combat the attempt to popularize immodest foreign fashions in dress. The opposition offered by the Irish hierarchy to the Bill proposing to place Irish education under the control of an English board subject only to the British Parliament, which would have been most harmful from an educational, national, or religious point of view.

Among the prominent Irishmen who have died since 1914, besides those who fell in the fight for independence, may be mentioned: Archbishop Walsh (Dublin), Archbishop Healy (Tuam), Bishop O'Dwyer (Limerick), Fr. James A. Cullen, S.J., the Apostle of Temperance, Dr. Walter McDonald, theologian and philosopher, Fr. Matthew Russell, S.J., poet, Fr. Edmund Hogan, S.J., Irish historian, Canon Peter O'Leary, the leading Gaelic writer and scholar.

Ireland, JOHN, Archbishop of St. Paul, Minnesota, b. in Kilkenny, Ireland, 11 September, 1838; d. at St. Paul, 25 September, 1918. He made his ecclesiastical studies (1853-1864) at the Little and Grand Seminary of Belley, France. In 1861 he was chaplain of the 5th Minnesota Civil War regiment, during the Civil War in the United States. He was then successively Vicar Apostolic of Nebraska and Coadjutor Bishop of St. Paul, having been consecrated on 21 December, 1875. In 1884, when Archbishop Grace resigned, his coadjutor took his place as head of the diocese, but was made archbishop only in 1888. At one time there was considerable talk about his promotion to the cardinalate which President Roosevelt is said to have been very anxious to obtain for him.

Irregularity (cf. C. E., VIII-170).—No perpetual irregularity is now contracted except in the cases mentioned in the Code. The persons who are irregular by reason of defect (ex defectu) are: (a) Illegitimates, unless they have been legitimized or solemnly professed; (b) those whose bodily defects render them too feeble to minister at the altar with safety or who are too deformed to do so with due decorum; however, to exercise orders already received more serious defects may be tolerated than where there is question of receiving orders; (c) epileptics, the insane, and those who are or have been possessed; if these defects occur after ordination, the ordinary may allow his subjects to minister again if it is certain that they have been cured; (d) those who have contracted two successive marriages whether the marriages have been consummated or not; (e) those who have incurred infamy of law; (f) a judge who has imposed a death sentence—jurors, witnesses and others are no longer mentioned; (g) executioners and their voluntary and immediate assistants.

Those who become irregular by reason of a crime are: (a) Apostates from the Faith, heretics, and schismatics; (b) those who have allowed themselves to be baptized by non-Catholics except in cases of extreme necessity—nothing is now said about the unconditional reiteration of baptism; (c) those who have presumed to marry even civilly, while they were themselves bound by the marriage bond or were in sacred orders, or had religious vows even simple and temporary, as well as those who have attempted to marry a woman bound by similar vows or by the matrimonial bond; (d) those guilty of voluntary homicide or who have efficaciously procured abortion of a human foetus—formerly the expression animated foetus was used—and all their co-operators; (e) those who have mutilated themselves or others, or who have attempted suicide—the latter clause is new; (f) clerics practicing medicine or surgery when forbidden, if death results from their action—mutilation is no longer mentioned in this case; (g) whoever performs an act reserved to clerics in sacred orders if he has not received that order or who has been prohibited from exercising it, as a personal, medicinal, vindictory or local canonical punishment. These offenses do not beget irregularity unless they are external mortal sins committed publicly or secretly after baptism, except in the case of baptism by non-Catholics; mere ignorance of an irregularity based on defect or crime or of an impediment never excuses a person from incurring them. Irregularities are multiplied not by repetition of the same cause, except in case of homicide, but by different kinds of crime.

The following are prevented by impediment from receiving orders: (a) Sons of non-Catholics, as long as one of the parents at least remains in error; (b) men whose wives are living; (c) those who are still holding positions forbidden to clerics and who have to render an account of their administrations; (d) unfreed slaves—these four classes were formerly irregular; (e) those who have not yet completed their military service, when it is obligatory by civil law; (f) recent converts, until the ordinary believes them to have been sufficiently tested; (g) those who are infamous by fact, as long as the ordinary judges the infamy to continue—they were formerly irregular by reason of crime.

Ischia, DIOCESE OF (ISCLANA; cf. C. E., VIII-185a), suffragan of Naples, has for its territory the island of Ischia in the Bay of Naples. The present bishop is Pasquale Ragosta, born at Naples 30 April, 1861, elected 25 May, 1914, to succeed Rt. Rev. Mario Palladino, who was transferred to Caserta. On 29 October, 1910, Ischia underwent a disastrous eruption, the damages resulting were inspected by King Victor Emmanuel III. In October, 1914, the new bishop, Mgr. Ragosta, took possession of his diocese. His Imperial Highness Don Francesco Giuseppe di Bracanza, prisoner of war, died 15 June, 1919. From 17 August to 2 September, 1920, Cardinal de Lai was a visitor at the episcopal palace. The seminary was tendered to the Government for the use of troops, and the convent of Monte della Misericordia was turned over for use of the wounded. Assistance was also rendered widows and children of the slain, a secretariate was established for communicating with the prisoners of war, monuments were placed over the fallen, and other works of mercy were performed by the clergy and laity of the diocese.

The diocese counts about 35,000 Catholics, 15 parishes, 82 churches, 104 secular and 5 regular priests, 4 lay brothers, 12 Sisters, 2 convents for men and 3 for women, 1 seminary with 20 seminarians, 94 elementary schools with 3631 pupils, 4 asylums, 2 homes, 2 hospitals. A monthly paper, "La Cultura," is published.

Isernia and Venafro, DIOCESE OF (ISERNIENSIS AND VENAFRANSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-185b), in the province of Campobasso, in Molise (Southern Italy), suffragan of Capua. On 26 March, 1916, the present bishop, the Rt. Rev. Nicolo Rotoli, D.D., O.F.M., was elected to the see to succeed Rt. Rev. Nicolas Maria Merola, who had filled the see from 1893 until his death 24 September, 1915. During the World War the many good and patriotic works done by this diocese are testified to in the publication of the Holy See "Cor Paternum."

The present (1921) statistics of the diocese show 39 parochial schools 105 churches 1 convent for men and 5 for women 88 secular priests and 5 regular 2 lay brothers 21 sisters 1 seminary with 27 seminarians; 1 college for men with 5 professors and 80 students 1 elementary school with 2 teachers and 53 students 3 asylums, and 2 hospitals. There are two societies organized among the clergy and 22 among the laity.

Ispahan, DIOCESE OF (HISPAHANENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-192c).—Out of a total population of 8,000,000 there are 3500 Catholics of the Latin Rite and 7600 Catholic Armenians. Ispahan was erected into a Latin archepiscopal residence 1 July, 1910, and the present administrator apostolic is Rt. Rev. Aloysius Martin, O.C.D., appointed 11 February, 1922. Under the Latin Rite there are 22 Lazarist priests, 5 stations, 62 churches and chapels, 2 seminaries, 65 schools, 38 Daughters of Charity with 3 hospitals, 5 orphanages, and dispensaries. The Catholic Armenian diocese, erected in 1850, has 11 priests and 4 churches and chapels. The administrator apostolic is His Excellency Paul Terzian, Armenian Patriarch of Cilicia.

Italy (cf. C. E., VIII-208b).—The area of Italy exclusive of accessions resulting from the war is 110,632 sq. miles. By the Treaty of St. Germain (10 September, 1919) Italy acquired 7350 sq. miles. On 1 December, 1921, the total population was 38,835,184, including 1,564,691 persons in the redeemed provinces. In 1917 there were 96,649 marriages, 691,207 births, and 682,311 deaths; in 1918, 107,226 marriages, 634,389 births, 1,143,447 deaths; in 1919, 314,113 marriages, 754,685 births, and 677,040 deaths. The total number of emigrants in 1919 was 243,417, of whom 144,524 went to other European countries or those bordering on the Mediterranean, and 98,893 to countries overseas. The number of Italians who returned to Italy in 1919 was 89,081, of whom 9025 were from the United States.

EDUCATION.—The state regulates public instruction and maintains, either entirely or in conjunction with the communes and provinces, public schools of every grade. Schools are classified under four heads, according as they provide: (1) elementary instruction; (2) secondary instruction, classical; (3) secondary instruction, technical; (4) higher education. The elementary schools in 1915 enrolled 3,692,024 children between the ages of six and eleven years, employed 75,993 teachers (17,243 men and 58,750 women), and cost the nation, combining central and local expenses, approximately $18,000,000. A new type of school, scuole popolari, introduced in 1917, offers instruction of special and vocational character to those who complete the fifth and sixth elementary classes. Elementary schools of agriculture, which now number twenty-nine, were established by royal decree in 1907. The law of 1912, providing for a complete system of vocational training and the establishment of one elementary vocational school in each commune of 10,000 or more inhabitants, has not been very successful, the aggregate expense of $2,600,000 being from the first a deterrent to the execution of the law. In 1917-18 there were in Italy about 1235 government secondary schools, including 124 supplementary schools for girls, with 30,401 pupils, 164 normal schools with 35,228 pupils, 296 ginnasi with 54,274 pupils, 165 licei with 10,943 pupils, 399 technical schools, 122,980 pupils; 87 technical institutes, 25,996 pupils. The private schools in the same period numbered 646 with 27,657 pupils. The universities in 1917-18 had an enrollment of 33,798 students. Besides the universities there are also three institutions of university rank, the Institute of Higher Education in Florence, the Royal Scientific and Literary Academy in Milan, and the Higher Technical Institute of Milan. There were also six higher institutes for commercial education with 2554 students in 1917-18; three higher schools of agriculture, a naval college, a school of forestry, a school of social science, a school for Oriental languages, 3 veterinary colleges, 3 women's training colleges. In 1919 a national institute for the instruction of illiterate adults was established.

ECONOMICS.—The principal crops for 1920 and their acreage is as follows: wheat 11,362,000 acres, 76,932,000 cwts. (1 cwt.=100 lbs.); oats 1,172,500 acres, 7,032,000 cwts.; maize 3,753,250 acres, 45,366,000 cwts.; beans 1,068,000 acres, 5,190,000 cwts. Owing to the great density of population wheat has been cultivated on land which would in reality be more adapted for woods and pasture. The average annual production of wine from 1915 to 1919 was 35,628,000 hectolitres (1 hectolitre=22 gallons), and the export in 1919 was 638,911 hectolitres valued at 148,097,000 lire (1 lira=$.193). The production of olive oil in 1918 was 260,100,000 pounds. In the breeding of silk worms Italy holds the first position in Europe. Lemons constitute 52% of the production of citrus fruits. At present Italian agriculture is unable to meet the national requirements of her consumers. In Sicily and the South of Italy the movement has been for the resumption by the community of common land appropriated in the past, for the division of the large estates and large farms, and for the compulsory occupation of uncultivated land. Industrial conditions in the past two years have been disturbed by strikes, there being in 1920 a total of 1847 strikes, with a loss of a milliard of lire. The last Italian industrial census (1911) gave 243,926 industrial establishments having 2,304,438 employees and possessing 1,620,404 horsepower. In 1919 Italy produced 15% of the fuel (coal, lignite, and petroleum) consumed in the country, an increase of 11% since 1913. The co-operative movement is spreading in Italy; the principal organizations are the Confederazione Cooperativa Italiana and the Lega Nazionale delle Cooperative, representing the Catholics and Socialists respectively, and the Sindacato Nazionale and the Federazione Italiana Generale Cooperativa dei Combattenti, which represent the neutral party and which have recently formed a coalition, including more members than either of the other two bodies.

In August, 1921, the long period of social and industrial unrest, following the World War, culminated in a serious upheaval. Anticipating a lock-out, the metallurgical workers took possession of their plants, organized workmen's councils, and as far as possible continued operations. On 11 September the workmen took over 200 chemical plants and several textile mills. The next day the National Labor Convention voted for the organization of Italian industry on a Soviet basis, while those who opposed Sovietism demanded syndicalism. At first the Government declared the movement to be merely a new form of struggle between capital and labor, and one not warranting Government interference, as long as property was not damaged or lives sacrificed, but the inability of labor organizations to agree caused the Government to offer a compromise in the form of the "Controllo Act" (1921), a plan allowing employees to participate in plant management. It was, however, never put in force. The Socialists seceded from the Third International Party and the revolutionary movement in Italy, from want of coherence among the Socialists, failed to put through a revolutionary program. The lack of geographical, political, and industrial unity in Italy, too, made it impossible. The revolution, in order to succeed, would have meant not merely a dictatorship of the proletariat party, but a dictatorship of factory workers of Northern Italy, a condition of affairs which the agricultural peasants of the South and the small shopkeepers of Italy would not accept.

COMMERCE.—In 1913 the total imports of Italy were valued at 3,645,600,000 lire; the total exports at 2,511,600,000 lire; in 1919 the imports were worth 16,516,600,000 lire, the exports 5,188,600,000 lire. Between 1913 and 1919 the total value of imports increased more than four times, while exports were little more than doubled. The result was that an adverse trade balance of 1134 million lire in 1913 increased to almost exactly ten times that amount in 1919. In that year the United States supplied nearly 50% of the Italian imports and took in return only 9% of her exports.

FINANCE.—The public debt, excluding short dated treasury bills but including paper money guaranteed by the State, amounted 31 October, 1920, to 98,072,000,000 lire. On this sum the State is paying interest at the rate of over 3,500,000,000 lire per annum. The treasury bills amount to about 9,250,000,000 lire, and together with other obligations of the treasury the total debt probably exceeds 100,000,000,000 lire, or about 2500 lire per head of the population. From 1 July, 1919, to 30 June, 1920, the revenue was 8,955,000,000 lire and the expenditure 21,215,000,000 lire, showing a deficit of 12,260,000,000 lire, as against 20,835,000,000 lire in 1918-19. The principal items of expenditure were: army, 9,538,000,000; pensions and interest on floating debt, 5,207,000,000 lire; navy, 1,222,000,000 lire; labor and provisioning, 1,289,000,000 lire. The principal items of revenue were: government monopolies (principally tobacco), 2,443,000,000 lire; direct taxes, 2,267,000,000 lire; stamp duties, 1,378,000,000 lire; and consumption taxes (including customs and excise), 1,255,000,000 lire.

RAILWAYS.—On 30 June, 1919, there were 8761 miles of railway in Italy. Of these 80% are owned and operated by the State, the remaining being operated by private companies. At present the State railways are operated at a loss, the deficit being due to increase in personnel and to costs of material and supplies. The deficit in 1920 was reported to be $163,400,000. It is proposed to electrify 2750 miles.

GOVERNMENT.—Italy, a constitutional monarchy, is ruled by the king, in whom is placed all executive power, and by Parliament composed of two houses, the Senate and the Camera de' Deputati (Chamber of Deputies). The Senate is composed of the princes of the royal house and of an unlimited number of members nominated by the king for life. On 1 January, 1921, there were 368 senators and 9 members of the royal family. The new Electoral Law of December, 1920, made the suffrage universal for men and women twenty-one years of age. The Electoral Reform Act of 1919 introduced the principle of proportional representation and the scrutin de liste. In the chamber there are 508 deputies. The duration of Parliament is five years, and it must meet annually. For administrative purposes there are 69 provinces, 214 territories or circondari, 1805 districts or mandamenti, and 8346 communes. According to the law of 4 February, 1915, each commune has a communal council, a municipal council, and a syndic. The syndic is the head of the communal government and is a Government official. Each province has its provincial council and provincial commission. For judicial purposes Italy has five Courts of Cassation, and is divided into 20 appeal court districts. In 1918 there were 167 central and arrendissement prisons, 70 penal establishments, 34 reformatories, and 8 colonies, besides 1414 cantonal prisons. In Italy legal charity, in the sense of an obligation on the commune to relieve the poor, does not exist. Public charity is exercised by the permanent charitable foundations, which on 1 January, 1919, numbered 29,995 with a capital of 2,627,264,723 lire. On 12 August, 1912, a law was passed, establishing life insurance as a State monopoly. The existing insurance companies were allowed to continue their operations for ten years under certain conditions.

DEFENCE.—The strength of the Italian field army at the end of 1919 was placed at 800,000 and measures were proposed to reduce it gradually to 250,000. At the end of 1920 the permanent Italian army numbered 350,000, while the number of its total forces, including reserves, was placed at 4,163,000. In the Five Power Treaty of February, 1922, signed between Great Britain, Italy, France, Japan, and the United States, it was decided that in view of the reduced condition of the Italian navy, Italy could not be fairly asked to "scrap" her ships in the same proportion as Japan, Great Britain, and the United States, but could retain ten major ships of an aggregate tonnage of 182,800 with future replacement tonnage of 175,000.

RECENT HISTORY.—War with Turkey (1911-1912).—At the Algeiras Conference (1909) the Powers had recognized Italy's interests in Tripoli, as well as those in the Adalia regions where she had secured railway and incident concessions. Everywhere, however, she found her enterprises obstructed, her citizens persecuted, and her progress impeded by the Turkish government officials. On 26 September Italy sent an ultimatum to the Turkish Government concerning her rights in Tripoli, stating her grievances against Turkish misgovernment in Tripoli, and claiming the occupation of Tripoli. The unsatisfactory nature of Turkey's reply caused Italy to declare war on 29 September, 1911. Three torpedo boats were sunk off Previsa by the Italian fleet; Tripoli was bombarded and taken on 5 October, and Benghazi was seized later. On 5 November, 1911, Italy proclaimed the annexation of Tripoli and Cyrenaica. Desultory fighting continued, however, and the Italian fleet appeared in the Dardanelles. On 4 May Rhodes was occupied, and by the middle of June eleven of the Aegean Islands were seized. The trouble ended with the peace treaty signed at Ouchy, Switzerland, on 15 October, 1912, by the terms of which Italy's sovereignty over Libya (the Tripolitaine and Cyrenaica) was recognized, but the Aegean Islands were restored to Turkey.

The Triple Alliance.—From recent disclosures it is possible to understand the nature of Italy's connection with Austria and Germany culminating in the famous Triple Alliance. A secret treaty negotiated in 1882, when Italy was full of resentment against France for her seizure of Tunis, renewed in 1887, 1891, 1903, and 1912, bound Italy to the Central Powers in the defence of the Triple Alliance. The chief object of the alliance was protection against France on one side and Russia on another.

European War.—It was soon to be repudiated, however, for when Austria-Hungary desired to attack Serbia in 1914 and appealed to the Triple Alliance, Italy, as was disclosed later, refused her aid. She maintained her neutrality, her reason being that the causus fœderis had not risen, inasmuch as Austria and Germany had brought the situation to the point where it stood by their initiative alone. The provisions of the treaty stated that if either or both of her allies, "without provocation on their part," should be attacked by another power, Italy would be obliged to join the war against the attacking power. If either ally should be forced to declare offensive war against a Great Power which menaced its security, the other members of the Triple Alliance would either join in the war or "maintain benevolent neutrality towards their ally." At first this neutrality was construed as benevolent to Germany, but as the war progressed and after the accession as Minister of Foreign Affairs of Baron Sidney Sonnino, in whose ancestry were British and Jewish elements, the spirit of Italy's neutrality became less and less "benevolent" and the Italian Government began to accuse Austria-Hungary of violating a clause of the Triple Alliance treaty concerning the status quo in the east and to demand "compensation" for the advantages which the attack on Serbia would probably give the Dual Monarchy. As "compensation" Italy demanded not only the port of Avlona on the Albanian coast, whither an Italian expedition had been sent in December, 1914, but also direct cessions of Hapsburg territory to Italy. Negotiations went on with Austria and finally on 21 February, 1915, Italy forbade further Austrian operations in the Balkans until an agreement concerning compensations was reached. On 9 March Austria acceded in principle to Italy's threat. Then on 8 April, 1915, Italy formulated the following demands: (1) the cession of Trentino up to the boundary of 1811, the towns of Rovereto, Trent, and Bozen; (2) an extension of the eastern Italian frontier along the Isonzo River to include the strong positions of Tolmino, Gorizia, Gradisca, and Montefalcone; (3) the erection of Trieste into an autonomous state; (4) the cession of several Dalmatian islands; (5) the recognition of Austria-Hungary's disinterestedness in Albania and in the twelve Ægean Islands. Austria-Hungary absolutely refused the second, third, and fourth demands, and modified the first by reserving Bozen. Moreover, Austria was averse to making any concessions till after the war and demanded in return a strict observation of Italy's neutrality during the war. Germany at once promised to guarantee cessions of Austrian territory at the conclusion of hostilities. However, the Allies could bid higher than the Central Powers and in fact could promise Italy slices of Austria, without any injury to themselves.

On 4 May, 1915, Italy denounced her treaty of alliance with Austria-Hungary. Already on 26 April, Italy had signed a secret agreement at London by which she was to receive Trentino, all southern Tyrol to the Brenner, Trieste, Gorizia, and Gradisca, the provinces of Istria and Dalmatia, and all the Austrian islands in the Adriatic. Italy, moreover, was to annex Avlona and its neighborhood although she was not to object, if it were later decided to apportion parts of Albania to Montenegro, Serbia, and Greece. Besides, Italy was to strengthen her hold on Libya, and, in the event of an increase of French and English dominion in Africa at the expense of Germany, she was to have the right of enlarging hers. Finally Italy was to retain the twelve Greek-speaking islands in the Ægean and on the partition of Turkey to secure a share in the basin of the Mediterranean and more specifically in that part contiguous to the Turkish province of Adalia, commensurate with those of France, Great Britain, and Russia. By an additional article, "France, England, and Russia obligated themselves to support Italy in her desire for the non-admittance of the Holy See to any kind of diplomatic steps for the conclusion of peace and the regulation of questions arising from the present war." Before the final rupture, Austria, unaware of the final agreement of the Allies, made another bid. The war spirit, however, prevailed among the Italians and on 23 May, 1915, the Italian Government declared war against Austria. The resentment caused by this "betrayal" on the part of Italy was very acute in Germany and still more so in Austria.

The character of the Italian boundary, with its high mountain passes, its flowing torrents, and its precipitous snow-clad peaks required a slow and careful preparation of the army for the invasion of Austria. General Cadorna concentrated the main strength of his armies at the railheads along the southeastern portion of the Austro-Italian frontier. In a week the Isonzo was reached, but the Italians were confronted with strongly fortified heights east of the river, from Monte Nero in the north to Montefalcone and the Carso plateau on the coast. All summer the Italians struggled bravely but vainly to master these heights. Meanwhile, against the middle sector of the Austro-Italian frontier, General Cadorna sent only a comparatively thin line of troops with instructions to guard the passes and prevent an Austrian counter-invasion. The third or western, sector of the frontier was formed by the irregular triangle of Trentino, jutting southward into Italy. With the object of liberating Trentino and of forestalling an Austrian offensive from the commanding heights of this district, the Italians moved up to the valley of the Adige and the basin of Lake Garda towards Rovereto, while small parties assailed the mountain passes on both sides of the triangle. The odds in men, however, were about five to one against them and they made but meagre progress. The Austrians who had acted strictly on the defensive with their 300,000 troops, began withdrawing them from the Russian front and the Balkans, bringing up their military strength to half a million men. The main force concentrated at Rovereto which the Italians had approached but had not been able to storm. After a terrific bombardment the Austrian infantry rushed forward along the front from Rovereto to Borgo. Arsiero and Asiago fell to the Austrians and there was great rejoicing in Vienna. The Italians fell back to Monte Ciove, which they held fast. Likewise they stood unflinchingly on Monte Pasubio against odds of four to one under a nerve-shattering bombardment. The Austro-Hungarian lines at the Russian front were too thinly held and the troops from the Italian front were recalled to meet Brusilov's onslaughts in the east. Thus the Austrian offensive on Tyrol was checked. The Italians dealt a counterblow and once more Asiago, Arsiero, and Posina were occupied by Italian troops. The drive for Gorizia had begun. The heights on the western bank of the Isonzo, overlooking Gorizia, were taken the first day, as were the heights farther north. South of Gorizia, on the left bank of the Isonzo, the Italians stormed the summit of Monte San Michele, the key to the Gorizia position. In two days the heights of the Isonzo were carried and on 9 August, 1916, the Italian infantry escorted

King Victor Emmanuel into Gorizia. After the capture of Gorizia further violent fighting occurred, the Italians were unable to make any serious breaches in the new Austrian lines. From a territorial point of view the Italians won slight advantages over their enemy in the campaigning of 1916.

In May, 1917, the Italians once more took the offensive in the direction of Trieste. During the winter they had increased their military strength by the addition of numerous British guns and gunners. The Austrians fortified their formidable mountain positions still further, and withdrew a number of divisions from the Galician front. The ensuing battle, therefore, was to be of unparalleled fury. The Italian line ran southwards from Plezzo to the sea, along the left bank of the Isonzo. After three days' violent artillery preparation General Cadorna launched a general assault on 14 May along the whole front from Tolmino to the sea. On 18 May the topmost peak of Monte Vodice was in his hands, and a few days later Hudi Log and Jamiano were captured. The Austrian defenders reinforced by Hungarian troops from the eastern frontier, carried out some very creditable counter-attacks. From 24 May on the whole line from Plava to the sea swayed to and fro repeatedly and the casualties on both sides were extremely heavy. On 19 August General Cadorna again attacked along the whole of the front from Tolmino to the sea and on 24 August the Italians performed the remarkable feat of storming Monte Sante, a position of redoubtable strength. This drive, like the others, ended in a standstill, with great losses on both sides.

On 1 August, Pope Benedict XV addressed a note to all the Belligerent Powers, inviting all these Governments to come to an agreement on the points which he set forth as the fundamental basis of a permanent Peace. They included the "moral right of justice" as a substitute for "the material might of arms"; the introduction of arbitration according to an agreed standard; and the "true freedom and common enjoyment of the seas" "under the guarantee of definite rules." The note was endorsed by the clergy and the clerical press, and the Central Powers promptly availed themselves of the opportunity to attempt a "peace offensive." The Allies on the other hand felt that under the existing conditions it was less favorable to their aims. The United States defined its grounds for peace and declared the necessity of continuing the war until these were realized, in which the Allies concurred. The defensive attitude of the Austrians, assumed from the beginning of the war, was now given up. Germany's hand, began to be felt, for early in October unknown to the Italians, German and Austro-Hungarian divisions were withdrawn from the east and concentrated in the southwest, as a reserve force. The defenses, being ruptured at Caporetto and Tolmino, the whole Italian line from Plezzo to Tolmino collapsed. On 27 October the German commander, von Below, entered Cividale. This defeat involved a prolonged and disastrous retreat. The troops to the south, the Italian "Third Army" occupying the Bainsizza Plateau, Gorizia, and the Carso, were obliged to fall back. Gorizia was evacuated on 28 October. On 29 October, Udine, the seat of the Italian main headquarters was captured by the Austrians. At Latisana the rear guard of the Second Army, consisting of 60,000 men, was cut off by von Below's rapid advance and being surrounded, surrendered without further resistance. On 5 November General Boroevic's army (the large and purely Austro-Hungarian Army operating on von Below's left), forced a passage of the Tagliamento near Pinzano. The Livenza was crossed three days later. Asiago fell to the Austrians on 10 November. After retreating to the Piave River the Italians stood firm, despite the numerous Austrian attacks. The disaster of the Isonzo caused French and British troops to be hastily despatched to the assistance of Italy. Finding all efforts to cross the Piave futile, the Austro-Germans sought to outflank the new Italian lines by striking at the Asiago Plateau and the range of mountains between the upper courses of the Brenta and Piave Rivers. In December desperate assaults were made by the Austrians on the Asiago Plateau and on the upper reaches of the Brenta; Monte Asolone was captured by the Teutons, and likewise the lower summit of Monte Tomba. The Italian outlook now brightened, for on 30 December Monte Tomba was recovered, and in January the Teutons evacuated Monte Asolone and the bridgehead on the Piave at Zenson.

The final Austrian drive in 1918 was a flat failure. This time the Italians were prepared. The advance of the Austrians over two areas, in the plains between the Montello and San Dona di Piave, and in the hills between Monte Grappa and Canove, was checked at the outset. The more successful General Boroevic, crossing the Piave, seized the eastern end of the Montello, but was stopped by the arrival of Diaz's reinforcements and the flooding of the Piave. A counter-offensive by General Diaz resulted in the retreat of Boroevic's forces to their old positions, and also secured ground which had been lost in 1917, especially the delta at the mouth of the Piave. The Austrian army was decomposing, and when on 24-25 October the Italian armies smote the Austrians in the Monte Grappa region, between the Brenta and Piave Rivers, they were incapable of making an effective defense. A British unit under Lord Cavan attacked along the Lower Piave and a French unit took Monte Seisimol on the Asiago Plateau. By 30 October the Italians had captured Monte Grappa, and were driving the Austrians along the whole front from the Alps to the Adriatic. With the fall of Monte Grappa, the enemy army in the mountains was cut off from those in the plains. On 1 November the Austrians were in utter rout. Trent and Trieste fell to the Italians and Udine was entered. Durazzo, an important Austro-Hungarian naval base, had been entered on 15 October. The morale of the Austrians had vanished and on 31 October they sued for peace. On 3 November, an armistice was signed and hostilities ceased. The terms included the complete demobilization of the Austro-Hungarian armies, the evacuation of all territory occupied by the Austrian armies and of all territory in dispute; the withdrawal of all German troops from the Austrian, Balkan, and Italian fronts, the surrender of a number of Austrian ships, the liberation of all captured merchant ships, the allied occupation of Poland and the control of the Danube.

Peace Negotiations.—When the war ended, confusion rose as to Italy's territorial aims, regarding which there had never been any agreement. The demands of the extremists and imperialists of not only the Trentino and Trieste, but also Fiume and the entire Dalmatian coast, brought the Italians into a position of sharp antagonism towards the Servians, and later towards the new Yugoslav state (see FRUMS). In 1920 the question was settled by negotiations at Santa Margherita Ligure, which gave the whole of Istria to Italy as well as the islands of Cherso, Lussin, and Unie. Fiume was to be independent, but was brought into territorial contiguity with Italy. Zara was to have an autonomous government, but was to be under Italian suzerainty. The island of Lagosta was also given to Italy. On the other hand the Jugoslavs obtained Northern Dalmatia. The new agreement between Italy and Yugoslavia was embodied in the Treaty of Rapallo, signed on 12 November, 1920. This agreement was vigorously denounced by Gabriele d'Annunzio, who had seized Fiume and declared it an independent state. War was thereupon declared on Italy, and Fiume bombarded.

In the negotiations following the Treaty of Versailles concerning German reparations, Italy was awarded 10% of any reparations Germany could give. The difficulties between Greece and Italy following their convention of 1919, were settled by a convention appointed in 1920 to delimit the Adalman frontier (see GREECE). In a protocol signed between Albania and Italy on 2 August, 1920, at Tirana, Albania, Italy agreed to recognize the independence of Albania and to surrender Avlona, withdrawing her troops as soon as public order permitted. Italy was to retain and fortify the island of Saseno at the entrance to the Bay of Avlona and also Punta Linguetta on the mainland. In November, 1920, were published the terms of the Italo-Franco-British agreement for maintaining respective spheres of influence in Asiatic Turkey, a pact which was secretly signed at Sèvres on 10 August, the date of the Turkish treaty. It defined the areas of special interest to France and Italy, recognized as supreme the Italian interests westward of the French sphere between Cilicia and the coast facing Rhodes, also the right of Italy to exploit the Heraclea coal basin. On 12 March, 1921, Italy concluded a secret pact with the Turkish Nationalists, pledging herself to support the Turkish demands for the restitution of Thrace and Smyrna. In return for this and the withdrawal of all Italian troops from Ottoman territory, Italy was guaranteed certain economic concessions and monopolies, including the right of priority in the coal basin of Heraclea.

In June, 1920, Pope Benedict XV issued an encyclical rescinding the veto on official visits of Catholic sovereigns to the King of Italy in Rome.

THE CHURCH.—In no European country is the social organization of Catholics going forward in more comprehensive fashion than in Italy. Its methods are both interesting and businesslike; the entire field is divided into three distinct sections: first, the Catholic Movement strictly so-called; second, the Economic Social Action, and third, the Political Action. The first, Movimento Catholicò is made up of the following organizations: the Popular Union among Catholics of Italy; the Society of the Catholic Youth of Italy; the Union of Catholic Women of Italy. The first of these was instituted by Pius X in June, 1905, by the Encyclical "Il Fermo Proposito," and is the mother organization of the Catholic movement in Italy, on which all other associations depend. It has committees in all the dioceses composed of parochial societies, the diocesan committees depending upon the Central Direction Committee of the Catholic Movement, which has its seat in Rome and whose President is nominated by the Holy See. This central Directive Committee functions by means of three secretariates, the Secretariate for Propaganda, the Secretariate of Culture (or formation of the social conscience), the Secretariate for Liberty of Schools, each thoroughly equipped for work in its special field. The Society of the Catholic Youth of Italy is an organization for the moral and intellectual formation of Italian youths to habituate them to profess their faith openly, and to educate them for its defense. The parochial and diocesan clubs and associations are also under a president general in Rome. In 1921 these clubs numbered 2300, with a membership of 70,000. The Union of Catholic Women of Italy is the third great organization and has for its purpose the education of the Catholic woman of Italy for the full observance of her duties, religious, civil, and social. The Economic Social Action comprises the Movimento Sindacale Cristiano and the Movimento Cooperativo Cristiano, the first the Italian Confederation of Workmen, with a membership of 1,500,000; the second the largest and most important of Italian Catholic organizations, conducted on a vast scale, embracing all industries, and comprising about 7000 societies scattered all over Italy.

Since the encyclical "Non Expedit" of Pius IX, Catholics in Italy were debarred from candidacy for the Chamber of Deputies and from voting at political elections. Pius X gave permission to Catholics in specific cases to participate in political life and in time there came to be about thirty Catholic deputies in the Chamber, constituting, however, neither a party nor a group. A change came in 1919 with the formation of the Popular Party, which, though not a Catholic party in that its object is not pre-eminently religious and its members not necessarily Catholics, is inspired by Christian principles and is in intent directly social and political. It is not dependent on ecclesiastical authority and receives as members any citizens who accept its program. The "Rerum Novarum" of Leo XIII is its leading text-book. It was formed under the leadership of Don Luigi Sturzo, a Sicilian priest, formerly vice-president of the Association of Italian Communes, who became convinced that with the end of the war the time had come to line up for defense and reconstruction of society the great forces of the Catholic organizations that had developed. With personal disinterestedness and firm discipline he has guided it through the inevitable first vicissitudes until it has become in Italy what the German Center Party was in Bismarck's day, the arbiter of the situation. As the Socialist party refused to collaborate with any other party, no side could govern without the Popular party. In electoral tactics it decided on a policy of intransigency and in political elections of 1921 obtained 1,345,305 votes and elected one hundred and seven of its candidates. It was recently responsible for the downfall of the Giolitti ministry. Its members hold (1922) three of the most important portfolios, Grace and Justice, Public Works and Agriculture. With the Hon. Anile as Under-Secretary of Public Instruction, it has penetrated what was formerly the stronghold of Masonry. The present Minister of Public Instruction is a Moderate and a man of practical religious faith. Other under-secretaries from the Popular Party are in the Ministries of Labor, of War, of Liberated Territories and the Treasury. Its success has meant the loss of prestige for both Socialists and Liberals. To its strength as well as to the example of France is due the attitude which the Italian press as a whole has adopted in favor of a permanent reconciliation between the Holy See and Italy.

Ivory Coast, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (LITTORIS Eburnæ; cf. C. E., XVI-84a), comprises a French colony in Equatorial Africa. This vicariate is under the care of the Society of African Missions of Lyons, and the present and first vicar apostolic is the Rt. Rev. Jules Joseph Maury, appointed titular Bishop of Ariassus 17 November, 1911. This territory was first erected into a prefecture apostolic in 1895, but by a Decree of 17 November, 1911, it was raised to a vicariate. In 1921 the Catholic population consisted of 9100 Catholics, who belong to twenty different tribes, and 8083 catechumens. The vicariate contains 11 quasi-parishes, 10 churches, 84 chapels, 1 convent with 6 Sisters, 18 secular priests, 1 home for the aged, 3 dispensaries, 1 orphanage for girls, which is supported by the Government. The hospitals admit the ministry of priests.

Ivrea, Diocese of (cf. C. E., VIII-258b), suffragan of Turin in Northern Italy. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Matteo Angelo Filipello, born in Castelnova d'Asti, diocese of Turin, 12 April, 1859, elected 24 March, 1898, to succeed Mgr. Richelmy, who was promoted to the Archdiocese of Turin and later created cardinal. Mgr. Francesco Gnani of Calusa, founder of the Catholic economic social institute in Piedmont, died 31 January, 1918. Mgr. Giovanni Clerico, archdeacon of the Cathedral of Ivrea, professor of morals, litterateur, historian, and hagiographer, died 17 March, 1919.

From 8-10 October, 1910, a solemn festival was held at Ivrea, with the inauguration of the cathedral, newly decorated and restored, enriched with a new baptismal font and chapel dedicated to Our Lady of Lourdes; with the celebration of the ninth centenary of Blessed Warmundo attended by Cardinal Richelmy, the Archbishop of Vercelli, and the Bishops of Aosta and Casale; and with the opening of an oratory for the monks of St. Joseph. On 3 September, 1911, a diocesan Eucharistic Congress (the first in Italy) was held at Caluso, and after that, except in time of war, the congress was held each year. The Marian Congress met at Strambino 2 October, 1921. A monastery for women (Bethania of Sacred Heart of Jesus) was founded at Vische Canavese 19 March, 1914. The fourth centenary of the coronation of the Madonna of the Holy Rosary in Strambino was celebrated in the presence of Cardinal Richelmy and the bishops of Ivrea, Aosta, and Biella. In 1919 a Catholic Union was started in the diocese with a school of propaganda attached; also a Casa del Popolo was organized.

In every parish during the war the pastor formed a committee for aiding soldiers, their families and prisoners. One hundred priests were called to the colors, 23 serving as chaplains and 77 enlisting as soldiers, 4 were killed, 14 were decorated; 36 out of 52 seminarians served in the army and 5 were killed. During the last few months of the war a committee of clergy published a paper, "Il Fraternitas," which was intended especially for priests and clerics in the army.

The diocese contains 138 parishes, 516 succursal churches, chapels and oratories, 2 monasteries for women, 3 convents for men and 3 for women, 177 secular and 31 regular priests, 14 lay brothers, 35 nuns and 257 Sisters, 4 seminaries with 153 seminarians, 1 international theological university with 80 students, 1 college for men with 84 students, 4 for women with 320 students, 1 normal school for women with 180 students, 2 professional schools with 120 students, 2 elementary schools with 312 pupils, 4 missions, 3 refuges, infant asylums in every parish, 6 hospitals, 2 case per bambini, 5 associations among the clergy and 7 among laity, 2 Catholic papers. The normal school is supported by the Government.

Jaca (or XACA), DIOCESE OF (JACCENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-260a), in the province of Huesca, Spain, suffragan of Saragossa. Rt. Rev. Emmanuel de Castro y Alonso, appointed to this see 28 October, 1913, was transferred to Segovia, 9 July, 1920. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Francisco Frutos y Valiente, canon and chaplain major of the king at the cathedral of Toledo, appointed 21 September, 1920. The diocese embraces a territory of about 1081 sq. miles and by 1920 statistics comprises a Catholic population of 71,659, 8 archpresbyteries, 251 parishes, 100 filial parishes, 1206 priests, 137 chapels and 9 convents with 82 nuns and 60 Sisters.

Jaén, DIOCESE OF (GIENNENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-267b), in the province of Andalusia, Spain, suffragan of Granada. Rt. Rev. John Emmanuel Sans y Saravia, appointed to this see 29 April, 1909, died 22 June, 1919, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Emmanuel Basulto y Jiménez, born in Adanero, Spain, 1867, studied at the Seminary of Avila, served as vice-rector and canon of León, canon of the Cathedral of Madrid in 1905, appointed Bishop of Lugo, 4 September, 1909, transferred 18 December, 1919. This diocese embraces a territory of some 873 sq. miles and a Catholic population of 437,783, with only 190 Protestants. By 1920 statistics it comprises 12 archpresbyteries, 159 parishes, 8 filial parishes, 475 priests, 16 chapels, and 33 convents with 67 religious and 659 Sisters.

Jaffna, DIOCESE OF (JAFNENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII, 269a), in the northern part of the Island of Ceylon, suffragan of Colombo. In 1919, on 7 February, the bishop of this diocese, Rt. Rev. Henri Joulain, O.M.I., who was appointed to the see 20 July, 1893, died, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Jules André Brault, O.M.I., who was consecrated 15 February, 1920. The diocese comprises a Catholic population of 51,750 Tamils, and by latest statistics there are: 26 missions, 236 stations, 2 convents for men and 3 for women, 5 secular and 48 regular clergy, 3 Brothers of the Oblates of Mary Immaculate, 36 Brothers of St. Joseph, 14 European and 66 native Sisters, 1 seminary with 21 seminarians, 1 college for boys with 36 professors and 700 students, 1 college for girls with 12 teachers and 360 students, 7 high schools with 43 teachers and an attendance of 852 boys, 10 training schools with 9 teachers and 33 pupils, 126 elementary schools with 338 teachers and 8400 pupils, 3 industrial schools with 10 teachers and 122 pupils. There are 4 Government hospitals in which the priests are permitted to minister and all the schools are aided by the Government. A Catholic club is organized among the laity and two periodicals, "The Jaffna Catholic Guardian" and the "Lattica Veda Padu Kavalan" are published.

Jamaica, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (JAMAICÆ; cf. C. E., VIII-270d), an island of the West Indies, and British colony. The vicariate is entrusted to the Jesuits, and has its official residence at Kingston, Winchester Park. It was administered by Rt. Rev. John Collins, S.J., titular Bishop of Antipheles, from 9 March, 1906, when he was appointed vicar apostolic until he retired in 1919. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Wm. F. O'Hare, S.J., born in South Boston, U. S. A., 1870, ordained in 1903, named superior of the Jamaica mission in 1915, and appointed titular Bishop of Maximianopolis, 2 September, 1919, and vicar apostolic 18 September following. On 5 February, 1912, the new cathedral, built to replace the old one, which had been destroyed by an earthquake in 1907, was dedicated, and is considered the finest cathedral in the West Indies. Five years later St. Joseph's Sanatorium was opened. During the World War none of the clergy from the island went abroad, but a number served as chaplains for the military stations and internment camp at home. About 500 of the faithful saw service abroad and many won distinctions for their bravery.

During recent years the mission has lost three able clergymen by the deaths of Rev. John Harper, S.J., superior of the mission and distinguished for the establishment of many sodalities and church organizations; Rev. Maurice E. Prendergast, S.J., a victim of zeal and charity during the influenza epidemic; Rev. John A. Pfister, S.J., director of public pageants and musical activities, and noted for his zeal among the poor. The vicariate counts about 40,000 native Catholics (colored), and about 200 of other nationalities. Latest statistics credit it with 34 churches, 10 missions, 67 stations, 19 Jesuit Fathers, 2 Jesuit Brothers, 47 Sisters of Mercy, 11 Dominicans and 36 Franciscans, 1 high school with 8 teachers and 214 pupils, 2 academies with 13 teachers and 21 boys and 299 girls, 1 normal school with 2 teachers and 12 pupils, 1 training school with 2 teachers and 70 girl students, 33 elementary schools with 91 teachers and about 6000 boys and girls, and 2 industrial schools with 10 teachers and 425 boys and girls. The various charitable institutions include 1 home for girls in charge of Sisters of Mercy, 1 sanatorium under the Dominican Sisters, and 1 refuge for girls in charge of the Sisters of Mercy. The public prison, almshouses, hospitals, insane asylums, and military stations permit the priests to minister in them, and the two industrial schools and thirty-one of the elementary schools are aided by the Government. The St. Vincent de Paul Society, a Catholic club, and the Knights of St. John are organized, and a periodical, "Catholic Opinion," is published.

Japan (cf. C. E., VIII-297a), consists of six large islands, Honshiu or Hondo, Kiusiu, Shikoku, Hokkaido (Yezo), Taiwan or Formosa, the southern part of Karafuto, Corea (Chōsen), and about six hundred small islands. The total area amounts to 260,738 sq. miles. According to the census of 1920 the population of Japan is 77,005,570, apportioned as follows: Japan, 55,961,100; Corea, 17,284,207; Formosa, 3,654,398. For the first time in 1920 Japan's census-taking was carried out according to the Occidental method, the renewal to be made every ten years. More than 10 per cent of the population live in towns containing 100,000 or over. The density is about 392 to the sq. mile, except in Hokkaido, where it is 65 to the sq. mile. The number of Japanese resident abroad in 1918 was 447,706; in China 159,677; in the United States 108,216; in Hawaii and the Philippines 109,452; in Europe 1243. The number of foreigners resident in Japan was 20,793; Chinese 13,793; English 2388; Americans 1770; Germans 650; French 455; Russians 468; Portuguese 222; Dutch 108.

ECONOMIC STATUS.—About three-fifths of the arable land is cultivated by peasant proprietors and the remaining portion of it by tenants. The forest area in 1918 was about 46,000,000 acres, one-eighth of which belonged to the Imperial Household. The chief crops with their acreage (in 1917) were: rice, 7,761,527 acres; wheat, 1,371,267 acres; barley, 1,335,697 acres; rye, 1,615,906 acres; tobacco, 61,097 acres; tea, 122,107 acres. The mineral production for the year was valued at 710,520,488 yen (1 yen=$0.4985 normal exchange); the number of mine workers was 464,724. The industrial census on 31 December, 1918, revealed 22,391 factories with 1,409,196 employees. The principal manufactures in the same year were: woven goods valued at 1,189,275,699 yen; Japanese paper, 53,932,699 yen; matches, 39,272,285 yen. In 1920 the majority of the exports went to China, Great Britain, and the United States.

COMMUNICATION.—The railway mileage of Japan in 1919 was 8014, including 1941 miles of railways owned by private companies. The decision of the government to make the standard gauge 4.85 feet will cost the government about 1,408,000,000 yen before it is completed in 1943. Japan has also the right to build five railway lines in Manchuria and Mongolia. A railway tunnel under the Moji-Shimonoseki Straits was commenced in 1920 and will be completed in about eight years. Its length is seven miles, one mile of which will be completely under the sea. There are 1659 miles of electric tramway in Japan.

GOVERNMENT.—The present emperor is Yoshihito, who was born 31 August, 1879, and succeeded his father, Mutsuhito, 30 July, 1912. Hiro-Hito, his son, b. 26 April, 1901, was proclaimed heir apparent 9 September, 1912. The law of December, 1910, divides the emperor's lands into hereditary and personal property, and provides that for all the judicial proceedings affecting the property, the Minister of the Imperial Household is responsible. The ordinary civil or commercial law can be applicable to the property only when it does not conflict with the Imperial House Law and the present law. No hereditary landed estate can be newly used for purposes other than those of public utility or undertakings sanctioned by the emperor. The court owns about 5,425,000 acres of dwelling land, forests, and plains, shares of different banks and industrial enterprises, also 20,000,000 yen transferred out of the Chinese Indemnity Fund, 20,000,000 yen in war bonds subscribed by the court in 1905. The civil list was increased in 1910 to 4,500,000 yen. All these properties are estimated at 500 million yen. The Minister of the Imperial Household is assisted by 24 councillors; the chief of these are the chamberlain, the keeper of the seal, the empress's steward, the master of rituals, the director of the Peer's School, and the director of the treasury bureau. The emperor shares the legislative power with two political bodies, the Chamber of Peers and the House of Representatives. In 1918 the Chamber of Peers was composed as follows: members of the imperial family, 14; princes, 13; marquises, 37; counts, 20; viscounts, 73; barons, 72; appointed for life by the emperor, 124; chosen amongst the citizens paying the largest taxes, 46; total, 399.

According to new Election Law, passed in the 1918-19 diet and put into force in the general election (1921), the House is composed of members elected by male Japanese subjects of not less than twenty-five years of age and paying a direct tax of not less than 3 yen as against the previous limit of 10. The incorporated cities containing not less than 30,000 inhabitants form independent electoral districts and are entitled to return one member, while cities containing more than 100,000 inhabitants elect one member for every 130,000 people. The rural districts are to send one member for every 130,000 inhabitants approximately. Each prefecture was formerly regarded as one electoral district, but in the new law the one member for one constituency system has been adopted. Election is carried on by secret ballot, one vote for one man, and a general election takes place every four years. Every Japanese subject over thirty years of age is eligible, except the mentally unfit or those who have been deprived of civil rights. The membership of the House is increased thereby.

At present the members are divided into four parties: (1) the Government party (Seiyukwai); (2) Kansei-kai, formed in 1916, formerly of seceders from the Nationalist party and members of the Central Club (dissolved); (3) Kokumintō (Nationalists), organized in 1910 by members identified with Progressives, historically the remnants of the Progressive party of 1882; (4) Independents. The most noteworthy features of Japanese politics are the absence of Conservative, Labor, and Socialistic elements as organized power. The new election law increases the number of members from 381 to 464. Number of members in the different parties: Seiyukwai, 182; Kansei-kai, 122; Kokumintō, 36; Independents, 61.

EDUCATION.—Education in Japan is compulsory and non-religious. There were (1917) 325 secondary schools for boys with 6702 teachers and 147,467 pupils, 247 private schools. There were 378 secondary schools for girls with 4758 instructors and 101,965 pupils; 295 were public and 83 private schools. The number of public primary schools was 25,445 with 165,190 teachers and 7,621,951 pupils. The average number of children receiving instruction was 98.61. There were 164 private primary schools and 635 infant schools. The government plans to devote 44,000,000 yen to extend higher education, this sum to be a continuing expenditure extending over 6 years from 1919-20 to 1924-25. Of the total 39,500,000 yen were spent on the training of teachers, especially abroad. The emperor has contributed 10,000,000 yen toward the necessary funds; balance is to be met by public bonds or loans. There are eight higher schools which prepare for the university and are located at Tokio, Sendai, Kyoto, Kanazawa, Okayama, Kumamoto, Nagoya, and Kagoshima. The imperial universities are located at Tokyo, Kyoto, Sendai (Tohoku), Fukuoka (Kyushu University), and Hokkaido (formerly the Agricultural Department of Tohoku University). The eighteen technical schools comprise institutions that give necessary instruction to those desiring to pursue practical business such as industry, agriculture, trade, etc. The special schools include the five schools of medicine, Tokio School of Foreign Languages, Fine Art Academy, Academy of Music. For the blind, deaf, and dumb there are 71 schools.

Educational Work in Formosa.—The administration of the schools in the island of Formosa by the Japanese Department of Education has constituted throughout a remarkable record of progress in the face of serious obstacles. Formosa passed to Japan by cession from China in 1895 and immediately racial and religious problems asserted themselves, taking shape in uprisings and forays on the part of rebellious natives. After two months of military activities the condition of the island was sufficiently settled to allow the initiation of a system of education. The provisional office of the department was opened in the city of Taihoku and schools established in temples, generally the only structures left intact. Recognizing as the immediate task the teaching of the Japanese language to native children, the department called for Japanese teachers, who received intensive training in the Formosan language. With the pacification of the island the growth of the elementary schools was so rapid that the government could not wait for the first graduates of the newly established normal schools and seven times the policy of training Japanese volunteers was repeated. By logical steps the administration of educational affairs came finally, in 1911, under the control of the educational department of the imperial Government, which is its present status.

For compelling reasons of race diversities the practical educational work in Formosa is grouped under three headings, named in order of their establishment by the Japanese authorities: (1) Work for the natives of Chinese descent; (2) work for the aborigines, and (3) work for Japanese children. In the schools for natives of Chinese descent, the six compulsory years are identical with those of the imperial schools. Industrial education is provided for. Only four years' attendance is required in the schools for aborigines, the subjects taught being only morals, Japanese, and arithmetic. The education of Japanese children whose parents are residents of Formosa is conducted substantially along the same lines as prevail in imperial Japan proper. Encouragement is offered to promising pupils to proceed to the imperial schools and an increasing number of native Formosan students complete their education in Japan every year.

RECENT HISTORY.—In 1908 Japan negotiated an arbitration treaty with the United States and exchanged notes with the same power regarding the preservation of the territorial integrity of China. The United States proposed the neutralization of the Manchurian railways in 1919, but was refused, Japan and Russia agreeing to maintain the status quo in Manchuria and in case of its being menaced to take in concert what steps were necessary. The treaty of alliance with Great Britain in 1911 provided that nothing in the new agreement should entail upon the other contracting party the obligation to go to war with a power with whom a treaty of arbitration was in force, thus making it impossible for Great Britain to be drawn into a war with the United States and Japan. By a treaty concluded between Japan and Korea, 23 August, 1910, the Korean territory was formally annexed to Japan. Under its new appellation, Chosen, it was placed under a Japanese governor-general.

Japan entered the European War at an early date. On 15 August she demanded the withdrawal of all German warships from Chinese and Japanese waters and the surrender of Kiao-chou "with a view to its eventual restoration to China." Upon Germany's refusal Japan declared war on 28 August, 1914, giving as one of its reasons its alliance with Great Britain with the object of maintaining general peace in Eastern Asia and freeing allied vessels for activity in foreign waters. The Japanese navy established a blockade of Kiao-chou, and 10,000 Japanese troops were landed on the Shantung peninsula outside the German leased territory, thus violating China's neutrality. A small British Indian force co-operated with the Japanese landing party under the command of General Kamio. After a short siege Tsing-tao surrendered on 7 November, 1914. The casualties were light; only 248 were killed and 1062 were wounded. In the meantime the Japanese naval forces aided the British in the conquest of Germany's island possessions in the Pacific and performed special service against the hostile submarines in the Mediterranean.

In 1915 China consented to all the arrangements that might be made in the Treaty of Peace between Germany and Japan as to the disposal of the rights of the former, and promised that no other power could establish a naval base on the coast of Fu-kien. Japan then promised the return of Kiao-chou subject to the establishment of a Japanese concession. The United States refused to countenance any such action impairing the integrity of China, although it recognized that by territorial proximity, Japan had special interests in China. At the peace conference it was revealed that Great Britain had made a secret pact with Japan, promising her all the German concessions in China upon her entry into the war. The agreement was incorporated into the Peace Treaty which the two countries refused to sign. The same treaty gave Japan the mandates of Germany's former possessions in the Pacific, the Marshall Islands, the Caroline Islands, and the Mariana Islands. In 1917 Macao was purchased from Portugal.

The virtual anarchy in Siberia under the Bolshevik régime, the release of 300,000 German prisoners in Russia, and the dire straits of the Czechoslovak army led to the intervention of Japan in Siberia. In 1918 the United States, Great Britain, and Japan sent 7000 troops there, Japan immediately adding 93,000 in order to fulfill the terms of the Sino-Japanese military agreement. Kharavosk was captured, Biagiovestchensk was entered, and Rufolur was taken. After the withdrawal of the allied forces the Japanese remained, for the country was still chaotic. The massacre of 700 Japanese at Nikolaevsk in March, 1920, led to the annexation of northern Sakhalin despite the protest of the powers.

The difficulties created between Japan and America in 1913 by the introduction of the Webb Bill into the California Legislature were repeated in 1920, when the people of California refused to sanction the ownership or lease of any property by Japanese or American-born minors under their parents' guardianships. In the Shantung treaty signed in Washington, D. C., on 4 February, 1922, during the Disarmament Conference, China is to receive back from Japan the German property, concessions, railways, and all rights in Shantung; China is to pay Japan 53,406,141 gold marks as assessed value of the property plus the improvements; Japanese troops are to be withdrawn as soon as Chinese troops are sent. In the same conference Japan assented to a reduction in naval disarmament to ten capital ships. The agreement between Great Britain and Japan, entered into on 13 July, 1911, was terminated. The budget for 1921-22 was approximately $778,000,000 (1,562,000,000 yen), $369,000,000 for armament: army $122,500,000, navy $247,000,000, including $72,000,000 for new construction.

CHURCH IN JAPAN.—The religious liberty incorporated by the Emperor Meijo Tenno in the Constitution he gave his people was not of such benefit to Catholics as had been hoped. The question of religion occupied the attention of the intellectual classes in the Empire, and in 1912, at the invitation of the Minister of the Interior, Baron Hara, a conference was held, attended by the representatives of all religious bishops. The result seemed to be public recognition of the right of religion in education. It was a question of religion in general, however, and when practiced details were considered it was found to apply only to Shintoism, grown more powerful since the Japanese victory over Russia, attributed by the heads of the army to the protection of the Jingo or deceased emperors and heroes of the tutelary gods of the nation. In May, 1918, at the general reunion of Shintoist dignitaries, the study of Shintoism was made obligatory in secondary and higher education as it already was in the primary schools. Religion thus became a matter of patriotism, and in its name pressure was brought to bear on the pupils of schools which did not take part in the official festivals of Japan. The Christians refused to do so in virtue of their faith, which forbids participation in superstitious ceremonies, and the pagans, in the name of the religious liberty guaranteed by the constitution. Newspapers and periodicals took the stand that one could be at the same time a Christian and a loyal citizen of Japan. A Japanese Catholic, Captain Yamagata, was sent to Rome by the Government to explain the full import of Juiga worship, and a delegate apostolic, Mgr. Petrelli, was sent to Japan to study this important question. The results of both missions are not yet available, but the pressure formerly exercised on non-Shintoists has been noticeably weakened. Another division exists amongst the intellectuals, for some of whom Shintoism is in decadence, Buddhism stagnant, Christianity without strength, and who seek in eclecticism to rebuild a spiritual edifice in Japan. This thinking element has no antagonism towards the Church, and does not refuse to at least examine her doctrines. The same conditions prevail in Corea (Chosen), where the strict enforcement of the school laws raises obstacles to Catholicism hitherto unknown. The principal marks of the present religious situation then are on the one hand a greater esteem for the Church and on the other a war against her in the name of patriotism and of badly defined ideas of religion.

The Apostolic Delegation of Japan with Corea, Fomosa, the Caroline, Mariana, Marshall Islands was erected 26 November, 1919. Mgr. Fumasoni Biondi, titular Archbishop of Dioclea, formerly Apostolic delegate to the Indies, was the first head of the Japanese delegation. He was recalled to Rome in 1921 and named secretary of the Propaganda 16 June, consultant of the Holy Office 25 June, and a month later consultant of Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs. He was succeeded in Japan by Mgr. Giardini, Barnabite, b. in Milan, 1877, entered the novitiate in 1893, elevated to the episcopate in 1915, as titular Archbishop of Edessa.

JARO, DIOCESE OF (JARENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-323d), in the Philippine Islands, is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Manila. Until 1910 it included the present diocese of Zamboanga, which was erected on 10 April of that year. The islands of Panay and Negros, together with the Romblon group, are comprised within the limits of the Diocese of Jaro, and there are scattered throughout some Aglipayan Schismatics, and on the mountains the semi-civilized Negritos. The Catholic population is about 1,000,000. The first American bishop, Rt. Rev. Frederick Zadok Hooker, d. 18 September, 1907, and was succeeded in 1908 by the present Cardinal Dougherty of Philadelphia, who was bishop of this see until his transfer to the Diocese of Buffalo in 1915, when he was succeeded by Bishop Foley, d. 12 August, 1919. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. James P. McClosky, b. in Philadelphia, 1870, ordained 1898, prelate of the Holy See 1913, appointed Bishop of Zamboanga, consecrated 1 May, 1917, was transferred to Jaro, 8 March, 1920.

By present (1921) statistics there are 115 parishes, 12 missions, 150 churches, 1 monastery for men, 95 secular clergy, 70 of whom are native, and 25

Mill Hill missionaries, 40 regular clergy (Augustinians and Recollects), 2 lay brothers, 75 Sisters, 1 seminary, and 65 seminarians. The educational institutions include 1 college for men in connection with the seminary, which is in charge of the Lazarists with several hundred students, 1 college for men under the Augustinians, also with several hundred students, 5 academies for young ladies with 60 teachers and 1000 students, 35 elementary schools with 175 teachers and 3000 pupils. There is 1 asylum with 125 girls and 1 hospital; the Knights of Columbus are organized and a Catholic periodical, "Cabuhisang Banua," is published.

Jassy, DIOCESE OF (JASSIENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-325b), in Rumania. In 1921 by apostolic decree the province of Bessarabia in Moldavia was separated from the diocese of Tiraspol and incorporated in the diocese of Jassy. After the death (1915) of the former Bishop Joseph Camilli the episcopal seat remained vacant until 15 August, 1920, when Alexander Th. Cisar was consecrated Bishop of Jassy in the Cathedral at Bucarest by Archbishop Netzhhammer, O.S.B. Among the recent events of importance within the diocese are: the reopening of the theological seminary at Jassy; the publication of a new diocesan catechism, prayer book, and of the periodical "Catholic Sentinel"; the institution of the Sodality for the Protection of Young Girls, and of the Association of Christian Mothers. Of special note are the following clergy recently deceased: Daniel Pietrobono (d. 1915), for forty years stationed in Galatz, provincial of the Conventuals in Moldavia, Vicar General of Jassy, built the parish house and wholly restored the church, afforded every assistance to the Sisters of Notre Dame of Sion in founding a flourishing community in Galatz. Nicholas Joseph Camilli (d. 1915), Bishop of Jassy for twenty-five years, founded the theological seminary and the schola cantorum, edited both a large and small diocesan catechism and the diocesan Acts; Joseph Malinowski (d. 1917), Vicar General and Apostolic Administrator of Jassy, edited many books and in particular a practical prayer book and a hymn book; Gratiano Carpati (d. 1919), a zealous missionary and founder of the parochial library, of the periodical "Viata," and of the Society of Honorable Youth.

During the war the Catholic soldiery merited the special commendation of their superiors and of King Ferdinand I. Ulderico Cipolloni, O.M.C., who was at that time Apostolic Administrator of the diocese, besides giving every assistance to the priests in the army, and providing for the care of the prisoners, and the sick and wounded, built a refuge for the orphaned and founded two such asylums, and erected a monument to the dead Catholic soldiers.

The diocese numbers 100,000 Catholics in Moldavia and Bessarabia, of whom 85 per cent are Hungarians, 10 per cent Poles, 4 per cent Germans or Austrians, and 1 per cent Italians. There are 24 secular and 26 regular priests; 5 deaneries and 33 parishes with 217 affiliated stations, and 148 churches and 10 chapels; 4 convents for men and 4 for women with 136 Sisters of Notre Dame of Sion and 40 Franciscan Nuns; 1 theological seminary at Jassy and 2 preparatory seminaries at Jassy and Halauceti with 49 students; several day schools for boys and girls; 2 boarding schools for girls at Jassy and Galatz directed by the Sisters of Notre Dame of Sion with 1086 students; 4 elementary schools with 794 pupils; 2 orphan asylums with 35 boys and 56 girls. The Government does not contribute to the support of the Catholic institutions. In Jassy and Husi there is established a flourishing Catholic mutual aid society. The following associations exist among the laity: Rosary Society, Society of Catholic Young People, Apostleship of Prayer, Third Order of St. Francis, Congregation of Mary, Association of Christian Mothers, Sodality for the Protection of Young Girls. There are 2 Catholic weeklies, "Lumina Crestinului" and the "Catholic Sentinel," and 2 monthlies, "Viata" and the Franciscan "Aurora."

Jay, MARIE-RAOUL, economist, b. at Paris on 1 June, 1856; d. there in July, 1921. A devout Catholic and a follower of Count de Mun, he was one of the most prominent sociologists in France, and was consulted on almost every social law adopted there during the first two decades of the twentieth century. He was especially interested in such questions as the weekly day of rest, the protection of women workers at home, unnecessary employment of workers at night. He was a chevalier of the Legion of Honor, one of the founders of the Union of Social Catholics, the secretary of the French Association for the Legal Protection of the Workmen, a member of the Supreme Council of Labor, and a professor in the faculty of law in the University of France, where his lectures were enthusiastically received. Among his principal writings may be mentioned: "L'assurance ouvrière et la solidarité dans l'industrie," "Le repos hebdomadaire et la nouvelle loi française" (1906), "La limitation légale de la journée de travail en France" (1906).

Jean, AUGUSTE, Jesuit missionary and educationist, b. in France on 15 October, 1833; d. at the Sacred Heart College, near Kodaikanal, Madurai, India, on 16 September, 1921. After entering the Society of Jesus and studying at Lyons and Rome, he was sent to Negapatam, India, in 1875. A little later he was named rector of St. Joseph's College, and in January, 1883, secured the transference of the college from Negapatam to Trichinopoly, where it flourished to such a degree that at the time of his death it had in the college department 1031 students (210 Catholics), and in the school department 1245 (530 Catholics). Just previously he had been nominated by Lord Ripon to the first Indian Educational Commission, as an associate of Sir W. W. Hunter and Dr. Miller, whom he accompanied in their official tour of India. Jean's mastery of Latin was unique; his scholarship was so well appreciated by Madras University that till he retired as a septuagenarian to the Sacred Heart College he was chairman of the board of studies in Greek, Latin, and French, and university examiner in these subjects. Latin verse was his favorite pastime, and he could write Horatian lyrics with as much ease and classic grace as an Addison. For many years after his retirement he was engaged teaching Latin and Tamil to the Jesuit novices. Father Jean is the author of a Latin grammar widely used in India.

Jeanne d'Arc Home, at 253 West 24th St., New York, was established in 1896 by the present pastor of the Church of St. Vincent de Paul, Rev. Théoophile Wücher, S.P.M., for the protection of French girls who come to America to earn their living as teachers, governesses, stenographers, seamstresses, maids, etc. They can live at the home for a moderate sum in private rooms or in dormitories accommodating six. There is a beautiful chapel in the house where holy Mass is offered every morning at seven o'clock, assistance at daily Mass being optional. The boarders have also at their disposal a large recreation hall provided with piano, victrola, and library, where they can amuse themselves, also sewing machines for their own use or to use in sewing for the poor in their spare moments.

Adjoining the home is a public school where the girls receive instruction in the English language during the evening sessions of winter months. The house is open until ten o'clock every evening, but with permission the girls may remain out until eleven.

The home is under the direction of the Sisters of Divine Providence, whose provincial house is in Newport, Kentucky. Rev. Mother M. Clotilde has been the Superioress since the beginning. The Sisters meet the girls at their request on their arrival at the different piers and stations, they watch over the welfare of their charges with a maternal solicitude, and are often in constant correspondence with their families abroad concerning their well being. The Sisters find work for them, take care of them when they are sick, visit those who are in hospitals, attending to their spiritual needs; when they die they see to their burial, and after the religious services at the Church of St. Vincent de Paul they accompany their remains to their last resting place (their own plot) in St. Mary's Cemetery, Staten Island.

The first establishment of the home could only accommodate twelve boarders. In 1911 a spacious building was erected which, with an annex, can accommodate 150. Since there is not room enough for all who now apply daily, they are directed to other homes or to recommended private families. The home receives equally girls of all nationalities, without regard to creed, provided the applicants are of good moral character. More than 2000 girls receive hospitality at the home yearly, 30,859 having passed through the house since the beginning.

Jesus, DAUGHTERS OF (cf. C. E., VIII-374a).—The mother-house is at Kernmaria, France, and the provincial house for Canada is at Three Rivers. There are 260 professed choir religious, 74 lay sisters, 10 novices, and 16 postulants, with 30 establishments in Canada. There are 2 establishments in the United States.

Jesus and Mary, SISTERS OF THE HOLY CHILDHOOD OF (cf. C. E., VIII-374a).—The congregation called Sisters of Our Lady of Mercy of the Good Shepherd, a teaching and nursing order in Draguignan, France, was authorized by the government 29 April, 1853. Their official title is Sisters of the Holy Childhood of Jesus and Mary. Since the decrees of 1901 and 1904 the Sisters have limited their work to care for the sick and orphans.

Jesus and Mary, SISTERS OF THE HOLY CHILDHOOD OF (OF STE. CHRIETIENNE; cf. C. E., VIII-374a).—Mother Marie Seraphine, elected as general superior of the institute for the first time in 1906, was re-elected in 1912. She died in January, 1914, and was succeeded by Mother Marie Appoline, elected April, 1914, and re-elected in 1920 for six years. Cardinal Billot, S.J., was appointed by the Holy See, in 1919, as Cardinal Protector of the institute. In June, 1914, St. Joseph's Convent School was wholly destroyed by the big Salem fire; the Sisters remained in Salem and St. Joseph's parochial school was temporarily installed in the church buildings, partially rebuilt. The novitiate for America, previously in Salem, was transferred to Giffard, near Quebec, Canada, in 1914; the Sisters undertook the direction of two schools there.

Two other foundations were made at the same time at Rumford, Maine, and St. Malachie, Canada. In 1918 Ste. Chretienne Academy was founded at Loring Villa, Salem, where a number of girls attend the grammar school and the different departments of the high school.

The vows are made annually for six years, after which perpetual vows are taken, according to the revised Code of Canon Law, which effects other changes in the government of the institute. During the World War the Sisters in Europe cared for the wounded in the hospitals or in their convents turned into hospitals. Many of them were received in the Legion of Honor and were awarded medals by the French and foreign governments. The works of the institute are the direction of elementary and high schools, academies, industrial schools, orphanages, hospitals.

In the United States and Canada about 100 Sisters have charge of 9 schools in the Archdiocese of Boston and the Dioceses of Portland, Providence, and in Canada, with a total attendance of 3200.

Jesus Mary, RELIGIOUS OF (cf. C. E., VIII-385c).

—In 1860 the first school of the Sisters of Jesus Mary, from Lyons, was opened at Ipswich, England. The seeds of faith there sown rapidly bore fruit, and soon another house was opened at Willesden, London. From these two houses branched off a number of flourishing schools on English soil, and one in Ireland. The schools at Ipswich, Willesden, and Thornton College are affiliated to the Universities of Cambridge and Oxford. In 1842 Lyons sent a colony to India, where twelve houses now exist. The most important are at Simla, now seat of the provincialate, at Agra, Bombay, Poona, Lahore, Mussoori. The St. Bede Training School is at Simla, and also a high school, both attended by over 100 students. In 1850 the first house of the Spanish province was opened at San Andre, a suburb of Barcelona. To-day the provincial house is that of San Gervasio, having under its control the houses of Barcelona, Valencia, Tarragona, and others. In 1913 the Spanish province sent a colony to Buenos Aires, Argentine Republic. This was the second colony from Spain, the first having been sent to Mexico and Yucatan, which now form the Mexican province. A school is still open in Cuba where the Sisters found a refuge in 1914 when fleeing from the persecutions of the Mexican Constitution.

The first house of the congregation in America was founded at St. Joseph, Lévis, in Canada, in 1855. In 1870 Sillery, Quebec, became the provincial house of America, with six other houses under its control. Sillery has a large boarding school, and will open, in the near future, a residence for ladies, similar to that in New York. The houses in the United States are at Fall River, Mass., Manchester and Goffstown, N. H., Woonsocket, R. I., Providence, R. I. and New York, N. Y. The establishments in New York are a school in Kingsbridge, Bronx, and a house on 14th Street called "Our Lady of Peace," which is a residence where 190 ladies in the literary profession can find every comfort and convenience. The latter was founded by nuns from Rome in 1902. In 1911 a novitiate and boarding school were opened at Highland Mills, Orange Co., N. Y. The congregation now has about 1400 members at work in the different institutions scattered over Europe, Asia, and North and South America. More than 15,000 students receive instruction in their schools. The mother-house is at Rome, transferred there from Lyons in 1901.

Jetté, SIR LOUIS AMABLE, K. C. M. G., Canadian

lawyer and statesman, b. at L'Assomption, Quebec, on 15 January, 1836; d. at Quebec in May, 1920; son of Amable and Caroline (Gauffreau) Jetté. He was called to the bar in 1857, and at the same time was engaged in journalism, becoming the editor of "L'Ordre." In 1862 he married Mlle. Berthe Lafamme (their son, Father Jules Jetté, a noted mathematician, who has been a Jesuit missionary in Alaska since 1898, is a well-known authority in the language and folk-lore of the Tena Esquimaux of Central Alaska). Louis Jetté represented East Montreal in the Dominion Parliament in 1872 and 1874, and four years later was appointed professor of civil law in Laval University and puisne judge for Quebec, resigning the latter position to become lieutenant-governor of the province from 1898 till 1908. In the former year he was made a commander of the Légion d'honneur, and in 1903 was a member of the Alaskan Boundary Commission, and from 1909 to 1911 he was chief justice of the province of Quebec.

Jibuti, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (DE DJIBOUTI), in French Somaliland, South Africa. Somaliland has been a mission since 1894, but the missionaries being expelled from their original stations, took refuge in Jibuti, and this was erected into a prefecture apostolic 28 April, 1914. It comprises all the territory of French Somaliland and is entrusted to the French Capuchins. The present prefect apostolic is Rev. Pascal de Luchon Lombard, O. M. Cap., born in Luchon, France, 1874, ordained in 1900, joined the mission of Somaliland in 1908 and was appointed prefect apostolic 27 April, 1914. The territory counts only 62 Somali Catholics and 352 Europeans. By latest statistics there are 3 churches, 3 missions, 3 mission stations, 5 regular clergy, 1 lay brother, 5 elementary schools with 6 teachers and 220 pupils, and 3 homes. One public institution permits the priests to minister in it and the Catholic schools and institutions are assisted by the Government.

Joan of Arc, SAINT (cf. C. E., VIII-409d), canonized by Benedict XV 16 May, 1920. Her feast is kept on 30 May.

Jogues, ISAAC (cf. C. E., VIII-420b).—The cause of his beatification was introduced at Rome 9 August, 1916.

Joliette, DIOCESE OF (JOLIETTENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-496c), comprises three counties, Joliette, Berthier, and Montcalm, and five parishes of L'Assomption County in the province of Quebec. It is a suffragan of Montreal.

The total population (1921) is 65,000, of whom 62,600 are Catholic, and it is divided into 43 canonically erected parishes and 3 missions with resident priests. The various societies organized in these parishes are: the Third Orders of St. Francis and St. Dominic, the League of the Sacred Heart of Jesus for men and children, Congregation of the Most Blessed Virgin Mary for men, youths, and young women, Sodality of St. Ann for married women, Confraternities of the Holy Rosary, Bona Mors, Holy Angels, Association for Daily Adoration of the Most Blessed Sacrament, Association of the Way of the Cross; Society of St. Vincent de Paul, and the Temperance Society. There are 5 vicariates-forane, 12 titular canons assisting the bishop, 104 secular and 16 regular clergy, 134 religious men and 500 women.

The religious institutions of men are: the Clerics of St. Viateur (novitiate at Joliette and juniorate at Berthierville), Brothers of the Sacred Heart, Brothers of Christian Instruction, and Brothers of St. Gabriel; of women: Sisters of Charity of Providence, Sisters of the Congregation of Notre Dame, of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary, of St. Anne of the Holy Cross, of the Seven Dolours, of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary, Sisters Adorers of the Precious Blood, and Missionary Sisters of the Immaculate Conception.

The diocese contains 1 seminary, 1 normal school for girls, 3 commercial colleges, 3 commercial academies, 24 boarding schools for young women, 12 academies, 30 model schools, and 230 elementary schools. There are in these 314 institutions, 725 professors, 22 of whom are priests or seminarians, 119 religious, 329 nuns, and 255 lay persons; 16,500 pupils receive instruction in the various institutions. Education is in the hands of the religious communities mentioned above, with the exception of the Sisters Adorers of the Precious Blood, who lead a contemplative life, and the Missionary Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, who are engaged in the diffusion of the works of Holy Childhood and the Propagation of the Faith.

The charitable institutions of the diocese include: 2 hospitals 5 homes for the aged, 7 orphanages for girls and 1 for boys, as well as 6 associations of Ladies of Charity and 3 societies of St. Vincent de Paul.

On 25 April, 1913, the first bishop of Joliette, Rt. Rev. Joseph Alfred Archambault, died, and was succeeded by the present bishop, Rt. Rev. Joseph Guillaume Forbes, consecrated 9 October, 1913. He was born at Isle Perrot 10 August, 1865, educated at Montreal College and the grand séminaire of Montreal, ordained priest 17 March, 1888, missionary at Caughnawaga Iroquois Mission (1888-1903), pastor of St. Anne de Bellevue (1903-1911), of St. Jean Baptiste (1911-13), and appointed Bishop of Joliette 6 August, 1913.

Jones, ARTHUR EDWARD, ethnologist, b. at Brockville, Canada, 17 November, 1838; d. 19 June, 1918. He was a pupil at St. Mary's College, Montreal, and from there went to the Jesuit novitiate at Amiens, France. He made his philosophical and theological studies at Vals, Boston, and Woodstock, was a professor at Montreal and Fordham, and after various occupations in the ministry at Guelph and Montreal was made President of the English College of Loyola in the latter city. Later he was appointed Archivist of St. Mary's, and from that till the end of his life was a valuable aid to Dr. Reuben J. Thwaites, who published the monumental work known as the "Jesuit Relations" in seventy-two volumes. He was corresponding member of several learned societies of Canada and the United States, and won the grand prize for his archaeological exhibit at the St. Louis Exposition at St. Louis in 1904. He verified many of the sites of the Huron country, and his latter works were published by the Ontario Government.

Joseph Benedict Cottolengo, BLESSED, founder of the House of Providence, Turin, b. at Bra 3 May, 1786; d. at Chieri 29 April, 1842. He completed his theological studies at the diocesan seminary of Asti, where he was ordained. Appointed curate first in Bra, then in Corneliano, in 1818 he was made a canon of the collegiate Church of Corpus Christi in Turin. The perusal of the life of St. Vincent de Paul discovered to him his real vocation: to do in Turin the work that Saint had done in Paris. He began by renting several rooms in a house near the Church of Corpus Christi, where he sheltered and nursed the destitute sick of the parish, assisted by several young women whom he called the Daughters of Charity and to whom he gave a rule of life. At this time there was an outbreak of cholera in the city and the authorities, who feared that Father Cottolengo's hospice would become a center of contagion, ordered it closed. Nothing daunted, its founder in 1832 established himself on property farther from the city near the Church of Our Lady of Consolation, renovated the buildings he found there, and as the sick and the outcast flocked to him in ever-increasing numbers, gradually extended them, dividing them into sections and created the miniature city, well-planned, the House of Divine Providence, called by Pius X the House of the Miracle. Human misery in every form of degradation was relieved there by the members of the various institutes founded by Father Cottolengo to supply the many needs of the work. The institutes, include the Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul, of St. Thais, of Carmel, of Suffrage, of Mary of the Seven Dolours, of the Good Shepherd, the Brothers of St. Vincent de Paul, the Monks of Cassin, the preparatory seminary of St. Thomas, the Fathers of the Holy Trinity and others, in all thirty-four religious families. He was their superior general and gave to each appropriate rules, assuring to God the service of perpetual praise, to which the marvelous success of his work was due. He refused the proffered aid of the king and endowment from other sources in order to be completely dependent on Divine Providence, and his undertaking prospered so well that in fourteen years numerous buildings of the House of Providence were completed, including, besides the hospitals, workshops, schools, refuges, cloistered monasteries, convents, hospices for old men and for idiots, families of epileptics and cripples, of the blind, the deaf and dumb, orphanages and seminaries. In 1917, eighty years after its foundation, it contained 8000 people living from day to day without other revenue than the charity of the faithful. Its legal existence was recognized by public act in 1883, and it is dispensed by the Government from giving any financial account. The cause of Father Cottolengo's canonization was introduced 19 July, 1877; he was declared Venerable 10 February, 1901, and his beatification took place 27 April, 1917. By a special concession of the Holy Father, the Mass celebrated in his honor has not only a special Collect, Secret and Postcommunion, but its entire liturgy has been chosen to express the admirable character of the founder of the House of Providence.

Judge, ECCLESIASTICAL (cf. C. E., VIII-545).—If the relative competency of a judge is questioned, he himself decides the question with appeal. If the question arises among two or more judges themselves, the decision rests with the court immediately higher; if the judges are under different higher tribunals, the dispute is to go before the higher tribunal of the judge before whom the case was first brought; if there be no higher tribunal it is decided by the papal legate if he is present, otherwise by the Apostolic Signature. Kinship with either of the parties to a suit in the direct line or in the first or second (formerly the fourth) degree collateral renders a judge, the promoter of the faith, or the defender of the bond incompetent to act in their case. If the ordinary is acting as judge and is objected to as suspected he is to refrain from adjudicating or should refer the question of his fitness to the next higher tribunal; if the exception is taken against the promoter of justice, the defender of the bond or other administrators of the court, the president of the college of judges, or the judge himself, if he be the only one, is to decide. If the plaintiff does not adduce the proofs which he might give, or if the defendant does not make competent objections, the judge should not interfere unless the public good or the welfare of souls is in question; under such circumstances he not only may but must intervene. Except in the case of a bishop who exercises his judicial power personally, all judges must swear to act faithfully; this oath involves the invocation of God; priests at the same time must touch their breasts while the other faithful are sworn in on the Gospels. Judges and assistants are strictly bound to secrecy regarding criminal trials, and even other suits if, otherwise, either of the litigants might suffer.

Codex jur. can., 1008-26.

Jugoslavia, a new State formed out of the component parts of the old Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, consisting of Croatia, Slovakia, Dalmatia, Serbia, Montenegro, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Karniola, Karinthia, Styria, Istria, Gorizia-Gradisca, Quarnero Islands, southern Hungary (Banat, Batchka, and Baranya). The area is about 95,628 sq. miles. The population in 1920 was 11,590,000 divided as follows: Servia (limits of 1914) 4,157,000; Montenegro 173,000; Bosnia-Herzegovina 1,877,000; Croatia 2,592,000; Slovenia 1,056,000; Batchka 836,000; Banat 480,000; Dalmatia 301,000; Madjournourie, Veglia, 118,000. The principal towns (1919) are: Belgrade (120,000 inhabitants), Zagreb (Agram) 80,000; Ljubliana (Laibach) 60,000; Sarajevo 50,000; Novi Sad 40,000; Spert 30,000; Nish 24,949 (1910).

ECONOMICS.—The total production of wheat in Jugoslavia in 1919 was 24,694,726 cwt. (1 cwt. = 100 lbs.), of barley 4,251,692 cwt.; of oats 6,164,247 cwt.; of maize 36,575,315 cwt.; potatoes 15,136,749 cwt. In 1920 the output of sugar was 35,000 metric tons. There are about 4,940,000 acres of vineyards in the country and the production of wine is about 66,000,000 gallons yearly, of which quantity two-thirds is consumed in the country and the rest exported. The mining industry of the country is very little developed. In 1920, 341,950 tons of coal were mined in Servia, 387,390 tons in Croatia and Slavonia, 1,193,874 tons in Slovenia, 826,669 tons in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and 473,850 tons in Pecs. Servia suffered much during the war by the devastation of her forests by the enemy and the destruction of the sawmills. In Bosnia timber is the chief export, half of the area being covered by forests. The imports of Jugoslavia in the first nine months of 1920 were valued at 2,577,709,123 dinars (1 dinar = $0.193 normal exchange); the exports for the same period, 716,393,284 dinars. The commercial balance which showed a deficit in 1919 of 2,364,855,000 dinars had a depreciating influence on the value of the dinar. In 1920 Jugoslavia had 5684 miles of railway, of which 3732 are of normal gauge and 1952 of narrow gauge. Direct traffic is in operation with all the neighboring states, except Rumania and Hungary. The total length of the waterways, including the Danube, Save, Drave, and Tisa, is 1322 miles. River traffic is under the control of the Navigation Syndicate, in which the Government holds 51% of the shares and the syndicate 49%. It is planned to make the Morava River navigable, in order to connect the productive land in Central Servia with the Danube. The exterior debt before the war of 1914 was 903,810,000 francs; during the war, approximately 1,863,212,500 francs; after the war, 434,900,000 francs, a total of 3,201,922,500 francs; the interior debt, 3,551,791,500 francs. The budget for 1921 estimated the revenue at 3,884,177,798 dinars and the expenditure at 3,994,366,343 dinars.

ARMY.—In 1919 the organization of the army of Jugoslavia was commenced. The strength of the army in peace time is 150,000. Compulsory service is in force for men between the ages of twenty-one and forty-five.

EDUCATION.—During 1920 about eight million dinars were spent on repairing the schools; about eighty in all have been repaired and many new schools have been opened. Practically all schools have been taken over by the State and in a short time the staffs and their pay will be standardized. The State pays the teachers' salaries in elementary schools and the municipalities provide for all other expenditure. Elementary education is compulsory and free in all the primary schools under the Minister of Education. In 1919 there were in Servia, 2129 elementary schools with 3867 teachers and 154,976 pupils, also 49 colleges for boys, 5 for girls, and 2 modern schools. There were 158 special schools for illiterates and 9 higher elementary schools. In 1920 Belgrade University had an enrolment of 80 professors and 7250 students. In that year a new university was established at Ljubliana. Medical faculties have been established at Belgrade; a philosophical faculty at Skopje and a law faculty at Subotica are branches of the Belgrade University. Eight million dinars are spent annually in the country on students' scholarships and seven millions for students studying abroad under chairs non-existent in the Kingdom. The new constitution of Jugoslavia provides that religious instruction be given according to the wish of the parents or guardians; the pupils are divided into groups according to their confession and in harmony with their religious beliefs.

GOVERNMENT.—The new constitution, which went into effect on 28 June, 1921, owes a great deal to the Servian constitution of 1888, which was re-enacted in 1903. According to its provisions, Jugoslavia is a constitutional monarchy, with the Crown passing in the male line by order of primogeniture. The executive power is vested in the king, who names the officials and promulgates the laws, but all acts issued by him must be countersigned by the responsible minister. He also nominates the members of the Council of State, which is the highest administrative court. The legislative power is entrusted to the National Skupshtina (Assembly) elected by universal ballot, direct and secret, in the ratio of one deputy to each 50,000 inhabitants, about 280 in all, with representation of the minorities. For judicial purposes there is a Court of Cassation at Zagreb. Part III of the constitution is composed of social and economic regulations as to the protection of labor, health, marriage, insurance against accident, illness, unemployment, incapacitation, old age and death. It also contains two significant provisions: No one is obliged to take part in religious acts, celebrations, rites, and practices, except on State holidays and celebrations. Religious leaders may not employ their spiritual authority for partisan aims outside their houses of worship, or beyond prescripts of a religious character, or otherwise in the fulfillment of their official duty.

In May, 1914, a Concordat was concluded between Servia and the Vatican, under which a Catholic Archbishopric of Belgrade was to be established with jurisdiction over the Catholics within the old frontiers of Servia. Servia proper was almost entirely Orthodox until after the Balkan Wars, when she was ceded a part of Macedonia with a large Catholic population. By Article IV of the Concordat the Holy See grants the use of the Glagolitic, or Old Slav Liturgy in those regions where the need is felt. After the union of all the Orthodox Servs in the Kingdom, the Church becomes a patriarchate under the rule of the Patriarch and Holy Synod for ecclesiastical purposes. The Servian Orthodox Church is governed by the Synod of Bishops. All the ecclesiastical officials are under the control of the Ministry of Public Worship. There is unrestricted liberty of conscience.

The State budget which is assigned to the religious denominations, is repartitioned among the confessions pro rata to the number of communicants.

HISTORY.—The creation of the Yugoslav State in 1917 was the culmination of long agitation on the part of the Slav peoples for nationality, a movement which was hastened by the World War. The conception of Yugoslav unity was in part the outcome of the literary and linguistic movement which developed in the first half of the nineteenth century under Vuk Karadzic. The Yugoslavs shared in the revolutionary spirit of 1848 and 1866, but for various reasons, the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes were unable to unite. The Balkan Wars brought a closer co-operation, however, and their animosity seemed to die out. During the World War, a very large proportion of the Yugoslavs were imprisoned and interned, a severe censorship was established, the Provincial Diets in which the Yugoslavs were represented were suspended, a condition of affairs which intensified the already apparent determination of the Yugoslavs to secure their separation from the Habsburg monarchy. In May, 1917, the Yugoslavs in the Austro-Hungarian Reichsrat demanded that all provinces in the monarchy should be united under the Habsburg Crown in a single autonomous and democratic State, free from all foreign domination. On 20 July, 1917, after the fall of Russia, a pact was signed at Corfu between Doctor Anton Trumbitch, the head of the Yugoslav party, and Nikola Pashitch, the premier of Serbia, whereby it was agreed to constitute an independent unified State of the five million Servians of Serbia and Montenegro and the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes, subjects of Austria-Hungary. On 8 April, 1918, the Congress of Oppressed Nationalities at Rome declared in favor of the State, and the movement for unity took definite form at the meeting of the Yugoslav Council at Ljubljana on 16 August, 1918. In the following month the National Council elected a Central Executive Committee to undertake the creation of the government and establishment of a sovereign State with the purpose of reuniting the Serbs, Croats, Slovenes on the basis of race without regard to political frontiers. In October, 1918, Croatia severed relations with Hungary. At Geneva in November, 1918, the representatives of Serbia, the Yugoslav National Council, and the Yugoslav Committee of London, proclaimed a common ministry for a united State. Later in the month, the National Council, representing all the Yugoslavs, voted for union with Serbia and Montenegro, and the bestowal of the regency on the Prince Regent of Serbia. On 1 December, 1918, the Yugoslav National Council announced the fact to the Prince Regent and called for the creation of a representative body by the agreement between the National Council and popular representatives of Serbia, which was to meet until a constituted assembly had met and the Government should be responsible to it. Prince Alexander at once proclaimed the new State. The Montenegro Assembly voted to depose King Nicholas and to unite with the new State. There was some doubt, however, about the legality of the proceedings, as King Nicholas never accepted his forcible removal, but upon his death on 1 March, 1921, the country was definitely joined to the new State. The Treaty of Rapallo between Italy and Yugoslavia, signed 12 November, 1920, delimited the frontiers of Yugoslavia, giving to the country part of Dalmatia, including the portion assigned to Italy by the Treaty of London (1915). The work on the new constitution unfortunately caused dissension, the Croats refusing to acquiesce in the new arrangement of political divisions, and to take part in the elections of 1920. In the plebiscite in the district of Klagenfurt (10 October, 1920), Yugoslavia lost to Austria, but invaded the district, claiming fraud in the elections. Upon the demand of the Council of Ambassadors their troops were withdrawn. At the death of King Peter of Serbia, Prince Alexander ascended the throne.

THE CHURCH.—On 24 June, 1914, the Concordat between Serbia and the Holy See was signed in Rome by Cardinal Merry del Val and the Servian delegate, M. Milenko R. Vesnia. Its general tenor was favorable to religious freedom and the religious development of the Catholic subjects of the King of Serbia, although in the Servian Constitution Orthodoxy was the State religion and conversions to Catholicism were severely forbidden. Following the World War Yugoslavia has acquired a larger Catholic population than any other Eastern State. The number of Catholics in Croatia, Slovenia, Dalmatia, Bosnia-Herzegovina, and Servia exceeds 6,000,000. Before the war Belgrade had 15,000 Catholics who were deprived of a church because of the intolerance of the Servian Government, and could only attend Mass in the chapel of the Austrian legation. Now under new conditions which are gradually overcoming prejudices in this Orthodox city, the erection of a suitable place of worship is being planned, to be dedicated to SS. Cyril and Methodius. Contributions were received from Pope Benedict XV and from prelates from all parts of the world. In the new Yugoslav State Catholicism is independent, while Orthodoxy is still a State institution. The strongest Catholic element is amongst the Slovenes (1,500,000) who, while not so numerous as the Croats, are more Catholic, and strongly influenced by their priests. According to the plan of reorganization of the churches in Yugoslavia, it will be divided into fifty dioceses, half of which will be Catholic and half Orthodox. The great bulk of the Slovenes, 600,000, form the diocese of Ljubljana (Laibach) whose bishop, Mgr. Jeglic, is venerated even by the Servians as a valiant pioneer of South Slavic political unity. It has a flourishing ecclesiastical seminary and preparatory school, and in 1919 its desire for a university charter hitherto frustrated by German opposition, was fulfilled by decree of the Regent, Prince Alexander. The university was endowed with two theological faculties, one Catholic faculty in 1920, and the other Orthodox. The Catholic numbered 13 professors for the chairs of theology of the Old and New Testaments, Biblical archeology, systematic dogma, historic dogmatics, comparative history of religions, fundamental theology, moral and pastoral theology, canon law, philosophy, patrology, history of the Eastern Churches, and general ecclesiastical history. There are also courses of liturgy, ecclesiastical art, homiletics and ecclesiastical pedagogy.

Amongst the priestly leaders of the Slovenes was the late Dr. Janez Krek, the father of Christian Socialism in Slovenia, and one of the finest figures in the history of modern Slavdom. He had represented Karniola in the Austrian Parliament and was an exemplary pastor, a wise political counsellor, and an indefatigable worker for the welfare of the masses. He inaugurated a strong cultural movement amongst the Slovenes and after his death in 1917 his work was ably carried on by his friend, Dr. Anton Korosec, vice-president of the Servian Cabinet in 1919, and a man of liberal views, who embodies the democratic ideals of his countrymen. Catholic expectations, based on the unfulfilled promises of Servian promoters of the Yugoslav movement, have been largely frustrated, and in the consequent disillusionment the Church passed through several internal crises. In Croatia the Belgrade Government appointed as governor Dr. Lanjuša, a Croat politician conspicuous for his liberal, unecclesiastical proclivities, who attempted to impose the marriage laws of the Orthodox Church on Catholics and was vigorously opposed by the Archbishop of Agram. A so-called reform movement amongst the Catholic clergy in Croatia similar to that which disturbed the Church in Czechoslovakia, is now practically dead, owing to the loyal stand taken by the overwhelming majority of the clergy. In spite of these upheavals, which eventually will serve to strengthen Catholic organization, the future of Catholicity in Yugoslavia is bright. Contact with the essence of Catholic teaching will serve to dissipate racial and political hatreds. A pioneer in this work of rapprochement is Mgr. Francesco Cherubino, titular archbishop of Nicosia, first Papal Nuncio to Belgrade, appointed in 1920. In 1915 Servia sent a special mission to the Holy See and in 1919 the legation of Yugoslavia was erected. M. Louis Bakotic is the Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary.

Jurisdiction (for confessions; cf. C. E., VIII-567b).—No confessor can give valid absolution from sin unless he has expressly received either in writing or verbally ordinary or delegated jurisdiction over the penitent. The pope and the cardinals have ordinary jurisdiction over all the faithful, local ordinaries, parish priests, and those who are in place of parish priests have jurisdiction within the limits of their respective territories; so too has a canon penitentiary for the whole diocese, or an exempt religious superior over his own subjects. Cardinals have no jurisdiction in cases in which there is a censure very specially reserved to the Holy See or attached to the violation of the Holy See secrecy. A priest who is approved for hearing confessions, and who has ordinary or delegated jurisdiction, can licitly and validly absolve any vagus or person coming to him from another diocese or parish, even if the person be a Catholic belonging to any Eastern Rite. No one should be granted faculties to hear confessions unless after examination; this does not apply, however, in the case of a priest who is known to be well qualified. Any priest who has been granted jurisdiction may be required to undergo another examination, if a doubt arises as to his present skill as a confessor—this applies even to parish priests and canon penitentiaries. Delegated jurisdiction is conferred by the ordinary of the place where the confessions are to be heard; but religious must not exercise this power without at least the presumed permission of their superiors. No priest, whether he be a secular or a regular, can validly or licitly hear the confessions of female religious or novices without special authorization, and all privileges or private laws to the contrary are now expressly revoked. This does not, however, apply to cardinals; nor does it affect the permission that has been granted to nuns or Sisters, of going to confession in any church or oratory, even semi-public (this has been interpreted officially as including any place designated in accordance with the law for the hearing of women's confessions), to a confessor authorized by the local ordinary to hear the confessions of women; nor finally does it limit the right which female religious enjoy, when they are seriously ill, of calling in as confessor any priest authorized to hear women's confessions.

A confessor loses his jurisdiction when his office terminates, or if he is excommunicated, interdicted, or suspended from office by a declaratory or condemnatory sentence. Holders of ordinary jurisdiction may delegate it wholly or in part, unless this is expressly forbidden by the law; but neither parish priests nor canon penitentiary can delegate their jurisdiction.

Kadi-Keui (CHALCEDON; cf. C. E., III-554d).—This mission was created 2 July, 1895, and 25 May, 1898, and confided to the Augustinians of the Assumption, for the Latins, Greeks, and Slavs, with parishes at Kadi-Keui, Stamboul, Gallipoli, and elsewhere in Asia Minor. An Archconfraternity of Our Lady of the Assumption, prima primaria, was erected by Leo XIII 25 May, 1898, to promote the union of churches. A secular priest was appointed parish priest at Scutari in 1908. In the same year a church of the Armenian Rite was erected in Kadi-Keui. A church of the Latin Rite was erected at Haidar Pacha in 1912, and a public chapel was built at Pendik. In November, 1914, the French religious congregations were expelled by the Turks, who seized all the buildings in use as orphanages, schools, etc., turned one chapel into a mosque and one church into a moving picture theater, and burned the Armenian Mechitarist College and two other buildings. These congregations returned in 1918 and 1919. The Carmelite nuns settled at Phanaraki 15 December, 1919. The church and parochial school at Scutari were burned in July, 1921. Many religious and laymen in the mission were called to the colors by their respective Governments in the World War; among those killed were 1 priest and 11 lay brothers, as well as many laymen. The clerics and pious laymen formed an association to assist the needy, and several Sisters devoted themselves to nursing the typhus sufferers. Among the latter was Sister Amelia, of the Congregation of the Immaculate Conception of Lourdes, who died 1916 as a result of her labors among the plague-stricken. Other noteworthy persons who have died are: Fr. Sophrone Rabois-Bousquet, A.A., rector of the Greek Rite parish of Chalcedon, and contributor to the "Echos d'Orient," d. 18 April, 1911; Fr. Armand Trannoig, A.A., vicar of the Latin parish of Chalcedon, d. 8 November, 1918; Fr. Jerome Frassier, A.A., missionary of the Slavic Rite, who had labored many years in Bulgaria, d. 25 November, 1920; Fr. Louis Dimitrof, A.A., who labored more than thirty years in Bulgaria, d. 18 January, 1921; Brother Prudentius, superior of the College of the Brothers of the Christian Schools in Kadi-Keui, d. 19 March, 1913; Sisters M. Constance (d. 1912), M. Chantal (d. 1915), and M. Fidelia (d. 1921), all superiors of the Sisters of Notre Dame de Sion at Kadi-Keui; Fr. Corneyre, of the Congregation of Notre Dame de Sion, chaplain of the Sisters of Kadi-Keui, d. in June, 1920; Jacques de Beaufort, a French nobleman of remarkable piety, d. 16 January, 1919.

The Catholic population of the mission is 2300, of whom 1355 belong to the Latin Rite and 915 to the Eastern Rite. Catholics of the Latin Rite include 490 Italians, 265 Greeks, 155 French, 135 Ottomans, 125 Maltese, 110 Jugoslavs, and 75 others. Since 1918 there have been British troops, with a military chaplain, in the mission, some of the soldiers, Europeans and Indians, being Catholics. Catholics of the Armenian Rite number 820, almost all Ottomans; of the Melchite Greek Rite there are 55 Syrians; of the Syrian Rite, 45 Syrians; of the Pure Greek Rite, 25 Ottomans and Greeks. There are 5 parishes, of which 2 are Armenian and 1 Greek; 5 churches, 2 of which are Armenian; 5 public chapels; 2 missions; 1 station; 1 monastery of monks, and 1 monastery of nuns; 7 convents of religious and 6 convents of Sisters; 83 lay brothers; 4 secular priests, 24 regular priests, of whom 15 are Latins, 5 Armenians, 3 Bulgarians, and 1 Greek; 1 seminary with 15 seminarians, of whom 11 are Bulgarians, 3 Russians, and 1 Rumanian; 5 colleges for boys with 102 teachers and 1245 students; 4 colleges for girls with 65 teachers and 1010 students; 6 elementary schools with 12 teachers and 245 pupils; 1 commercial school with 5 teachers and 65 pupils; 1 orphan asylum; 1 hospital; 1 settlement house. All hospitals admit Catholic visitors and ministry of priests. The Catholic institutions receive some aid from the French Government, but none from the Turkish Government. The "Echos d'Orient," a review of Oriental studies, is published at Kadi-Keui. The Third Order of St. Francis is established in the mission, as are also honorary guards of the Sacred Heart, the St. Vincent de Paul Society for men, the Association of Christian Mothers, and the Children of Mary for young girls. The present superior of the mission is Rev. Gervais Quépard, A.A., appointed in 1920.

Kaffa, SOUTHERN, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XVI-68b), erected 28 January, 1913, from part of the Vicariate Apostolic of Galla, in Abyssinia, and confided to the Missionaries of the Consolata of Turin. In the persecution of 1904 missionaries had been banished from Kaffa, and no Catholic priest was allowed to return there until 12 November, 1917, when the Missionaries of the Consolata of Turin got five installations newly erected in the prefecture, but only as civilians. Their spiritual work is still clandestine. The present apostolic is Rt. Rev. Gaudens Barlassina, brother of the Patriarch of Jerusalem, appointed 6 May, 1913. The new boundaries of the prefecture are as follows: on the north the Blue Nile River from the British-Abyssinian frontier, to 35° long.; on the east the 38° long. from the Blue Nile to 4° N. lat.; on the south from 38° long. and 4° N. lat. to Lake Rudolph; on the west the British-Abyssinian frontier from Lake Rudolph to the Blue Nile.

Kafiristan, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF. See KASHMIR AND KAFIRISTAN.

Kaiserwilhelmsland, EASTERN AND WESTERN, PREFECTURES APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., VIII-592d), in the island of New Guinea. The various tribes in New Guinea are numerically small, especially those on the coast; inland their numbers increase and their language is more or less uniform. With few exceptions the places on the sea coast have been reached by the missionaries. The island stations of Tumlio and Ali are Catholic. The work of conversion is progressing as the natives are taking an active part in it. Spirit-worship is gradually losing its hold on the people and public worship is finding favor, so that the effects of grace are everywhere being felt. The number of Christians and catechumens is increasing from year to year. In 1910 the rice industry was established as a means of support in the mission, to enable the natives to earn a better living, to provide adequate nourishment, and in general to raise the standard of the people. The first attempts proved satisfactory and the mission was beginning to flourish when the war broke out. It was then impossible to obtain the machinery and the undertaking was abandoned. In 1913 a mission was established on the Sepik River. The first station was at Marienberg. In the same year Kaiserwilhelmsland was erected into two separate prefectures apostolic of Western and Eastern Kaiserwilhelmsland and the Congregation of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary was to be placed in charge of the former territory. This has not yet been accomplished. Rt. Rev. Adalbert Otto Rielander, C.S.S. CC. was appointed prefect apostolic in 1914 to succeed Rt. Rev. Mgr. Gellings, and resigned in 1921. Eastern Kaiserwilhelmsland is confided to the Society of the Divine Word, and the present prefect apostolic is Rt. Rev. Andrew Puff, S.D.V., with residence at Tumleo.

In 1914 the first mission stations in the interior of Alexishafen were established and in 1917 two more were founded at a distance of two days inland journey from the former. In 1915 Rt. Rev. Evrad Limbrock, Prefect Apostolic of Eastern Kaiserwilhelmsland and founder of the mission, resigned. The wisdom and foresight which he showed in laying out the settlement so as to insure the material success of the undertaking, made him one of the greatest benefactors of the mission. The protracted war evinced the inestimable value of this. The large herds of cattle were especially useful and proved a source of real blessings. In 1916 as a political precautionary measure, the mission station west of Eitape, the government station, was suppressed. The stations of Malol and Aissano suffered greatly. It was impossible to take care of the parishes as no priest was permitted to go there until 1919. In 1921 all the priests who were willing to take the oath of loyalty were given permission to remain for seven years longer. All voluntarily complied with this requirement.

In 1921 the prefecture apostolic contained 35 churches and chapels, 47 stations, 21 regular priests, 19 Brothers, 34 Sisters, 25 catechists, 55 elementary schools with 3119 pupils, 3 orphanages, and 2 hospitals. During the war the sick and wounded were cared for at all the mission stations. Formerly the schools and institutions received a small sum, about 1000 marks, from the government. The present government does not contribute to their support. Since 1910, 5 Fathers, 3 Brothers, and 12 Sisters belonging to the prefecture apostolic have died.

Kalisz-Kujawy or Włocławek (Wladislaw), DIOCESE OF (CALISSIENSIS; CUJAVIENSIS SEU WLOCLAVIENSIS; cf. C. E., XV-680c), suffragan of Warsaw, Poland. The diocese is under the patronage of St. Joseph. In 1918 it comprised nearly 13 districts; new boundaries were fixed in 1919. The area is about 7832 square miles. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Stanislaw Zdzitowiecki, b. 1854, ordained 1877, consecrated 1902, succeeding Bishop Beresiewicz, who was transferred, appointed assistant at the pontifical throne 1920. The auxiliary bishops are: Rt. Rev. Wladyslaw Krynicki, b. 1861, preconized 1918, consecrated titular Bishop of Acanthus 1919; Rt. Rev. Wojciech Owczarek, b. 1875, preconized 1918, consecrated titular Bishop of Ascalon 1918. The bishop resides at Włocławek, where is the Cathedral of the Assumption, the cathedral chapter comprising 4 prelates and 8 canons. To the collegiate Church of St. Mary at Kalisz are also attached 4 prelates and 8 canons. The diocese comprises 39 deaneries with 377 parishes, 419 churches, and 179 chapels. The number of convents of religious has considerably increased since the restoration of Poland. There is a convent of Hermits of St. Paul at Czeszochowa, the residence of the general of the order. At Czeszochowa is the famous shrine of Our Lady, the miraculous image of the Virgin having been ornamented in 1910 with a gold crown given by Pope Pius X. Other convents in the diocese are: Friars Minor, 5; Friars Minor Conventuals, 3; Dominicans, 1; Salesians, 1; Lazarists, 1; Jesuits, 1; Olivetans, 1; Dominican Nuns, 1; Daughters of Charity, 12; other religious congregations, 8. The Catholic population of the diocese is about 1,600,000.

Kalocsa-Bacs, ARCHDIOCESE OF (COLOCENSIS ET BACHIENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-594d).—By the Treaty of Versailles, in 1919, the whole region of Bacs, formerly Hungarian, with its 88 populous parishes, which comprises the greater part of the archdiocese, was included in the kingdom of Yugoslavia, and so a new diocese may be erected. There would then remain but 52 parishes in the original archdiocese, which comprises 140 parishes and has 289 secular and 65 regular priests, 15 lay brothers, 6 convents for men and 32 for women, 2 seminaries with 45 theologians and 31 seminarists, 4 colleges for men and 4 for women, 13 high schools, 163 normal schools with 687 teachers and 53,605 students, 1 home for the aged poor, 5 orphanages, 1 hospital, and 140 day nurseries. There is a Society of Perpetual Adoration for the clergy, and for the laity there are the following organizations or societies: Most Sacred Heart, Third Order of St. Francis, Rosary Society, Altar Society, Marian Congregations, Workmen's Societies, Economical Associations for Young Men. Four Catholic dailies and three periodicals are published. The government contributes to the support of Catholic schools and institutions. The Catholic population numbers 620,945, and, in round numbers, is composed of 334,000 Hungarians, 190,000 Germans, who emigrated into Bacs after the expulsion of the Turks (1723-90), and 96,000 Slavs who were driven out of Dalmatia and Serbia by the Turks (1689-1700). The present archbishop, appointed in 1914, is Leopold Arpad Várady. He succeeded John Csernoch (1911-13), who, transferred to the Archdiocese of Esztergom, crowned King Charles and Queen Zita of Hungary. The preceding archbishop, Julius Vározy (1905-10), restored the cathedral church, established perpetual adoration within the archdiocese, and organized societies for both religious and laity.

Kamenetz (KAMENIEC), DIOCESE OF (CAMENECENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-465b), suffragan of Mohileff, Russia. The diocese was founded in the fourteenth century, and administered by the Bishop of Luck and Zhitomir from 3 June, 1866, till 24 September, 1918, when it was reestablished as an independent diocese. Rt. Rev. Peter Mankowski, b. 1866; ordained 1899, rector of the cathedral of Kamieniec 1902, removed from this post in 1911 by order of the Russian government, vicar general and official in that part of the Diocese of Luck occupied by German and Austrian troops 1917-18, honorary canon of Luck, was elected 24 September, 1918, Bishop of Kamieniec, after the long vacancy of that see, consecrated 30 November, 1918, and took possession of the see 26 August, 1919, succeeding Mgr. Fijalkowski, promoted in 1870. According to latest statistics Kamieniec had 312,087 Catholics, 128 secular priests, 3 regular priests, and 101 parishes. For the diocese of the Ruthenian Rite see Lwow.

Kamerun, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (CAMERONENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-596a), comprises the former German colony of Kamerun, now divided between the British and French since its capture from the Germans in February, 1916. It has an area of 191,130 square miles, and a population of 2,540,000. The present vicar is Rt. Rev. Francis Hennemann, P.S.M., titular Bishop of Coptos. During the absence of the vicar the administrator apostolic is Rev. Jules Douvry, C.S.SP., appointed 3 February, 1917. The vicariate was confided to the Pious Society of Missions, but during the war they were expelled and the vicariate was given in charge of the Fathers of the Holy Ghost; this decision was renewed by Propaganda 26 June, 1920. Protestant propaganda is very active in the vicariate, there being 7500 adherents to Protestantism before the war. Catholics numbered 4489 and there were 1396 catechumens, 16 priests, 9 churches and chapels, 13 stations, 24 lay brothers, 21 Pallotin Fathers, 37 schools with 2120 boys, and 12 schools with 368 girls. These pre-war figures are the latest statistics available.

Kamientec, DIOCESE OF. See KAMENETZ.

Kan-chow, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF, erected 25 August, 1920, by dismemberment of the former Vicariate Apostolic of Southern Kiang-si, and confided to the Lazarists. This new vicariate comprises the three civil provinces of Kow-chow-fu, Nan-an-fu, and Ning-tu-chow, with an area of 20,077 square miles. It takes its name from the principal city, which is the residence of the vicar apostolic. The administrator is Mgr. Dumond, titular Bishop of Curubis, and Vicar Apostolic of Maritime Chi-li. The population of the vicariate is about 5,000,000 infidels, and 9287 Catholics. There are in the vicariate: 8 Lazarist Fathers, of whom 3 are Europeans and 5 Americans; 9 Daughters of Charity, both foreign and native; 28 native Virgins of Our Lady of Good Counsel; 46 male teachers, 25 female teachers; 143 places visited once a year by missionaries; 8 stations, 7 churches, 19 public chapels, 12 oratories; 1 theological seminary with 13 seminarians; 1 preparatory seminary with 25 students; 25 schools for boys with 819 pupils; 11 schools for girls with 318 pupils; 1 orphanage for girls with 62 orphans; 7 catechumenates for men and boys with 318 catechumens; 6 catechumenates for women and girls with 154 catechumens; 5 dispensaries with 21,123 remedies distributed and visits made to the sick during the year 1920-21; there were baptized 434 adult catechumens, 350 children of Christians, 3151 pagan children in danger of death.

Kandy, DIOCESE OF (KANDIENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-596c), suffragan of Colombo, in the Island of Ceylon. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Bede Beekmeyer, O.S.B., born in 1873, elected 19 April, and consecrated 30 June, 1912, succeeding Bishop Pagnani, who died 27 June, 1911. The area of the diocese is 6040 square miles, and the total population is 889,685, of whom 30,228 are Catholics. The diocese is confided to the Silvestrine Benedictines, who number 21 priests, and there are also 5 secular priests and 1 Jesuit. At the general seminary for India at Ampitiya, Kandy, there are 13 Jesuit professors and 97 students. Rt. Rev. A. Pancrazi, O.S.B., is abbot of the Kandy monastery of Silvestrine Benedictines, with a community of 25 monks, of whom 4 are scholastics and 3 lay brothers. At the monastery of the Oblates of St. Sylvester at Wahacotte there are 3 Oblates and 2 postulants. The Sisters of the Good Shepherd number 30, with 3 houses at Kandy, Nuwara Eliya, and Badulla. The Sisters of St. Francis Xavier, under the direction of the Mother Superior of the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, have 2 houses at Natale and Navalapitiya. There are 3 Franciscan Missionaries of Mary at Nuwara Eliya. St. Anthony's College at Kandy is under the Benedictines, and there are 24 lay teachers, with 85 boarders and a total of 460 pupils. St. Clement's Elementary School, with a vernacular department for poor boys, has 58 pupils. The Sisters of the Good Shepherd have an English day and boarding school for girls at Kandy with 345 pupils in the English school, 100 in the vernacular school, and 97 in the industrial school, and they also have charge of St. Scholastica's School for girls with 90 pupils. There are in the diocese: 3 schools for boys with 245 pupils, and St. Mary's School for girls with 80 pupils, at Ampitiya; an elementary school with 241 boys and an English day and boarding school, under the Sisters of St. Francis Xavier with 162 girls, at Matale; a vernacular school, under the Oblates of St. Sylvester, with 121 boys, and a vernacular school with 38 girls at Wahacotte; St. Mary's School with 151 boys and 39 girls at Nawalapitiya; Holy Cross School for boys with 34 pupils, at Hatton; St. Joseph's School for girls, with 68 pupils, at Gampola; St. Francis Xavier's School, with 95 boys, an English day and boarding school, under the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, with 83 girls, and an industrial vernacular school, under the Franciscan Missionaries of Mary, with 70 girls, at Nuwara Eliya; St. Joseph's School for boys, with 68 pupils, at Bandarawela; St. Mary's school, with 34 girls, and an English day and boarding school, under the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, with 58 girls at Badulla. There are orphanages for boys at Kandy and Wahacotte, orphanages for girls at Kandy, Matale, Nuwara Eliya, and Badulla, and a benevolent association at Kandy. The diocese has 36 churches, 35 chapels, and 12 head stations.

Kansas (cf. C. E., VIII-597c).—The State of Kansas has an area of 82,158 square miles and ranks thirteenth among the States of the Union.

ECONOMICS.—In 1919 Kansas raised 69,362,000 bushels of corn with a value of $97,107,000; 151,001,000 bushels of wheat with a value of $324,652,000. The value of sorghums was $26,802,000; of tame hay, $71,211,000; oats, $32,287,000; of barley, $16,200,000; Irish potatoes, $9,819,000. The field products from 22,249,594 acres under cultivation had a value of $442,091,198 in 1918. The value of animals slaughtered or sold for slaughter was $108,073,032; poultry and eggs sold, $14,792,000; milk sold, $15,098,844; garden and horticultural products marketed, $4,061,009. The total value of farm products in 1918 reached the sum of $592,017,250, without considering the live stock retained by the farmers and returned by assessors to the value of $361,868,765. In 1918 the value of farm products and live stock aggregated $953,886,015, which was $93,787,345 in excess of 1917.

The annual salt production is about 2,000,000 barrels. Kansas ranks fourth in the production of lead and zinc. According to the United States census of 1919 the manufactured products of the State attained a value of $909,897,000. In 1917 its mineral production had a value of $108,763,055, its natural gas a value of $5,701,436.

Kansas has 9383 miles of railroads on which a three-cent fare obtains. The Board of Railroad Commissioners was succeeded in 1910 by the Public Utilities Commission, and in 1920 the Industrial Board was formed.

POPULATION.—The fourteenth Federal census of 1920 gave 1,769,257 as the total population of the State's 105 counties: males, 909,221; females, 860,036. There are sixty-two towns with a population of more than 2500 each; seventeen of them have more than ten thousand people: Atchison has 12,630; Leavenworth, 16,912; Wichita, 72,217; Kansas City, 101,177; and Topeka, 50,022. In 1920 the aggregate in cities of above 10,000 was 417,749, or 13.6% of the total population. The latest statistics show 2618 divorces and 18,162 marriages in one year.

EDUCATION.—If the majority of the electors of the county favor it, a high school may now be established at the discretion of the county commissioners and on petition of one-fourth of the electors. Four years are now required for completion of the high school courses of instruction. The Legislature of 1917 was authorized to levy a permanent tax for the support of educational institutions. The total school population in 1918 was 620,991, and the enrolment 405,319. The average daily attendance was 288,286. There were 16,395 teachers. The total cost of the public schools in 1918 was $17,102,644. The State School Book Commission was established in 1913.

The student membership at the State educational institutions in 1919 was as follows: University of Kansas, Lawrence, 3915; Kansas State Agricultural College, Manhattan, 2171; Kansas State School for the Deaf, Olathe, 223. Non-Catholic denominational colleges have invested in equipment and endowment about $16,000,000. They represent faculties of 250 persons, instructing 3500 students at an annual expense of $607,000. In 1920 there were 310 private and denominational schools in Kansas.

The laws of 1915 empower the counties having a population of more than 60,000 and less than 75,000 to establish public service institutions, including a county home, county hospital, and a tuberculosis hospital. In 1917 a State Board of Administration was created to constitute the Board of Trustees for the control of educational, benevolent, and penal institutions. For this purpose the board appoints a business manager to manage such institutions with the advice of the board, and to purchase supplies. A Workman's Compensation Law has been adopted. The establishment at Topeka of a State Industrial Farm for women prisoners was provided for by the Legislature in 1917.

According to the United States census of 1916 all the church property in the State was valued at $23,808,000. The Catholic population in 1921 was 134,220, an increase of nearly 70% in forty years. For details with regard to ecclesiastical history see LEAVENWORTH, DIOCESE OF; CONCORDIA, DIOCESE OF; WICHITA, DIOCESE OF.

LEGISLATION.—Property passing to direct descendants is tax exempt; to brothers or sisters $5000 exempt; to near kindred the tax is graduated; to others more remote the rates are higher. This does not apply to constitutional exemptions. Columbus Day (12 October) and Election Day (first Tuesday in November) are now included among the legal holidays. In 1912 the full exercise of suffrage was conferred upon women, a right which in 1918 was restricted to citizens of the United States.

RECENT HISTORY.—An important step in the industrial progress of the United States was taken when the Kansas Court of Industrial Relations was established as a court to find solution for industrial controversies and to protect the public against waste and danger of industrial war. It was meant as a court of human relations, not as a public utilities commission, but the public utilities cases so increased that the court was robbed of the opportunity to do more than care for the acute industrial cases. Kansas ratified the federal suffrage amendment 16 June, 1919, and the prohibition amendment 14 January, 1919, the twenty-eighth state to do so. The recent adoption of the farm-homes-amendment was aimed at checking the growth of land tenantry in the State and to strengthen agricultural conditions as to farm labor and soil conservation. The good roads amendment in 1920 limited the State's help to 25 per cent of the cost of the road, and to $10,000 per mile for more than 100 miles in any county.

Kansas contributed during the World War 63,428 soldiers, or 1.69 per cent of the total furnished by the United States. Camp Funston was established in the State for the troops of the 89th and 92d divisions.

Kansas City (KASANOPOLITANA), DIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., VIII-602a), in Missouri, suffragan of St. Louis. The first bishop of this diocese, Rt. Rev. John Joseph Hogan, who had filled the see from 1880, died 21 February, 1913, and was succeeded by his coadjutor, Rt. Rev. Thomas Francis Lillis, who had been consecrated Bishop of Leavenworth 27 December, 1904, transferred to Kansas City as coadjutor with right of succession 14 March, 1910, taking possession of the see 21 February, 1913.

Two diocesan synods have been held since 1910, one April 9, 1912, and the last April 20, 1920, to give effect to the instructions and legislative acts of the Holy See as provided in the New Canon Law. The sixteenth (and last) annual convention of the American Federation of Catholic Societies was held at Kansas City August 26-29, 1917, the Papal Delegate, His Excellency John Bonzano, and twenty-five archbishops and bishops attending.

During the decade 1910-20 the Kansas City diocese has enjoyed a steady growth in the number of priests, parishes, educational and charitable institutions. The number of priests has increased from 101 in 1910 (70 secular and 31 religious) to 146 (102 secular, 44 regular) at present (1921). The total number of Sisters now working in the diocese is 530, compared with 350 ten years ago; eight new parishes were established during this period, and in many instances the first church, rectory or school has been replaced by a modern structure. The number of parochial schools has grown from 42 to 50, and the number of children attending them from 5543 to 7873. There are 10 academies for girls attended by about 600 pupils. A desire for a higher education for boys than that afforded in the parish school found its realization in the establishment of two colleges, De La Salle Academy (1910), in charge of the Christian Brothers, and Rockhurst College (1914), conducted by the Jesuit Fathers, both in Kansas City; their present enrollment is 565. There are three orphan homes in the diocese, two in Kansas City (one for girls with 150 and one for boys with 145 inmates), and St. Francis Convent at Nevada, Mo., attended by 125 children. Two new hospitals have been added to the six already existing in 1910, and the Catholic League Hotel (1911) and St. Catherine's Convent (1921) provide a home for young women employed in stores, offices, etc. St. Vincent's Maternity Hospital was established in 1914. The new $400,000 House of the Good Shepherd was completed last year. The total number of children under Catholic care has increased from 5773 in 1910 to 8000 in 1920, and the total Catholic population from 55,000 in 1910 to 75,500 in 1920. The number of parishes in the city of Kansas City has grown from 28 to 32, including one for the Mexicans (1915), one for the Polish Catholics (1913), and St. Monica's, in charge of the Franciscan Fathers (1910), for the Catholic negroes. There are 26 missions with churches, 108 churches, and 30 chapels.

During the World War about 3000 Catholic young men of this diocese entered the service, of whom 84 gave up their lives.

Kan-su, NORTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (DE KAN-SU SEPTENTRIONALIS; cf. C. E., VIII-602d), in China. The vicariate contains about 8,000,000 inhabitants; among this number there are 6250 Catholics and 7200 catechumens, all of whom are Chinese, with the exception of a few Tangouses and Tibetans. In 1921 the mission had 55 chapels, 18 mission residences, 2 secular priests, 16 regulars, 18 native Sisters who live in community, 1 preparatory seminary with 10 students, 1 college for boys with 12 teachers and 52 students, 36 elementary schools, 51 teachers, and 1063 pupils, 28 catechists and 10 catechumenates. The following institutions exist in the vicariate apostolic: 3 asylums in charge of 18 Sisters with 230 children, 3 small homes for old people, several day nurseries. Of late the number of missionaries has diminished, some of them having died and others being recalled to the mother-house. The present bishop is the Rt. Rev. Geoffrey Frederix of the Congregation of the Immaculate Heart of Mary of Scheutveld, b. at Afferden, 17 July, 1866, elected 8 March, 1920, appointed vicar apostolic of Kan-su 5 March preceding, consecrated 29 June following. He arrived at Kan-su in March, 1921, succeeding Rt. Rev. Hubert Otto, deceased.

Kan-su, SOUTHERN, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., VIII-602c), in China. The present prefect is the Rt. Rev. Constantine Benedict Daems of the Congregation of the Immaculate Heart of Mary of Scheutveld, b. at Westmalle, Belgium, 13 May, 1872, ordained 21 July, 1895, departed for China the following September, and was named prefect 5 May, 1914. In 1921 the prefecture apostolic contained 11 European regular priests, 1 native secular priest, 2703 baptized Christians, 3931 registered catechumens, 12 principal missions, 22 outlying missions, 1 theological seminary, 1 preparatory seminary at Trinchow (29 students), 12 parochial schools (167 boys, 81 girls), 12 teachers, 11 native Sisters who are teachers, 3 orphanages with 76 ransomed orphans.

Kashmir and Kafirstan, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (CASHMIRENSIS ET KAFIRSTANENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-591b), created by Pope Leo XIII in 1887. The territory embraces a large portion of the extreme north of India and includes part of the Punjab, the whole of Kashmir Kafirstan, and many free tribes around Chitral Waziristan and the Swat Valley bordering Afghanistan. Roughly the inhabitants number 15,000,000. The northern boundaries are the Hindu Kush mountains, and the Pamir Range—"the roof of the world." The mission was taken over from the Capuchins by the English Mill Hill Fathers in 1887. The prefecture includes some of the most important British military stations in India. Peshawar guards the mouth of the Khyber Pass, Nowshera is a large base near the Indus, whilst Rawalpindi, "the Aldershot of India," is the headquarters of the Northern Army Command in India. In all there are about 20 permanent stations, besides innumerable summer stations in the hills, served by the Mill Hill Fathers, 15 in number. Besides military work the priests are engaged on native missions, in which work they are very materially helped by the Franciscan Missionary Sisters of Mary, assisted by Dr. Anne Dengel, who have hospitals for native women and children in Rawalpindi and at Baramulla in Kashmir. The Irish Presentation Sisters have convent day schools in Rawalpindi and Peshawar, and a boarding school for small boys at Murree, a summer station over 7000 feet above sea level. At Baramulla Fr. de Ruyter has a successful high school and an orphanage for native boys, with a total of 250. The Sisters of the Congregation of Jesus and Mary have a large boarding school for girls, open only in the summer.

The present prefect apostolic is Rt. Rev. R. J. Winkley, who succeeded Rt. Rev. D. Wagner in 1916. Born in Preston and educated at Kelvedon, Freshfield, and Mill Hill, he was one of the pioneer priests in the Mill Hill mission in north India. On arriving, he was sent to Kashmir, where no priest had ever been, and he commenced the new established missions of Baramulla, Srinagar, and Gulmarg. He returned to the Punjab in 1914 and was posted at West Ridge, where he built a large church and presbytery. He served for a time on the frontier of India, and at the outbreak of the war in 1914 he was in England for the Mill Hill General Council, and entered the service immediately as a chaplain. He went to France, was invalided home, and then proceeded to the Mediterranean, working in Salonika, Gallipoli, Egypt, and on the Arabian frontier. In 1916 he was nominated prefect and returned to India to direct the labors of the Mill Hill priests in British North India. Other clergy who saw service in the war were: Rev. J. Mullen, who was with the army which defended Kut, was taken prisoner, and awarded the military cross; Rev. Hubert Janssen, who served with the armies on the frontier and was mentioned in dispatches for bravery and devotion to duty; Rev. W. Bolton and Rev. A. Malden, B.A., who served in the Khyber and on the frontier; and Rev. W. White, who was chaplain in Egypt and Palestine.

The Catholic population of the prefecture is about 5000 native Hindus and British. There are in the prefecture: 11 churches, 4 missions, 18 stations, 4 convents of nuns, 35 Sisters, 15 secular priests, 2 hospitals for native women under the Franciscan Missionaries of Mary, and an orphanage for native boys in Baramulla. The priests have charge of native missions in Rawalpindi, Baramulla, and Srinagar. The schools are partially supported by the government.

Kassai, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF UPPER (cf. C. E., VIII-609a).—On 13 June, 1917, the Prefecture Apostolic of Upper Kassai was erected into a vicariate, comprising at that date 18 principal mission stations and a Catholic population of 60,000. The boundaries of the vicariate are: on the west the course of the River Loange in the Congolese territory, and the boundaries of the colony; on the south the boundaries of the colony as far as the source of the Lualaba; on the east the Lualaba from its source to Kikondja, the course of the Lovoi to the source of the Lomami, the Lomami from its source to Bena Kamba; on the north the boundaries of the vicariates of New Antwerp and Leopoldville. The climate is salubrious and the soil generally fertile. The recent discovery of diamond beds has brought to the locality mining exploitations, and these as well as the establishment of a railroad and the improvement of other ways of communication are of great importance in the development of the country. The most widely spread language is Luba, which is used by the missionaries for teaching and preaching, except in the region of Batetela, where the idiom of the country is in usage. The approximate number of natives is 1,200,000. The vicariate comprises four civil districts, and the four principal towns are Luebo, Lusambo, Kabinda, and Sandoa; the last, of recent foundation, is in the Lunda country, and the other three, each of which has a Catholic mission, are in the Luba country. The character of the people evangelized is generally peaceful, and the greatest progress in evangelization is among the Luba. According to the statistics of 1 July, 1921, the number of native Catholics was 111,277, with a total of 8843 Catholic families. The vicariate has 18 principal stations, each of which serves an extensive territory, sometimes comprising several hundred villages. These stations are: Luluabourg St. Joseph, Hemptinne, St. Benoît, Ndeksha, Ndemba, Mushenge, Luebo, Mayi, Munene, Kalende, St. Trudon, Lusambo, Merode Salvator, Tielen St. Jacques, Kabinda, Tshumbe Ste. Marie, Katoko Kombe, Lodja, Lubefu, Kanzeuze. There is also a residence at St. Antoine (Lusambo). The number of missionary priests attached to the vicariate is 55 Missionaries of Scheutveld and 4 Franciscan Fathers of the Belgian province, who are established at Kanzeuze. The Missionaries of Scheutveld are aided by 23 coadjutor brothers of their congregation and 3000 native catechists and assistant catechists. Each mission station has an elementary school, the total daily regular attendance being 2857 boys and 1101 girls. There is a normal school at Luluabourg St. Joseph with 130 pupils; the course of studies is four years. Another normal school at Tshumbe has at present 60 pupils and a two-year course of studies. Since 1917 a preparatory seminary has been established at Luluabourg St. Joseph for the formation of a native clergy; there are at present 11 students, all graduates of the normal school. The Sisters of Charity of Ghent, numbering 21 religious, are established at Luluabourg St. Joseph, Hemptinne St. Benoît, and St. Trudon, where they instruct and educate young girls. The Brothers of Charity, in the service of the government of the colony, direct at Lusambo and Kabinda an official professional school where they teach various European trades to young men. The religious instruction given by the Brothers is under ecclesiastical authority. The vicariate publishes in the native language a small monthly called "Nkuruse" ("The Cross"). The vicar apostolic resides at Luluabourg St. Joseph. The present vicar is Rt. Rev. Auguste De Clercq, born in 1870, ordained 15 July, 1893, missionary at Luluabourg St. Joseph from 1894 to 1897, provincial superior of the missionaries from 1897 to 1906, returned to Belgium where he filled various posts and was named Vicar Apostolic of Upper Kassai and titular Bishop of Thignica in 1918, consecrated 12 January, 1919, and arrived in the vicariate in September of that year.

Katanga, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XVI-68c), in Belgian Congo, Africa. This prefecture, formerly in charge of the Brazilian Congregation of the Benedictines of the Abbey of St. André, is now cared for by the Belgian Congregation of Benedictines, who founded a house at Katanga in 1919. The present and first prefect apostolic is Dom Jean de Hemptinne, appointed in August, 1910. The Catholics number 3000, of whom 500 are Europeans and 2500 are natives. The prefecture apostolic contains 8 missions, 2 secular priests, 12 regulars, 5 lay brothers, 18 Sisters of Charity, 1 hospital for white and colored patients.

The government supports the schools and missions. There is a primary school for European boys and one for girls, and 1 professional school conducted by 14 Salesians. A monumental church is being erected at Elizabethville, the funds for which were donated by the pope, the king, the Belgian government, and by a national subscription in Belgium.

Katanga, NORTHERN, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XVI-68c), in Belgian Congo, Africa, erected in 1911 by dismemberment of the Prefecture Apostolic of Upper Kassai. It was confided to the Fathers of the Holy Ghost, and the first and present prefect apostolic is Rt. Rev. Emile Callewaert, C.S.Sp. The Catholic population comprises 4500 blacks and several European officials and merchants. There are in the prefecture: 3 parishes, 3 missions, 6 churches, 42 stations with catechists, 12 regular priests, 4 lay brothers, 12 Daughters of the Cross, 1 seminary with 11 seminarians, 10 elementary schools with about 500 pupils, schools for catechists with 1000 pupils, 2 refuges for widows and fallen women, 1 hospital for Europeans and 1 for blacks, and 4 orphan asylums (2 for boys, 2 for girls). The hospitals are under the care of the Sisters. Associations among the laity are the Confraternity of the Sacred Heart for men and the Confraternity of the Holy Family for women.

Kearney, DIOCESE OF. See GRAND ISLAND.

Keewatin, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (KEEWATINENSIS; cf. C. E., XVI-49b), suffragan of the Archdiocese of Saint Boniface, was erected 8 August, 1910. It includes the northern half of the two provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and is bounded on the north by the North Pole, on the south by the Archdiocese of Saint Boniface and Winnipeg, on the east by the Diocese of Sault Ste. Marie and the Vicariate Apostolic of Northern Ontario, and on the west by the Archdiocese of Edmonton and Vicariates Apostolic of Athabaska and Mackenzie.

The country, which is sparsely inhabited by Indians, half-breeds, and a few whites, is chiefly forest land of a swampy or very rocky nature and improper for cultivation, but it possesses some valuable mineral resources. It was first visited by pioneer missionaries in the nineteenth century, when Mgr. Provencher, Bishop of St. Boniface, sent Abbé Thibaut to Ile-la-Croix and Abbé Lafleche, later Bishop of Trois Rivières, to explore the Cumberland district (1845). In 1846 Father Taché (later Archbishop of St. Boniface) was sent to join them, and they visited Lake Caribou (1847). These and surrounding missions were subsequently served by Oblate Fathers of the Alberta-Saskatchewan and Manitoba Provinces. Prominent among these, since 1887, was Father Ovide Charlebois, whose successful work during sixteen years ministry at Fort Cumberland led, in 1900, to his nomination as visitor of the Cumberland District Indian missions, and in 1903 to his appointment as director of Duck Lake Industrial School. In 1910, upon the erection of the Vicariate of Keewatin, he was appointed titular Bishop of Bernice and vicar apostolic of the new vicariate with residence at Le Pas.

The vicariate comprises a population of 13,000 Indians, Montagnais, Crees, and Esquimaux, of whom 6000 are Catholic and 7000 non-Catholic, some being pagan, chiefly Esquimaux. The missionary work is carried on by 18 Oblate Fathers of Mary Immaculate, 9 Brothers of Mary Immaculate, 3 secular priests, 14 Grey Nuns (of Montreal), 10 Oblate Sisters of the Sacred Heart and of Mary Immaculate (St. Boniface), and 12 Grey Nuns (St. Hyacinthe). There are 11 churches with 16 out-stations; 1 Indian boarding school at Cross Lake with 10 Oblate Sisters and 95 pupils, 1 at Lac La Plonge with 8 Grey Nuns and 60 pupils; a general hospital under the Grey Nuns with 30 beds; a boarding school at Ile-la-Crosee with 4 Grey Nuns and 40 pupils; a French-English school at Le Pas with 8 Sisters of the Presentation of Mary and 160 pupils, and 2 other day schools at Cumberland and Lac Caribou with 45 pupils under lay teachers.

Kelly, HUGH, M. A., LL.D., merchant, b. in Chicago, Illinois, 24 September, 1858; d. in New York, 30 October, 1908, son of James and Sarah Belle (O'Brien) Kelly, of Sligo County, Ireland. Education: public schools and College of the City of New York. He began his business career in 1871, and was successively in the employ of Gomez and Monjo; Gomez, Rionda and Co.; Rionda, Benjamin and Co., commission merchants, and in 1883 he formed a partnership with Manuel Rionda, engaging in the West Indian trade. In the same year he married Mary E., daughter of Thomas McCabe; associated with Franklin Farrel, establishing the house of Hugh Kelly, sugar merchants of New York and Havana, Cuba, 1884. He became school commissioner and trustee of the city and normal colleges of New York (1895-1898); president of the Maritime Exchange, 1896-1898; State commerce commissioner, 1898-1900; member of the board of managers, Central Islip State Hospital, 1905-1908. He devoted much of his time to the study and research of sugar-cane culture and modern sugar house engineering, and was considered one of the foremost scientific engineers in that industry. At the time of his death he was a member of the Board of Directors of the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA, the United Fruit Co., the Seventh National Bank, the Third National Bank, the North American Trust Co., the City Trust Co., the Oriental Bank, trustee of: the Emigrants' Industrial Savings Bank, St. Patrick's Cathedral, the New York Catholic Protectory, the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum, President of the Parvenir, Central Teresa and Central Ansonia sugar companies, West Indies; a member of: Xavier Alumni Society (president two years), Catholic Club, New York; Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, Catholic Historical Society, Catholic Benevolent Legion, the Educational Alliance, Lebanon Hospital Association, United Trust Co., Boston, and honorary member of the Marine Society of New York, a life member of the Catholic Summer School.

Kentucky (cf. C. E., VIII-620b).—POPULATION AND WEALTH.—According to the federal census for 1920 the population of Kentucky was estimated at 2,416,630, of whom 40,053 were of foreign birth and 235,938 negroes. Thirteen other States have a larger negro population, and the increase in this race is materially less than among the whites. There are 57 Indians, and the number of Chinese and Japanese is probably less than 100 in the entire State.

The 1920 census shows an increase in the population of 126,725, or 5.5 per cent since 1910, making it the fifteenth in the United States in size of population. The largest cities are: Louisville, 234,891; Covington, 57,121; Newport, 29,317; Paducah, 24,735; Owensboro, 17,427; Henderson, 12,160; Lexington, 41,534; Ashland, 14,729.

MATERIAL RESOURCES.—The total assessed valuation of property in 1919 was $1,997,446,000, of which $1,028,128,532 was real estate and $969,318,159 was personalty. The net revenue of the State for that year was $12,324,620. In 1919 there were 129 national banks in Kentucky, with an aggregate capital stock of $16,256,000, an aggregate surplus of $10,102,000, and individual deposits amounting to $131,867,000. There are 446 state banks and trust companies with a capital stock of $19,706,000, an aggregate surplus of $9,239,000, and deposits aggregating $163,921,000.

MINING.—The total mineral output for 1917 amounted in value to $77,177,421.

AGRICULTURE.—Of the total area of Kentucky in 1919, farm lands occupied 86.4 per cent, and of this 64.7 per cent was improved. More than 70 per cent of the farms are operated by owners of the land. In 1919 the total area planted in Indian corn was 3,247,167 acres; in wheat 839,987 acres, in oats 229,464 acres, in hay 2,084,909 acres, in tobacco 640,000 acres. The total value of the principal crops in 1920 was $348,654,000. Kentucky produces nearly all the hemp grown in the United States, but the demand for this product has so far decreased that in 1920 only 721 acres were planted in the State. Kentucky, formerly the first State in the production of tobacco, is now superseded by North Carolina, not only in acreage, but also in value of the product. Kentucky grows more than one-fourth of the total production of the United States. In 1920, 550,000 acres were planted and produced 467,500,000 pounds of tobacco, worth $70,125,000, a great drop from the value of tobacco produced in 1918, $190,236,000.

GRAZING.—On account of the climate the large production of grain, and the excellence of the pasturage, stock raising is very extensively carried on. The total value of live stock in 1920 was $165,000,000; horses, $43,329,000; mules, $29,106,000; horned cattle, $23,896,000; other live stock, $57,257,000.

MANUFACTURES.—A comparison of industrial conditions in 1914 and 1919 shows an increase in the later year of 43.0 per cent in capital invested, 110 in wages paid, and 71 in value of output. There were in the State 3957 manufacturing establishments, 69,300 wage earners, and an invested capital of $276,535,000. The value of products was $395,660,000.

TRANSPORTATION.—There were 4118 miles of railroad in 1919, the principal lines being the Louisville and Nashville, the Chesapeake and Ohio, the Illinois Central, and the Southern. There are over 500 miles of electric railway.

EDUCATION.—In 1921 the total number of students in all departments in the University of Kentucky, at Lexington, was 2284, and there were 110 professors and assistants. In 1916 a State Board of Education was created. The Legislature of 1920 established in each county a county board, consisting of five members, and a county superintendent, which has general supervision over all educational matters in the county. The county is required to levy a tax on the general school district, not exceeding 30 cents on every $100 of the assessed value of property in the district, to meet the requirements of the County Board of Education. According to the last school census the total number of children of school age was 648,307. The actual number enrolled in the public schools was 535,332, and the average daily attendance was 342,669. In 1920 there were 27,981 Catholic children attending the Catholic schools of the State. For public school purposes, exclusive of expenditures for the state university, normal schools, schools for the blind, deaf, and dumb, $3,628,475 were expended in the last fiscal year by the State and local taxing districts.

CHARITIES AND CORRECTION.—In 1920 a state board of charities and corrections for the management of benevolent, correctional, and penal institutions was created. It is composed of eight members, appointed by the governor, and has for its agent a commissioner of public institutions. A house of reform for boys and girls was established at Pine Bluff in 1919.

LEGISLATION DIRECTLY AFFECTING RELIGION.—Clergymen are not required to serve on petit juries, though they may do so; there is no such exemption from services on grand juries. In actual practice militia service is, of course, purely voluntary, but clergymen are not exempt in the event of enforced enlistment. An appropriation of $300, to be distributed by the chief clerks of the Houses of the Legislature, is made for all those who open the sessions of the House and Senate with prayer. By recent legislation, Columbus Day (12 October) and Lincoln's Birthday (12 February) have been made holidays.

RECENT LEGISLATIVE CHANGES.—The Constitution has been recently amended (1) to permit a county to assume a limited indebtedness to the commonwealth for public roads; (2) to provide for an annual tax for government expenses; (3) to make peace officers liable to prosecution in lynching cases; (4) to prohibit the sale and manufacture of liquor for any other than sacramental, medical, scientific, or mechanical purposes. Further changes included the establishment of a Department of Banking, a Department of Public Roads, and a Board of Forestry (1912), the regulation of female employment, the organization of the State Militia, and the establishment of a State Board of Charities (1920).

WILLS AND TESTAMENTS.—A collateral inheritance tax was imposed in 1906, but this law was amended by Act of 1916, providing for a progressive tax on direct and collateral inheritances. There are 5 degrees of relationship, with 5 rates for each, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5% on inheritances not over $25,000. Exemptions vary from $10,000 to $500. On large inheritances the tax is multiplied from 1 to 3 times.

RECENT HISTORY.—A vexing problem in 1915 had to do with the "night-riders," who terrorized the western part of the State under the guise of hunters, whipping men and women, and killing one negro. Their purpose was "to regulate conduct," to replace the blacks with whites in labor, and to fix the prices in the stores of western Kentucky. On 5 November, 1917, the United States Supreme Court declared invalid a race segregation ordinance, forbidding either the blacks or whites from moving into resident blocks in which the majority were of the opposing color. This had the effect of nullifying ordinances of a similar kind in other States. In 1918 women were admitted to the bar. A State tuberculosis sanatorium was provided for in 1920, and the employment of convict labor on roads was allowed. Kentucky was the third State to ratify the prohibition amendment, 14 January, 1918; the woman's suffrage amendment was adopted 6 January, 1919.

Kentucky's contribution to the United States Army during the European War was 75,043 men, or 200 per cent of the force. A summary of casualties among the Kentucky members of the American Expeditionary Force included: deceased, 43 officers and 1393 men; prisoners, 2 officers and 58 men; wounded, 94 officers and 3790 men. The majority of Kentucky men belonged to the 38th Division, quartered at Camp Shelby, Mississippi, and to the 84th Division at Camp Zachary Taylor, in the State. For Catholic statistics see LOUISVILLE, DIOCESE OF; COVINGTON, DIOCESE OF.

Kenya, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., VIII-616c), in the East African Protectorate, situated between 36° 6' and 37° 6' E. long. and 0° and 1° 2' S. lat., was erected into a vicariate 12 July, 1909, and confided to the Missionaries of the Consolata of Turin. The vicariate has a population of 1,000,000. There are 14 stations served by 60 priests, Brothers, and Sisters, with a school in each station. The Fathers have a large industrial establishment at Tusu, 4 orphanages, a college of catechists, a seminary with 60 native students, and a farm at Fort Nyere. The present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Filippo Perlo, titular Bishop of Maronia, b. 1873, ordained 1895, elected and consecrated 1909.

Kerkuk, ARCHDIOCESE OF (CHERCENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-626c), a Chaldean Uniat archdiocese, in Asia Minor. The present archbishop is Very Rev. Hormisdas Stephen Djibri, b. 1870, ordained 1893, vicar general of the patriarchate in 1900, elected to the titular see of Nisibis in 1902, promoted to Kerkuk in 1917, succeeding Very Rev. Messaieh, who died 26 May, 1917. The archbishop has also the title of Archbishop of Suleimanieh. There are in the archdiocese 5000 Catholic Chaldeans of Assyrian origin, numerous schismatics and mussulmans, 15 secular priests, 3 regular priests, 9 churches, 7 parishes, and 9 elementary schools with 20 teachers and 420 pupils. The government aids some of the schools. Notable for his charity was Rev. Echaia, pastor of Ainkawa, who died in 1915.

Kerry and Aghadoc, DIOCESE OF (KERRIENSIS ET AGHADOENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-627b), suffragan of Cashel, Ireland. The present bishop is Most Rev. Charles O'Sullivan, elected 10 November, 1917, succeeding Most Rev. John Mangan, who died 1 July, 1917. Religious orders in the diocese are: Franciscans of the Irish province, Dominicans, Presentation Brothers, Christian Brothers, Presentation Nuns, Sisters of Mercy, Bon Secours Sisters, and Sisters of the Holy Infant Jesus. There are 52 parishes, 50 parish priests, 3 administrators, 72 curates and others, 99 churches, 2 friaries, 5 monasteries, 18 convents, 1 industrial school, 1 mental hospital, 8 convents in workhouses. The population of the diocese in 1911 was 173,861, of whom 169,427 were Catholics and 4434 non-Catholics.

Ketcham, WILLIAM HENRY, director of the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions, b. 1868 in Summer, Iowa; d. 14 November, 1921, in Tucker, Mississippi. Of Puritan ancestry, he became a convert in 1885, while a student at St. Charles College, Grand Coteau, Louisiana. After graduation, in 1888, he entered the theological seminary of Mount St. Mary's of the West, Cincinnati, and in 1892 was ordained priest. He had the happiness of baptizing his mother and sister who followed him into the Church. Father Ketcham's work for the Indian missions began with his appointment as missionary to the Creek and Cherokee tribes, and the Quapaw Agency in what was then Indian Territory. In 1897 he extended his missions to the eastern part of the Choctaw tribes, building churches, and establishing mission centers and boarding schools for boys and girls. After laboring with untiring zeal for ten years amongst the various tribes, baptizing hundreds of Indians, he was appointed Director of the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions, Washington, D. C. He established cordial co-operation between the missionaries and the United States Government officials, and secured the abolition of the Browning rule whereby the choice of a school for an Indian child was taken from the parent and vested in the government agent. The right of Catholic pupils in government schools to attend their own Catholic services was also recognized and proper religious instruction secured for them. He obtained the use of the Indian Tribal funds for the education of Indian children in the mission schools, thereby bringing a revenue of $100,000 a year to Catholic mission contract schools, having an enrolment of 1500 pupils.

In 1919 Father Ketcham was made a domestic prelate by Pope Benedict XV. He was the personal friend of President Taft and President Roosevelt, as well as of many of the Indian chiefs of the United States. He translated a catechism and many hymns into the Choctaw language, and was visiting the missions of this tribe at the time of his death.

Kettle, THOMAS MICHAEL, writer and politician, b. in Co. Dublin, Ireland, in 1880; killed in the World War at Ginchy, France, on 9 September, 1916; son of Andrew J. and Margaret (McCourt) Kettle. He was educated by the Christian Brothers (Dublin) and by the Jesuits at Clongowes Wood College, and later graduated with honors in mental and moral science from University College, Dublin. In 1906 he was admitted to the Irish Bar after winning the Victoria prize. In the same year, while he was editor of "The Nationist," he was elected to Parliament, where he represented East Tyrone until 1910. In 1909 he was called to the chair of National Economics in the National University of Ireland, and in 1913 was elected one of the governors of University College, Dublin. He married Miss Mary E. Sheehy, who like himself belonged to a family that played a prominent part in Ireland's political struggles in the nineteenth century. In 1914 he helped to organize the Irish National Volunteers as a precaution against Sir Edward Carson's threatened rebellion. When the war of 1914 broke out Kettle, believing that the cause of justice called for his support of the Allies, enlisted in the British Army, and as a lieutenant in the Seventh Battalion of the Leinster Regiment fell two years later. He translated "Contemporary Ireland" from the French of Paul Dubois, and "Christianity and the Leaders of Modern Science" from the German of Alois Kneller. His essays, "The Day's Burden," reveal his literary charm and Catholic, patriotic spirit, and place him high among the essayists of the early twentieth century. A short collection of fugitive poems published after his death contain, besides powerful satire, a beautiful sonnet written in the field near Guillemont to his baby daughter.

Kharput (cf. C. E., VIII-633b), an Armenian Uniat diocese, bounded on the east by the Diocese of Mush, on the west by the dioceses of Melitene and Sebastia, on the south by the Diocese of Amida, and on the north by the Diocese of Erzerum. The population of the diocese is 600,000, of whom 100,000 are Christians of all sects and about 4000 Catholics. There are 8 parishes or stations, with 7 churches and 4 chapels, administered by 8 native clergy, 6 Capuchin priests, and several lay brothers. There is no seminary, aspirants to the priesthood being sent to Rome or to Constantinople. The residence of the bishop is at Mansuret-el-Azin. The instruction of young girls is confided to the Armenian Congregation of the Immaculate Conception, the center of which is at Gile, and there are also Franciscan nuns in the diocese. There are 15 Catholic schools with 1200 children, all Catholics with the exception of a few Mohammedans. Two Catholic periodicals are published: one in Armenian, "Luzachavigh," is directed by the native clergy; the other in French, "Joyeux Noël," is directed by the Capuchins.

Khartum, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XVI-84a), in the Sudan. Established as a mission in 1635 it was constituted a vicariate apostolic in 1846 under the name of Sudan, which was changed in 1913 to Khartum, and the boundaries were modified in 1894 and in 1913 when it embraced part of the Prefecture Apostolic of Bahr-el-Gazal. It was confided to the Missionaries of Verona. The population of the vicariate is about 15,000,000, of whom 1027 are Catholics, 72 catechumens, and 3600 Protestants. There are 24 missionary priests, 11 churches and chapels, 12 stations, 10 schools, 5 orphanages, 18 lay brothers of the Institute of Verona, and 31 Sisters. Rev. Anthony Stoppani, Vicar Apostolic of Bahr-el-Gazal, was appointed administrator of the Vicariate Apostolic of Khartum 17 February, 1922.

Ki-an (or KINGAN), VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF; (cf. C. E., III-678a), in province of Kiang-si, China. This province was divided into four vicariates in October, 1920, instead of three (Northern, Southern, and Eastern Kiang-si), as formerly. Ki-an was erected from the two civil prefectures of Northern Kiang-si and one (the episcopal seat) of Southern Kiang-si, with residence at the latter place, Ki-an-fu (Kingan). The vicar apostolic is Msgr. Nicolas Ciceri, titular Bishop of Dausara and vicar apostolic of Southern Kiang-si until the erection of the new vicariate. Bishop Ciceri was born at Bruciano, Italy, 26 May, 1854, entered the Congregation of the Mission 1874, ordained 1878, left for China the same year, named bishop and vicar 1907. The vicariate is entrusted to the Lazarists.

There are in the vicariate 14 churches, 365 missions, 27 stations, 8 convents of Sisters, 14 regular and 10 secular priests, 16,279 Catholics, 3 seminaries with 36 seminarians, 22 schools for boys with 983 pupils, 16 for girls with 389 pupils, 3 high schools with 135 pupils, 1 normal school with 25 pupils, 1 industrial school with 12 pupils, 5 homes for the aged poor with 39 inmates, 2 hospitals, 8 orphanages, 6 refugees, and 2 asylums.

In 1915 the Kan-Kiang overflowed its banks and flooded the district causing great damage to the mission. Many churches, residences, hospitals, and all crops were destroyed. Since then the vicariate has remained in great poverty. All of the European priests (8 French, 3 Italian) were called for war, 4 were sent to Europe, one of whom died returning from the war, another remained in Europe on account of infirmities contracted in the army, and 2 returned to the mission.

Kiang-su, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., VIII-633b), in China, erected, according to papal Brief of 8 August, 1921, by division of the former Vicariate Apostolic of Kiang-nan into the two vicariates of Kiang-su and Ngan-hoei, comprising the respective provinces of those names and confided to the Jesuits. The Vicar Apostolic of Kiang-nan, Rt. Rev. Prosper Paris, S.J., became Vicar Apostolic of Kiang-su, with residence at Shanghai. Before the division the mission (1 July, 1921) had an approximate population of 50,000,000 inhabitants.

and comprised the two provinces of Kiang-su in the east and Ngan-hoei in the west, with 120 sub-prefectures, 60 in each province, grouped in 8 intendants, of which 5 were in Kiang-su and 3 in Ngan-hoei. There were laboring in the mission 208 Jesuits, including 153 priests, of whom 19 were natives, 13 scholastics, of whom 7 were natives, and 41 lay brothers, of whom 23 were natives. The secular priests numbered 61, and there were 35 students at the theological seminary, 27 at the preparatory seminary, and 92 students in preparatory courses at the college of Zi-ka-wei. Religious congregations included 43 Little Brothers of Mary, of whom 3 were natives; 21 Carmelite Nuns, of whom 17 were natives; 134 Helpers of the Holy Souls, of whom 64 were natives, 37 Franciscan Missionaries of Mary, of whom 1 was native; 71 Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul, of whom 42 were natives; 27 Little Sisters of the Poor, of whom 7 were natives, and 237 Presentandines, all of whom were natives. The Presentandines occupied 38 posts in Kiang-su and 51 in Ngan-hoei, a total of 89. There were 279 catechists, 675 men teachers, 846 women teachers, and about 910 native Virgins, who aided the missionaries.

In the year 1920-21 there were in Kiang-su 769 Christian communities; 195,863 Catholics, 27,087 catechumens, 5220 baptisms of adults, 45,944 baptisms of children, 7811 confirmations, 116,716 annual confessions, 113,854 annual communions, 929,042 confessions of devotion, 2,143,837 communions of devotion, 2703 who received Extreme Unction, 1857 marriages, 225 schools for boys with 9387 Catholic and 4612 pagan pupils, 524 schools for girls with 8538 Catholic and 2172 pagan pupils, 458 men teachers, and 722 women teachers. There are 18,000 Catholics in the city of Shanghai, of whom 1000 are Europeans and Americans. The hospice in Shanghai, called the Pou yen dang, is not dependent on the missions, but is supported by donations and alms of Chinese Christians and pagans, especially the latter. The director is a Catholic and he has asked the Sisters of Charity to take charge of the hospice and has erected a chapel there, where many baptisms have taken place. This hospice has at least 1500 boarders, with all kinds of illnesses and infirmities. A priest says daily Mass and administers the sacraments. In 1920 the director of the hospice, Mr. Dohpahong, was made a Knight of St. Gregory the Great by Benedict XV for his devotion to the Church and Catholic works.

Kielce, DIOCESE OF (KIELCENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-636b), suffragan of Warsaw, Poland. After the death of Bishop Kulinski, in 1907, the see was vacant until 1910, when the present bishop, Augustin Losinski, was appointed. The diocesan seminary, which had been closed in 1893 and four of the professors deported to Siberia, was reopened in 1897 and now (1921) has 12 professors and 104 seminarians. The seminary was made larger and more commodious by the erection of new buildings between 1912 and 1921. About 20 new churches have also been erected in the diocese; the largest church in the diocese is to be Holy Cross Church, begun in 1904 and not yet (1922) completed. Kielce contains the old monastery church of Karzowka, formerly belonging to the Benedictine Order. There are 2 hospitals in charge of the Sisters of Charity, one for children and the other the town hospital of St. Alexander, founded in 1745 by Cardinal John Alexis Lipski, Bishop of Cracow. Bartosz Gtowacki, the famous leader of the peasants under Thaddeus Kosciuszko, died in this hospital and is buried in the cemetery near the cathedral.

The Catholic population of the diocese are all of Polish origin, except a few French, Germans, and Russians, not exceeding 3000 in number. During the World War the bishop and priests of the diocese zealously promoted charitable works to relieve the great suffering brought on the whole of Poland by the war. Some of the clergy were harassed by the enemy and others deported to Russia. Here within recent years many religious congregations have been established in the diocese, notably the Salesians, heretofore banned by the Russian government. Many associations of Catholics have been formed, especially for young people and the working classes. These are: Association of Laborers, Young Men's Association, Club of Organists, Club of Firemen, Association of Catholic Women, Association of Christian Mothers, Sodality of the Blessed Virgin, Society of Servants, and others. Among the clergy four great associations have been formed: Association of Mutual Succor of the Priests of the Diocese of Kielce, Union of the Diocesan Clergy, "Praca" (Labor), Homiletic Association. Two diocesan printing presses have been founded, and the popular daily, "Ojczyzna" (Fatherland), and monthly periodical "Przegląd diecezjalny" (Diocese Review) are published on Catholic principles. A large bookshop is distributing Catholic books and newspapers among the people. Recently deceased clergy of note are: Fr. Sawicki, director of the diocesan seminary, and Frs. Michael Staweta and Casimir Bochnis, professors, who for their faith and country were exiled to Siberia by the Russian government in 1893; Fr. Lucian Maciejewski, canon of the cathedral chapter, who during the Russo-Japanese War (1904-5) exercised great zeal in the care of souls in the Russian army and during the World War (1914-18) assiduously cared for the great number of refugees in Petrograd, especially the children. Eustachius Dobiecki, a member of the Imperial Council of Petrograd and a layman of the Diocese of Kielce, also died recently. The diocese, divided into 25 deaneries, has (1921): 1,169,220 Catholics, a few Orthodox, 3560 Protestants, and 103,759 Jews; 258 parish churches, 21 other churches, and 141 chapels; 325 secular clergy, 8 Franciscan Reformats, 6 Salesians, 2 monasteries, 1 convent of Norbertines with 12 nuns, 10 establishments of the Sisters of Charity with 47 Sisters, 1 emerit-house for aged and retired priests, 65 hospitals and orphan asylums, 26 homes, 1 settlement house, 6 grammar and other schools, 1 industrial school with 5 teachers and 60 pupils. All the schools are supported by the government, and Christian institutions permit the ministry of priests and admit Catholic visitors.

Kien-chang, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XVI-84a), in China. In 1916 the vicar apostolic, Mgr. de Guébriant, was transferred to Canton, and the Vicariate Apostolic of Kien-chang remained vacant until the appointment to it in 1918 of Rt. Rev. Joseph Bourgain, b. 1872, ordained 1896, consecrated titular Bishop of Archelais 3 November, 1918. The population of the vicariate is 2,000,000, of whom 7400 are Catholics. There are 13 Europeans priests, 4 native priests, 43 churches and chapels.

Kildare and Leighlin, DIOCESE OF (KILDARENSIS et LEIGHLINENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-637c), suffragan of Dublin, Ireland. The present bishop is Most Rev. Patrick Foley, consecrated 1896. Religious orders in the diocese are the Jesuits, Dominicans, Carmelites, Oblates of Mary Immaculate, Christian Brothers, Brothers of the Christian Schools, Brothers of St. Patrick, Presentation Nuns, Bridgetines, Sisters of Mercy, Sisters of Mary Immaculate, Sisters of St. John of God, and Poor Clares. The population of the diocese (1911) is 147,781, of whom 127,013 are Catholics and 20,768 non-Catholics. There are 49 parishes, 46 parish priests, 3 administrators, 73 curates, 10 priests in colleges, etc., 1 diocesan examiner, 3 military and naval chaplains, total secular clergy 136, total regular clergy 23, total priests 159, churches 164, convents 21.

Kilima-Njaro, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC (cf. C. E., XVI-84b), in East Africa. Kilima, the residence of the vicar apostolic and the most ancient of the missions of the vicariate, was founded in 1891, and numbers about 1500 Catholics and as many catechumens. Kilomeni, the most recent mission, was founded in 1910, and numbers about 1000 catechumens. The vicariate comprises the districts of Tanga, Pangani, Usambara, Pare, Kilimanjaro, Neru, Ufoni, and Trangi. It numbers nine missions with a personnel of 20 Fathers of the Holy Ghost, 12 Brothers, 25 nuns, and more than 4500 Catholics. Rev. Henry Gogarty, C.S.Sp., was appointed administrator of the Vicariate Apostolic of Kilima-Njaro 18 February, 1922.

Killala, DIOCESE OF (ALLADENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-640c), suffragan of Tuam, Ireland. The present bishop is Most Rev. James Naughton, born in 1873, consecrated in 1912, succeeding Bishop Conmy, who died 26 August, 1911. Religious orders in the diocese are the Sisters of Mercy with 3 convents, and Sisters of Jesus and Mary with 1 convent. There are 22 parishes, 20 parish priests, 3 administrators, 19 curates, 4 college priests, 1 chaplain, 44 churches and chapels, and 1 college. The population of the diocese is (1911) 63,238, of whom 60,142 are Catholics and 3096 non-Catholics.

Killaloe, DIOCESE OF (LAONIA; cf. C. E., VIII-641b), suffragan of Cashel, Ireland, is under the administration of Most Rev. Michael Fogarty, D.D., consecrated 4 September, 1904. By the 1911 census the total population of the diocese was 135,646, of whom 128,628 were Catholic and 7018 non-Catholic. There are 57 parishes, 142 secular clergy, 143 parochial and district churches, 2 houses of regular clergy, 13 convents with 198 members in the community, 6 monastic houses with 63 members, 9 secondary schools with an attendance of 495 boys and 214 girls, 290 elementary schools with attendance of 22,202, and 2 industrial schools.

Kilmer, ALFRED JOYCE, poet, essayist, and journalist, b. at New Brunswick, N. J., 6 December, 1886; d. in France 30 July, 1918. He was the son of Frederick Barnett Kilmer, a distinguished chemist, and Annie Ellene (Kilburn) Kilmer. Educated at Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J. (1904-6), and at Columbia University, New York City (A.B., 1908), he became editorial assistant of the Standard Dictionary 1909-12, literary editor of the "Churchman" 1912-13; member of the staff of the New York Times Sunday Magazine and Review of Books from 1913 till his enlistment. In 1908 he married Aline Murray, likewise a poet of distinction. In the latter part of 1913 he became a Catholic and was received into the Church in New York City. He contributed to several periodicals, delivered literary lectures, was the author of "Summer of Love" (1911), "Trees and Other Poems" (1915), "Main Street and Other Poems" (1917), "Literature in the Making" (1917), "The Circus and Other Essays" (1916), and compiled "An Anthology of Catholic Poets" (1917).

His poetical work was characterized by a deep simplicity and straightforwardness. He took the commonplace and spun out of it golden strands. As a soldier in the famous 69th Regiment of New York City he saw service in France during the World War, and was killed in action near the Ourcq.

Kilmore, DIOCESE OF (KILMORENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-642d), includes a Catholic population of 102,254 (1911 census) and a non-Catholic population of 22,045, showing a decrease of some 7000 Catholics since the previous census in 1901. The former bishop, Rt. Rev. Andrew Boylan, died 25 March, 1910, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Patrick Finegan, who now fills the see. He was born at Corluggan on 16 August, 1858, and elected to the Diocese of Kilmore on 4 July, 1910, being consecrated 11 September of the same year.

During recent years there has been considerable activity in building and remodeling throughout the diocese, and an imposing site has been obtained for a new cathedral, but its erection awaits the collection of sufficient funds. Six of the clergy of the diocese served as chaplains during the World War, and since then two others have joined the Maynooth Mission to China.

There are in the diocese 115 priests, 42 parishes, 90 churches, and 100 nuns. The Marist Brothers have established a Juniorate at Bailieborough, and the Sisters of Mercy have charge of 3 public hospitals. Elementary education is provided by 275 schools, which are supported by the state and which were attended by 16,110 children in 1920. A good course in religious instruction is given, the parish priest being manager of all schools in his parish, and an annual examination is held by diocesan examiners. St. Patrick's College, with an attendance of 140 students, provides secondary education. The Diocese of Kilmore took its part in preventing the objectionable Education Bill of 1920 from becoming a law. The diocese is dependent on Armagh, with residence at Cavan.

Kimberley, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (KIMBERLIENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-645b), suffragan of Perth, Australia. The area of the vicariate is 120,000 square miles. It was confided to the Trappists in 1890, and they abandoned the mission in 1891 and were replaced by the Pallotines, who in turn were replaced in 1910 by the Benedictines of New Norcia, and they in 1920 by the Redemptorists. The present administrator of the vicariate is Rt. Rev. John Creagh, C.S.S.R., appointed in 1920, replacing Abbot Catalan, of New Norcia. The Catholic population of the vicariate is 5000. There are at Beagle Bay the residence of the vicar, 4 priests, 9 Brothers, 11 Sisters, and 110 children in 2 Catholic schools.

Kimberley in South Africa, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (KIMBERLIENSIS IN AFRICA MERIDIONALIS; cf. C. E., VIII-645c), formerly called Kimberley in Orange, the name having been officially changed by decree of 28 November, 1918. The vicariate comprises the whole of the Orange Free State, Griqualand West, and Bechuanaland south of the Tropic of Capricorn. The population consists approximately of 5270 Catholics, 224,000 Europeans of non-Catholic sects, 371,000 natives, 5000 Jews, making a total of 605,270. Bloemfontein, the capital of the Orange Free State, contains 17,516 Europeans and 36,113 natives and colored persons. The smaller towns of the vicariate are visited from the large centers, the isolation of small groups of Catholics in these smaller towns causing the clergy much anxiety. The present administrator of the vicariate apostolic is Rt. Rev. Charles Cox, O.M.I., titular Bishop of Dioclea and Vicar Apostolic of the Transvaal, succeeding Rt. Rev. Matthew Gaughren, O.M.I., who died 1 June, 1914. There are in the vicariate 9 Oblate Fathers, 1 retired Oblate Father, 2 secular priests, 1 military chaplain, retired, 15 Christian Brothers, 3 Oblate Brothers, and 130 Sisters of the Holy Family of Nazareth, of Mercy, of the Holy Cross, of Notre Dame, and Dominican Nuns. There are 18 churches and chapels, 2 semi-public oratories, 1 college under the Christian Brothers, with 103 boarders and 385 day scholars, and 16 convent schools, with 537 boarders and 1479 day pupils, making a total of 2504 pupils, of whom 924 are Catholics. The Christian Brothers will, in 1923, build a college at Bloemfontein, the site for the purpose having been granted by the municipality. The Sisters of Nazareth in 1921 opened a new building on their premises in order to make room for more inmates, their work for orphan children and the aged poor being much appreciated. There are flourishing native missions at Tawnags and Bloemfontein, a native school at Kroonstad, an Indian school at Kimberley, and a colored school (Indians and others) at Mafeking. The Sacred Heart Confraternity, Children of Mary Sodality, and St. Vincent de Paul Society are established in the vicariate.

King, HARRIET ELEANOR BAILLIE HAMILTON, English poetess, d. on 10 May, 1920, in London, at the age of eighty; daughter of Admiral W. A. and Lady Baillie Hamilton. From early life Miss Hamilton displayed her interest in the welfare of humanity and her enthusiasm after meeting Mazzini in London found expression in "The Disciples," a work which led to her marriage with its publisher, Henry Samuel King, J.P., of Cligwell, Essex. In her special work for the poor she met Cardinal Manning, who received her into the Catholic Church. By her poetry Mrs. King has won a permanent place in English literature. "The Hours of the Passion" are reminiscent of the seventeenth century. Among her other writings are "Aspromonte"; "A Book of Dreams"; "Ballads of the North," and "Letters and Reminiscences of Mazzini."

Kingan, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF. See KI-AN.

Kingston, ARCHDIOCESE OF (KINSTONIENSIS OR REGIOPOLITANA; cf. C. E., VIII-658d), in Canada. On 6 September, 1910, Most Rev. C. H. Gauthier, Archbishop of Kingston, was transferred to Ottawa and the present archbishop, Rt. Rev. Michael Joseph Spratt, D. D., became his successor, being consecrated 30 November, 1911. During the World War this diocese was distinguished by having one of the three chaplains which it supplied for military service, Capt. Rev. J. F. Nicholson, decorated with the Military Cross. Father Nicholson is now Dean of Regiopolis College.

The Catholic population of the archdiocese approximates 45,000, of whom a great number are of Irish descent. The diocese comprises 40 parishes, 40 churches, 23 missions, 56 secular priests and 8 Redemptorists, 300 nuns, and 30 seminarians. The various educational institutions include: 1 college for men with 5 professors and 150 students, 2 high schools with 12 teachers and an attendance of 200 girls, 1 academy with 6 teachers and an attendance of 285 girls, 54 elementary schools with 250 teachers and a total attendance of 47,500. In addition to these, St. Mary's College for boys at Brockville, Ontario, is established under the direction of the Redemptorist Fathers. The Hotel Dieu and orphan asylum are in charge of the Hospital Sisters of St. Joseph, and two other hospitals and a Home of Providence are also maintained by the diocese in the interest of charity. All the elementary schools are aided by the Government. The Priests' Eucharistic League is organized among the clergy, and the Holy Name Society, Knights of Columbus, Ancient Order of Hibernians, Catholic Men's Benevolent Association are established among the laity. The diocese publishes the "Canadian Freeman," a Catholic weekly.

Kitson, SAMUEL Z., sculptor, b. at Huddersfield, Yorkshire, England, 1 January, 1848; d. at New York on 9 November, 1906. In his boyhood he showed unmistakable signs of talent in art and at the age of sixteen went to Leeds, where he studied anatomy and architectural sculpture for five years. In 1871 he went to Rome, entering the Royal Academy of St. Luke's, where during his two years' study he won four prizes—two for bas-reliefs, a third for the study of the Barberini Faun, and a fourth for modeling from life. He won the Papal prize, a gold medal. In 1873 Kitson opened a studio in the Holy City. His first commission was for a life size statue of "Rebecca at the Well," and soon thereafter he received commissions from Sir Thomas Brooke for "Nydia," and from Lord Truro for the "Greek Spinning Girl," then followed "Abel Waiting for the Blessing," "Young Ambition," "Miriam," "Hagar and Ishmael," and "Diana." While in Rome he did a marble life-sized "David" for Sir Edward Acroft. In 1879 Kitson made a tour of the United States and Canada. He produced "Ole Bull" and "Longfellow," after which he returned to Rome. A little later he was called to the United States to execute the sculptural decorations of the W. K. Vanderbilt residence in New York, and panels of "Music" and "The Drama" for the Marquand home, together with three Greek busts in marble. Then followed the sterling example of character portraiture from life, "Samuel J. Tilden." In 1885 he modeled the north frieze of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument at Hartford, Connecticut, which has been termed a "Miniature Gettysburg." In 1884 he had married Miss Meredith of New York, a fellow-sculptor, who became his helper and inspiration in all his later work. About this time he opened a studio at Boston, where his later work was done. Then followed a series of notable creations: General Sheridan for Arlington Cemetery, busts of Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop Williams, John Boyle O'Reilly, and a number of the New England clergy. While in Rome Kitson had been attracted by the ceremonies of the Catholic Church, and during a visit to Washington, in connection with the work of the Sheridan monument, he applied to Father Clark, S.J., for instruction, and was received into the Church at Boston, 8 December, 1889. His busy life was productive of such splendid spiritual compositions as "Christ, the Light of the World," "The Sacred Heart," "Our Lady of Lourdes," and a marble bust of Christ, executed for the late Mrs. Thomas F. Ryan, of New York. This latter was carved from a block of the finest Carrara marble. His large figure of "Christ, the Light of the World" is placed before the entrance of St. Joseph's Seminary, Yonkers, on an eminence overlooking a wonderful vista of country.

Kiu-kiang, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., VIII-634a), in China, formerly the Vicariate Apostolic of Northern Kiang-si, which comprised 6 civil prefectures: Kin-Kiang-fu, residence of the vicar apostolic, Nan-chang-fu, Nan-kang-fu, Jui-chow-fu, Lin-kiang-fu, and Yuan-chow-fu, with approximately 9,000,000 inhabitants and an area of 24,040 square miles. In spite of persecutions and misfortunes the number of Catholics in the vicariate had steadily increased since 1885, the date of its foundation, as follows: 3211 Catholics and 744 catechumens in 1885; 5382 and 4098 in 1900; 15,063 and 7972 in 1910; 31,927 and 13,066 in 1921. By the Apostolic Letter, "Divinae Sponsiones," of 25 August, 1920, Pope Benedict XV established in Kiang-si the new Vicariate Apostolic of Kan-chow, formed from two-thirds of the former Vicariate of Southern Kiang-si, and confided it to the Lazarists of the Eastern Province of the United States. To the former Vicariate of Southern Kiang-si, thenceforth known as the Vicariate Apostolic of Ki-ngan, the Holy Father attached the territory of the two civil prefectures of Lin-kiang-fu and Yuan-chow-fu, detached from Northern Kiang-si, which was thenceforth called Kiu-kiang. Thus diminished, the new Vicariate Apostolic of Kiu-kiang comprises (1921) 17,553 square miles and a population of approximately 6,000,000. Having ceded to the Vicariate Apostolic of Ki-ngan 3331 Catholics and 1400 catechumens, it had remaining (1921) 28,596 Catholics and 11,666 catechumens. There are 14 European priests and 14 Chinese priests, 25 Daughters of Charity, and a diocesan congregation of Chinese Sisters, founded in 1907 by Mgr. Ferrant, under the name of Virgins of Our Lady of Good Counsel, and comprising 25 members with 4 houses. A large hospital has been erected at Nan-chang, the care of the sick being inaugurated there in February, 1921, by four Daughters of Charity and a French doctor. A college, confided to the Marist Brothers, is also to be built at Nan-chang, and a central seminary of philosophy and theology for the four vicariates of Kiang-si will be erected at Kiu-kiang. The present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Louis-Elisée Fatiguet, C. M., b. 1855, ordained 1881, consecrated titular Bishop of Aspendus 11 June, 1911, appointed Vicar Apostolic of Northern Kiang-si in 1911 and of Kiu-kiang in 1920. He succeeded Mgr. Ferrant, who died 5 November, 1910. The Catholic population of the vicariate is all Chinese except 14 Europeans in the port of Kiu-kiang. Two missionaries were mobilized in France during the World War and one of them decorated with the croix de guerre.

The vicariate comprises (1921) 22 parishes; 17 churches; 142 chapels; 31 missions; 481 Christian communities; 21 Daughters of Charity with 3 convents; 25 Chinese Virgins of Our Lady of Good Counsel with 4 convents; 9 secular priests; 19 regular priests; 1 seminary with 7 philosophy and theology students and 27 in preparatory courses; 1 college for boys with 2 teachers and 14 pupils; 1 college for girls with 2 teachers and 21 pupils; 1 normal school with 2 professors and 18 pupils; 33 elementary schools, with 50 teachers and 543 pupils; retreats given to 629 people during the year; 3 orphanages for girls with 297 orphans; 4 hospitals caring for 1849; 2 homes for old people with 68 inmates; 107 catechumenates with 1850 catechumens; 2 crèches with 40 children; 3 industrial schools with 270 girls; 6 associations and confraternities among the laity.

Knights of Columbus in Peace and War (cf. C. E., VIII-870d).—When the United States of America declared war against Germany in April, 1917, the Knights of Columbus, through their Supreme Board of Directors, passed the following resolution:

"The Supreme Board of Directors of the Knights of Columbus, at a regular meeting, held the 14th day of April, 1917, in the City of Washington, realizing that the crisis confronting our country calls for the active co-operation and patriotic zeal of every true citizen, hereby reaffirms the devotion of 400,000 members of the Order in this country to our Republic and its laws, and pledges their continued and unconditional support to the President and the Congress of the Nation, in their determination to protect its honor and its ideals of humanity and right." In keeping with the spirit of this resolution the Knights of Columbus offered the services of the Order as a unit to the Government in war work. An appeal was issued to the public for $1,000,000 for this purpose, and an assessment of $2.00 per capita levied against its membership. In time the war fund in response to this appeal far exceeded the expectations of the Knights, amounting in the end to something over $14,000,000. Later on the Knights of Columbus participated in the fund from the general "drive" made jointly by the seven officially recognised welfare organizations doing war work, its share, out of $170,000,000, being $30,000,000, which in turn was shared with the National Catholic War Council. The first task was the establishment of a Knights of Columbus service in the United States and its insular possessions. Secretaries and chaplains were placed in all the camps and cantonments; buildings were erected and community centers were established. In all 260 buildings were erected, 1134 secretaries were placed, and 309 camps were operated. Headquarters were established in Paris for the Order's overseas activities, with branches in London covering the British Isles, and after the Armistice in Coblenz, for the Army of Occupation. The number of secretaries sent overseas was 1075; 36 chaplains and 126 clubs were established in camps along the front, and among the various military divisions. The work of the Knights at home and overseas won the highest encomiums from both soldiers, commanding officers, and Governments themselves. Its motto "Everybody Welcome, Everything Free," was exemplified in every respect. After peace was effected, the Knights immediately devoted their energies and their resources to reconstruction work. Employment bureaus to the number of 254 were opened, and in the first twelve months 300,000 service men were placed in employment, 498 scholarships in colleges were given to service men, 150,000 service men and 1100 service women were enrolled in 48 schools then established for that purpose. By August, 1920, there were 150 Knights of Columbus Schools in operation with an attendance of 500,000 pupils. The Knights have devoted the $7,000,000 of their war fund to this educational work which, like the employment work, is absolutely free to all former service men.

Knin, DIOCESE OF (TINNENSIS OR TINIANENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV-736b), in Dalmatia, suffragan of Kalocsa. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Joseph Lanyi, born in Nemét-Prona, Slovakia, in 1868, ordained in 1891, named a private chamberlain 8 October, 1900, prothonotary apostolic 1 April, 1903, became abbe of Holy Savior of Leber and canon of Gross-Wardein, and was appointed bishop 7 November, 1906. The "Annuario Pontificio" places this see among the titular sees. No statistics are now published for it.

Knöpfler, Alois, Church historian, b. at Schomberg, Württemberg, on 29 August, 1847; d. in July, 1920. He studied at Tübingen and was ordained in 1874, and devoted himself thereafter to the cause of education. He was editor of "Kirchengeschichtlichen Studien" from 1891, and of "Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchenhistorischen Seminar München" from 1899; and translated Röhrbacher's "Histoire de l'Eglise" into German. His "Lehrbuch der Kirchengeschichte" has been very widely used by students. Among his other writings are "Die Kelchbewegung in Bayern unter Albrecht V." 1891; "Johann Ad. Möhler, Gedenklblätter," 1896; "Das Vaterunser im Geiste der ältesten Kirchenvater in Bild und Wort."

Königgrätz, DIOCESE OF. See HRADEC KRALOVE.

Kopp, GEORG, Cardinal, b. at Duderstadt, in the Diocese of Hildesheim, on 25 July, 1837; d. at Breslau on 4 March, 1915. Like Pius XI, Cardinal Kopp had the distinction of being the son of a weaver. After studying at Duderstadt and later at Hildesheim, he had entered the employment of a telegraph company (1856-58), when he heard the call to the ecclesiastical state and he became a priest in 1862. In 1871 Father Kopp was made Vicar General of Hildesheim. The Kulturkampf was just then inaugurated, and Mgr. Kopp set himself to stop its ravages. In 1878 Bismarck found that he made a mistake and began to approach Leo XIII about filling a number of vacant dioceses and Mgr. Kopp was named for Fulda. Mgr. Kopp's opposition was so marked that Bismarck frequently consulted him. In 1886 the bishop was a member of the Prussian House of Lords and was so successful in getting rid of the remnants of the Falk Laws that Bishop Kopp was transferred to the Diocese of Breslau, one of the most extensive of Europe. It embraced Silesia, Brandenburg, Pomerania and vast territories in Austria. He occupied that see for twenty-seven years; repaired the damages wrought by the Kulturkampf; supplied the vacant parishes with priests; created industrial centers; founded the Seminary of Wednare and called in the religious orders. He figured largely in all social movements, and was a staunch upholder of the papacy. He insisted on keeping the guilds strictly Catholic and so opposed the Cologne movement in the opposite direction. He was elevated to the Cardinalate in 1904, which brought him into collision with the Italian Government in its attempt to secularize St. Agnes extra muros. He had celebrated his jubilee in 1912 and received as a tribute of admiring affection an album with the photographs of 650 churches, charitable institutions and monasteries, founded by him in the Diocese of Breslau during his episcopate.

Köslce (Hungarian KASSA, German KASCHAU), DIOCESE OF (CASSOVIENSIS; cf. C. E., III-407c), suffragan of Eger. Since the new division of territory subsequent on the World War, this diocese is divided between Czechoslovakia and Hungary, with 152 parishes in the former, and 47 in the latter. The government of Czechoslovakia, however, wishes to have the boundaries changed in order to make the limits of the diocese coincide with those of the republic. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. Augustin Fischer-Colbrie, was born in Zseliz 1863, ordained 1886, appointed titular Bishop of Domitopolis 16 October, 1904, and coadjutor to Bishop Bubics of Cassovia, whom he succeeded upon his retirement 6 August, 1906.

The latest census of this diocese was taken in 1900, and counts the Latin Catholics at 307,186; Greek Catholics, 160,527; Oriental Greeks, 15; Protestants, 898,727; Jews, 55,475. Statistics of 1920 credit the diocese with 197 parishes, to which 2 have been added since, 84 vicariates, 310 secular and 62 regular clergy.

Kottayam, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XVI-50a), in India, comprises all the churches and chapels of Suddhist Syrians on the Malabar Coast. The present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Mar Alexander Chulaparambil, b. 1877, ordained 1906, named titular Bishop of Busiris and Vicar Apostolic of Kottayam 16 July, 1914, and consecrated 1 November, 1914, succeeding Rt. Rev. Mathew Makil, who died 26 January, 1914. There are in the vicariate 29,530 Catholics; 30 secular priests, 12 seminarians, 62 churches or stations, 19 native Sisters of the Third Order of the Visitation and 16 postulants, 5 convents, 14 parochial schools, 4 English schools for boys, 1 English school for girls, 17 grant-in-aid lower grade vernacular schools for boys, 1 higher grade and 2 lower grade vernacular schools for girls, 1 orphanage, and catechumenates.

Koudelka, JOSEPH M., b. at Chlistovo, Bohemia, on December 8, 1852; d. in Superior on June 26, 1921. His collegiate education was received at the College Klattan in his native country; in 1868 he came to the United States, and soon after entered Saint Francis Seminary at Milwaukee. He was ordained to the priesthood on October 8, 1875, and he served as pastor of several churches in the Diocese of Cleveland before his appointment as titular Bishop of Germanicopolis and auxiliary of that see on November 29, 1907. He was consecrated by Bishop Horstmann on February 25, 1908, and he was transferred to Milwaukee as auxiliary bishop on September 4, 1911. He was appointed Bishop of Superior on August 6, 1913. Bishop Koudelka was the author of several readers for Bohemian parochial schools, and also of a "Short History of the Catholic Church for Schools" (in German) (1905).

CORRIGAN, Chronology of the Catholic Hierarchy in The Catholic Historical Review, III 20.

Krishnagar, DIOCESE OF (KISHNAGRENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-702a), in India, suffragan of Calcutta. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Santino Taveggia, born 1855, consecrated 1906. The Catholics of the diocese (August, 1921), number 13,981, besides 1723 catechumens. With the exception of about 500 Eurasians and Europeans, all the Catholics are native converts. Working in the diocese are 16 Foreign Missionaries of Milan, residing in 9 stations, and 19 Sisters of Charity of Loreto (Italy), with 4 houses. There are: 25 churches and 101 mud huts in the villages which are used as places of worship, as shelters for the visiting missionary, and sometimes as schoolrooms; 3 orphanages for native boys and 3 for native girls, with over 200 children entirely supported by the mission and under the direction of the Sisters of Charity; 60 mission schools attended by 1090 Christian and pagan children; 1 public hospital and 3 mission free dispensaries, 2 homes for widows and catechumens, and 1 home for incurables under the Sisters of Charity.

Krizevacke, DIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., IV-490c), (Græco-Slavonic Rite), in Croatia. The events of recent years have made great changes in the diocese. The parishes are at present 30 in number and are now known as either Croatian or Ruthenian, all included in what is to-day called The Kingdom of Jugoslavia. Some of the former Ruthenian parishes have been placed under the jurisdiction of the Apostolic Administrator in Bosnia, and some of the Bulgarian parishes in southern Serbia under the Archbishop of Scopia. Nothing definite is as yet determined with regard to the disposition of these. The question of two parishes now in Jugoslavia and formerly under the Bishop of Lugos also remains to be finally passed upon. Between the years 1908-12 five new parishes were erected within the diocese.

The Catholic population is now (1921) 40,000, speaking either Croatian or Ruthenian. There are 43 secular priests, 44 churches, 30 of which have resident priests, 2 chapels, 1 monastery for men, 2 convents for women, 1 seminary, and 1 college for women with 20 students. A Society of Saint Joseph exists for the clergy. The Sisters of the Order of Saint Basil the Great and the Servants of the Blessed Virgin Mary have recently been established within the diocese.

Among the recently deceased are the following clergy and laity of note: Andreas Labos (d. 3 January, 1918), parish priest, greatly esteemed by the Ruthenian people; Andreas Labos the younger (d. 1920), parish priest; Nicolaus Radic (d. 25 January, 1918), parish priest, held in great respect among the Croats; Elias Hranilovic (d. 25 July, 1921), parish priest, esteemed throughout the diocese; Andreas Segedi (d. 12 February, 1920), assessor of the diocesan consistory, distinguished for his services to sacred music in the diocesan seminary; Tadeus Sniaklas (d. 8 June, 1914), an eminent scholar, professor at the University of Zagreb, prominent as a Catholic and Croatian patriot, the author of historical and other works.

Mgr. Denis Nyardi, born in Krizevacke in 1874, was elected titular bishop of Abila and apostolic administrator of Krizevacke 5 December, 1914, and transferred as bishop of the see 22 April, 1922, succeeding Mgr. Drohobetzki, resigned.

Krk (VEGLIA), DIOCESE OF (VEGLENSIS; cf. C. E., XV-321a), in Istria, Yugoslavia, suffragan of Zagreb. Parallel to the Dinaric Alps are the rocky islands of Krk, Rab, and Pag (with the Plavnik and Irstenik reefs). Separated from the mainland by a deep though narrow strait, Krk, Rab, and two parishes in Pag form the Diocese of Krk. The largest island is Krk (Greek Kurykta), which probably had a bishop in the fourth century, though the first bishop whose name is known is Vitalis, who occupied the see about 1000. The see of Rab is as ancient as that of Krk, its first bishop commemorated by history being Ticianus, who was present at the Synod of Solin (Salona) in 530. The last Bishop of Rab, Galzigna, died in 1822 and his diocese was merged in that of Krk. The Diocese of Krk originally a part of the Croatian mainland and the islands of Krk, Cres (Cherso), Losinj (Lossin), etc. The Diocese of Osor, for the islands of Cres and Losinj, was probably founded at the Synod of Solia (530). The first bishop commemorated is Laurentius who was present at the Council of Nicca (787). The last Bishop of Osor, Rakmaric, died in 1815 and the diocese was again united to the Diocese of Krk. By the Treaty of Rapallo (1920) the islands of Cres, Losinj, and the minors came under Italy's dominion and are now temporarily administered by the Apostolic Administrator of Rijeka (Fiume). Following political events, the Diocese of Krk has been successively suffragan of Solin-Split (Spoleto), Zadar (Zara), Grado (1155), Venice (1450), again Zadar (1820), then Gorcia (Gorizia) in 1831, and finally (since Rapallo) Zagreb. The diocese, as now reduced, contains 28,000 inhabitants, all Catholics. There are: 26 parishes, 3 monasteries of nuns, 5 convents of religious orders of men, 1 convent of Sisters, 1 training school with 3 teachers and 65 students, 28 elementary schools with 57 teachers and 3200 pupils, and 1 asylum. An association of the clergy is called "Svećenicka Zajednica," and there are 121 lay confraternities and associations of adults and boys and girls. At present the see is vacant. The last bishop, Rt. Rev. Anthony Mahnic, born 1850, died at Zagreb, 14 December, 1920, was one of the most representative figures in Yugoslavia. As professor in the theological seminary at Goriza, he was the founder of the Catholic movement among the Slovenes. Coming to the see of Krk he did the same work among the Croats. The whole Catholic Organization in Yugoslavia recognizes him as its founder. He was the deepest philosopher of the time in his country, founded and in part directed various ecclesiastical reviews, and was one of the first to struggle for his people's liberty and the union of the South-Slavs. During the Italian occupation of his diocese (1918-21) he strenuously defended religious and national liberty and was therefore interned in Frascati. He was set at liberty in March, 1920, but died some months later, in his seventy-first year.

Kumbakonam, DIOCESE OF (KUMBAKONENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-710c), in India, is entirely on British territory, although suffragan to the Archdiocese of Pondicherry, the capital of French India. Kumbakonam is a town of 68,000 inhabitants, while the total population of the whole diocese was counted at 3,350,000 in 1919, and in 1921 the Catholic population numbered 103,118 Tamilians.

The first bishop, Rt. Rev. H. M. Bottero, consecrated 30 November, 1899, died 21 May, 1913, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. M. A. Chapuis, consecrated titular Bishop of Castoria and made coadjutor to Bishop Bottero 25 July, 1911.

During the World War 13 of the clergy of this diocese did service in France and Belgium, and 2 in Macedonia, and of these 2 were killed in action, 2 wounded, 1 awarded the médaille militaire, and 3 the croix de guerre.

The language generally used in this territory is Tamil, a Dravidian language with many words borrowed from Sanscrit; the educated people, however, also speak English. By present statistics there are 40 parishes, 25 churches, 470 chapels, 1115 mission stations, 47 secular priests, 41 European and 89 native Sisters, and 39 seminarians. Besides the college, which is under the management of an Indian gentleman, assisted by a staff of native teachers, there are 3 high school and 65 elementary schools with 183 teachers and 3664 pupils, and 1 industrial school with 5 teachers and 51 pupils. A school for girls, known as the "big school," is under the management of the mission with a staff of 11 native Sisters. About 50 of the schools are aided by the Government. The charitable institutions comprise 1 home for the aged with 77 inmates, 1 home for lepers with 202 inmates, 1 refuge for women with 36 inmates, and 1 nursery with 96 children. The Apostolic Union and League of Priestly Holiness are established among the clergy, and 5 temperance societies among the laity.

Kurth, GODFRON, historian, b. at Arlon, Belgium, 11 May, 1847; d. at Asche, on 4 January, 1916. He went to Louvain for his higher studies and there laid the foundation of that painstaking and accurate scholarship and fascinating literary expression which characterize him as a writer. He is credited with having introduced into Belgium a new school of historical and apologetic exposition. His favorite theme was the Middle Ages, especially the rôle his country played during that period. He co-operated with Henri Joly in his "Psychologie des Saints." His "Beginnings of Christianity" went through six editions. In fifteen years 10,000 copies of his "Church at the Turning Points of History" were sold. He was endowed with the gift of eloquence and was in constant demand as a lecturer. He was the founder and editor of the "Archives belges." Among his other important writings are "La Frontière linguistique en Belgique," "Histoire poétique des Mérovingiens," "Clois," "Notger de Liège et la civilisation au X^e siècle," and "La Cité de Liège au moyen âge."

Kwango, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., VIII-711d), in Belgian Congo, Africa. The center of the mission is at Bergeyck St. Ignace (Ki-Santu), where there is a large Gothic church, the dwelling of the missionaries, the convent of the Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur, a normal school for catechists, workshops, and a printing press. There are in the prefecture: 4 stations and 300 fermes-chapelles, 13 Jesuit missionaries and 8 lay Brothers, 17 Sisters of Notre Dame of Namur, 3 churches, and 16 chapels. The Catholics number 2778. The present prefect apostolic is Rt. Rev. Stanislas de Vos, S.J., elected 25 September, 1911.

Kwang-si, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., VIII-712a), in China, erected into a vicariate apostolic 6 April, 1914, and confided to the Foreign Missions of Paris. The present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Maurice-François Duceœur, M.E., b. 1878, ordained 1901, named titular Bishop of Barbalissus and Prefect Apostolic of Kwang-si in 1910, consecrated 1911, named vicar apostolic in 1914. The establishment of the Sisters of St. Paul of Chartres has been closed for lack of personnel, the last Sisters having left Lung-chow, 5 February, 1918, for the hospital of Hanoi. The population of the diocese is 9,000,000, of whom 4716 are Catholics and 3216 catechumens. There are 26 missionary priests, 4 native priests, 23 churches, 27 chapels, 47 oratories, 156 stations, a theological and preparatory seminary with 16 students, 31 schools for boys, 10 schools for girls, 2 colleges, 11 orphanages, 5 hospitals, 17 Little Brothers of Mary, 19 Chinese nuns.

Kwei-chou, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., VIII-713d), in China. The present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. François-Lazare Seguin, M.E., b. 1868, ordained 1891, vicar coadjutor and titular Bishop of Pinara 1907, vicar apostolic in 1913, succeeding Rt. Rev. Mgr. Guichard, deceased. There were thirty odd missionaries mobilized in 1914, all of whom returned to the mission in the first months of the war, except four, of whom three returned in 1919 and the fourth died of exhaustion in the service of the wounded. During recent years there has been a recrudescence of brigandage in Kwei-chou, a cholera epidemic, and a terrible famine which still continues. The population of the vicariate is 9,000,000, of whom 34,034 are Catholics and about 35,000 catechumens. There are 50 parishes or districts divided into 250 stations; 123 churches and chapels, 40 missionary priests and 29 native priests, 2 preparatory schools with 50 pupils, 1 preparatory seminary with 19 students, 1 theological seminary with 23 students, 44 elementary schools for boys with 1062 pupils, 41 elementary schools for girls with 609 pupils, 3 orphanages, a hospital which has neither medicines, nurses, or remedies, but is merely a refuge for the sick poor, 84 of whom have received baptism in articulo mortis.

L

Labor and Labor Legislation (cf. C. E., VIII-719b).—The most important developments in American labor legislation during the last decade relate to workmen's compensation, child labor, and the adjustment of industrial disputes. In the great majority of our States the old employer's liability statutes and practices have been supplanted by laws which enable an injured workman or his heirs to obtain compensation without a lawsuit and through administrative commissions. The word "compensation," instead of "liability," connotes a complete change in both the theory and the practice of dealing with occupational injuries. Under the old system the employer was "liable" for such injuries, but only when he was at fault. In the present system the industry is made accountable, whether or not any blame attaches to the employer. Hence the employee is not required to show that he did not mean to assume the risk of injury, nor that his "fellow servants" are free from blame, nor (as a rule) that his injury was not due to his own negligence. All that is necessary is to establish the fact of injury. The new conception is that the majority of accidents are not anybody's "fault," but are, in the existing circumstances, unavoidable. Hence the injured man receives "compensation" instead of "damages," the extent of the injury determining the amount of compensation. In some of the States the rates of compensation are still too low, but even in these States the injured workers secure a far greater indemnity than was possible under the old system.

The child labor laws have been improved in many States. At present not more than half a dozen States are grievously backward in this respect. To meet their obstinacy two statutes were enacted by Congress. The first forbade the shipment in interstate commerce of the products of establishments employing children under fourteen years of age. This law was declared unconstitutional by five of the nine justices of the United States Supreme Court. The second national statute imposes a tax of ten per cent on the net profits of such industrial establishments. Its constitutionality has not yet been determined.

The National War Labor Board was composed of six persons representing the employers of the country, an equal number representing employees, with an impartial person as chairman of each group. The board possessed effective powers of investigation, but its decisions were not compulsory. Nevertheless, it was able to prevent the occurrence of any important strike or lockout. Unfortunately it was abolished by Congress a few months after the armistice.

The Railroad Labor Board is a legal body, consisting of three men representing the companies, three representing the employees, and three representing the general public. While it has adjusted many minor disputes and prevented one great strike, it lacks an industrial code, or set of principles, such as that provided for the guidance of the National War Labor Board.

The Kansas Industrial Court is a tribunal of three judges having power to adjust all disputes in four industries, namely, food, fuel, clothing, and transportation. Its decisions are legally binding upon both parties. Nevertheless, it has not prevented all strikes, nor proved satisfactory even to all employers. Most probably it will not be copied by many other States, nor long survive in its present form in Kansas.

Aside from workmen's compensation laws, no form of social insurance has yet been enacted in the United States. All competent students of industrial conditions realize that the wage earning classes will not have sufficient security until they are protected by insurance against sickness, accidents, invalidity, old age, and unemployment. All these contingencies and liabilities should be met by industry, since industry is at once the beneficiary of the wage earner's life work, and the only source of provision for his life needs.

The general condition of the laboring classes cannot be regarded with any degree of complacency. The best statistical estimates show that, measured by purchasing power, wages in the United States have rather steadily declined since the beginning of the present century (see articles in the "American Economic Review," December, 1914, June, 1917, and September, 1921). While the right of labor to at least a living wage is more frequently recognized than was the case twenty-five, or even ten years ago, it has not been formally adopted, either in theory or in practice, by the majority of industrial concerns. Labor organizations have steadily increased in numbers and power, but they have been unable to secure recognition from some of our greatest industrial corporations. Nor have they yet begun to show anything like an adequate appreciation of their industrial responsibilities. Class antagonism has increased greatly in the ranks of both employees and employers. From present conditions and tendencies it seems clear that industrial peace, stability, and justice will not be approximated until such changes are made in labor's status as will make the worker more interested in his work, through participation in management, profits, and ownership.

Lacedonia, DIOCESE OF (LAQUEDONIENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-732c), in the province of Avellino, Southern Italy, suffragan of Conza. Rt. Rev. Gaetano Pizzi appointed to this see 21 July, 1907, was transferred to San-Severo, 5 November, 1912. The see remained vacant until 22 September, 1915, when Rt. Rev. Cosma Agostino, Bishop of Ariano, was appointed administrator apostolic and governed the diocese until 22 May, 1916. A new bishop was then appointed in the person of Rt. Rev. Francesco Maffei, born in Bisaccia, 1855, and serving as canon penitentiary at the time of his appointment. The statistics of 1920 credit the diocese with 27,300 Catholics, 11 parishes, 95 secular and 2 regular clergy, 10 seminarians, 2 Brothers, 4 Sisters, and 51 churches or chapels.

Lacombe, ALBERT, Apostle of the Cree and Black-foot Indians, b. at Saint-Sulpice, Quebec, on 28 February, 1827; d. at Midnapore, Alberta, on 12 December, 1916. He was ordained at St. Hyacinthe on 13 June, 1850, and two years later he joined

Mgr. Taché in the mission of the Northwest. He evangelized the Pembina métis and the Crees in the mission of Lake St. Anne, and in 1855 he joined the Oblates of Mary Immaculate. In 1860 he was among the Blackfeet, and three years later founded a mission, which he named Albert after his patron saint and which has since given its name to the province of Alberta. About this time he went among the nomadic Crees and established the mission of St. Paul on the Saskatchewan in 1866; later he gave himself up to the wandering Blackfeet; among both tribes his efforts met with great success. In 1876 he became the agent for Catholic and French immigration into Manitoba; and a few years later he devoted himself to the spiritual interests of the workers engaged in constructing the Canadian Pacific railroad. In 1882 he was again laboring for the Indians around Calgary, McLeod, and Pincher Creek. He rendered great service to the Government by securing the neutrality of the powerful Blackfeet tribe during the Rebellion of 1885. He was sent to Europe many times in the interests of his congregation, and visited Austria in 1900 and 1904 in behalf of the Ruthenian Catholics. Father Lacombe was a master of several Indian languages, and among his works are a Cree grammar and lexicon, a New Testament and a prayer-book in Cree, and a catechism and prayer-book in Santeux.

La Crosse, DIOCESE OF (CROSSSENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-735b), in State of Wisconsin, suffragan of Milwaukee, lost its third bishop on 6 June, 1921, through the death of Rt. Rev. James Schweback, D.D., who had filled the see since 1892. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Alexander J. McGarrick, D.D., who was appointed to the see 21 November, 1921. He was born in Chicago in 1863 and educated in the district school of Fox Lake, and at St. Viator's College, Kankakee, Ill. He was consecrated titular Bishop of Marcopolis and auxiliary to the Bishop of Chicago on 1 May, 1899. He is the author of "Some Incentives to Right Living."

By present statistics the Catholic population of this diocese is approximately 116,608, and the following religious communities work among the faithful, men: Jesuits, Dominicans, Fathers of the Holy Ghost, and Missionary Fathers of the Sacred Heart; women: Franciscan Sisters of Perpetual Adoration, Sisters of the Third Order of St. Dominic, of the Sorrowful Mother, Hospital Sisters of St. Francis, School Sisters of Notre Dame, Sisters of St. Dominic, Franciscan Sisters of Charity, School Sisters of St. Francis, Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis of Assisi, Sisters of St. Benedict, Polish Sisters of St. Joseph, and Sisters of the Society of the Divine Saviour. There are 156 parishes, 235 churches, 79 missions, 1 monastery for men and 1 for women, 189 secular priests, 53 regular, 3 convents for women with 1450 Sisters, 1 college for men with 24 teachers and an attendance of 400, 2 colleges and academies for women with an attendance of 380, 4 high schools with an attendance of 320 boys and 125 girls, and 90 elementary schools. The charitable institutions include St. Michael's Orphanage and 7 hospitals, 4 of which have training schools for nurses. Practically all the public institutions admit the ministry of Catholic priests. St. Joseph's Priests' Fund Association and the Eucharistic League for Priests are organized in the diocese and various parish societies are established among the laity.

Lafayette, DIOCESE OF (LAFAYETTENSIS), was erected by Pope Benedict XV on 11 January, 1918. The territory assigned to it was taken from the Archdiocese of New Orleans, and comprises all the civil parishes (counties) of the State of Louisiana, west of the Atchafalaya River, i. e., St. Mary, Iberia, St. Martin, St. Landry, Evangeline, Acadia, Lafayette, Vermilion, Cameron, Jefferson Davis, Calcasieu, Allen, and Beauregard, these parishes forming the southwestern part of the State. Rt. Rev. Jules B. Jeanmard was appointed its first bishop and consecrated in New Orleans 8 December, 1918. He was born on 15 August, 1879, in the territory of his future diocese, and therefore has the distinction of being the first Louisianian to be elevated to the episcopal dignity.

Possibly nowhere in the continental United States can there be found a population so homogeneous in racial character and religion as one finds in this part of Louisiana. The vast majority of the 170,000 Catholics of the territory are descendants of the Acadian refugees, who were driven out of Nova Scotia and who, after many vicissitudes and migrations, found new homes in southwest Louisiana, where they gradually congregated in the latter half of the eighteenth century (1764-1788). There were then a few French settlements in this territory and while the Acadians built their habitations around the existing points of civilization, they did not hesitate to found villages of their own, and gradually spread along the water courses (bayous) and throughout the vast prairies. Hence very early in this part of the United States we find distinctively Catholic settlements, which at present (1921) can look back on a hundred years and more of organized Catholic parish activity; the century old church records of St. Martinville, Opelousas (1777), Grand Coteau (1819), and Lafayette (1821) have few equals in the United States, in historical value and interest. Acadian families are usually very large, and so we need not wonder that the descendants of the original few thousand settlers form to-day by far the major portion of the inhabitants of thirteen civil parishes (counties).

The language of the people is mostly French, with a fair knowledge of English in the larger places, and while the western parishes received in the eighties and nineties a considerable influx of settlers from the Middle West, it is only in the new towns that English has superseded the language of the original inhabitants.

The rapid growth of the schools, parochial as well as public, and commercial necessity have also been responsible for the gradual spread and growing importance of English in church and mart.

With the language they retained the religion of their ancestors, although priests were few and their territory so extended that the outlying districts saw the missionary but a few times a year. The new cities, such as Crowley, Jennings, and Lake Charles, are prosperous communities with flourishing Catholic congregations, surrounded by a territory whose well cultivated rice fields are mostly owned by the old Acadian settlers. New methods in agriculture, together with the native aptitude and industry of the Acadians, have already produced a state of affluence that seems to guarantee still greater material prosperity for the ever increasing population.

Ecclesiastically the new diocese is well organized, having 52 parishes with resident priests, while 50 missions and 11 stations are visited at regular intervals. In many of these missions conditions are so favorable that only the dearth of priests prevents their being made parishes with resident pastors. Since the creation of the diocese seven new parishes have been erected. More priests is the crying need of the Diocese of Lafayette, and therefore the energetic Bishop Jeanmard is putting forth his best efforts to foster native vocations, to secure more priests, and to systematize the work of recruiting and financing the education of the prospective students. At present there are 32 students preparing for the holy priesthood.

As one of his first administrative measures the bishop appointed a superintendent of schools, and set out to co-ordinate the efforts of the existing institutions and to inspire pastors and people with the ideal of Catholic school activity. The superintendent was directed to systematize the work in the elementary grades, and lay down the lines for the standardization of the high schools, and to-day a system is in operation which only awaits the multiplication of the schools to produce great results for the Catholic life of the coming generation. The lack of teachers is a serious handicap, and several places are only awaiting the arrival of religious to open schools that would be patronized by hundreds of pupils. At present there are 30 elementary schools directed by 354 teachers with 5805 pupils attending; 18 parish high schools have enrolled 374 pupils. A state-approved normal school is being conducted by the Religious of the Sacred Heart, who also conduct an academy with 79 young ladies in attendance. St. Charles College at Grand Coteau, with an attendance of 150 students, is in charge of the Jesuit Fathers, and is the only institute of higher learning for men in the diocese. St. Patrick's Sanitarium at Lake Charles is being conducted by the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word.

During the World War the diocese furnished a large quota of men for the service of the country, and three of its priests served with the colors.

As within the confines of the diocese there is a large colored population, many of whom are Catholics, it is the aim of the bishop to provide them with their own churches and priests, and to-day there are 5 parishes for the colored people with resident pastors in the larger centers of population, i. e., Lafayette, New Iberia, Opelousas, Crowley, and Lake Charles. The Fathers of the Holy Ghost and the Josephite Fathers are in charge of these churches, and are doing splendid work in church and school. In Lafayette there is an industrial institute for colored pupils, which has an attendance of 116 children, while the colored parish schools of the diocese have about 2000 pupils enrolled. Parishes, 52; churches, 102; missions, 50; stations, 11; convents: men 2, women 1; priests: secular 51, regular 26; Sisters, 425; seminarians, 32; colleges: men 1, teachers 14, attendance 150; high schools 18, teachers 22, attendance 374; academy 1, teachers 6, attendance 71; normal school 1, teachers 3, attendance 18; elementary schools 30, teachers 354, attendance 5805; industrial school 1, teachers 5, attendance 116.

Lafon, André, poet and novelist, b. in 1883 at Bordeaux; d. there in May, 1915. In his early childhood his family, which was in lowly circumstances, moved from Bordeaux to Blaye, where he studied at the municipal school, in which, after completing his education, he secured a position as prefect of discipline. Later he became a teacher in the lycée at Bordeaux, and while there he published a small volume of poems entitled "Poèmes Provinciaux." He next obtained a transfer to the Lycée Carnot at Paris, but shortly secured a more congenial position in the Catholic College of Ste Croix at Neuilly. In Paris he was welcomed by a group of young Catholic writers associated with "L'Amitié de France," a quarterly review; among them were Valléry-Radot, Jammes, and especially Mauriac, a fellow-Girondin. His association with Mauriac was followed by remarkable progress in the spiritual life as is revealed in his private correspondence. "La Maison Pauvre," a volume of poems depicting the daily humble peasant life, and containing many frankly religious effusions, appeared shortly after his arrival in Paris and secured his reputation as a poet. In 1912 the French Academy crowned his first novel, "L'Elève Gilles," awarding it the new 10,000 francs prize for literature. It is the portrayal of the soul of a poor child, and is in part a reflection of his own life. His second novel, "La Maison sur la Rive," an attempt to reveal the soul of a girl, appeared in 1914, and is full of charm, but was not so successful. When the war broke out he volunteered again and again for active service, despite his ill-health, but he never got beyond the training camp at Souge, as he was stricken with scarlatina and died in the military hospital at Bordeaux.

Lagos, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF. See BENIN.

Lahore, DIOCESE OF (LAHORENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-742d), in Northern India, suffragan of Simla. Formerly suffragan of Agra, this see has been a part of the ecclesiastical province of Simla since 13 September, 1910, when, in order to form this new archdiocese, the districts of Kulu, Lahul, Mandi, Spiti, and Suket were taken from Lahore. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Fabian Anthony Eestermans, O. M. Cap., to whom this territory is entrusted. Born in Meerles, Belgium, 1858, he entered order in 1878, and was ordained in 1883, served as a professor at Bruges, was sent to the Indian mission in 1889, and was appointed bishop 11 April, 1905. Out of a total population of 15,836,000 the diocese counts a Catholic population of 26,591 (3277 Europeans, 23,314 Indians), and 16,453 catechumens. It is served by 36 Capuchin Fathers, 50 churches and chapels, 23 stations with resident priests, 8 convents with 60 Sisters, 1 preparatory seminary with 16 boys, a college for boys under the Patrician Brothers with 10 teachers and 170 students, 3 high schools with 10 teachers and 130 girl and 40 boy students, an academy for Indian children with 15 teachers and a total attendance of 400, 23 elementary schools with three or four teachers in each, teaching 1600 children, and 2 industrial schools conducted by the nuns with 80 pupils. The government asylum for insane women is in charge of the Franciscan Sisters, and 8 dispensaries are established. Nearly all the schools receive aid from the Government. A Catholic Association is formed in Lahore, and a small weekly paper, "Catholic News," is published for the Catholics of the diocese only.

Lalemant, GABRIEL (cf. C. E., VIII-752b).—The cause of his beatification was introduced at Rome 9 August, 1916.

Lamego, DIOCESE OF (LAMACENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-761c), in the province of Beira, Portugal, suffragan of Braga. The see is filled by Rt. Rev. Francisco José Ribeiro de Vjeira Britto, born in Rendufinho, Portugal, 1850, appointed Bishop of Angra 27 February, 1892, and transferred 9 June, 1902. On 4 August, 1921, a coadjutor bishop was appointed in the person of Rt. Rev. Augustin de Jesus e Souza, canon theologian, made prothonotary apostolic 30 September, 1920, consecrated titular Bishop of Hauara 21 November of the following year. With the exception of Braga, Lamego is the oldest diocese in Portugal, and counts 266,000

Catholics, a few Protestants, 287 parishes, 465 priests, 310 churches, 1144 public chapels and 110 private oratories (1920 statistics).

Lamennais, JEAN-MARIE-ROBERT DE (cf. C. E., VIII-765c).—The cause of his beatification was introduced at Rome 22 March, 1911.

Lamp, THE, a Catholic monthly devoted to Church unity and missions, founded under Anglican auspices by Very Rev. Paul James Francis, S.A., and making its first appearance on Candlemas, 1903. When the Society of the Atonement was received into the Catholic Church on 30 October, 1909, with its name and institute, "The Lamp" continued to make its monthly appearance without interruption. Its average circulation for the first six months of 1921 was 160,000 monthly. "The Lamp" is the organ of the Society of the Atonement and of its activities, St. John's Atonement College which prepares for the friar-priesthood, the Rosary League of Our Lady of the Atonement, the Union That Nothing Be Lost, which is the missionary agency of the Society, and of the Church Unity Octave in the propagation of the observance of which it was the first to be interested. "The Lamp" is edited by The Friars of the Atonement, at Graymoor, Garrison, N. Y.

Lamy, ETIENNE-MARIE-VICTOR, author and secretary of the French Academy, b. at Cire, Jura, on 2 June, 1845; d. on 9 January, 1919. He studied under the Dominicans at Sorbèze, and later at the Collège Stanislas. Subsequently he won his doctorate of law with a thesis on the Bourse in ancient, medieval, and modern days. In his youth inspired by Père Lacordaire he took the resolution, which he carried out in later manhood, of serving France through the religion of Christ. Nominated to the National Assembly at the age of twenty-five, he voted against the peace with Germany in 1871. By his gift of eloquence and especially by his remarkable Report on the Navy Budget, 1878, he established his position as a parliamentarian of first rank and seemed to assure his early inclusion in the Cabinet. But this was not to be. Lamy was a Catholic; he stood for the liberty of higher education and so fought the anti-Catholic monopolistic school law of Jules Ferry in 1879, with the consequence that in 1881 he was defeated for re-election. Thereafter he fought his fight for Christian France in the literary field. He became editor of "Le Correspondant" and wrote for the "Journal des Débats," "La Revue des Deux Mondes," and won a great literary reputation. In 1905 he was elected to the French Academy and on the death of Thureau-Dangin succeeded as perpetual secretary. Startled by the increasing decline in French natality consequent on the spread of non-Catholic principles of morality, he enabled the French Academy through his generosity to offer annually the two Etienne Lamy prizes of 10,000 francs each, for large families. For many years he began his day's work by hearing early Mass. Among his chief works are: "La France du Levant" (1898), "Le second Empire" (1895), "La Femme du demain" (1899), "Aimée de Coigny" (1900), "Fausses républiques," Témoins de jours passés" (1909; 1913).

Lanciano, ARCHDIOCESE OF (LANCIANENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-774d), in the province of Chieti, Southern Italy, with the perpetual administration of Ortona (Ortonensis). This see is now filled (1922) by Most Rev. Nicola Piccirilli, born in Chieti, 16 October, 1855, appointed Archbishop of Santa Severina, 30 May, 1896, transferred to Conza, 14 November, 1904, and again transferred to this see 25 April, 1918, to succeed Most Rev. Angelo della Cioppa, appointed 22 June, 1896, d. 29 January, 1917. On 11 March, 1919, Archbishop Piccirilli was named administrator of Vasto. On 5 February, 1909, the cathedral was erected into a minor basilica. According to 1920 statistics Lanciano counts 37,209 Catholics, Ortona, 60,400 Catholics; there are in the two dioceses, 20 parishes, 100 secular and 8 regular priests, 12 seminarians, 5 Brothers, 25 Sisters, and 102 churches or chapels.

Langres, DIOCESE OF (LINGONENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-780d), in the department of Haute-Marne, France, suffragan of Lyons. Rt. Rev. Marie-Augustin de Dufort de Civrac de Lorge was appointed to this see 9 February, 1911, to succeed Bishop Herscher (retired 24 December, 1910), and filled it until his transfer to Poitiers 3 September, 1918. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Théophile-Marie Louvard, born in Radon, France, 1858, ordained 1882, was a professor and then superior of the school of St. Francis de Sales at Alençon (1898), named an honorary vicar general and appointed bishop 10 March, 1919. A decree of 4 September, 1918, gave to the cathedral chapter the dignity of a deaconate; the right of nomination is reserved to the Holy See. During the World War 158 priests and 29 seminarians were mobilized from this diocese, and of this number 25 gave up their lives, 4 were taken prisoners, 2 were decorated with the légion d'honneur, 4 with the médaille militaire, 47 with the croix de guerre, a number with the médaille des épidémies, and 84 with other citations. By 1920 statistics the diocese counts a Catholic population of 214,785, 444 parishes, 3 archpresbyteries and 29 deaneries, 540 priests, of whom 307 are pastors, 29 vicars, 55 professors, 23 vicars general, canons and chaplains, 58 priests serving in other dioceses, 23 vicariates, 1 lower seminary, 1 upper seminary, 2 ecclesiastical institutes, and 16 religious communities.

Lang-son and Kao-bang, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (DE LANG-SON ET CAO-BANG).—This prefecture was erected by a Decree of 13 December, 1913, and comprises a vast mountainous territory in the northeastern part of Tonkin, along the Chinese frontier. Originally the bed of a primitive sea, about three-fourths of this territory is rock, some of the rocks being 4000 feet high. It extends over an area of 7722 sq. miles, but owing to its peculiar formation is very sparsely populated, the principal inhabitants being a few old tribes such as the Thos, Mings, Mans, Meos, and Lalos, with a few thousand Chinese and Annamites who have migrated from China and Annam. Until its erection into a prefecture this territory had only three poor chapels and three Dominican Fathers who had worked there for seven or eight years and gathered together a community of 514, some of them converts, but for the most part Annamites who had come from the Delta. The territory was left in charge of the Dominicans (of the province of Lyons), who now number 10, and are assisted by 4 secular priests, 19 catechists, 45 student catechists, 27 seminarians and 23 native Sisters. The number of Christians has increased remarkably considering the almost insurmountable difficulties, the total number now being 1854. About 200 of these, however, are orphans or infirm people who are totally dependent on the charity of the priests who are practically without resources. The first and present prefect apostolic is Rev. Bertrand Cothonay, appointed 7 January, 1914. Latest statistics credit the mission with 10 quasi-parishes, 6 churches, 8 chapels, 15 mission stations, 1 seminary, 6 elementary schools with 6 teachers and 75 pupils, 1 home for the blind, and 2 orphanages.

Laos, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (LAOTIENSIS; cf. C. E., VII-773c), in the province of Nakhon-Phanom, Siam, with episcopal residence at Nong-seng. It is entrusted to the Foreign Mission of Paris. The last vicar apostolic was Rt. Rev. Constant-Jean-Baptiste Prodhomme of this congregation, born in Garron, France, 1849, appointed titular Bishop of Gerrha, 2 June, 1913, died 19 August, 1920. His successor has not yet been appointed. The territory includes a population of 2,500,000, of whom 32,858 are Catholics, and 1172 catechumens. The 1920 statistics credit the vicariate with 52 European missionaries, 19 native priests, 8 seminarians, 54 churches and chapels, 33 catechists, 22 orphanages with 304 children, 15 native religious, and 35 schools with 797 pupils.

La Paz, DIOCESE OF (PACENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-795b), in Bolivia, South America, suffragan of La Plata. Rt. Rev. Manuel-José Pena, appointed to this see 24 October, 1911, died in 1915, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Dionisio Avila, appointed 27 January, 1916, d. 3 July, 1919. The present incumbent Rt. Rev. Celestino Loza, was then appointed 20 June, 1920. This diocese, which has a population of 500,000, is credited by the 1920 statistics with 90 parishes, 4 houses of religious, 8 convents of Sisters, 2 hospitals and 3 asylums for orphans and the aged.

La Plata (or CHARCAS), ARCHDIOCESE OF (DE PLATENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-798d), in Bolivia, South America, with episcopal residence at Sucre. Most Rev. Sebastiano Pifferi, who was appointed to this see 30 April, 1906, died 4 February, 1912, and was succeeded by the present incumbent Most Rev. Victor Arrieu, born in Sucre 1867, served as vicar capitular of the diocese and was appointed 13 January, 1914. The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with 366,560 Catholics; 134 parishes, 200 priests, and 515 churches or chapels.

La Plata, DIOCESE OF (DE PLATENSIS; cf. C. E., VIII-798b), in the states of Buenos Aires and Pampa, in the Argentine Republic, S. A., suffragan of Buenos Aires. This see was filled by Rt. Rev. Juan Nepomuceno Terrero y Escalada, from 7 December, 1900, until his death 10 January, 1921. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Francisco Alberti, born in Buenos Aires 1865, appointed titular Bishop of Sinia and auxiliary in this diocese 21 February, 1899, then named auxiliary at Buenos Aires, and transferred to the See of La Plata, 13 July, 1921. The diocese extends over an area of 174,141 sq. miles and comprises a population of 2,300,000; 101 parishes and 128 churches or chapels.

Larino, DIOCESE OF (LARINUM; cf. C. E., IX-4a), in the province of Campobasso, Southern Italy, shows a slight increase in Catholic population, the number of Catholics in the diocese now (1921) being 80,000 as against 79,000 in 1910. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. Antonio Lippolis was born at Alberobello, Diocese of Bari on 19 January, 1865, and was elected to the See of Larino, January, 1915, to succeed Rt. Rev. Bishop Trenta, who was transferred in 1914 to the See of Viterbo.

The present statistics of the diocese show 21 parishes, 57 churches, 2 monasteries for men and 1 for women, 64 secular and 6 regular clergy, 4 lay brothers, 9 religious houses for men and 3 for women, 1 seminary with 8 seminarians, 1 college for men with 6 instructors and 50 students, 3 technical schools with 8 instructors and 200 students, 10 elementary schools with 10 instructors and 300 students. The various charitable institutions include 1 home, 2 asylums, 1 hospital, settlement houses and day nurseries; 1 society is organized among the clergy, and 1 among the laity.

La Rochelle, DIOCESE OF (RUPELLENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-6a), comprises the entire department of Charente-Inférieure, in France. It carries the united title of Saintes (Santonensis) and is suffragan of the Archdiocese of Bordeaux. The see is filled by Rt. Rev. Jean-Auguste-François Eyssautier, born in Entrevaux 1844, studied at Digne and La Rochelle, was ordained in 1868, served as a professor at the College of Pons, made an honorary canon in 1878, vicar general in 1893, superior of the College of Pons in 1894, appointed 27 November, 1906, and made an assistant at the pontifical throne 11 April, 1918, on the occasion of his sacerdotal jubilee. In 1920 in accordance with instructions from the minister of agriculture, Bishop Eyssautier was made a member of the wheat committee in Charente-Inférieure. The same year a social diocesan congress of the Catholic Union of Aunis and Saintonge was held at La Rochelle, 6 and 7 July, with the bishop presiding. The upper seminary, closed since July, 1913, was reopened in October, 1920, and now has forty students. The lower seminary was re-established some years before and in 1915 had 71 students. However, this diocese, like most of the others in France is suffering from a scarcity of vocations which becomes particularly serious in view of the depleted ranks of the clergy caused by the World War. During the war 254 of the clergy were mobilized and of this number 34 gave up their lives, 3 were decorated with the légion d'honneur, 3 with the médaille militaire, and 48 with the croix de guerre. In all 83 priests of this diocese died during the war. In 1921 there were 121 priests less than in 1891, and 226 parishes were without resident priests. The diocese counts 450,871 Catholics, of whom 36,371 are in La Rochelle proper; according to 1920 statistics it has 46 first class parishes, 326 succursal parishes, and 49 vicariates, formerly supported by the state.

La Salette, MISSIONARIES OF (cf. C. E., IX-9a).—The provincial house for America is at Hartford, Conn., where 46 Fathers have charge of 6 parishes and an apostolic school where boys from twelve to eighteen years are received. There is a similar school at Tournai in Belgium.

Latvia, a republic along the southern part of the Baltic littoral, consisting of the former Russian Province of Courland (10,435 sq. miles), four southern districts (Riga, Wenden, Wolmar, Walk) of the former Russian province of Livonia (8715 sq. miles), and three western districts (Dvinsk, Reshitza, Lutsin) of the former Russian province of Vitebsk (5292 sq. miles), a total of about 24,440 sq. miles or including inland lakes, about 25,000 sq. miles. The chief towns are Riga, the capital, with a population of 569,100 (1914), Libau (90,744), Mitau (46,860), Windau, Wenden, Wolmar. The first three are important ports on the Gulf of Riga. The census taken on 15 June, 1920, showed a population of 1,503,193 in Latvia. Of these, 1,416,090 are Latvian citizens and 87,103 foreigners. Of the Latvian citizens, 80.41% were Letts, 8.88% Russians, 4.29% Jews, 3.23% Germans, 2.19% Poles, .52% Lithuanians, .25% Estonians, and 25% other nationalities.

RELIGION.—The new Constitution of Latvia provides for religious freedom, there being no State Church. In Riga, Windau, and southeast of Livonia there are about 200,000 Greek Orthodox Letts.

EDUCATION.—Before the war there were 98 secondary schools in Latvia with 22,000 pupils, or 1 secondary school for every 26,000 inhabitants. The percentage of illiterates, including children under the age of ten, is 21.5. In 1919 the Riga Polytechnical Institute became a Latvian University with over 3000 students. A Musical Academy has also been reopened in Riga.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—About 12,680 sq. miles of the area are in forest, 11,760 sq. miles in pasture land, 11,080 in arable land, 4280 in waste land, and 200 in gardens. Before the war the Latvian flax crop was about 35,000 tons per annum, but in 1919-20 only 16,000 tons were available for export. The forest lands yield about 172,500,000 feet of timber annually, 14% of which is exported. On 1 July, 1920, there were 1242 industrial enterprises in Latvia, employing 12,000 hands. During the German offensive against Russia, the Russians devastated the country in order to leave nothing but the bare land for the invaders, thus completely destroying the economic life of the country. In 1920, 119 works were subsidized and the amount of subsidy was 19,211,461 rubles (1 ruble = $0.51 normal exchange). Before the war Riga was the leading port of the Russian Empire, the total turnover of its trade being over $18,000,000. In 1920 the export trade, most of which (67%) went to Great Britain was valued at 1,075,500,000 rubles; the imports, 2,061,100,000 rubles.

Railways.—Three Russian steam lines converge on Latvian ports, viz.: the Riga-Tsarsitsin line, the Windau-Moscow line and the Libau-Romni line. On 1 January, 1921, 10 steamboats of 9003 tons and 29 sailing vessels of 7789 tons, making a total of 39 vessels of 16,892 tons were sailing under the Latvian flag. The railway mileage is 1715, of which 516 miles are of Russian gauge; 595 of European gauge, and 426 miles of narrow gauge. Three main lines connect the country with Russia.

RECENT HISTORY.—The free state of Latvia was proclaimed at Riga on 18 November, 1918, and was recognized de facto by Great Britain, Japan, and Italy, and several of the smaller states. The Constituent Assembly met on 1 May, 1920, and after the resignation of the Provisional Government, which consisted of a State council of 102 members, a Coalition Government, responsible to the Assembly, was formed, all parties participating, with the exception of the Social Democrats. A Peace Treaty was signed with Moscow on 11 August and ratified by the Assembly on 2 September. It provided for the return to Latvia of public property, and for the release of Latvia from the liabilities of the former Russian Empire.

LAU, JEAN MARIE, AND COMPANIONS. See CARMES, MARTYRS OF THE.

Laurier, Sir Wilfred, statesman, b. 20 November, 1841, at St. Lin, Province of Quebec; d. on 17 February, 1919, at Ottawa; received his primary education in the parish school of St. Lin and then studied at Assumption College, in the Archdiocese of Montreal. He was a law student in McGill University at Montreal and was admitted to the bar in 1864. Seven years later he entered political life as a member of the Assembly for Drummond and Athabaska and was elected to the House of Commons in 1874; and in 1877 became Minister of Inland Revenue in the Mackenzie Administration. After a defeat by a very small majority in Quebec East, he was again and again elected, namely, in 1878, 1882, 1887, 1891, 1896, and 1900. In 1904 he went to the House of Commons and was chosen again in 1908, 1911, and 1917. He had been leader of the Opposition in the House ever since 1887, and on the defeat of the Tupper Ministry in 1896 was called by Lord Aberdeen to form a Ministry and become President of the Privy Council and in that capacity took part in settling the Manitoba Question about separate Catholic schools, not, however, by repeating the odious legislation but by diminishing the evil results of the measure. At the Queen's Jubilee in 1897, he was created a Knight of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George, and was accorded the leading place among the colonial representatives in the Jubilee procession, was made a member of the Imperial Privy Council, and received from the President of the French Republic the star of a grand officer of the Legion of Honor, the highest rank but one of the national order. On his return to Canada public honors were accorded to him in all of the principal cities and decorations of every description were bestowed upon him. Edinburgh and Glasgow were especially insistent on honoring him. In 1907 he attended the Imperial Conference at London as one of the representatives of Canada and was granted the freedom of the cities of London, Bristol, Liverpool, and other cities. In 1911 he represented Canada at the convention of King George. He finally fell from power in September, 1911, when the Liberals were beaten.

Lausanne and Geneva, DIOCESE OF (LAUSAN-NENSIS ET GENEVENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-40b), in Switzerland immediately subject to the Holy See. Rt. Rev. Joseph Deruaz, appointed to this see in 1890, died 26 September, 1911, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. André Bovet, born in Autigny, 1865, ordained 1891, served as first doctor of theology in the University of Fribourg in 1893, vicar at Neufchatel, professor in the college of St. Michel in 1894, federal chaplain of the Swiss army, director of the seminary, appointed bishop 30 November, 1911. In 1912 he was made president of the permanent committee of the international Marian Congress. Under his patronage various relief and charitable associations were organized during the World War, notable among them the Catholic mission for prisoners of war. Bishop Bovet died 3 August, 1915, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Placide Colliard, born in Attelens, Switzerland, 1876, appointed 6 December, 1915. He filled the see until his death 10 February, 1920, and the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Marius Benson, was appointed to succeed him. Born in Turin in 1876 he made his studies at the seminary of St. John at Lyons and the University of Fribourg, was ordained in 1899, served as vicar at La Chaux-de-Fonds, professor of history at the seminary in 1907, at the university in 1908, superior of the seminary in 1919, and appointed bishop 7 May, 1920. In 1921 the first stone of a lower seminary now under construction at Geneva, was blessed.

During the World War the Catholic Mission of Switzerland, organized in this diocese, was the center of many activities in behalf of the warring countries. Bureaux were organized for investigating cases of persons who had disappeared, for visiting prisoners held in Germany, and in the Central Empires, for rendering religious service to those interned in Switzerland, for giving food and clothes to refugees, and for dispensing books of study and conducting lectures. The International Catholic Union was also established for the protection of young girls, for supplying the prisoners' needs, for taking charge of correspondence with invaded countries, and to assist the civil prisoners in Austria and Hungary.

The statistics of 1920 credit the canton of Fribourg with a total population of 143,055, of whom 123,039 are Catholics, and about 19,000 Protestants. The diocese comprises 192 parishes, of which six are in the city of Geneva, a number of succursal parishes, 397 secular and about 100 regular priests, 1 upper seminary at Fribourg, 1 Catholic University and a number of ecclesiastical colleges. The city of Fribourg is rich in churches and religious houses. In making excavations in the cathedral in 1911 the tombs of three of the bishops were found, which had escaped the Bernese who had destroyed the original building. The tombs were those of Berthold of Neuchâtel (1220), Henri de Bourgogne (1029), and Blessed Amédée de Clermont-Tonnerre, a Cistercian and ecclesiastical writer.

Lausitz (or LUSATIA), PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (LUSATIAE), in Saxony. This prefecture was erected in 1560 and its administration entrusted to the Chapter of Bautzen. On 24 June, 1921, the prefecture was suppressed and incorporated in the diocese of Meissen (q.v.).

Laval, DIOCESE OF (VALLIS GUIDONIS, OR VALLE-GUDONENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-45a), in the department of Mayenne, France, suffragan of Tours. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Eugène-Jacques Grellier, born in Joué, France, 1850, studied at Combrée and Angers, ordained in 1873, served as a vicar, chaplain of the retreat at Angers, pastor and vicar general, superior of the upper seminary, and appointed bishop 21 February, 1906, to succeed Bishop Gaey, retired. On the occasion of the five-hundredth anniversary of the apparition of Our Lady of Pontmain in 1921, celebrations were held in January, and again in June, in the presence of many archbishops and bishops. The same year, on 22 November, the cathedral of the Holy Trinity was consecrated by the bishop. This cathedral was begun in the eleventh century by the Benedictines of Le Mans, enlarged in 1150, the spire destroyed by fire in 1383 and again in 1563, and enlarged by the addition of the chapel of the Sacred Heart in 1575; in 1789 it had twenty altars served by more than sixty priests. By the 1911 census there were 350,637 Catholics in the diocese, of whom 30,225 were in Laval proper. The 1920 statistics credit it with 31 first class and 265 succursal parishes, and 210 vicariates formerly supported by the State.

Laval, JACQUES-DÉSIRÉ, missionary, b. at Croth, in the diocese of Evreux, France, on 18 September, 1803; d. in the Isle of Mauritius on 9 September, 1864. From early childhood he was noted for his love of the poor and his gentleness. He studied at Evreux and the Collège Stanislas, Paris, and in 1830 graduated in medicine. He practised his profession at St. André and St. Ivry-la-Bataille, Eure, with his usual charity, but not uncontaminated with the spirit of the world in which he mixed. Suddenly his view of life changed, and entering St. Sulpice he was ordained in 1838, and had charge successively of the parishes of Pinterville and Acquigny. In 1841, filled with a desire to consecrate himself to the missions, he entered the Congregation of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, then recently founded by Ven. Fr. Libermann, and after its union with the Congregation of the Holy Ghost he was sent to Mauritius on 14 September, 1861, where he reproduced the life of St. Peter Claver. During these twenty-three years he brought into the Church about 67,000 negroes, then only recently emancipated. In addition he utilized his earlier professional experience to effectuate important sanitary and agricultural reforms. He died with a reputation for sanctity which has only increased since his death. The cause of his beatification and canonization was introduced at Rome on 26 June, 1918.

Lavant, DIOCESE OF (LAVANTINENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-49a), situated in the southern part of Styria, Jugoslavia, suffragan of Salzburg. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Michel Napotnik, born in Gonoblitz, this diocese, 1850, appointed 26 October, 1889, and made an assistant at the pontifical throne 8 March, 1901. In 1911 a diocesan synod was held here. By latest statistics the bishopric is divided into 4 archdeaneries and 24 deaneries and comprises 221 parishes, 203 chaplaincies (68 unoccupied), 6 unoccupied offices and benefices, 356 priests engaged in the cure of souls, 35 secular priests and 68 regular clergy in other positions, 40 clergy without office, 728 churches and chapels, and 508,232 souls. The episcopal priests' seminary numbers 4 classes with 1151 students, and the "Maximilianum-Viktorinum," an episcopal seminary for boys has 8 classes with 48 students. The School Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis of Assisi have 1 mother-house and 29 affiliated houses with 325 Sisters. They conduct a training school for women teachers, 14 girls' schools, 14 boarding schools, 5 kindergartens, 9 orphan asylums, 5 schools of domestic economy, 2 homes for servant girls, and 5 houses teaching housekeeping and sick-nursing. The Salesians of Don Bosco were established in the diocese in 1912, at Verzej, and number 5 priests, 5 clerical novices, and 3 lay brothers.

Law (cf. C. E., IX-64).—The laws of the Code do not bind the Oriental Church except when dealing with matters which from the very nature of the case affect it also; such, for instance, would be dogmatic laws, disciplinary laws merely declarative of the Divine law or those expressly including the Oriental Church. Acquired rights, privileges or indulgences granted by the Holy See to legal or physical persons and all liturgical laws are unaffected unless the contrary is expressly stated. All laws, whether universal or particular, opposed to the prescriptions of the Code have been abrogated, unless where the contrary is expressly stated regarding a particular law. Canons restating the old law are to be explained by the interpretations already given by approved authors. In cases of doubt whether any prescription of the canons differs from the old law, no departure from the old law should be made. All penalties, whether spiritual or temporal, medicinal or vindictory, latæ or ferendæ sententiæ, if not mentioned in the Code are abolished. General disciplinary laws not explicitly or implicitly contained in the Code lose all their force, unless they are found in the approved liturgical books or are merely confirmatory of the natural or positive Divine law; however, the punishments imposed by national, provincial, or diocesan synods and the penalties inflicted by particular legislation of the Holy See remain in vigor; so, too, do the dogmatic decrees of the Holy Office, the Biblical Commission, and other such bodies.

Laws of the Holy See are as a rule promulgated by publication in the "Acta Apostolicæ Sedis." Episcopal laws bind from the time of promulgation, if the contrary is not stated, the manner of their promulgation being left to the bishop. Merely ecclesiastical laws do not bind the unbaptized, or the baptized who do not enjoy a sufficient use of reason, or those who, though they have the use of reason have not completed their seventh year, unless the law expressly states otherwise, thus they are obliged to go to confession at least once a year, and to make their Easter duty.

Peregrini are not bound by the particular laws of their territory when they are absent from it, unless the laws are personal or unless the violation injures some one in their own territory; neither are they subject to the laws of the place where they are, except laws enacted for the public welfare or those that determine the validity or liceity of legal acts performed there; on the other hand, they are bound by the general ecclesiastical laws, even if these are not effective in the locality in which they are. Vagi, however, are bound by the general laws and the particular laws of whatever place they are in.

Where there is a doubt of law, laws even invalidating and disqualifying do not take effect; if the doubt is one of fact the ordinary can dispense, if the case is one in which the pope is wont to dispense. No ignorance of invalidating or disqualifying laws excuses, unless the contrary is expressly stated. An authentic interpretation of a law, if restrictive or extensive or explanatory of a doubt, is not retroactive and requires promulgation; an interpretation given in a judgment or in a rescript concerning a particular thing has not the force of law and binds only the persons or affects only the thing in question. Laws containing an exception to the general law are to be interpreted strictly. Laws passed to provide against a general danger, hind even if in a particular instance the danger is absent. A law enacted by a competent authority abrogates an antecedent law if it expressly says so, or if it is directly contrary to it, or if it deals anew with the entire subject matter of the former law; but as a rule a general law does not derogate from the statutes of special territories or of individuals, unless the contrary is expressly stated. In case of doubt an earlier law is not to be presumed revoked, and the later law is as far as possible to be read in agreement with it. A precept given to any individual binds him everywhere, but it cannot be urged judicially; it ceases with the jurisdiction of the person who imposed it, unless it was imposed by an authentic document or in the presence of two witnesses. See also CODE OF CANON LAW.

Lead, DIOCESE OF (LEADENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-98c), during the administration of its present bishop has had a remarkable growth, and has developed into a diocese with many well established parishes where formerly it was almost purely a missionary district. On 21 February, 1915, the second bishop of the diocese, Rt. Rev. Joseph F. Busch, D.D., was transferred to St. Cloud, Minn., and Rt. Rev. John J. Lawler, D.D., Titular Bishop of Hermopolis Magna, and auxiliary to the Archbishop of St. Paul, was appointed to succeed him. He was born at Rochester, Minn., in 1862 and completed his classical studies at the seminary of St. Francis, Milwaukee, going from there to Flanders, Belgium, where he studied philosophy and was ordained at the University of Louvain in 1885. He was consecrated bishop 19 May, 1910, and succeeded to the Diocese of Lead, 29 January, 1916.

Immediately upon his succession to the see, after studying the situation, Bishop Lawler became convinced that the mission system, which had been in operation in the diocese since its foundation, must be supplanted by a system of established parishes. He was confronted with many difficulties; a widely scattered Catholic population, few priests and very little money, but by untiring efforts and financial assistance from the Church Extension Society and other sources, a church was erected in every mission. The priests and people of the diocese entered into the new plan with energy and zeal, and 54 parochial residences were shortly added. The scarcity of priests, however, was still the great drawback to the development of the diocese, and the bishop met this difficulty by making yearly visits to some of the seminaries, and appealing to Eastern candidates for the priesthood to work with him in ministering to the neglected Catholics of this Western territory. The diocese of Lead includes all of the State of South Dakota west of the Missouri River and is suffragan to St. Paul, Minnesota.

In the last five years 55 new priests have been added to the diocese, making a total of 75; 52 new parishes have been created, 131 churches erected, 54 parochial residences acquired and 10 schools opened. The religious communities in the diocese include the Jesuit and Benedictine Fathers, the Benedictine Sisters and the Sisters of St. Francis. The Catholic population is about 35,200.

On 26 October of the present year (1921) the entire community of this district was shocked by the murder of Rev. A. B. Belknap, rector of St. Patrick's Cathedral at Lead. Father Belknap started out at 3:15 in the morning with a man who was apparently taking him on a sick call, and never returned; his body was found by the side of the road three hours later. No motive could be found for the crime, as the relations between Catholics and Protestants throughout the State have never been more cordial than at the present time, and Father Belknap was not known to have any enemies. He was born in Jackson County, Iowa, on 4 July, 1891, educated at DuBuque, Montreal, and Baltimore, and ordained a priest five years ago. He had been rector of the cathedral for the last three years.

Leavenworth, DIOCESE OF (LEAVENWORTHENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-102c), suffragan of St. Louis. When established, 22 May, 1877, this diocese comprised the State of Kansas, U. S. A., with the Right Rev. Louis Mary Fink, O.S.B., as its first bishop. At his request, ten years later the Holy See divided the diocese into three: Wichita, Concordia, and Leavenworth. Leavenworth was then restricted to the 43 counties lying east of Republic, Cloud, Ottawa, Saline, McPherson, Harvey, Sedgwick, and Sumner Counties. The diocese had an area of 28,687 sq. miles, with a total population in 1890, of 901,536. Authorized by the Holy See, Bishop Fink on 29 May, 1891, took up his residence in Kansas City, Kan., and for some years the diocese was named after that city. Apostolic letters dated 1 July, 1897, further diminished the territory of the diocese in favor of Concordia and Wichita and it now includes only the counties of Anderson, Osage, Pottawatomie, Shawnee, Wabaunsee, Wyandotte, Jackson, Jefferson, Linn, Lyon, Marshall, Miami, Nemaha, Atchison, Brown, Coffey, Doniphan, Douglas, Franklin, Johnson, and Leavenworth; an area of 12,594 sq. miles. The greater part of the Indian country now known as Kansas was included in the so-called "Louisiana Purchase." From the days of the great explorers of the Mississippi the whole territory from the Gulf of Mexico to the Canadian line belonged to France, and was designated as Upper and Lower Louisiana. The See of Quebec, erected in 1674, had jurisdiction over the whole territory until 1763, when Louisiana was ceded to Spain, and the ecclesiastical jurisdiction passed to the Diocese of Santiago de Cuba. In 1789 it was attached to the Diocese of Havana, and in 1793 became a separate diocese under the title of "Saint Louis of New Orleans." Its first bishop was nominated by the King of Spain, and was consecrated in the cathedral of Havana in 1793, and installed in New Orleans, 17 June, 1795. After six years of heroic effort in Louisiana, Bishop Peñalver y Cardenas was promoted to the See of Guatemala. In October, 1800, the King of Spain retroceded Louisiana to the French Republic and, finally, Napoleon Bonaparte disposed of the ownership of the whole territory to the United States on 30 April, 1803. By this transaction Louisiana became subject to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Bishop of Baltimore and, in due time, acting under authority from Rome, Bishop Carroll appointed Rev. Louis William Valentine Dubourg, Administrator Apostolic of the Diocese of New Orleans which embraced Louisiana, Upper and Lower.

Dr. Dubourg assumed his duties 18 August, 1812, and going to Rome soon afterwards he was consecrated Bishop of Louisiana by Cardinal Joseph Pamfili. He was granted permission to establish his residence in St. Louis, Missouri, where he was finally installed by Bishop Flaget on 6 January, 1818. The Religious of the Sacred Heart and the Lazarist Fathers arrived from France the same year. A band of six Jesuit scholastics with their two superiors, Father Charles Van Quickenborn and Father Peter J. Temmermans, all Belgians, arrived from White Marsh, Maryland, 31 May, 1823, and the Kansas Indian Missions were there and then projected. On 18 July, 1826, the Diocese of Louisiana was divided, and the sees of St. Louis and New Orleans were erected.

Bishop Dubourg resigned the see of Louisiana in 1826, and the same year the see of St. Louis was created, and Bishop Rosati became its first incumbent, while at the same time administering the Diocese of New Orleans. He died while on a visit to Rome, 25 September, 1843, and his coadjutor Right Rev. Peter Richard Kenrick succeeded him the same year and was made archbishop in 1847. Archbishop Kenrick was the first bishop to visit the Indian country beyond Missouri.

In 1851, before the vast prairie country was opened to homesteaders, Bishop Kenrick consecrated Rev. John Baptist Miegé, S.J., Bishop of Messina and Vicar Apostolic of all the territory from Kansas to the British possessions, and from the Missouri River to the Rocky Mountains. A new vicariate was formed out of Nebraska and a part of Wyoming and Montana in 1857, but Bishop Miegé's jurisdiction remained until May, 1859. The vicariate at first had five little churches, eight priests and a Catholic population of nearly 5000 souls, of whom 3000 were Indians. Bishop Miegé was an indefatigable missionary, visiting the Indian villages, forts, trading posts, and growing towns such as Omaha, Denver, and other hamlets that have since become great cities. In August, 1855, there were seven Catholic families in Leavenworth, and he moved his residence from the Pottawatomie mission, at St. Mary's on the Kaw, to that city, for a permanent location to minister to the fast increasing tide of immigration that had turned towards Kansas. In 1856 the Benedictines began a foundation at Doniphan, near Atchison, but a short time afterwards they established a priory and a college in the latter city. At the invitation of the Bishop, the Sisters of Charity of Nazareth, Kentucky, came to Kansas in 1858 and the Carmelite Fathers in 1864. All of these were of immense assistance during the on-rush of new settlers which began in 1854 and continued up to the commencement of the Civil War. These orders, as well as the great pioneer Society of Jesus, have continued to flourish in Kansas far beyond the most sanguine hopes of their founders. Bishop Miegé began the building of the cathedral of Leavenworth in the spring of 1864 and it was consecrated by Archbishop Kenrick on 8 December, 1868. Built in the Romanesque style it has no superior of that type in this country. Financial difficulties arose in connection with this great undertaking, which necessitated a begging trip to South America to obtain funds for the liquidation of the debt. Soon after his return in December, 1874, with the permission of the Holy See, he laid aside his dignity of bishop and retired to St. Louis University. Thence he withdrew to Woodstock College, Maryland, where he acted as spiritual director. In 1877 he was sent to Detroit, Michigan, to found a College of the Society of Jesus, and greatly endeared himself to the people there. In 1880 he retired once more to Woodstock, where he died.

John Baptist Miegé was born 18 September, 1815, at La Forêt, Upper Savoy, Italy. He studied classics and philosophy at the Seminary of Montieri, Italy, entered the Society of Jesus at Milan, 23 October, 1836; was ordained 7 September, 1847, at Rome, where he was made professor of philosophy in the Roman College. Driven from Italy by the political troubles of the time he was sent, at his own request, to the Indian Missions of the United States. In 1849 he was assistant pastor of St. Charles' Church at St. Charles, Missouri; in 1850 he was socius of the Master of Novices at Florissant, where he taught the class of moral theology, and from there he went to the University of St. Louis, where he stayed until his consecration. In 1871 he had been given a coadjutor in the person of Very Rev. Louis Mary Fink, prior of the Benedictine monastery at Atchison, and with some experience in the missions of Pennsylvania, Kentucky, New Jersey and Illinois. He was consecrated titular Bishop of Eucarpia, on 11 June, by Rt. Rev. Thomas Foley, D.D., Coadjutor Bishop and Administrator of the Diocese of Chicago. Upon the retirement of Bishop Miegé, Bishop Fink assumed his duties and, although weakened by ill health, he never spared himself during a period of unusual financial difficulties. There was lacking that organization of forces which belongs to a diocese, Kansas and all the rest of the Western country remaining a vicariate until six years later. On 22 May, 1877, the Diocese of Leavenworth was created by Pope Pius IX and Bishop Fink was transferred to the new see as its first bishop, with authority over the State of Kansas alone. When he assumed jurisdiction there were within the boundaries of Kansas 65 priests, 88 churches, 3 colleges, 4 academies, 1 hospital, 1 orphan asylum, 13 parish schools with 1700 pupils; communities of Benedictine, Jesuit, and Carmelite priests; Religious of the Sacred Heart, Sisters of St. Benedict, Sisters of Charity, and Sisters of Loretto; and a Catholic population of nearly 25,000. In 1887 there were in Kansas 137 priests and 216 churches. This rapid progress testifies to the zeal and activity of the priests and people through all this period. Like his predecessor, Bishop Fink did much to encourage Catholic immigration into the State and a number of Catholic settlements were formed under his influence and guidance. He sought out young ecclesiastics in the seminaries of Europe and America and augmented the secular clergy a hundredfold. He had Catholic schools established everywhere, except where absolute poverty prevented. He lived to see the State of Kansas dotted over with churches and institutions of every kind, with a fine body of clergy and a loyal and generous people. He established many new parishes and urged the building of substantial churches, schools, and pastoral residences, encouraged the founding of sodalities, confraternities, and religious associations of various kinds, and especially encouraged Catholic home life. It was he who introduced into Kansas the Franciscans, Capuchins, and Passionists; the Sisters of St. Joseph, Ursuline Nuns, Sisters of Mercy, Sisters of the Poor of St. Francis, Sisters of St. Francis, Sisters of St. Agnes, and the Oblate Colored Sisters of Providence. The Apostleship of Prayer-League of the Sacred Heart, St. Vincent de Paul Society, Holy Family and Holy Childhood Associations were also organized by him. Besides being noted for his missionary zeal, Bishop Fink was regarded in his day as a learned churchman and a master canonist. The statutes of the second synod of Leavenworth are most admirable, and his set of catechisms is not excelled. He is the author of a great number of pastoral letters and his innumerable epistles to priests and religious are models of strict discipline and wise counsel. After the division of the diocese by the erection of the sees of Wichita and Concordia (2 August, 1887), he enjoyed a respite from his many cares. He had already moved his residence from Leavenworth to Kansas City, Kansas, in order to be more accessible to the priests and people of the diocese because of the converging of all railroads at that point. At the time of his death, 17 March, 1904, the statistics of the diocese show all the details of a well organized ecclesiastical establishment. The laws of the Baltimore Council and the statutes of the diocese were in full force. All financial affairs were well in hand and a peace and unity existed that made the Leavenworth Diocese the admiration of the entire West. There were then 110 priests, 100 churches, 13 stations and chapels, 37 parochial schools, 4000 pupils, and 35,000 Catholics.

Michael Fink was born in Triftersberg, Bavaria, on 12 June, 1834, and after studying in the Latin school and gymnasium at Ratisbon, came to this country at the age of eighteen. Called to a religious life, he sought admission among the Benedictines of St. Vincent's abbey in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania. He was received by the founder, Abbot Wimmer, and made his profession January, 1854, taking the name of Louis Maria. After completing his theological studies he was ordained priest on 28 May, 1857, by Bishop Young of Erie. His missionary labors were at Bellefonte, Pa., and Newark, N. J. He was then made pastor of a congregation at Covington, Ky., where he completed a fine church. He introduced into the parish Benedictine nuns to direct a girls' school, which was one of his earliest cares. Appointed to St. Joseph's, Chicago, he aroused a spirit of faith in his flock at that place and gathered so many around the altar that a new church was required, which he erected at a cost of $80,000, planting a large and well arranged school house beside it. As prior of the house of his order in Atchison, Kan., he showed the same zeal and ability, and when Bishop Miege wished to obtain a coadjutor to whom he could resign his charge, he solicited the appointment of the prior of St. Benedict.

The successor of Bishop Fink was the Very Rev. Thomas F. Lillis, vicar-general of the Diocese of Kansas City, b. at Lexington, Missouri, in 1862, and ordained in 1885. He was consecrated Bishop of Leavenworth, in Kansas City, 27 December, 1904. His episcopal administration of the Leavenworth Diocese was eminently successful. The growth of the church under his jurisdiction was marked by the foundation of new congregations, and the building of churches and parochial schools. Catholic societies were strengthened, and the diocesan statutes revised to enforce the decrees of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore under present conditions. He adopted practical means of enforcing the papal "Motu Proprio," on the Church music. In March, 1910, he was appointed coadjutor to the Bishop of Kansas City, Missouri, cum jure successionis.

The third incumbent of the See of Leavenworth, Rt. Rev. John Ward, D.D., was appointed 24 November, 1910, and consecrated by His Excellency, Most Rev. Diomido Falconio, Apostolic Delegate to the United States, 22 February, 1911. He had been chosen from the clergy of the diocese and on that account the event was one of special significance to the priests and people of Kansas. As a priest, Bishop Ward had for twenty-seven years, labored in the diocese and endeared himself to the people of every parish where he served. His first permanent appointment after ordination 17 July, 1884, was to a little church on the wild prairies of Marshall County, twelve miles from a store or postoffice. Here he remained for four years and lent his youthful energy and zeal to the welfare of a scattered farming community along what was known as Irish Creek. His next appointment was as pastor of the then small town of Parsons, where he spent seven years, and from there he went to St. Thomas' Church, Kansas City, Kansas, then known as Armourdale. When Very Rev. John F. Cunningham, V.G., became Bishop of Concordia, September, 1898, Father Ward was appointed rector of the cathedral, which important charge he held for eleven years. Finally, when the irremovable rectorship of St. Mary's Church, Kansas City, Kansas, became vacant by the retirement of its venerable pastor, Rt. Rev. Mgr. Kuhls, Father Ward won the prize at the concursus ordered by Bishop Lillis in the Spring of 1909. As rector of St. Mary's, his administration soon proved financially successful and his interest in the children resulted in crowded parochial schools. The subsequent story of his life as a bishop has been in keeping with his early record. Bishop Ward was born 23 May, 1857, in the vicinity of Cleveland, Ohio. He attended the parish school at Olmstead, Ohio, and passed through the high school at Berea. He continued his classical studies at Mount St. Mary's, Cincinnati, and completed his collegiate course at Sandwich College, Ontario. He took up his studies of science, philosophy and theology under the Benedictine Fathers at the famous institution of learning at St. Meinrad's, Indiana. He was ordained to the priesthood in the cathedral of Leavenworth, 17 July, 1884, by his saintly predecessor, Rt. Rev. Louis Mary Fink, O.S.B. The religious orders now (1922) established in the diocese include: men, Jesuit Fathers (Missouri Province) St. Mary's College, St. Marys, Kansas, Fathers 25; scholastics 15; Brothers 15; lay professors 10; students 500; Benedictine Fathers: priests 40; clerics 20; Brothers 10; students 325. Franciscan Fathers: priests 10; Kansas City, Emporia, and Olpe. Carmelite Fathers: American Province; priests 5, Leavenworth and Mt. Carmel. Fathers of the Sacred Hearts: Louvain, Belgium; priests 1, Kansas City, Kansas; women, Sisters of Charity: founded 1858; conducting academies, hospitals, asylums, and schools in six dioceses. Sisters 475; novices 15; postulants 15; mother-house, Mount St. Marys' Academy, Leavenworth, Kansas. Benedictine Sisters: founded over fifty years; academy and school work; Sisters 325; novices 20; postulants 15; mother-house, St. Scholastica's Academy, Atchison, Kansas. Ursuline Sisters: founded 1895; academy and school work; Sisters 60; postulants 10; novices 10; mother-house, Ursuline Academy, Paola, Kansas; Sister Servants of Mary, nurses of the sick; Sisters of St. Joseph; Sisters of St. Francis of Perpetual Adoration; Sisters of the Poor of St. Francis; Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis; Oblate Sisters of Providence (colored); School Sisters of St. Francis. By latest statistics the diocese comprises 100 diocesan priests, 90 priests of religious orders, 100 churches with resident priests, 29 missions with churches, 25 diocesan students, 35 clerics and scholastics, 35 Brothers, 15 chapels, 1025 religious women, including novices and postulants belonging to, and having work in the diocese, 2 colleges for boys 800 students, 3 academies for girls 500 students, 70 parishes with schools 10,000 pupils, 12 high schools 600 students, 4 orphan asylums 300 orphans; total young people under Catholic care 12,200; 6 hospitals 9000 patients; Catholic population 70,000.

Lecce, DIOCESE OF (LYCIENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-107d), in the province of Apulia, Southern Italy, suffragan of Otranto. Rt. Rev. Gennaro Trama, born in Naples, 2 January, 1857, and appointed to the titular see of Capharnum 16 December, 1901, was transferred to this see 10 February, 1902, and still fills it (1922). A consistorial decree of 25 November, 1915, united to this diocese the parish of St. Cæsarius, which had been partially subject to the Archdiocese of Otranto. By 1920 statistics the diocese has a Catholic population of 113,000 and counts 32 parishes, 220 secular and 70 regular clergy, 180 seminarians, 30 Brothers, 125 Sisters, and 123 churches and chapels.

Leeds, DIOCESE OF (LIDENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-112b), in the province of Liverpool is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Joseph Robert Cowgill, the fourth Bishop of Leeds. He was born in Broughton, 23 February, 1860, and consecrated as Coadjutor Bishop of Leeds, 30 November, 1905, and upon the death of Rt. Rev. Wm. Gordon, third Bishop of Leeds, 7 June, 1911, he succeeded to the see. Another prominent clergyman of the diocese who died within recent years was Mgr. Canon Glover, domestic prelate, d. 13 March, 1918. During Bishop Cowgill's incumbency many new missions have been opened in the diocese, and there has been extensive development in rescue work. The Victoria Cross was won by several Catholic soldiers of this diocese during the World War, and many of the clergy who served as chaplains won minor decorations.

The 1911 census of the diocese shows a total population of 3,086,897, of whom 122,652 are Catholic, many of German or Italian descent. At the present time (1921) there are 90 parishes, 140 churches, 3 convents for men and 38 for women, 158 priests, secular, and 31 regular, 1 seminary with 10 seminarians, 7 secondary schools and 7 academies, 103 elementary schools and 2 industrial schools. All the public elementary and secondary schools receive aid from the Government, but some few private schools do not.

Among the charitable institutions are 12 homes of various kinds, for orphans, for deaf and dumb, and for working girls and boys, 2 hospitals under the Little Sisters of the Poor, several night shelters under Catholic supervision, and 1 day nursery at Bradford. All the public institutions permit the ministry of Catholic priests. The Eucharistic League, Apostolic Union and Society of Yorkshire Brethren are organized among the clergy, and among the laity the Catholic Federation, Knights of St. Columba, Catholic Women's League, St. Vincent de Paul Society, Rescue Society, and Catenian Society are established.

Legacies (cf. C. E., IX-115).—In willing property to the Church the requirements of the civil law are to be observed as far as possible; but if any of these have been omitted the heirs must be warned to carry out the wish of the testator.

Legate (cf. C. E., IX-118).—In 1922 there were papal nunciatures in Argentina, Austria, Bavaria, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, France, Germany, Hungary, Jugoslavia, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Spain, Switzerland, and Venezuela; and internunciatures in Bolivia, Costa Rica, Haiti, Holland, Honduras, Luxemburg, and Nicaragua. There were five Apostolic Delegations depending on the Consistorial Congregation: in Canada and Newfoundland, Cuba, Mexico, the Philippine Islands, and the United States; and ten depending on the Congregation for the Eastern Church or on Propaganda: in Turkey, Albania, Greece, Egypt, Syria, Persia, India, Japan, Mesopotamia, Kurdistan and Armenia Minor, and Australia.

Leghorn, DIOCESE OF (LIBURNENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-131a), in the province of Tuscany, Central Italy, suffragan of Pisa. Rt. Rev. Sabatino Giani, appointed to this see 17 December, 1900, died 18 February, 1921, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Giovanni Piccioni. Born in the diocese of Narni, he studied and was ordained at Pistoia, served as a professor and prefect of studies in that seminary, was made vicar general in August, 1920, and appointed bishop 13 June, 1921. The diocese comprises a Catholic population of 160,512, and by 1920 statistics is credited with 33 parishes, 85 secular and 56 regular clergy, 20 seminarians, 67 churches or chapels, 16 Brothers, and 219 religious women.

Lehmkuhl, AUGUSTINE, moral theologian, b. on 23 September, 1834, at Hagen, Westphalia; d. at Valkenburg, Holland, 1 July, 1918. He entered the Society of Jesus on 15 October, 1853; was ordained on 20 August, 1862, and after teaching Scripture (1 year) and dogmatic theology (6 years) filled the chair of moral theology at Maria Laach. Exiled from Germany during the Kulturkampf, he continued to teach at Ditton Hall, England, till 1880, when owing to ill-health he returned to Holland, where he completed his "Theologia Moralis" (1883), which has since remained the standard manual. He supplemented this work with his "Casus Conscientiæ" (1902). Lehmkuhl made a thorough study of the application of moral principles to the new problems and conditions arising in our modern complex world, and his advice in solving difficult problems was constantly sought and accepted from every corner of the globe. He was a contributor to the "Stimmen aus Maria Laach" (now "Stimmen der Zeit"), "The American Ecclesiastical Review," "Der Katholik," and other publications, and wrote among other works: "Herz-Jesu Monat," "Die sociale Frage und die staatliche Gewalt," "Der christliche Arbeiter," "Probabilismus vindicatus." He edited De Ponte's "Meditations"; Schneider, "Manuale sacerdotum"; Hausherr, "Compendium caeremoniarum"; Bona, "De sacrificio missae"; Reuter, "Neo-confessarius practice instructus"; Herder, "Bibliotheca asctica mystica"; and others, and collaborated on the "Kirchenlexicon," "Konversationslexicon," "Kirchliches Handlexicon," and the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA (cf. articles on DIVORCE; THEOLOGY, MORAL; MARRIAGE, SACRAMENT OF; MARIANA).

Leiria, DIOCESE OF (LEIRIENSIS), Portugal, suffragan to the Patriarchate of Lisbon, was erected by Paul III, 22 May, 1552. Owing to adverse circumstances the diocese was suppressed by Leo XIII, 30 September, 1881, and 25 of its parishes were united to the See of Lisbon, the other 25 to the See of Coimbra. In answer to the wishes of the bishops of Portugal, particularly those of Lisbon and Coimbra, Benedict XV re-established the diocese of Leiria by his Apostolic Letter of 17 January, 1918. The fifty parishes which had constituted the original diocese were taken back from Lisbon and Coimbra and re-united, with Leiria as the episcopal city. A revenue fund of 5000 francs was offered by the priests from revenues of indulgences, the chancellery treasury and from offerings of the faithful, and plans were made for the erection of a diocesan seminary as soon as circumstances should permit. Until a bishop should be appointed the Patriarch of Lisbon was appointed apostolic administrator of the new see. The first bishop, Rt. Rev. José Alves Correia da Silva, was appointed to the newly erected diocese on 15 May, 1920, and consecrated in Oporto, the diocese of his birth, 25 July of the same year.

The diocese comprises 150,000 Catholics and now (1921) includes 51 parishes, 51 churches, 1 monastery for men, 80 secular priests, 3 regulars, 1 lay brother, 1 seminary with 36 seminarians, 4 hospitals, and 1 day nursery. Two Catholic periodicals, "Mensagem" and "Portomocense" are published in the diocese.

Lefay, PAUL, classical scholar, b. at Dijon, France, on 3 May, 1861; d. in July, 1920. This voluminous contributor to THE CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA was educated at Paris in the School of Higher Studies. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1890, and in that year was made professor of Latin philology at the Catholic Institute, Paris. He was fellow of the University of France, vice-president of the Section of Philology at the International Catholic Congress, Fribourg, Switzerland. He was a collaborator with Vacant in his "Dictionnaire théologique," and the author of many linguistic, archaeological and theological articles which appeared in the scientific reviews of Europe.

Lemaître, FRANÇOIS-ELIE-JULES, French author and literary critic, b. at Vennecy, Loiret, on 27 April, 1853; d. at Tavers near Beaugency, on 5 August, 1914. He was educated in the petit séminaires of La Chapelle-Saint-Mesmin near Orléans, and Notre-Dame-des-Champs, Paris, and after graduating from the Ecole normale supérieure in 1875, he taught at Le Havre and Algiers, and subsequently was appointed to the chair of French literature in the faculties of Besançon and Grenoble. As early as 1878 he had begun contributing literary essays to the "Revue bleue"; these were followed by two volumes of pleasing and delicate verse. In 1884 he resigned his university chair to devote himself exclusively to literature. The following year his bitter article on Renan placed him in the limelight, and a little later he became literary critic in the "Journal des Débats," though he contributed also to the "Revue des deux mondes" and daily papers like "L'Echo de Paris," and "Le Gaulois." His criticisms, in which he displays a keenness of observation and great power of analysis, reprinted under the title of "Les contemporains" (6 vols.), are his masterpiece. Notable among these studies are the articles on Hugo, Ohnet, Zola, and Lamartine. His theatrical criticisms re-united in "Les impressions de théâtre" (10 vols.) are also brilliant, but less permanent. These essays won for him a chair in the French Academy in 1895. Lemaître was more than a theatrical critic, he wrote a number of plays like the psychological "La Révoltée," the political satire "Le député Leveau," "Mariage blanc," and "Le Pardon." His plays stirred up a good deal of criticism, and were undoubtedly of a high order, but the public was unable to appreciate their novelty as it deserved. Among his other noteworthy writings are his treatises on Corneille, Rousseau, Racine, Fénelon, Chateaubriand. Lemaître was a royalist and a patriot, and to this we owe his "Opinions à répandre," "La campagne nationaliste," "Théories et impressions," "Discours royalistes," and "La franc-maçonnerie," as well as the foundation of the Ligue de la Patrie Française, of which he was a founder and a director.

Le Mans, DIOCESE OF (CENOMANENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-143b), is under the administration of the Most Rev. Georges-François-Xavier-Marie Grente, who was elected Bishop of Le Mans on 30 January, 1918, to succeed Bishop de La Porte, who had retired on account of poor health, and had been made Titular Bishop of Bérissa. Bishop de La Porte came to the See of Le Mans in 1912 as successor to the Most Rev. Marie-Prosper-Adolphe de Bonfils, who had filled the see from 1898 until his death on 2 June, 1912.

Bishop Grente was born at Percy in 1872 and made his studies at the diocesan college of St. Lô and the grand séminaire of Coutances. He was a professor at the petit séminaire of Mortain, later director of the diocesan college of St. Lô in 1903, and in 1912 was chosen for the vice-rectorship of the Catholic Institute of Paris, but was retained by his bishop. However, in 1916 he was made Superior of the Institute of St. Paul at Cherbourg, and on 30 April, 1918, he was elected Bishop of Le Mans and consecrated 17 April of the same year.

During the World War 33 of the priests of this diocese gave up their lives, 6 were named chevalier of the Legion of Honor, 10 received the médaille militaire, 3 the médaille des épidémies, and 100 the croix de guerre.

By the present (1921) statistics the diocese includes 394 parishes, 400 churches, 33 convents for women, 400 religious women, 600 secular priests, 2 seminaries with 150 seminarians, 5 colleges for men with 110 professors and 1000 students, 4 high schools with 40 teachers and 250 girl students, 149 elementary schools with 160 teachers and 4470 pupils. Among the charitable institutions maintained in the diocese are, 1 home, 5 asylums, 30 hospitals, 1 refuge, and 2 nurseries. Four of the public institutions allow the priests of the diocese to minister in them. Various parish bulletins are published as well as two others papers, the "Semaine du Fidèle" and the "Pays Sarthois." The Catholic population of the diocese numbers approximately 400,000.

Lemberg, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See LWOW.

Leon, DIOCESE OF (LEONENSIS, IN AMERICA CENTRALIS), in the Republic of Nicaragua, Central America, suffragan of Managua. The whole territory of the republic was originally comprised in the diocese of Nicaragua, but by a decree of 2 December, 1913, Leo XIII divided this diocese and erected the new diocese of Leon. It comprises the provinces of Leon, Chinandega, Esteli, and Nueva Segovia. It is bounded on the North by the Archdioceses of Tegucigalpa and Honduras, on the South and West by the Pacific Ocean, and on the East by the Archdiocese of Managua and the Vicariate Apostolic of Bluefields. The first bishop was Rt. Rev. Simeon Pereira y Castellon, born in this territory in 1863, appointed titular Bishop of Dioscesarea 2 December, 1895, at the age of thirty-two, and made coadjutor to the Bishop of Nicaragua, succeeded to that see 31 July, 1908, and was transferred to Leon 2 December, 1913, and was also named titular Archbishop of Cyzicus 15 January, 1914. He was made an assistant at the pontifical throne 20 December, 1920, and died 2 February, 1921. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Nicolas Tijerino y Loaiciga, appointed 21 December, 1921. The diocese comprises a population of 199,000; no statistics are yet published.

Leon, DIOCESE OF (LEONENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-177c), in the State of Guanajuato, Mexico, suffragan of Michoacan. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Emeterio Valverde y Tellez, born in Villa del Carbon, Mexico, 1864, canon of the archdiocese and secretary to the archbishop, appointed 7 August, 1909, to succeed Archbishop Moray del Rio, promoted. The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with 800,000 inhabitants, 12 canons, 6 chapters, 1 seminary with 24 professors, 25 parishes, 2 vicar pastors, 243 secular and 39 regular clergy, and 503 churches and chapels.

Leon (LEGIONENSIS), DIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., IX-175a), suffragan of Burgos, in Spain. The present bishop of the diocese is the Rt. Rev. Joseph Alvarez y Miranda, b. at Minera, 11 December, 1851, ordained 18 December, 1875, elected 18 July, 1913, consecrated 21 November, enthroned 7 December following and published 25 May, 1914. The population of the diocese consists of Europeans, all of whom are Catholics. In 1921 the diocese contained 863 parishes, 1312 churches, 5 monasteries, and 1 convent for men, 15 monasteries, 27 convents for women, 985 secular priests, 90 regulars, 2 seminaries with 382 seminarians. The following educational institutions exist in the diocese: 4 colleges for men with 83 professors, 850 students, 52 for women, 77 professors, 1325 students, 5 secondary schools, 16 teachers, 800 students (720 boys and 80 girls), 8 academies, 74 professors, 962 students (850 boys, 112 girls), 2 normal schools, 24 teachers, 250 students, a training school, 15 teachers, 225 students, 1044 elementary schools, 3 industrial schools, 9 teachers, 180 students. The schools are all supported by the Government. The diocese has the following institutions: 7 hospitals, 6 asylums, 8 homes for the aged and infirm, 2 day nurseries, 9 charitable institutions of various kinds. The principal events which have taken place since 1913 are the following: the royal collegiate church of St. Isidor was completely restored and opened to the faithful, six new religious communities were established. The ninth centenary of the Fuero, or charter of rights of Leon was celebrated, a magnificent hospital was opened under the patronage of the bishop and the cathedral chapter, the Federation of Catholic rural syndicates was established and is now in a flourishing condition, as is also the Federation of Catholic students. Since the war a yearly collection has been taken up in the diocese for the benefit of the children of Central Europe.

Leopold, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See LWOW.

Leopoldville, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (LEOPOLDOPOLITANENSIS), in the Belgian Congo. This territory erected in 1888 under the name of Belgian or Independent Congo, had its boundaries slightly changed in 1911, and by a decree of 3 April, 1919, it was erected anew under its present name. Another Decree of 31 May, 1921, changed its boundaries again, taking the northeastern part of the region of Mayomba and annexing it to the Prefecture Apostolic of Matadi. It now comprises that part of the Congo between Boma and Kionga extending as far as the French Congo. It is entrusted to the Congregation of the Immaculate Heart of Mary of Scheutveld, the present vicar apostolic being Rt. Rev. Camille Van Ronslé, appointed titular Bishop of Lymbrias, 5 June, 1896. The episcopal residence is at Leopoldville. By latest statistics the vicariate comprises 11 missions or stations, 11 churches, 4 chapels, 4 convents of Sisters, 33 regular clergy, 2 houses with 20 Brothers and 8 other Brothers scattered through the various missions, 1 preparatory seminary with 25 students, 11 elementary schools with 925 pupils, 2 industrial schools with 70 pupils, 1 dispensary, 1 orphanage for boys and 2 for girls. The Government gives a certain amount of financial assistance to the Catholic institutions.

Le Puy, DIOCESE OF (ANICIENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-185d), in the department of Haute-Loire, France, suffragan of Bourges. The see is filled by Rt. Rev. Thomas Boutry, born in Neuville, France, 1845, ordained 1869, studied at the French seminary in Rome, made a titular chancellor in 1883, vicar general in 1893 and appointed bishop 31 May, 1907, to succeed Bishop Guillois, retired. The jubilee of Our Lady of Le Puy, one of the oldest in the church, celebrated during the Middle Ages whenever Ascension Thursday fell on the feast of the Immaculate Conception, was celebrated in 1921, Ascension Day following on 24 March, the day before the feast, and the jubilee opened on that day and lasted for eighteen days, closing on 10 April, the second Sunday after Easter. The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with a population of 303,838, 280 parishes, 202 vicariates, 30 chaplains and chaplaincies, 649 priests, of whom 37 are professors, 78 retired and 22 filling various other posts, 3 houses of Brothers, 5 cloistered convents, and 15 religious communities.

Lerida, DIOCESE OF (ILLERDENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-188c), suffragan of Tarragona in Spain. According to the statistics of 1921 the Catholics number 189,700. The diocese contains 257 parishes, 326 churches, 4 convents for men, 33 for women with 381 sisters, 450 secular priests and 67 regulars. Through the initiative of the Rt. Rev. Joseph Miralles y Sbert, the episcopal heraldic gallery of Lerida, after a thorough search of its archives, has been placed in the hall of the episcopal palace. Due to the influence of the above mentioned prelate the ancient cathedral was declared a national monument by royal order on 12 June, 1918. The present incumbent is the Rt. Rev. Joseph Miralles y Sbert, b. at Palma de Mallorca (Balearic Islands), 14 September, 1860, ordained 7 June, 1884, elected 28 May, 1914, to succeed Mgr. Ruano y Martin, deceased.

Lescher, FRANCIS MARY, educationist, b. in 1825; d. in 1904. She entered the Institute of the Sisters of Notre Dame of Namur, in which she was known as Sister Mary of St. Philip. She was thirty years old and she had been a mother to her brothers and sisters after their mother's death, when she entered religion. She became a brilliant teacher and it was chiefly through her remarkable ability that the school which she founded and over which she presided at Mt. Pleasant achieved its reputation.

Lesina, DIOCESE OF (PHARENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-191b), with the united titles of Brazza and Lissa (Brachiensis et Lissensis), in Dalmatia, Jugoslavia, suffragan of Zara. Rt. Rev. Jordan Zaninovic, O.P., appointed to this see 7 January, 1903, died 22 October, 1917, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Luca Pappafava. Born in Lesina in 1851, he served as pastor dean of San-Pietro-Brazza, was appointed Bishop of Sebenico 27 November, 1911, and was transferred 14 September, 1918. By 1920 statistics the Catholic population of the diocese numbers 59,026, divided among 60 parishes served by 82 secular and 18 regular clergy.

Letellier, VICTOIRE, in religion Mère Ste. Angèle, foundress, b. at Mortain, Normandy, on 24 October, 1778; d. at Paris, 1859. She was the daughter of an inspector of the Duc d'Orléans domain at Mortmain and studied at the convent of Barenton. During the Revolution, her father having become warden of Mortmain prison, Victoire seized her many opportunities to exercise her charity. At the age of twenty-eight she joined the Dames Augustines du Très-Saint Cœur de Marie, who had charge of the hospital at Saumur. In 1816 she was mistress of novices, and in 1823 superioress. Owing to the persecution of the local civil officials, the Sisters had to quit the hospital, and by the favor of Archbishop de Quélen of Paris they reorganized in the capital under the name of Augustinians of the Holy Heart of Mary in the Rue de l'Arbalète (1828). Eleven years later they moved to the Rue de la Santé, where provision was made not merely for the aged and sick, but for young widows and girls without protection. The institute received papal approbation after Mère Ste. Angèle's death, and new foundations have been made, as at St. Leonard's in England and Angers and Nice in France.

Liberia, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (LIBERIENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-216d), in the province of Liberia, West Africa, with residence at Monrovia. This territory was first entrusted to the Fathers of the Company of Mary, and in August, 1906, transferred to the African Missionaries of Lyons and again in 1911 it was made over to the Irish branch (Cork) of the African Missions. The present prefect apostolic is Rt. Rev. Jean Ogé, born at Ettendorf, Alsace, in 1868, studied at the seminary of the African Missionaries of Lyons, ordained in 1890, served for seventeen years in the mission of the Gold Coast, was named superior of the native seminary of Ibadan (vicariate of Bénin), and appointed Prefect of Liberia 3 January, 1910. By the 1920 statistics the territory counts a total population of 1,700,000, of whom 2400 are Catholic, and 5594 catechumens; these are served by 12 European priests, 2 churches, 5 principal stations, 6 missions and 10 sub-stations, 10 elementary schools with 15 teachers and 1200 pupils and 5 dispensaries. During the World War religious meetings were held at Monrovia for the purpose of raising funds in behalf of war orphans, and all the allied consuls assisted; the Syrians sent large sums to England, France, and the United States to be used for charitable purposes. During the whole war period starvation was very prevalent on the Kroa coast and in order to save its numerous school children the prefecture was obliged to incur a debt of £2000.

Libya, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (LYBIÆ; cf. C. E., XV-58d), in Africa, erected 23 February, 1913, from the prefecture apostolic of Tripoli, to which it corresponds, with Mgr. Ludovico Antomelli as first Vicar Apostolic. Following his transfer to the episcopal see of Bagnorea, Mgr. Giacinto Tonizza, O.F.M., formerly Vicar General of the Apostolic Delegation of Syria and late superior general of the Franciscans of Constantinople, was appointed Vicar Apostolic of Lybia in October, 1919. He arrived in Tripoli, in the early part of 1920, equipped with thirty years' experience in the mission work of the Orient. The newly appointed vicar apostolic instilled new life into the vicariate. Four new stations were founded: Zuara in Tripoli, Cyrene-Marsa Susa, Merg-Tolmetta, and Tobruk in Cyrenaica. He advanced the scholastic institutions, erected new parishes, rejuvenated the existing religious organizations for the young or else founded new ones, installed religious instruction in the public schools, and distributed with equity the responsibilities of the different parishes. The vicariate is at present occupied with the obligation of raising the necessary funds for the building of the cathedral church and presbytery, towards which the Pope donated 100,000 libellas.

The World War greatly retarded the progress of the mission. Ten of the priests served with distinction as chaplains in the army, and three were cited and decorated for bravery. Among the recently deceased of note are: Sister Mary Simplicia Vecchiotti, of Cremona of the Franciscan Missionary Sisters of Egypt, d. 12 April, 1916, aged thirty years, after a life of unusual sanctity; Valentino Cagnocci de Faltona of Arezzo, O.F.M., died 30 July, 1921, after forty years of untiring labor among the missions of Lybia; founded and directed the mission at Homs, where he built an imposing church; Bonaventura Rosselti, O.F.M., from 1907 to 1913 Prefect Apostolic of Lybia, later Prefect Apostolic of Rhodes, where he died 9 August, 1921; Brother Paul Liekens, whose death in November, 1921, crowned a life of unselfish devotion to duty; Giovanni De Martino, Italian senator and governor of Cyrenaica, devoted to furthering the interests of the Church and a true benefactor of the vicariate, died 23 November, 1921.

The Catholic population of 20,000 is increasing daily, and is largely made up of those of Italian or Maltese descent. Mohammedans and Jews are numerous. There are 3 secular priests, 20 Franciscan priests, 12 Franciscan lay brothers, and 11 Christian Brothers; 7 parishes with 7 churches, 4 missions, 18 chapels, 6 stations, 2 convents for men and 13 for women, 1 college for girls with 3 teachers and 30 students, 6 elementary schools for boys and 11 for girls with a combined total of 35 teachers and 1400 pupils, 1 hospital, 3 orphanages, 7 day nurseries, 1 refuge for poor girls, 5 classes of catechetical instruction. The numerous Catholic primary schools are flourishing, and are under the direction of the Vicar Apostolic, who supplies the teachers and some of the poorer pupils with the necessities of life. The Government contributes also to the support of the Catholic institutions. There are other Catholic schools which are supported by the Italian National Association for the Missions. Not only the pupils of the Catholic schools, but also those of the public grammar schools receive daily religious instruction from appointed priests and Sisters. The public hospitals have Sisters in attendance and also a Catholic chaplain. There are 10 religious associations for the young, 3 of which are allied with the National Association, "Catholic Italian Youth."

Liège, Eupen, and Malmédy, DIOCESE OF (LEODIENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-236a), in Belgium, dependent on Malines. After the establishment of the Kingdom of the Netherlands, the diocese comprised the Provinces of Liège and Limburg. On 6 May, 1833, Mgr. Van Bommel divided the Province of Liège into eleven deaneries. In 1839 the diocese lost those parishes which were situated in Dutch Limburg. In 1921 the new diocese of Eupen-Malmédy, formerly a German possession belonging to the archdiocese of Cologne and containing 70,000 inhabitants, was united to the Diocese of Liège. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Martin-Hubert Rutten, b. at Geystingen, 18 December, 1841, ordained 28 April, 1867, elected bishop 16 December, 1901, consecrated at Liège 6 January, 1902, made assistant to the pontifical throne, 12 November, 1920. The diocese contains 1,215,000 Catholics; of whom 350,000 are Flemish, 850,000 Walloons, and 15,000 speak German. There are 685 parishes, 40 deaneries, about 700 churches and chapels including 44 curacies, 2 abbeys and 30 convents for men, 10 monasteries, 1 abbey and 450 convents for women with 5000 Sisters and about 150 lay brothers. The secular priests number 1500, regulars about 200. The diocesan seminary is at Liège with 160 seminarians. The following educational institutions exist in the diocese: 19 colleges for men, 200 teachers and 5000 students; 3 normal schools, 27 teachers, 200 students; elementary schools in every parish. Nearly all the normal and elementary schools are supported by the Government. There are many public hospitals in care of various orders of Sisters, also 3 refuges for girls. A great number of periodicals are printed in the diocese. Liège was the first province of Belgium which was invaded by the Germans. Ruin and devastation followed in their path. Numberless churches and villages were destroyed and the population was subjected to great misery and suffering. Mgr. Rutten distinguished himself during the siege and occupation of Liège by his fearless attitude towards the conquerors and his continued protests against their treatment of his people.

Ligugé (cf. C. E., IX-247a).—The present abbot of the Benedictine Abbey of Ligugé, France, is Dom Leopold Gougain, O.S.B. The community, still resident at Chevetogne, numbers 34 priests, 2 clerics, and 9 lay brothers.

Lilienfeld (cf. C. E., IX-247c).—The present number of monks in this Cistercian abbey is 40, all priests, most of whom are occupied in the care of souls in the 17 incorporated parishes. The present abbot is Justin Panschab, b. 1859, and elected 1899, to succeed Alberic Heinmann, d. 1898.

Lille, DIOCESE OF (INSULENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-251c), in the department du Nord, France, is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Cambrai. The territory included in this diocese was originally, before the French Revolution, divided among four bishoprics; Tournai, Ypern, Saint Omer, and Cambrai. After the Revolution the whole department du Nord was made the Diocese of Cambrai, and in 1842 it was raised to an archdiocese.

By a pontifical decree of 5 February, 1913, the General Vicariate of Lille was founded, including the civil districts of Lille, Hazebouch, and Dunkerque under a vicar general having the title of bishop (Auxiliary of Cambrai, Vicar General of Lille), and endowed with extensive powers. On 25 October, 1913, it was constituted a diocese and officially erected by Cardinal Luçon on 10 December of the same year. The diocese comprises the same territory as the original general vicariate; the cathedral is Notre Dame de la Treille and the episcopal seat is at Lille.

The first and only Vicar General of Lille was Mgr. Alexis Charost, who was born at Le Mans in 1860, ordained a priest in 1883 and later received his degrees of Doctor of Divinity and of Canon Law. He also won the title "Agrége de l'Université," which is the highest title conferred by the French University, and which since the anti-clerical persecution is no longer obtainable by Catholic priests. He was a professor at the College of Saint-Croix at Le Mans, director of the day school of Notre Dame de Couture and in 1894 became secretary to Bishop Labouré of Rennes. In 1896 he was made chancellor of the Diocese of Rennes, in 1899 vicar general, and in 1913 he was appointed titular Bishop of Miletopolis, auxiliary Bishop of Cambrai and Vicar General of Lille. He was consecrated 13 May, 1913, at Rennes, by Bishop Dubourg, and transferred to the diocese of Lille in November of the same year. He is a Knight of the Legion of Honor and a Knight of the Order of Leopold. Bishop Charost was promoted to the Titular See of Chersonèse and made coadjutor to the Bishop of Rennes in 1920.

The Most Rev. Hector Raphael Quilliet, D. D., succeeded him as the second and present Bishop of Lille, 18 June, 1920. He was born at Bois-Bernard, 11 March, 1859, and ordained in 1883. He was a professor and dean of the faculty of theology at the Catholic University of Lille, and director, with Mgr. Chollet, now Archbishop of Cambrai, of the "Revue des sciences ecclésiastiques" and of "Questions ecclésiastiques." He was appointed Bishop of Limoges on 24 December, 1913, and consecrated 19 March. He was later transferred to Lille, taking possession of his new see 29 September, 1920.

The present (1921) statistics of the diocese of Lille show 358 parishes, 1 abbey for men, 1200 secular priests, 1 theological seminary with 106 seminarians, 1 philosophical seminary with 81 students, 1 academic seminary with 38 students and 1 lower seminary with 318 students, 13 secondary colleges for men with 300 teachers, and 12 for women, 1 university (University of Lille), 2 high schools, 1 normal school for girls, 330 elementary schools with 1228 teachers. The diocesan missionaries of Cambrai take care also of the missionary work of Lille and in addition to their work there are: 12 homes for working women, 51 homes for aged men and women, 27 orphan asylums, 21 hospitals, 3 refuge homes, 6 dispensaries, and 2 day nurseries. A daily newspaper, "La Croix du Nord," and a diocesan weekly are published. For the war record of this diocese see LILLE, UNIVERSITY OF.

Lille, UNIVERSITY OF (cf. C. E., IX-252d).—At the beginning of the World War (August, 1914), the University of Lille was transformed into a vast hospital under the direction of the French Red Cross, assisted by those members of its medical faculty whose duties retained them in Lille. Many of its halls were filled with wounded from the battlefields of Cambrai and Artois, and later from the siege of Lille, those who succumbed to their injuries being buried in its gardens, where some of them still repose.

The university was about to resume its courses in the unoccupied halls, when the bombing of the city began. Several of the buildings were struck and the city found itself in the hands of its German jailers, cut off by a steel wall from the rest of France. Notwithstanding the apparently insurmountable drawbacks of such a situation, the University decided to continue its work. Its students, 134 at the opening, were drawn from the cities of Lille, Roubaix and Tourcoing, until 1917, when Lille was completely isolated. This situation was met by the sectioning of the work of the university, certain schools being maintained in each city. Many lasting benefits resulted from the labor of these troubled times; a school of applied chemistry was added to the school of advanced industrial studies; women preparing for liberal careers were admitted to the various faculties and schools of the university; lectures on current history were given to large audiences, wherein the lecturers were able to second the efforts of the clergy in preaching the invincible confidence that sustained the people throughout the days of the occupation. A Latin grammar was published as well as several numbers of "La voix de l'église."

At the same time the hospital work continued, 40,602 consultations being held at the dispensary of St. Raphael from 1915-19. The Sisters of Maternal Charity and the Franciscan Sisters opened their doors to the sick women and children expelled by the enemy from the municipal hospital.

The most wonderful of all the work accomplished was that of Professor Joseph Willot. For two years he was the soul of a secret publication "La Patience" or "L'Oiseau de la France," which at great peril sustained public confidence. Inevitably discovered and imprisoned he died from the results of the hardships of his captivity, the victim of his heroism.

The university was not less distinguished on the battlefield; 242 of her sons were killed; 70 received the cross of the legion of honor; 26 the military medal; 460 the war cross, and 15 the medal of epidemics.

In 1921 the School of Advanced Commercial Studies was separated from that of Advanced Industrial Studies and joined to the faculty of law. The number of students in the schools in that year were: faculty of theology and philosophy, 35; faculty of law, 120; school of social and political sciences, 25; faculty of letters, 34; faculty of medicine and of pharmacy, 90; faculty of sciences, 45; school of advanced industrial and commercial studies, 170; total, 519. To this number should be added 2000 of both sexes who follow the public courses organized by the faculty of letters and the school of social and political sciences.

The university publications include the following periodicals: "Les facultés Catholiques de Lille," "La revue de Lille," "Le prêtre," "La voix de l'église," "Journal des sciences médicales de Lille." Memoirs and works of original scientific research are published by the professors of the Catholic faculties.

The number of consultations held at the children's hospital of St. Anthony of Padua (1919-20), was: medical department, 3957; surgical department, 402. Americans made a generous response to the appeal by Canon Dimmet for aid in this work, notably Mrs. Lucius Swift and others from the city of Indianapolis.

Mgr. Emile Lesne is the present (1921) rector of the university, having succeeded Mgr. Margerin in 1919.

Lilly, WILLIAM SAMUEL, English author and publicist, b. 1840 at Fifehead, England; d. 29 August, 1919, at West Kensington, London. He was educated at Cambridge. He was Under-Secretary to India, 1869, and was received into the Church at that time. Among his works are: "Ancient Religion and Modern Thought," "Chapters in European History," "A Century of Revolution," "The Great Enigma," "Christianity and Modern Civilization," "Many Mansions," and "New France." He was Secretary of the Catholic Union of Great Britain for nearly fifty years. Mr. Lilly was essentially a controversialist with a wide range of reading. He wrote with grace and fluency, but in controversy could be trenchant. His writings exercised considerable influence in the religious and historical controversies of his time.

Lima, ARCHDIOCESE OF (LIMANENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-255a), in the Republic of Peru, South America. This see was filled by Most Rev. Pedro Manuel Garcia-Naranjo from 16 December, 1907, until his death, 17 September, 1917. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Most Rev. Emilio Lisson, C. M., born in Arequipa 1872, entered the Congregation of the Mission in 1892, was appointed Bishop of Chachapoyas 16 March, 1909, but was never published in the Consistory, and was promoted 25 February, 1918. He is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Manuel Segundo Ballon, titular Bishop of Arabissus. A Brief of 23 May, 1921, erected the church of St. John the Evangelist into a minor basilica. The population, numbering 450,000, is almost entirely Catholic, with the exception of a small percentage of Chinese and Protestants. The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with 66 first class and 7 succursal parishes, 498 churches and chapels, and 18 seminarians.

Limburg, DIOCESE OF (LIMBURGENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-260a), in Germany, suffragan of Freiburg. In 1913 occurred the death of Rt. Rev. Dominicus Willi, former abbot of the Cistercian monastery at Marienstatt, who was elected Bishop of Limburg on 3 September, 1898. During the fifteen years of his administration he worked incessantly for the welfare of the diocese. Many parishes and missions were erected by him, two theological seminaries were rebuilt, and a large number of foundations were made. The present administrator of the diocese is Rt. Rev. Charles Augustine Kilian, b. 1856, ordained 1881, consecrated bishop 1913. In 1921 the diocese celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of its foundation. A collection taken up for the support of seminarians amounted to 500,000 marks. In August, 1921, the Catholic Congress was held at Frankfurt, the first one since the outbreak of the war. Under the patronage of the Apostolic Nuncio a large number of Church dignitaries, and prominent Catholics, the event proved a brilliant success. During the war many of the younger priests served as military chaplains in the army or in field hospitals. The religious congregations, as also the laity, cared for the sick and wounded soldiers. Many Catholic organizations were actively engaged in distributing religious books and articles at the front and in the hospitals.

At the present time (1921) the Catholics number 469,000. The diocese contains 215 parishes and mission stations, and 376 secular priests. The following monasteries for men exist in the diocese: the Cistercian Abbey at Marienstatt, 27 priests, 9 clerics, 19 lay brothers, 4 Franciscan monasteries (Bornhofen, Hadamar, Kelkheim, and Marienthal), 18 priests, 26 lay brothers; Capuchin monastery at Frankfurt, 6 priests, 3 lay brothers; monastery of the Oblates of the Immaculate Conception on the Allerheiligenberg, near Niederlahnstein, 4 priests, 4 lay brothers; mother-house of the Missionary Congregation of the Pallottines at Limburg, 34 priests, 26 scholastics, 73 lay brothers; Jesuits at Frankfurt, 5 priests; Fathers of the Sacred Heart of Jesus and Mary, 3 monasteries: at Arnstein, 5 priests, 15 lay brothers, 10 novices; at Niederlahnstein, 6 priests, 4 lay brothers; at Walderbach, 5 priests, 3 lay brothers, 35 pupils; Brothers of Mercy, mother-house at Montabauer, 55 professed brothers, 35 novices, and 5 branch houses in the diocese. The following congregations of women have foundations in the diocese: Benedictines, abbey of St. Hildegard at Eibingen, 38 professed Sisters, 25 lay Sisters; Benedictines of the Perpetual Adoration at Johannisberg in Rheingau (formerly in Neiderlahnstein), 29 Sisters, 15 lay Sisters, 8 extern Sisters; Congregation of St. Vincent de Paul, branch of the mother-house at Mainz in Limburg, 18 Sisters; Poor Handmaids of Jesus Christ, mother-house at Dernbach, 332 Sisters, 86 postulants, and about 100 branch houses in the diocese; Franciscans, mother-house at Marienheim-Erlenbad, near Achern in Baden, 2 houses, 10 Sisters; Association of the Sisters of Providence of Mainz, 6 houses, 44 Sisters; Poor Sisters of St. Francis, mother-house at Aachen, 2 houses, 45 Sisters; Sisters of the Christian Schools of Mercy, mother-house at Heiligenstadt, 5 houses, 35 Sisters; Ursulines, 5 houses, 113 Sisters; English Ladies, 2 houses, 59 Sisters; Sisters of Charity of the Good Shepherd, mother-house at Münster, Westphalia, 1 house, 41 Sisters; Congregation of the Servants of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, mother-house at Vienna, 3 houses, 15 Sisters; Pallottine Sisters, mother-house at Limburg, 75 Sisters, 25 postulants, and 4 branch houses in the diocese with 17 Sisters; Sisters of the Holy Ghost, mother-house at Coblenz, 1 foundation, 24 Sisters; Alexian Nuns, 2 houses, 27 Sisters. The following religious associations have been established: 73 Young Men's Societies, 23 Journeymen's Unions, 37 Working Men's Associations, 91 Marian Congregations for Young Women, 10 Servant Girls' Associations, and various associations for mothers. Also the following charitable societies: St. Boniface Association, Mission Society for Catholic Women and Young Women, Guardian Society for Women and Young Women, Association for the Making of Vestments. There are 20 charitable institutions under the care of religious, including orphanages, girls' homes, and educational institutions for orphans.

Limerick, DIOCESE OF (LIMERICIENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-262a), in the province of Münster, Ireland, suffragan of the Archdiocese of Cashel. Rt. Rev. Edward Thomas O'Dwyer, born in Holy Cross, Ireland, in 1842 and appointed to this see 18 May, 1886, filled it for over thirty years, until his death, 19 August, 1917; during his long administration he was known as an ardent defender of the national rights of Ireland. His successor was appointed in the person of Rt. Rev. Denis Hallinan, born in Limerick in 1849, studied at Limerick and at the Irish College in Rome, was ordained in 1874 and served as a pastor, administrator, and vicar general, was named a prelate of the Holy See in 1900, a canon in 1912, vicar capitular in 1917, and appointed bishop 10 January, 1918. The religious orders established in this diocese include: men, Augustinians, Dominicans, Franciscans, Jesuits, Redemptorists, Salesians, Oblates of Mary Immaculate, and Brothers of the Christian Schools; women, Presentation Sisters, Sisters of Mercy, of the Good Shepherd, of Marie Reparatrice, of Charity, of St. Paul, Faithful Companions of Jesus, Nursing Sisters of the Little Company of Mary, and Salesian Nuns. By the latest census (1911) the total population of the diocese is 116,558, of whom 110,305 are Catholic. According to 1920 statistics there are 48 parishes, 121 secular and 65 regular clergy, 94 parochial and district churches, 19 convents with 490 members in the communities, and 4 monastic houses with 33 members in the communities.

Limoges, DIOCESE OF (LEMORICENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-263c), in the department of Haute-Vienne, France, suffragan of Bourges. This ancient see is now filled by Rt. Rev. Alfred Flocard, born in Jorquenay, France, 1866, ordained in 1889, served as vicar at St. Jean de Chaumont, and professor at the upper seminary, editor of the "Semaine Religieuse," director of charities, and made vicar general in 1912, appointed 16 December, 1920, to succeed Rt. Rev. Hector-Raphaël Quilliet, transferred to Lille 18 June, 1920. In 1921 he was elected a member of the departmental office of the "Pupilles de la Nation." During the World War 245 of the clergy of this diocese were mobilized, and of this number 24 died, 3 won the légion d'honneur, 7 the médaille militaire, 54 the croix de guerre, and 4 foreign decorations. By latest statistics the diocese comprises 384,736 Catholics, of whom 92,181 are in Limoges proper, 152 deaneries, 476 first and second class parishes, and 107 vicariates formerly supported by the state. A diocesan periodical, "La Semaine Religieuse," is published.

Linares (or MONTEREY or NUEVO LÉON), ARCHDIOCESE OF (DE LINARES; cf. C. E., IX-265d), in Mexico, with episcopal residence at Monterey. Most Rev. Francisco Plancarte y Navarrete, promoted to this see 27 November, 1911, died in Monterey 8 July, 1920, and was succeeded by Most Rev. José Juan de Jesús Herrera y Pina after a vacancy of a year. Born in Valle de Bravo, Mexico, in 1865, he studied at the South American College in Rome, was ordained in 1888, returned to Mexico in 1890, and served as rector of the seminary and prefect of studies, was made an honorary canon, prothonotary apostolic in 1904, and appointed Bishop of Tulancingo 16 September, 1907, from which see he was promoted 7 March, 1921. The 1920 statistics credit the archdiocese with a Catholic population of 357,000, 39 parishes, 80 secular priests, 20 seminarians, 75 churches or chapels, and 4690 children in Catholic schools.

Lincoln, DIOCESE OF (LINCOLNIENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-266b), in Nebraska, is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Dubuque. The first bishop of the diocese, the Rt. Rev. Thomas Bonacum, who was appointed upon the erection of the diocese in 1887, died on 4 February, 1911. He was largely responsible for the rapid development of the young diocese, and although his rigid discipline and strict enforcement of canonical legislation often brought him into conflict with certain of the clergy and their lay supporters, and forced him to have recourse to the secular tribunals, he was usually vindicated and the purity of his motives cannot be doubted. The chief monument of his labors is the St. Thomas Orphanage, housing 120 inmates, for which he personally gathered all the funds. At his request he was buried before the main entrance of this institution.

Bishop Bonacum was succeeded by the Rt. Rev. Henry Tihen, chancellor of the Wichita diocese, who took possession of his see in July, 1911, and ruled over it until 21 September, 1917, when he was transferred to Denver.

The third and present Bishop of Lincoln is Rt. Rev. Charles F. O'Reilly who, as first Bishop of Baker City, had for fifteen years been doing pioneer missionary work in that churchless section. During his incumbency in Lincoln there have been added to the diocese, 9 parishes, 5 parochial schools, and 1 hospital, while the services of the Capuchin Fathers (Irish Province) and of several Sisterhoods have been enlisted.

The present (1921) statistics of the diocese show 87 parishes, 137 churches, 50 missions, 94 secular and 12 regular priests, 215 nuns, 11 seminarians, 1 high school with 5 teachers and an attendance of 60 boys and 74 girls, 3 academies with 42 teachers and an attendance of 55 boys and 215 girls, 32 elementary schools with 126 teachers and an attendance of 2800. In addition to the St. Thomas Orphanage, the Lincoln and McCook hospitals are maintained in the diocese; all the public institutions permit the priests of the diocese to minister in them. The Catholic population of the diocese is approximately 37,000. The Knights of Columbus, Catholic Order of Foresters, Daughters of America, National Council of Catholic Men are established among the laity.

Lindi, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (DE LINDI), in East Africa. This prefecture was erected by a decree of 12 November, 1913, which divided the vicariate apostolic of Dar-es-Salaam. It is bounded on the north by the Rivers Mbenkuru and Ruhuje, on the west by Nyassa Lake, on the south by German Mozambique, and on the east by the ocean. The town of Lindi, where the official residence is situated, is a flourishing port about fifty miles from Delgado. It is entrusted to the Benedictines of St. Odile; Rev. Gallum Steiger, O.S.B., was appointed the second prefect apostolic 22 February, 1922, to succeed Rev. Willibrord Lay. The 1920 statistics credit the territory with 11 Benedictine Fathers, 13 Brothers, and 12 Sisters of the Sacred Heart.

Lindsay, LIONEL ST. GEORGE, author and editor, b. at Montreal, Canada, 1849, d. at Quebec, Canada, 1900. He was educated at Laval University, Quebec, the Gregorian University, the Academy of St. Thomas, and the Minerva, Rome. He was ordained priest in 1875, was chaplain of the Ursuline Monastery, Quebec (1894-98), diocesan inspector of academies and convent schools (1898-1905), secretary (1905-1907), and archivist (1905-1921) of the Archdiocese of Quebec. He was the author of "Notre Dame de Lorette en la Nouvelle France," and editor of "La Nouvelle France," from 1902 to the time of his death. He was also the contributor of a number of biographical articles to THE CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA.

Linz, DIOCESE OF (LINCENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-273c), suffragan of the Archdiocese of Vienna, includes a part of Upper Austria and some townships in Lower Austria. The downfall of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy in 1918 and the establishment of a republic in accordance with the Treaty of Versailles brought many severe trials upon the diocese. Prosperity decreased, famine and intense misery oppressed the larger part of the nation. The middle classes, the children, the numerous institutions and above all the religious communities suffered great privations. Only the generous contributions of the Catholics of foreign countries, especially America, made existence possible. The steady depreciation of the Austrian exchange causes daily increase in the cost of living and makes the problem of supporting the numerous hospitals and charitable institutions more and more difficult. The religious and political conditions have grown steadily worse. The destruction of the monarchy has given the revolutionary Labor Party unlimited power, which they try to increase by terror and force. They constantly wage opposition to the Church and by inciting fear and distrust cause great harm throughout the country.

At the present time the diocese is governed by Rt. Rev. John Maria Gföllner, b. at Waizenkirchen, 17 December, 1867, for some time professor of theology and rector of the seminary at Linz, appointed bishop 19 August, 1915, consecrated 18 October following. The diocese is divided into 35 deaneries with 420 parishes, 4 mission stations and 49 benefices. There are 658 active seculars, 14 of whom for divers reasons are stationed in other parishes, 59 have no regular duties, 310 regulars of whom 36 are principally occupied in caring for souls in other dioceses. Of the religious orders of men there are the following establishments: the Canons Regular of St. Augustine have 2 monasteries, 1 at St. Florian near Linz (87 priests, 10 clerics, 5 novices), 1 at Reichersberg (21 priests, 3 clerics, 1 novice), Premonstratensian Canons at Schlägl (38 priests, 4 clerics, 1 novice), Benedictines at Kremsmünster (89 priests, 8 clerics, 1 novice), and Lambach (16 priests, 1 cleric, 6 lay brothers, 1 novice), Cistercians at Schlierbach (21 priests, 3 clerics, 2 novices), at Wilhering (38 priests, 5 clerics, 1 novice). Besides there are in the diocese 135 priests who belong to other orders and congregations, namely: Franciscans of the North Tyrol Province, 7 establishments (35 priests), Capuchins of the Eastern Hungarian Province, 2 establishments (13 priests), Capuchins of the North Tyrol Province, 2 establishments (16 priests), Discalced Carmelites (8 priests), Jesuits, 3 establishments (27 priests), Redemptorists, 2 establishments (9 priests), Congregation of the Divine Redeemer (8 priests in 1 convent), Oblates of St. Francis de Sales, 3 establishments (6 priests).

The following religious communities of women are now represented in the diocese: Ursulines at Linz (54 Sisters), Sisters of St. Elizabeth (46 Sisters), Discalced Carmelites (46 Sisters), Salesian Nuns (33 Sisters), Redemptorists (35 Sisters), Ladies of Charity of the Good Shepherd (48 Sisters), Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul (33 Sisters in 20 houses), Sisters of Mercy of St. Charles Borromeo (90 Sisters in 17 houses), Sisters of the Holy Cross (443 Sisters in 76 houses), School Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis (124 Sisters in 32 houses), Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis of Hallein, Archdiocese of Salzburg (7 Sisters, 3 branch houses), School Sisters of St. Augustine of Munich (12 Sisters, 2 branch houses), Sisters of the Third Order of Mt. Carmel (143 Sisters, 28 houses) Oblates of St. Francis de Sales (17 Sisters) Sisters of the Congregation of Christian Charity (14 Sisters), Daughters of the Divine Saviour (6 Sisters in 1 house).

The Brothers Hospitalers of St. John of God have a hospital at Linz (15 Brothers), the Congregation of Mary (Brothers of Mary) conduct a theological seminary, a private normal school, a boarding school and an industrial continuation school at Freistadt (3 priests, 34 Brothers), besides a small establishment in the parish of Tragwein at the Greisinghof with a novitiate (11 novices). The Brothers of the Christian Schools have a school and an asylum at Goisern (10 Brothers). The diocese has a seminary (4 years' course) with 100 students, which is under the care of the secular clergy, all the professors being secular priests. It has likewise a diocesan private gymnasium under the direction of the secular clergy, with 256 students, who have the privilege of continuing their studies at the preparatory seminary, "Collegium Petrinum." The bishop also has charge of a training college for teachers, a boarding place for teachers and students called the "Salesianum." There are 2 Realschulen (scientific high schools; Latin in curriculum), 2 Realgymnasien (9 to 6 years' curriculum, Latin, science, and modern languages), 3 gymnasien (9 years' classical course), which are all under the care of the Government but in which religious instruction is given; 600 state elementary schools, in which the resident priest instructs the students in Christian Doctrine. In larger towns there are also secondary schools, various industrial and agricultural schools for boys and girls (2 winter agricultural schools), 1 art school, 1 gymnasium (girls), 1 training school for male and female teachers, housekeeping schools. Secular priests have charge of the following institutions: 1 orphan asylum with which a school is connected, 1 asylum and school for the blind, 1 asylum and school for the deaf and dumb, 1 asylum for idiots, 1 House of the Good Shepherd, 1 asylum for epileptics and crippled children and several institutions which care for children.

The following associations have been organized among the clergy: Association of Mission Priests, Association of Perpetual Adoration, and Association of Catechists. Besides the several religious societies such as the League of the Sacred Heart, the Holy Rosary Society, and the Association of Christian Families, there is the Catholic People's League, which is the political organ of the Catholics throughout the country. Connected with the latter are the societies of the various classes, such as the Association of Farmers, Workingmen's Unions and Mechanics' Unions, which have branches in the towns throughout the diocese. The Zentralverein (Central Union) is the important organization for Catholic women. It has branches and many members in all parts of the country. Affiliated with this union are the Associations of Catholic Workingwomen, Association of Christian Nurses and Association of Young Girls. These organizations have planned a course of lectures and have engaged 10 teachers who travel through the country, holding meetings and lecturing to the people. This organization conducts a home with which are connected an industrial school, a housekeeping school, a home for children, primarily for those of invalidated soldiers, a farm with an agricultural housekeeping school. Its members dispense charity and do all in their power to mitigate the existing misery and destitution. Of late many shelters for children have been established. Mention should be made of the Catholic School Association, the Piusverein (for a clean press), various young men's associations, journeymen's associations (Gesellenvereine), the Marian Congregation, with more than 200 branches, the Union of Christian Workers and Accountants, and a Union of Christian Housemaids and Servants. Besides these denominational societies there are associations to improve the economic conditions of the workingmen, with a central bureau at Linz and branches in the smaller cities and towns. All the workingmen's associations have formed one central organization which publishes a weekly journal.

The Catholic Press Association is the official organ for the Catholic press. It owns several presses and has a large book-selling and publishing establishment at Linz. A Catholic daily and several weekly and semi-weekly periodicals are printed in other parts of the diocese. The Association also publishes "Die theologische praktische Quartalschrift" (The Practical Theological Quarterly), a scholarly journal which has a large circulation and is well known in America.

Lipa, DIOCESE OF (LIPANENSIS; cf. C. E., XVI-36a), in the Philippine Islands, suffragan of Manila. This diocese was first erected by a Bull of 17 September, 1902, but the Bull was not put into execution and so Pius X erected the diocese anew 10 April, 1910. It comprises territory which was formerly a portion of the Archdiocese of Manila, and the province of Fayabas, formerly part of the Diocese of Nueva Caceres. Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Petrelli was appointed the first bishop 12 April, 1910. Born in Montegiorgio, Italy, 11 February, 1873, he made his studies in the seminary of Fermo and the college of Capranica in Rome, was appointed secretary of the apostolic delegation to Manila in 1903, and a private chamberlain in 1904. He was promoted to the titular metropolitan see of Nisibis 30 May, 1915, and appointed Apostolic delegate to the Philippines 10 June following. His successor is Rt. Rev. Alfred Verzosa, born in Vigan, in the Philippines, in 1877, appointed 6 September, 1916. By the 1911 census the diocese has a Catholic population of 650,000 and 10,000 non-Catholics. It is served by 75 priests and 72 churches.

Lisbon, PATRIARCHATE OF (LISBONENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-281c), the primatial see of Portugal. The patriarch is always named a cardinal. At present the see is filled by His Eminence Cardinal Mendes Bello, born in Gouvea, Portugal, 1842, appointed titular archbishop of Mitylene 24 March, 1884, transferred to Faro 13 November following, and promoted to the Patriarchate of Lisbon 19 December, 1907, to succeed Cardinal Netto, retired. He was named cardinal in petto at the consistory of 27 November, 1911, and his nomination made public 25 May, 1914. In 1917 the cardinal was ordered to leave the city within five days, and forbidden to live in the district of Lisbon or the neighboring districts for one year. However, on 10 December following a new revolution abolished his exile and he was enabled to return to the city. The cardinal is assisted by an auxiliary, Most Rev. João Evangelista Maria de Lima Vidal, titular Archbishop of Mitylene. In 1918 fifty parishes were taken from the archdiocese of Lisbon to reestablish the diocese of Leiria. The population comprises 728,739 Catholics and about 5000 Protestants and Jews. By 1920 statistics there are in the archdiocese 662 priests, 341 parishes, and 1555 churches or chapels.

Lismore, DIOCESE OF (LISMORENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-283d), in Australia, suffragan of Sydney. This see, erected in 1887 under the name of Grafton and changed to its present title in 1900, is under the administration of its second bishop, Rt. Rev. John Carroll. Born in Brenor, Ireland, in 1865, he served as a professor at the English college in Rome, and was appointed bishop 2 December, 1909, to succeed Rt. Rev. Jeremiah Doyle, died 4 June, 1909. The religious orders now established in this diocese include the: Marist Brothers, Presentation Nuns, Sisters of St. Joseph, Sisters of Mercy, Sisters of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart, Sisters of the Good Samaritan, and Ursuline Nuns. By 1922 statistics the diocese comprises 69 churches, 20 districts, 32 secular priests, 4 Religious Brothers, 181 nuns, 9 boarding schools for girls and 3 for boys, 3 superior day schools, 31 primary schools, 1 orphan asylum, 3711 children attending parochial schools, and 128 attending superior schools. According to the 1911 census the total white population of the diocese is 106,000, and the total Catholic population 26,000.

Lithuania (cf. C. E., IX-292b).—An independent Republic which includes the former Russian province of Kaunas (Kovno), the province of Vilnius (Vilna), minus the districts of Disna and Vileika, part of the province of Gardinas (Grodno), the province of Suvalki minus the southern parts of the Suvalki district and Augustovo and parts of the province of Courland and the district of Iluksta. The boundaries of the country are still in dispute, Poland claiming certain important territories not ceded to her by the conference. The latest statistics (1914) give an area of 59,633 sq. miles and a population of 4,800,000; of the inhabitants, the Lithuanians are most numerous, forming 70% of the total population; the Poles, 8%, the Russians and White Russians, 7%; and other nationalities, 2%. Memel with an area of 1080 sq. miles is claimed by the Lithuanians, although at present it is administered by the Allied Powers.

RELIGION.—The Catholics form 75% of the population in Vilna, Kovno, and Suvalki, the Jews, 12%; Greek Orthodox, 9%; Protestants and Calvinists, 4%.

EDUCATION.—Present statistics record about 1630 grammar schools, 31 secondary schools, 42 public high schools, and several technical and agricultural schools. The opening of Vilna University is now under consideration.

FINANCE.—The budget for 1920 which planned for a revenue of 684,000,000 marks (1 mark = 24 cents) and an expenditure of 768,050,000 marks, revealed a deficit of 84,050,000 marks. In the recent treaty with Russia at Moscow, in place of the indemnity for the damage done by the Russian army in Lithuania, Russia took over the whole of the old Russian debt devolving on Lithuania: in addition, Russia was to give Lithuania 3,000,000 rubles in gold and to concede to her over 100,000 hectares of forest. During the war, the finances of the country were under the control of the Germans who issued paper money and exploited the resources of the country.

PRODUCTION.—Of the land area, 45.8% is arable; 24.3% consists of meadow and pasture; 20.3% of forest; 3.1% is unproductive, and 6.5% is waste land. The chief crops in 1920 were rye, 1,000,000,000 pounds; wheat, 150,000,000 pounds; barley, 300,000,000 pounds; oats, 500,000,000 pounds; potatoes, 2,000,000,000 pounds; peas, 120,000,000 pounds; flax seed, 70,000,000 pounds.

COMMERCE.—In 1920, the export trade of this country was valued at 521,797,163 marks; the import trade, 428,728,541 marks (the Lithuanian mark is equal to the German mark), but owing to fluctuations in the exchange the itemized values are not converted into United States currency. Lithuania has 1550 miles of railway lines, of which 1178 miles are broad gauge.

RECENT HISTORY.—Lithuania was ruled by Russia until 1915, when the Germans invaded the land. As a part of the Russian Empire she shared in the revolutionary outbreaks of 1905. The Lithuanian National Assembly then met for the first time, two thousand delegates being present to demand autonomy, with the continuance of federation with Russia. This attitude continued until 1917, when the idea of complete independence was substituted for federation. In February, 1918, a proclamation of independence was issued, and by April, 1919, a provisional constitution was adopted, to remain in force until a permanent constitution was framed. In July, 1919, Poland agreed to recognize the new state, and a few days later a treaty of peace was signed with Russia at Moscow, defining the boundary. This treaty gave to Lithuania territories claimed by the Poles, who asserted their rights over the old province of Suvalki, a part of Grodno, the city of Vilna itself, and certain other portions, cutting off Lithuania from Russia by a corridor running between Russian and Lithuanian territories to Latvia. Hardly had this treaty been concluded, when the Lithuanians came in conflict with the Poles, who insisted on boundary rectifications, and also on occupying Vilna and using Lithuania's railroads in their offensive against the Bolsheviks. Hostilities ceased for a while pending a settlement by the League of Nations. In the meantime the Polish adventurer, General Zeligowski, decided to seize Vilna on 9 October. At present there are two governments: the Kovno Government (Lithuanian Government, which functions at Kovno, a short distance south of Vilna), and the Vilna provisional Government, which declared on 20 February, 1922, for union with Poland, abrogated all treaties with Soviet Russia, and claimed the right to administer the Vilna territories by the Polish constitution of May, 1921. The Lithuanian Army includes about 50,000 men.

Litomerice (LEITMERITZ), DIOCESE OF (LITOMER-ICENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-141b), in Bohemia, Czechoslovakia. At the conclusion of the World War the Catholics assembled in large numbers at seven different conventions to insist upon the indissolubility of the marriage state, the Catholic education of the young in the schools, and to preserve intact the union of Church and State. The defection from the faith of thirty-five priests and several thousands of former adherents to embrace a recent Czechoslovakian heresy is a matter of great regret. During the War the Catholic churches raised large sums of money for the care of the wounded who, together with the destitute and orphaned, were sedulously attended by clergy, religious and laity. Provision was made also for the spiritual care of the combatants. Valuable consecrated church property and lands were confiscated by the Government for military purposes and the present poverty of the Catholics makes it impossible to buy them back at the price demanded. Of special note are the following recently deceased: Mgr. Jacob Kasper of Georgswalde, honorary canon, through whose beneficence 30 young men were educated for the priesthood; the learned Dr. Otto Willmann of Leitmeritz, professor emeritus of philosophy in the University of Prague, author of various works of philosophy and pedagogy, among which are: "Didaktik als Bildungslehre," "Philosophia Propaedeutik," "Geschichte des Idealismus"; the Stadthalter Prince Franz von Thun, who served the Church in Bohemia in word and deed. The present bishop of the diocese is Rt. Rev. Joseph Gross, consecrated 5 June, 1910. Recently 3 larger (in Semily, Reichenberg, Warnsdorf) and 4 smaller churches were built and consecrated by Bishop Gross.

The Catholic population is 1,644,014, of whom two-thirds are German and the rest Czechoslovakian. The secular priests number 822, regular priests 144, lay brothers 37. There are 444 parishes with 585 churches, 21 monasteries for men and 4 for women, 1 abbey for men and 1 for women, 2 convents for men and 84 for women, 1 seminary, 1 theological university with 6 professors and 57 students, 1 college for boys with 14 teachers and 210 students, 13 colleges for girls pensioned by the Government, 13 normal schools in the care of the Sisters, 1 training school, 14 homes, 31 hospitals, 24 orphan asylums controlled by the Sisters, 1 deaf and dumb asylum, 27 day nurseries. The normal schools were erected by and are under the Government supervision, which contributes nothing towards the support of the strictly Catholic institutions. The following Catholic associations exist: for the clergy, Verband der Deutschen geistlichkeit, Ceicilien-Verein, Kirchenbau-Verein, Marian Congregation, Association for Priestly Perseverance, Adoration Society; for the laity, Mariascheiner Association for the support of Students, Press Association, Young Men's and Journeymen's Association, Catholic National League, Catholic School Association, Marian Congregations, League of the Sacred Heart. There are 1 Catholic daily and 5 periodicals published.

Little Rock, DIOCESE OF (PETRICULANENSIS; cf. C. E., LX-295a), comprises the State of Arkansas, an area of 53,045 sq. miles. The see is filled by Rt. Rev. John B. Morris, born in Hendersonville, Minnesota, 1866, ordained in 1892, served as vicar general of Nashville, and was appointed titular Bishop of Aemonia and coadjutor to Bishop Fitzgerald of Little Rock 6 April, 1906, succeeding to the see upon the death of his predecessor, 21 February, 1907. The episcopal residence is at Little Rock, and the cathedral is dedicated to St. Andrew. In 1920 two important events occurred in the diocese, the opening of a boys' protectory at Armstrong Springs, and the founding of the Diocesan Catholic Lay Council, 8 September, for the purpose of looking after poor missions. The following year St. John's Seminary was opened at Little Rock on 28 September. The new Little Rock College has also been opened at a cost of $250,000.

The diocese counts a total Catholic population of 25,000, comprising about 1275 Italians, 700 Poles, 500 Lithuanians and Slovaks, and 455 negroes; the remainder are Americans of German and Irish descent. By latest statistics there are in the diocese 48 parishes, 113 churches, 65 missions, 122 mission stations, 1 monastery for men (Carmelite), 1 abbey for men, 1 house of Brothers, 14 convents of women, 47 secular and 45 regular clergy, 10 lay Brothers, 505 nuns, 1 seminary, 40 seminarians, 2 colleges for boys with 28 professors and 500 students, 8 academies, 1 normal school with 10 teachers and 100 students, 45 elementary schools with 700 teachers and attendance of 2940, and an industrial school, which will open this year, with 7 teachers and 50 pupils. The charitable institutions include St. Joseph's Orphanage, 5 hospitals, and 1 home at Hot Springs; all the State institutions permit the priests to minister in them. The Apostleship of Prayer and the Eucharistic League are established among the clergy, and the Knights of Columbus and Diocesan Lay Council among the laity. "The Guardian," the official diocesan organ, was founded in 1911 and now has a circulation of 3000.

Liturgical Music, PIUS X INSTITUTE OF, founded in 1918 and established at the College of the Sacred Heart, Manhattanville, New York City, by Mrs. Justine B. Ward, author of the Justine Ward Method of Teaching Music, for the purpose of concentrating on the systematic working out of the reform in church music decreed by Pope Pius X in his Motu Proprio on the subject. At the request and through the inspiration of the late Rev. Dr. Thomas Edward Shields, Dean of the Catholic Sisters College, Washington, D. C., one of whose great desires was to restore music to its true place in the field of Catholic education, and finally by means of a thorough musical education in parochial schools to enable the people to take part in the liturgical singing, Mrs. Ward, with the help and guidance of the Rev. J. B. Young, S. J., wrote her method of teaching music in which she has accomplished the simplification of a great art. This work forms the basis of the work of the Pius X Institute of Liturgical Music. The first volume of the Justine Ward Method of Teaching Music was brought out in 1913. In this volume and in those which followed, music is treated as a basic element in the development of intellect and in the formation of character. Throughout Mrs. Ward has carried out the principles and methods which Dr. Shields embodied in his Catholic Education Series of Primary Text Books, and she has correlated as closely as possible with all the elements of the curriculum, always stressing those aspects of music which would enable the child and older student to appreciate and take an effective part in liturgical singing. Her idea is that music being basic must not be reserved for the gifted few, but must be brought within the grasp of every child to use with ease and joy. To accomplish this result, children in the primary grades begin with the basic principles of music itself, at first in germinal form, but gradually unfolding in greater richness and complexity, according to the child's developing capacity. In the plan of the Justine Ward Method, music takes its place from the very first as a natural form of expression. It is not to be something arbitrarily imposed from without, arrived at through imitation and memorized by dreary repetition, but it is presented in such a way as to become part of the child's own thought. He is taught to read music as naturally as he reads and thinks in his native language. The work begins with a single note, always sung, for all music comes from singing. This original note, out of which the whole system develops, must be pure in quality, that the voice may be well placed and the tone beautiful from the start. The importance of the vocal work in the method can hardly be over-emphasized, for where there is no beauty of tone, there is no music, and therefore the vocal exercises, through which the smoothness, flexibility and beauty of tone are derived, are one of the important studies of the method.

The vocal training achieved in schools where the method is used has won for it much renown. The vocal exercises used are the work of the Rev. J. B. Young, S. J., whose thorough acquaintance with voice training and long practical experience in this field entitles him to be regarded as a leader in any movement directed to the improvement of musical education and liturgical singing. Father Young gave his constant assistance to the author of the Justine Ward Method of Teaching Music and placed at her disposal material which he had already copyrighted and which he had tested by actual use in the service of the Church. He comes frequently to the courses given at the Institute, to hear and aid the vocal work of the students.

In 1918, when Mrs. Ward founded the Pius X Chair of Liturgical Music (the term "Chair" was changed to that of "Institute" when the scope of its work was no longer that of a Chair), at the College of the Sacred Heart, little headway had been made toward carrying out the Motu Proprio of Pope Pius X. The Supreme Pontiff had urged that music be restored to the people as a means of sanctification; that such music as was used by the Church must adequately express the content of her message and that these things be done, not in a spirit of blind obedience but with that alacrity of will that springs from interior conviction of its necessity. But the people could not sing—nor could they understand a type of music so different from anything they had ever heard. The task of the Pius X Institute was therefore a vast one, but as the only hope of any great movement is in the rising generation, the field for the work was obviously in the parochial schools. The teaching of music had been largely controlled by a highly specialized group which knew its own subject but was more or less out of touch with those elements of general culture which would enable its members to teach their art according to the laws of psychological development. The rigid didactic methods of the past had served their purpose because they attempted little more than to reach the pupils with special aptitude for music. The Pius X Institute of Liturgical Music wished to reach a wider field, and has done so. The work of the Institute was first developed by training the children of the Annunciation School for Girls, taught by the Religious of the Sacred Heart, and thus securing practical results which might be used in the training of teachers. In the summer of 1917 courses for teachers were first given, for lasting results cannot be achieved through any method of instruction, however excellent in itself unless it be used by competent teachers with adequate training in the method in question. Under the direction of Mother G. Stevens, Religious of the Sacred Heart, who has been from the first the chief teacher and interpreter of Mrs. Ward's work, the Institute has flourished and won for itself a unique place in education and art. This is due primarily to the phenomenal results obtained with the children in the schools that have adopted the method, and do the work while keeping in close touch with its development at the center. The zeal with which teachers and educators have taken up Mrs. Ward's work and carried it on is in itself a proof of its value. It is these teachers, for the most part bodies of women of many different religious orders, who had realized the object to be attained and who are pushing the work in their schools. Practically every instance of its adoption in a school has been the result of popular acclaim; rarely has it been enforced from without. With such splendid co-operation, the work of the Institute has progressed healthily and normally. In June, 1920, two years after it was established, many people in the United States witnessed the beginning of the liturgical revival in this country when thirty-five hundred children, trained by teachers of the normal school of the Pius X Institute, took part in the International Congress of Gregorian Chant held in New York City in St. Patrick's Cathedral, under the auspices of the Most Reverend Patrick J. Hayes, Archbishop of New York. The beauty of the children's singing was praised by the Monks of Solesmes, Dom André Mocquereau and Dom Gatard, who led the Congress. The children, drawn from forty schools of New York City and suburbs, and several groups from Philadelphia and suburbs, sang the Missa de Angelis on the opening day of the Congress. They had had but three ensemble rehearsals before the event, yet they sang in perfect unison and with a purity of tone and an enthusiasm that brought tears to many eyes. For many years before the founding of the Pius X Institute of Liturgical Music, the Society of St. Gregory, an organization of Catholic organists and choirmasters and others interested in the advancement of the cause of sacred music, together with the Auxiliary Committee of the Pontifical Institute of Sacred Music, had been laying the foundation for a Congress such as this, but it was the work done by the school children that made the event possible. The Congress was a milestone in the history of the liturgical revival in the New World.

The people were not always silent onlookers at the liturgical drama. Their part originally was akin to that of the chorus in the Greek drama; they responded to the prayers of the priest with a shout of approval, "Amen"; with a burst of joy, "Alleluia!" The Kyrie was their own plea for mercy; the Credo their own act of faith. But for generations the voice of the people had been hushed. The Church is restoring to them their musical birthright. Since the Renaissance, public worship has suffered a gradual deterioration. Stealthily the principle of art for art's sake has crept into our churches through the choir. Music has been treated as an end rather than as a means and both music and prayer have suffered. To combat this and to make it possible to obey the Motu Proprio have been Mrs. Ward's aim and sole desire. The liturgy, the complex of public worship through words, through gesture, through color, through sound—is the most powerful means towards conversion and sanctification. The arts, as humble handmaids of the Lord, are admitted, not for their own sakes, but "to add life and efficacy to the thoughts" and by so doing, to "train and form the minds of the faithful to all sanctity" (Pius X). Music must be primarily prayer, and furthermore, liturgical prayer, vesting itself with the exact form and spirit of the liturgy. "These qualities are to be found in the highest degree in Gregorian Chant, which is consequently the chant proper to the Roman Church" (Pius X). Gregorian Chant, being unison music, can be sung by the entire people and even by little children. Besides the thirty-five hundred school children who sang during the Congress in St. Patrick's Cathedral, there were many adults, delegates from all over the United States and Europe. The seminaries of Baltimore, Rochester and other cities co-operated with those of Dunwoodie, in singing the offices. Hundreds of delegates from religious communities from all over the country took part in the singing, and for a number of weeks before the event, evening rehearsals both in churches and at the College of the Sacred Heart were conducted under the auspices of the Pius X Institute of Liturgical Music, in order that the laity might fit themselves to join in the singing of the Psalms. For three days the body of St. Patrick's Cathedral was filled with these singers under the direction of the greatest living authority on Gregorian Chant, the venerable Dom André Mocquereau, with his late pupil Dom Gatard, then prior of Farnborough Abbey, England. No more rapid and effective method could have been devised to further this great educational movement in the Church than the bringing together of those groups for the Congress which gave not only a model of what the Holy See desires, but a practical illustration of how these desires can most easily be fulfilled.

Through the new interest and enthusiasm aroused by the overwhelming success of the Congress, greater impetus was given to the work of the Pius X Institute, and in two years following the Congress the work broadened in scope. Besides the teaching of the method to the children of the Annunciation Parish School and those of the Academy of the Sacred Heart, the work of the Institute is divided into three departments: (1) the training of teachers in the normal school; (2) the supervision of the teaching of music in all the schools that have adopted the Justine Ward Method; (3) Extension Work, from which department teachers are sent out all over the country to give normal courses in schools and colleges to bodies of teacher-students in the Justine Ward Method. This extension teaching is carefully followed up by the faculty of the Institute. Written examinations are required and certificates are awarded upon the successful passing of these examinations, which are conducted on the plan of the State Regents' tests. Sealed questions are sent out from the Institute and the examination papers are returned to the center for correction and rating. Records are kept, and the work of all teachers trained through the Extension Work Department, as well as that of teachers who come to the Institute, is carefully followed up from the center through its staff of supervisors. Diplomas are awarded for practical work. In this way the work has been made a living thing, constantly being developed to meet new needs discovered in the experience of teaching it. Two sessions a year are conducted by Mrs. Ward and Mother G. Stevens in the normal school, a summer session and a winter session. The courses given include the Justine Ward Method, harmony, psychology, pedagogy and elementary and advanced Gregorian Chant. The courses in the Chant are always given by well known authorities on the subject. In the summer session of 1922, advanced Gregorian Chant was given by the great master, Dom André Mocquereau, and a course in Gregorian Chant Accompaniment was given by Dom Desroquestes, organist of Quarr Abbey, Isle of Wight, England. As an aftermath of the Congress, widespread interest in the movement showed itself in the greatly increased attendance at the courses of study given in the Normal School of the Institute. The student body includes Sisters of almost every teaching order, priests and seminarians, organists and choirmasters, as well as many pianists and singing teachers among the laity who are interested in new and progressive methods. Although the work of the Institute is distinctly Catholic in aim and purpose, the phenomenal musical results obtained everywhere in the schools that are working under its supervision, have aroused the interest of non-Catholic educators. The Justine Ward Method has been adopted in many of their private schools and the directors of these schools are working in close co-operation with the faculty of the Pius X Institute. This branching out into the non-Catholic field of education was partly brought about by a number of influential ladies who attended the International Congress of Gregorian Chant and were deeply impressed by the beauty of the children's singing and who witnessed at a public demonstration given in Cathedral Hall during the days of the Congress an exhibition of the method as it is conducted in the class room. The beautiful quality of the children's voices and their power of sustaining an absolutely true pitch without the support of an instrument have amazed all who have heard them, among whom have been many musicians of international reputation. The children can read at sight a new melody with as much ease as they read a printed statement. They can write down a melody at first hearing with equal facility. They analyze intelligently the melodies they hear, both as to content and form. They improvise phrases and responses with ease and delight and compose original melodies of musical value in two and three parts as well as in unison. After the meeting of the Congress, these ladies under the leadership of Mrs. Adrian Iselin, formed themselves into a committee to work for the spread of the Justine Ward Method of Teaching Music in both public and private schools, for they recognized in it an educational movement of power, i. e., this bringing of a great art into the lives of the people instead of to the cultured few alone. For this purpose they have given the Institute substantial financial support as well as lending to it valuable influence. But in spite of financial aid secured from various sources, the work of the Institute is not yet self-supporting. This will probably take years to accomplish and at present its needs arising from the mass of work connected with the movement, are great. Established as a Chair of the College of the Sacred Heart, it has long since outgrown the space allotted to it by the College and an adequate building and funds for supervisors are greatly needed.

Through its extension work, schools in many important cities from Maine to California are working in close co-operation with it in methods and purpose. In May, 1922, the Society of Saint Gregory held its fifth annual convention at Rochester, N. Y., under the auspices of the Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Hickey, Bishop of Rochester. The Institute was represented by a class of children from the parochial school of the Annunciation, New York City, taught by Mother G. Stevens, who gave a demonstration in the advanced work of the Justine Ward Method. School children of Rochester also took part in the demonstration of the Method.

Mrs. Ward has completed three volumes of her work and the fourth is nearly finished. The latter deals exclusively with Gregorian Chant and has been written in close collaboration with Dom Mocquereau, who gives it the highest possible praise in the introduction which he himself has written. Dom Mocquereau, more than any single figure, has contributed by his researches to the restoration of the Gregorian melodies to their original purity in the form now embodied in the Vatican edition of the Gradual, which since its publication has become a matter of musical dogma to the Church. He is the authoritative interpreter of his own discoveries of rhythmic principles, which break away from some of the rules which musicians of the last few centuries have held as axiomatic, but from whose shackles modern musicians are gradually freeing themselves. Like Vincent d'Indy and other composers of our day, Dom Mocquereau denies the dominance of the first beat of the measure as being of necessity a stressed beat; the stressed beat for the first measure he considers suitable only to the most obvious types of music. Those who have been privileged to hear the Gregorian melodies as they are sung at Quarr Abbey realize that they are shorn of their charm when they move with a heavy beat, when they crawl or ascend with painful jerks. They only become themselves when they rise and fall like clouds or like the flight of a bird. When our musical perceptions are lifted into a seraphic region where the art of singing becomes a matter of the spirit rather than the vocal organs, then it is that we begin to understand the meaning of that art which the Holy Spirit whispered into the ear of St. Gregory and we realize why it is that the Church preserves for us one of her holiest treasures—the traditional phrases of her Gregorian melodies. "What is more pleasing to God than to hear the whole Christian people sing to Him in unison?" (St. Clement of Alexandria). To teach the people to sing to God is the task that the Pius X Institute of Liturgical Music aims to carry on under the inspiration of Mrs. Ward to whom it owes its foundation and life.

Liverpool, ARCHDIOCESE OF (LIVERPOLITANENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-314a), in Lancaster County, England. On 28 October, 1911, Most Rev. Thomas Whiteside was promoted to this see and filled it until his death, 28 January, 1921. During his administration he made an energetic campaign against the three great evils which he found in the diocese—mixed marriages, drinking, and poverty. He was succeeded by Most Rev. Frederick William Keating, born in Birmingham, England, in 1859, made his studies there and at Sedgley Park, Douai, and Olton, where he was ordained in 1882, served as a professor at Oakmoor, Oscott, and Olton, pastor at Wednesbury, administrator of the cathedral of Birmingham, made a canon in 1900, and appointed Bishop of Northampton 5 February, 1908, from which see he was promoted 13 June, 1921. The religious orders established in the Archdiocese of Liverpool include: men, Benedictines, Franciscans (Friars Minor), Jesuits, Oblates of Mary Immaculate, Passionists, Redemptorists, Holy Ghost Fathers, Society of St. Joseph for Foreign Missions, Brothers of Charity, and Christian Brothers; women, Sisters of Adoration Réparatrice, Augustinian Sisters, Benedictines, Bon Secours, Carmelites, Daughters of Wisdom, Faithful Companions of Jesus, Sisters of the Good Shepherd, of the Holy Child Jesus, of the Holy Cross and Passion, Institute of Our Lady of the Retreat in the Cenacle, Little Sisters of the Poor, Sisters of Mercy, of Notre Dame, Poor Servants of the Mother of Good, Poor Clares, Poor Sisters of Nazareth, Presentation Nuns, Sisters of the Sacred Heart of Mary, St. Joseph Missionary Sisters, various branches of the Sisters of Charity, and Sisters of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary.

The last civil census of this territory, taken in 1911, counts a total population of 2,069,854, and the last Catholic census (1917) gives the total number of Catholics as 390,173. The latest statistics (1922) credit the archdiocese with 322 secular and 182 regular clergy, 74 convents, 204 public churches, chapels, and stations, 69 private chapels with Sunday Mass, 182 public elementary schools receiving Government aid, and 2 not receiving aid, 6 secondary schools for boys and 24 for girls, 86,486 children in elementary schools, 6981 children in other schools, 4 hospitals, 33 residential institutions for poor children, and 9 other homes and refuges caring in all for 3850 children.

Ljubljana (LUBIANA, German LAIBACH), DIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., VIII-743c), bishopric in Jugoslavia, rightfully still a suffragan of Gorizia (Gorica, Gora), but in fact now separated from that metropolitan see which belongs to Italy. The diocese embraces the territory of the former Austrian crown-land of Carniola (Kranjsko; Krain).

The diocese is divided into 5 archdeaneries; Ljubljana, Upper Krain Interior Krain, Middle Krain, and Lower Krain. These are subdivided into 22 deaneries. Beginning with 1922 the see contains 12 cathedral and 5 collegiate prebends, 301 parishes (of which 30 are vacant), 1 vicarship, 1 ancient chaplaincy, 17 Exposituren (i. e., filial churches joined to the mother church only by some unimportant link to recall their former relations), 235 positions for assistant clergy (86 vacant), 36 other benefices, 321 parish churches, 1000 dependent churches, 11 monastery churches, 230 chapels, 4 deaneries (with 44 curates and 45 priests) administered by the Archdiocese of Gorizia, since according to the treaty of St. Germain and Rapallo they belong to Italy, and a new partition of the diocese has not yet been made. Besides the prince-bishop there are 16 canons, 457 parish priests, 72 ecclesiastics in other positions, 68 priests retired on pensions, 127 regulars. The population consists of 500,000 Catholics, 200 Protestants, 1000 Orthodox Greeks, 200 Jews. The language spoken by about 97 per cent of the inhabitants is Slovenian. German is spoken in the larger cities like Ljubljana, and in the German-speaking center of Gotschee. The cathedral chapter consists of 12 regular and 6 honorary canons.

Since 1493 a collegiate chapter has existed also in connection with the parish church of St. Nikolaus at Novomesto (New City); it consists of a mitred provost and 4 members. The consistory of the prince-bishop is made up of the cathedral chapter, 2 honorary canons, and 2 other members. The training of the clergy is provided for by a diocesan clerical seminary with 92 students; and a seminary for boys, the College of St. Stanislaus, with gymnasium, founded in 1900, which has 340 students and to which is affiliated the smaller seminary called Collegium Aloysianum, founded in 1846. The University of Ljubljana, which was founded in 1919, provides for theological study with 15 professors and instructors and 112 theological students. Ecclesiastical professors give religious instruction in the gymnasium of St. Vid near Ljubljana (340 students), in the 3 gymnasia and the upper high school at Ljubljana, also in other schools.

The religious orders and congregations for men in the diocese are: Cistercians, 1 abbey at Sittich, 10 priests, 3 clerics, 14 lay brothers; Carthusians, 1 monastery at Ptetrij, 29 priests, 31 brothers; Franciscans, 5 monasteries, 48 priests, 15 clerics, 32 lay brothers; Capuchins, 2 monasteries, 9 priests, 6 brothers; Brothers of Mercy, 1 monastery, 1 priest, 18 brothers; Jesuits, 1 residence, 8 priests, 3 lay brothers; Society of St. Vincent de Paul, 1 mission house, 21 missionaries, 9 brothers; Priests of the Teutonic Order, 1 branch monastery, 10 priests, 2 clerics, 1 lay brother; Salesians, 2 houses, 12 priests, 24 clerics, 33 novices, 7 brothers. The total number of Sisters of Christian Charity is 340 in 17 houses.

The Cathedral of St. Nikolaus was built 1700-07 in Barocco style by the Jesuit Andrea Pozzo. Other fine examples of Barocco architecture are the Franciscan Church at Ljubljana (1628), the Church of St. Peter (eighteenth century) at the same place, and the Church of St. Jakob (1615) also at Ljubljana.

Loango (OF FRENCH LOWER CONGO), VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (DE LOANGO OR CONGI GALLICI INFERIORIS; cf. C. E., IX-317a), erected in 1890, had its boundaries somewhat changed in 1894 and again in 1911. By this second change the mission of Linzolo was detached and joined to the vicariate of French Upper Congo. It is entrusted to the Fathers of the Holy Ghost and includes a population of 1,500,000, of whom 5117 are Catholic, and 3000 catechumens. The mission is served by 24 missionary and 1 native priests, 15 Brothers, 45 catechists, 11 Sisters, 8 stations, 13 chapels, 62 secondary stations, 6 schools, and 6 orphanages. Rt. Rev. Léon-Charles-Joseph Girod, appointed titular Bishop of Obba and vicar apostolic of Loango, died at Mayumba, 13 December, 1919, and his successor has not yet been appointed.

Lobbedey, EMILE-LOUIS-CORNIL, heroic Bishop of Arras, b. at Bergues in the Diocese of Lille, on 29 February, 1856; d. at Boulogne on 26 December, 1916. He studied at Rome, winning a doctorate in theology and a licentiate in canon law as in philosophy, and served in the mission at Cambrai, Pradelles, and Hazebrouck, being named vicar general in 1887. On 5 August, 1906, he was appointed to the see of Moulins and on 5 May, 1911, was transferred to Arras. When the war broke out he was the personification of the bravery that characterized the French clergy, both secular and regular. He was decorated by the President with the cross of the Legion d'honneur with the following citation in the "Journal Officiel" (17 October, 1916)): "From October, 1914, till June, 1915, he remained at Arras within the first French lines exposed at times to violent bombardment, devoting himself to his ministry without counting the cost, visiting our soldiers, burying the dead, aiding the ambulance department, giving everyone an inspiring example of calm, coolness, energy and duty well done in imminent danger from the enemy."

Lodi, DIOCESE OF (LAUDENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-322c), in the province of Milan, Northern Italy, suffragan of Milan. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Pietro Zanolini, born in Merlara, Italy, 1866, served as professor of moral theology in the seminary, appointed Bishop of Fabriano 4 March, 1910, and transferred 6 July, 1913, to succeed Rt. Rev. Giovanni-Battista Rota, died 24 February, 1913. During the World War 142 priests and clerics of this diocese served in the army, 15 as officers, 5 as chaplains; of this number 8 were killed and 5 received decorations. Those at home joined the citizens in zealously assisting in all patriotic works, serving in the hospitals, homes for refugees, and other charitable organizations. By latest statistics the diocese comprises 166 parishes, 7 convents of men and 61 of women, 268 secular and 27 regular priests, 19 Brothers, 1 seminary, 100 seminarians, 4 secondary schools for boys, 7 for girls, 7 high schools, and 2 normal schools. The charitable institutions include a missionary union of the clergy, 9 homes, 6 orphanages, asylums in all the parishes, 7 hospitals, and 2 day nurseries. Most of the public institutions permit the clergy to minister in them, and all the public schools, but no religious schools, are assisted by the government. A mutual aid society is formed among the clergy, and a number of Catholic periodicals are published.

Lodz, DIOCESE OF (LODZENSIS), in Poland, suffragan of Warsaw. This diocese was erected by a consistorial Decree of 10 December, 1920, which took the western part of the archdiocese of Warsaw, comprising three deaneries, and formed it into the new diocese. The church of St. Stanislas Kostka was made the cathedral and granted a chapter. The former pastor of this church, Rt. Rev. Vincent Tymieniecki, born in 1872 and ordained in 1895, private chamberlain and prelate of the Holy See, was appointed the first bishop 11 April, 1921. Statistics are not yet published.

Loja, DIOCESE OF (LOJANENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-332b), suffragan of Quito in Ecuador, South America, includes the greater part of the provinces of Loja and El Oro. Rt. Rev. Carlos Maria Xavier de La Torre, appointed to this see 30 December, 1911, was transferred to the diocese of Riobamba 21 August, 1919. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. William Harris, who was born in this diocese, served as chancellor and rector of the seminary and was appointed 7 May, 1920. Statistics of 1920 credit the diocese with 80,530 Catholics, 61 secular and 20 regular clergy, 38 parishes, and 84 churches or chapels.

London, DIOCESE OF (LONDINENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-353c), in Canada, has as its present bishop Rt. Rev. Michael Francis Fallon, who was appointed fifth Bishop of London in December, 1909. In 1920 a society called "The Catholic Unity League of Canada" was established by the bishop, having as its object the propagation of Catholic truth and the refutation of errors and slanders against the Church. The work is carried on by the distribution of pamphlets prepared or procured by the society as the need arises.

During the World War seven of the priests of this diocese acted as chaplains, going overseas with the troops, and at home both clergy and laity united in all patriotic endeavors.

The religious communities now established in the diocese are: Men: Basilians, Franciscans, and Redemptorists. Women: Sisters of St. Joseph, of the Precious Blood, Ursuline Sisters, Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary, Loretto Nuns and Hospital Sisters of St. Joseph.

The present (1921) statistics of the diocese show a Catholic population of approximately 77,000. There are 63 parishes, 25 missions with churches, 88 churches, 1 monastery for women, 3 convents for men, 29 for women, 99 secular and 33 regular clergy, 5 Brothers of the Christian Schools, 436 Sisters, 1 seminary with 10 seminarians and 2 universities, Sandwich College for men and Breecia Hall for women, which are affiliated with Western University, London. There are 23 professors and 68 students in these colleges and in addition to these are 5 academies with 40 teachers and 600 girl students and 80 elementary schools with 280 teachers and 12,000 students. The charitable institutions of the diocese comprise 1 orphanage with 180 children, 3 hospitals, 1 home for the aged and indigent; all the public institutions admit the priests to minister in them.

The Priests' Eucharistic League and Total Abstinence Association are organized among the clergy as well as the Knights of Columbus, Holy Name Society, and various parish societies among the laity. The "Catholic Record" is published in London.

Longhaye, GEORGES, literary historian, b. at Rouen, 8 September, 1839; d. at Paris, 17 January, 1920. Having studied at Brugelette and Vaugirard, Paris, and won his baccalaureate with distinction, he entered the Society of Jesus at Issenheim, Alsace. As a scholastic he began to write his college dramas, like "Campion" and "Bouvines," which are of high merit in their genre, and cultivated the lyric muse. His active life after ordination was, owing to the anti-Catholic laws of France, mostly passed in Great Britain, as professor of Classics and literature to the young Jesuits. To this we owe his "Théorie des belles-lettres" (1885), a philosophy of rhetoric, a work of permanent value; "La prédication: grands maitres et grandes lois" (1888), which we followed by his more ambitious "Histoire de la littérature française au dix-septième siècle" (4 vols., 1895-96), crowned by the French Academy, and "Dix-neuvième siècle. Esquisses littéraires et morales" (5 vols., 1901-08), which has the special merit of dealing thoroughly with the Catholic writers like Veuillot, Ozanam, and de Maistre.

Loretto, DIOCESE OF. See RECANATI AND LORETTO.

Loretto, SISTERS OF, AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS (cf. C. E., IX-360d).—Within the last ten years of the Loretto Society has established eighteen new schools, and the Sisters are now located in the three Archdioceses of St. Louis, Chicago, and Santa Fe, and the fourteen Dioceses of Louisville, Rockford, Belleville, Columbus, Cleveland, Mobile, Kansas City, St. Joseph, Wichita, Lincoln, Oklahoma, Denver, El Paso, and Tucson. Recognizing the need of higher education for women, the Society has also opened two colleges. The first of these, Loretto College, Webster Groves (a suburb of St. Louis), was erected in 1915-16, opening its doors to students in the fall of the latter year. Two years later, Loretto Heights College, Loretto, Colorado, opened with a good enrollment. Both institutions were early placed upon the list of standard colleges by the Catholic Educational Association. On the teaching staff of each are the Vincentian Fathers, and the Sisters of the faculty hold degrees from the leading universities. Loretto College is affiliated with the Catholic University, St. Louis University, and Creighton, and has a preparatory department at Webster Groves, called Loretto College Academy. Loretto Heights College is affiliated with the Catholic University and De Paul University. Fifteen academies, fifty-six parochial schools, and five public schools, totaling an enrollment of nearly 18,000 pupils, complete the number of educational institutions conducted by the Sisters. Their work in the public schools under their charge in Kentucky, Kansas, and New Mexico is held in high regard. At Bernalillo, N. M., and Pawhuska, Okla., the Sisters have industrial schools for Indian girls, in which work they have met with great success.

The mother-house is at Loretto, Kentucky, sixty miles from Louisville. Every Sister of Loretto is an educator in some true sense of the word, for aside from the actual duties of teaching there are many tasks about a convent which, assigned by good judgment, aid the work of the order as a whole. The postulate is six months, followed by a novitiate of one year spent exclusively in the study of the spirit and rules of the Order. At the completion of the novitiate simple vows are taken and renewed annually until at the end of the third year they are taken in perpetuity. After profession a normal course of training as teachers is given, and each year the Sisters are given opportunity to advance in educational excellence. The Society now numbers 819 members. The rules have been revised in accordance with the new Code of Canon Law, and the corrections ratified by the Sacred Congregation of Religious, 29 July, 1920. The most important change, noted above, is the taking of perpetual vows at the end of three years, instead of five as formerly. On 25 April, 1912, Loretto Order celebrated the centennial of its foundation. The destruction by fire in January, 1919, of the Loretto Academy, Florissant, Missouri, was a great disaster. The aged Sisters of the community were transferred to the mother-house, only seven of the younger members remaining to conduct St. Ferdinand's parochial school which adjoins the Sister's property. The Sisters took up their residence in one of the buildings near the old historic convent, formerly occupied by the Ladies of the Sacred Heart, who were succeeded there in 1847 by the Sisters of Loretto. A disastrous flood, a few years previous to the fire, had necessitated the vacating of the convent. To provide suitable accommodations for the Sisters, it was decided to discontinue the high school grades at Florissant, limiting the school to the eight grammar grades, and to erect within the environs of St. Louis a boarding academy and college. This was the origin of Loretto College.

Since 1896 the Society has been under the direction of Mother Praxedes Carty, superior general. She was born in Bawnboy, County Cavan, Ireland, and came with her parents to St. Louis in May, 1865, there received her education, and entered Loretto Order in 1874. Volunteering for the western missions, she made the journey by caravan to Santa Fe, where she made her first vows, was appointed superior at Bernalillo, N. M., in 1880 assigned to the same office at Las Cruces, later called east to fill the superiorship at Florissant, Mo., and elected superior general in 1896. She was ably assisted in the beginning of her administration by Mother Francisca Lamy (d. 1912), a native of France, and niece of Archbishop Lamy. Mother Wilfrid La Motte, vicarees of the society since 1910, formerly directress of studies and mistress of voices, is the author of many poems published in periodicals, under the pen name "Balbus," and of a book of verse entitled "Flowers of the Cloister," published in 1913. Mother Rosine Green, second assistant to the superior general, has filled the offices of local superior, directress of studies, prefect of Loretto training school, secretary general, assistant general, and supervisor of schools.

Among notable deceased members of the order are: Mother Bridget Spalding, cousin of Archbishop Spalding, b. near Calvary, Ky., received the habit from Fr. Nerinckx, 25 March, 1824, at the age of thirteen, mother superior of the society 1825-58; Mothers Magdalen, Bridget, and Elizabeth Hart-Hayden, three sisters, of whom Mother Magdalen was one of the pioneer Sisters of Santa Fe, Mother Elizabeth was successively local superior, general treasurer, and superior general, and Mother Bridget labored long among the Indians at Osage Mission, Kansas, and upon the removal of the Osage Indians further west continued her zealous labor at St. Ann's Academy for young ladies, established on the mission site, and died in 1890, at the age of seventy-six, being among the hardy pioneers of the State whose pictures hang in the capitol at Topeka, Kansas; Mother Genecrose Mattingly, diamond jubilarian and the last Sister of Loretto to receive the habit from Father Nerinckx; Mother Bertha Bowles, superior general 1864-70; Mother Dafrosa Smythe, superior general for two terms; Mother Ann Joseph Mattingly, superior general 1882-88; Sister Joanna Walsh, one of the early western pioneers, later assistant to mother superior and twice elected mistress of novices; Mother Catherine Connor, successively filled high offices until her election as superior general in 1894; Mother Evangelista Bindewald, for many years assistant general (d. 1916); Mother Victorine Kelly, elected secretary general in 1910 (d. 1914); Mother Pancratia Bonfels, erected Loretto Heights Academy (d. 1915); Mother Flaget Hill, efficient manager, niece of Rev. Walter Hill, S.J., and sister of Rev. Joseph Hill, S.J.; Mother Austin Gough, mistress of novices.

Los Angeles, DIOCESE OF. See MONTEREY AND LOS ANGELES.

Louise de Marillac, BLESSED (cf. C. E., IX-133c), beatified 9 May, 1920, by Benedict XV. Her feast is celebrated on 15 March.

Louisiana (cf. C. E., IX-378c).—The area of the State of Louisiana is 48,506 sq. miles of which 3097 are water surface. There are 5363 miles of railroad, besides 318 miles of electric railway. The population of the State in 1910 was 1,656,388; in 1920 it had increased to 1,798,388.

INDUSTRIES.—The report of the United States Department of Agriculture for 1919 gives the agricultural output as follows:

Cotton	302,224 bales	1,445,000 acres
Corn	32,375,000 bushels	1,850,000 acres
Sugar	15,142,290 pounds	264,000 acres
Molasses	28,049,000 gallons (1918)
Cleaned Rice	19,712,000 pounds	560,000 acres
Sweet Potatoes	6,300,000 bushels	70,000 acres
Irish Potatoes	1,600,000 bushels	25,000 acres
Hay	450,000 tons	250,000 acres

Total area under cultivation, 5,095,000 acres.

MANUFACTURES.—The value of manufactures has increased remarkably in the last five years. In 1914 there were 2211 manufacturing establishments, employing about 77,665 wage earners; the capital invested was $261,635,000, and the value of products $255,313,000. In 1919 the number of establishments was 2617; wage earners, about 98,344; capital invested, $463,860,000; value of products, $676,190,000.

RECENT HISTORY.—The Constitutional Convention of 1913 was so limited in power that all it accomplished was to take the constitution of 1898 and insert in its proper place each amendment that had been adopted since that time, the continuous text thus produced being the constitution of 1913. Recent amendments limit the state tax rate to 3 mills and the local tax rate to 5 mills, and require every parish and the city of New Orleans to levy a tax of one and a half mills annually for public schools. In a decision of the Supreme Court of 23 March, 1915, reading of the Bible and recitation of the Lord's prayer in the opening of the public schools in Caddo Parish was prohibited. The case was brought by the Catholics and the Jews. In 1916 a State Board of state affairs was created. More recent legislation has dealt mainly with problems rising from the World War. Louisiana's contribution was 65,988 soldiers or 1.76 per cent of the United States Army, stationed either in the 39th Division at Camp Beauregard, Louisiana, or in the 87th Division at Camp Pike, Ark. The summary of casualties among the Louisiana members of the American Expeditionary Force was as follows: deceased, 27 officers and 796 men; prisoners, 1 officer and 26 men; wounded, 71 officers and 2098 men. In August, 1918, Louisiana ratified the national prohibition amendment, the fourteenth state to do so. The state refused to adopt the federal suffrage amendment 15 June, 1920. The Constitutional Convention met in 1921 to revise the State Constitution.

PRINCIPAL RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS.—The latest available statistics of religious denominations are given in the United States Census bulletin for 1916, from which we take the following figures, except the number of Jews which is taken from the "Jewish Year Book" for 1920: Catholics, 509,910; Baptists, 213,692; Methodists, 88,566; Jews, 12,723; Protestant Episcopalians, 11,632; Presbyterians, 11,820; Lutherans, 8247; German Evangelicals, 4,009; Disciples, 3615; Congregationalists, 1765; all other denominations 4662.

CATHOLICISM.—The State now comprises the Archdiocese of New Orleans and the Dioceses of Alexandria (formerly Natchitoches) and La Fayette. The Catholic Directory for 1921 gives the following figures: 1 archbishop; 3 bishops; 1 abbot; 188 secular and 205 regular priests; 197 churches with resident priests; about 235 missions, stations and chapels; 1 preparatory seminary with 44 students; 11 colleges and academies for boys with 3216 students; 13 academies for young ladies with 3266 students; 110 parishes with parochial schools. The Catholic population is 537,851; the baptisms in 1920 were 21,042.

EDUCATION.—Educational statistics are as follows: Educable youth: white 335,854; colored 228,939; total, 564,793. Enrollment in schools: white, 223,308; colored, 99,757; total, 323,065. Teachers employed in public schools: white, 6732; colored, 1500; total, 8232. Teachers employed in agricultural schools: white, 16; colored, 21. Pupils in agricultural schools: white, 237; colored, 323; total, 560. Number of public schools: white, 2113; colored 1168; total, 3281. Number of private colleges: white, 7; colored, 2. Receipts from public school funds in 1919: $7,849,779; the non-revenue receipts were $3,332,090; disbursements, $6,465,549. The Louisiana State University has 73 instructors and 1860 students. Tulane University, with an endowment of $5,162,243, has 348 instructors and 2908 students. In 1919 the State Normal School had 36 instructors and 1649 students; the Ruston Industrial Institute had 36 instructors and 1027 students; Lafayette Industrial Institute had 21 instructors and 931 students; the Southern University for colored youth had 564 students.

State laws relative to private and parochial schools are as follows: No funds raised for the support of the public schools of the state shall be appropriated to or used for the support of any private or sectarian schools (Art. 253); all buildings and property used exclusively for colleges and other school purposes shall be exempt from taxation, provided that the property so exempted be not leased for purposes of private or corporate profit or income (Art. 230); the state board may prescribe teacher training courses for public and private school doing work two years in advance of high schools. Graduates of normal schools offering a two-year course and operating a practice school with sufficient teaching force may be certified without examination; the branches of spelling, reading, writing, drawing, arithmetic, geography, grammar, United States history, the laws of health, including the evil effects of alcohol and narcotics, shall be taught in every elementary school; the teaching of German is forbidden in all schools, colleges, and universities.

Louisville, DIOCESE OF (LUDOVICOPOLITANENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-386b), comprises 22,714 sq. miles in the State of Kentucky. Rt. Rev. William George McCloskey, who came to this see in 1868, as its fourth bishop, died 17 September, 1909. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Denis O'Donahue, born in Daviess, Indiana, 1848, ordained 6 September, 1874, consecrated titular Bishop of Pomario and auxiliary at Indianapolis 25 April, 1900, and transferred 7 February, 1910. The year 1912 witnessed several important events in the diocese: in April the centenary of the Sisters of Loretto at the Foot of the Cross was celebrated, in August, the national convention of the Federation of Catholic Societies met here, and in October the Sisters of Charity of Nazareth celebrated their centennial. The one hundredth anniversary of the dedication of the old cathedral (St. Joseph's Church) at Bardstown took place in 1916, and in 1920 the Sisters of Charity of Nazareth celebrated the centenary of their academy, St. Vincent's, in Union County, Kentucky. During the World War 5 priests of the diocese served as chaplains, 3 of them going overseas.

By latest statistics the Catholic population numbers 120,289, chiefly of Irish or German descent, with a small number of Italians. The diocese comprises 108 parishes, 163 churches, 55 missions, 3 monasteries for men, 1 abbey for men, 4 convents for men, 9 mother-houses of religious congregations of women, 114 secular and 96 regular clergy, 32 seminarians, 1 college for women, 4 high schools with 44 teachers and 907 boy students, 14 academies with 227 teachers and 605 boy and 2266 girl students, 88 elementary schools with 388 teachers and a total attendance of 15,972, and 2 industrial schools with 40 teachers and 308 pupils. The charitable institutions include 3 homes, 3 asylums, and 4 hospitals, and a number of the public institutions permit the priests to minister in them. Six schools taught by Sisters receive financial assistance from the State. A Clerical Aid Society is organized, and a diocesan paper, "The Record," is published.

Lourdes, DIOCESE OF. See TARBES AND LOURDES.

Louvain, UNIVERSITY OF (cf. C. E., IX-391c).—The destruction of the University of Louvain is one of the outstanding features of the Great War. On the night of 25 August, 1914, the invading Germans set fire to the city of Louvain, and three of the University buildings were destroyed—the Ecole commerciale et consulaire, the ancient and world famous library—which according to the Hague Convention was inviolable—and the administration offices situated in Les Halles. The conflagration destroyed 300,000 volumes, a thousand incunabula, and hundreds of manuscripts, as also the University's title of nobility and its charter of foundation, dating from 1425. On 27 August the faculty and students were dispersed. Classes were not resumed until 21 January, 1919, when Mgr. Ladeuze, rector magnificus, delivered the opening discourse in the auditorium of the College du Pope Adrian IV. Meanwhile the interest and sympathy of the intellectual world had been aroused in behalf of the University and a movement was set on foot in Europe and America to assist in the work of restoring the library. In the Peace Treaty it was provided that Germany should repair to the full the damage done to the University, which benefited further by being the recipient of a share of the 150,000,000 francs distributed among the four Belgian universities by the American Committee of Relief at the conclusion of its activities. On 2 August, 1921, the cornerstone of the new library was laid in the presence of the King and Queen, the Cardinal of Malines, bishops, ambassadors, generals, and representatives of institutions of learning, President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia laying the stone. At the end of 1921 about 500,000 volumes had been received, about half by gift, and the other half by German reparation. The number of students enrolled in 1920-21 was 3248, divided as follows: theology 57, law 478, political and social sciences 22, school of commerce 218, medicine 845, philosophy and letters 357, Thomistic philosophy 68, science 477, special courses 444, Ecole de Brasserie 10, preparatory institute 40. The University has announced its intention of admitting women to the full course of studies.

Löwenstein-Wertheim-Rosenberg, PRINCE KARL H. VON, statesman and Dominican, b. on 31 May, 1834, at the Castle of Haid, Bohemia; d. in the Dominican convent at Cologne on 16 November, 1921. His mother was Princess Agnes of Hohenlohe-Langenburg, and his father the head of the junior branch of the Löwenstein family, with its chief German residence at Kleinheubach, the elder branch being Protestant. He married Princess Adelheid of Isenburg in 1859, who died two years later, and later (1863) took as wife Princess Sophie of Liechtenstein. Two of his daughters became religious, Franziska de Paula joining the Sisters of St. Francis at Aachen, and Agnes entering the Benedictine convent in the Isle of Wight; a third daughter became Princess Miguel of Braganza. Prince Löwenstein was a Knight of the Golden Fleece, and a hereditary member of the Bavarian Parliament and of the Upper House in Würtemberg, Baden, and Hesse. He was a leader in the most intensely Catholic element in Germany, and was active in social reform. He was the founder and president of the Anti-duelling League. For years he had been in charge of the committee promoting Catholic congresses; he was Windthorst's chief associate in forming the Center Party, and fought Bismarck energetically during the Kulturkampf. When Bishop Blum of Limburg was exiled in 1876 for refusing to obey the anti-Catholic legislation, Prince Löwenstein invited him to his castle at Haid in Bohemia, and kept him there during his seven years' exile. When the Center Party became less occupied with purely Catholic interests, his political activities lessened. His wife died in 1899. In 1907 he joined the Dominicans at Venlos in Holland, and was ordained on 8 December, 1908, being thereafter known as Father Raymundus. At his funeral held in the chapel of the castle of Kleinheubach the officiating priest was a convert, a former army captain, one of the princes of the Protestant branch of the family, the Löwenstein-Wertheim-Freudenbergs.

Loyola University, in Chicago, Illinois, conducted by the Jesuit Fathers, is the outgrowth of St. Ignatius College, founded 1869. In June, 1921, the golden jubilee of the university was celebrated. During half a century it had grown from a struggling high school with two classes and ninety-nine students to a university with six departments and more than two thousand enrolled in over fifty classes. The growth since 1906 has been phenomenal. The last fifteen years have been marked by the purchase of a splendid site on Lake Michigan, in Rogers Park, the erection of Loyola Academy and the Cudahy Engineering Building, the opening of the departments of law, medicine, engineering, and sociology, and the inauguration of an Extension Department with fifteen centers in various parts of the city, and an enrollment of over a thousand students.

The Department of Arts and Sciences, at Blue Island Avenue and Roosevelt Road, is the oldest in the university. For half a century it has furnished to lawyers, doctors, engineers, and priests the liberal education which was a necessary prerequisite for their postgraduate studies. The locality in which it is situated has become the city's "Ghetto"; and present plans contemplate moving the college to the site on the lake front at Devon Avenue and Sheridan Road as soon as the necessary funds are available. At present the college has about 150 students, and there are about 5000 alumni in or near Chicago. The dean of this department is Rev. Geo. P. Shanley, S.J. Total registration (1921) 1825.

The Department of Law, established in September, 1908, was due to the persevering energy of Mr. Patrick H. O'Donnell, who had urged the opening of a law school for several years, and had actively interested himself in securing a representative faculty. With the co-operation of Rev. Francis Cassilly, then vice-president of St. Ignatius College, the project was launched in the fall of 1908 in the Ashland Block under the name of "The Lincoln College of Law." This name was subsequently changed to "The Loyola Law School." For thirteen years it has maintained a night school, with a four-year course leading to the degree of LL.B., and the present year marks the opening of a three-year day course with a prerequisite of two years of college work. The dean of the law school is Mr. Arnold McMahon, and the faculty regent Rev. Frederick Siedenburgh, S.J. Total registration (1921) 155.

The Department of Medicine represents the fusion of no less than four pre-existing medical schools, the Illinois Medical College, the Bennet, Reliance, and Chicago Colleges of Medicine. These schools were for the most part what are known as "proprietary schools," and the long and difficult task of raising them to a standard which complied with the exacting Class A requirements of the American Medical Association is a story of splendid achievement in medical education. The credit for this successful accomplishment is due in large measure to the faculty regent of the department, Rev. Patrick J. McMahon, S.J., the dean, Doctor Louis Moorhead, and the energetic and devoted staff which they have gathered around them in medicine and surgery. Total registration, 193.

The School of Sociology was founded in 1914 by the Rev. Frederick Siedenburgh, S.J., after his return from several years of post-graduate work in sociology in various European universities. Quarters were secured in the Ashland Block in connection with the law department, and the first school in the United States under Catholic auspices for the training of social workers was opened. Its success from the beginning was marked. Students with a high school training are granted a certificate of social economy at the conclusion of a two-year course; those who have finished two years of college work are given the degree of Ph.B. As in all professional schools of sociology, the time is divided between the history and theory of sociology and actual field work.

Shortly after the School of Sociology was established, extension courses, with full academic credit, were offered in the Ashland Block, in philosophy, pedagogy, English, history, and modern languages. As the quarters became too small to accommodate the number of students, centers were opened in various parts of the city, and the staff of lecturers increased. In this way opportunities for educational work are afforded members of the teaching Sisterhoods in Chicago. Rev. Frederic Siedenburgh, S.J., is also dean of this department, assisted by Rev. Claude J. Pernin, S.J.

There are two preparatory high schools in connection with the university: St. Ignatius High School on the West Side, with an attendance of about 600, and Loyola Academy in Rogers Park, with an attendance of some 350. These figures represent the capacity of the two schools. Hundreds must be turned away because of the lack of accommodations.

Rev. Wm. H. Agnew, S.J., former editor of "The Queen's Work," has been appointed president of Loyola University and St. Ignatius College to replace Rev. John Furay, S.J., who is resigning to become director of St. Mary's of the Lake, which will open in September (1922). For the last few years Father Agnew has been in St. Louis, but his new appointment will continue for six years.

Lublin, DIOCESE OF (LUBLINENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-403a).—The Diocese of Podlachia, suppressed by the Russian Government in 1867 and placed under the administration of the Bishop of Lublin and subsequently incorporated in that diocese, was restored to its original dignity in 1918 following upon the expulsion of the Russians from Poland in 1915 and the recent re-establishment of Polish independence. The first bishop of the restored diocese is Henry Przewdzicki, born 1873, consecrated 1918. The building of the Catholic University of Lublin was completed in 1918. It was founded by Charles Jaroszyński and Egidius Radziszewski, the latter of whom was appointed its first rector. In the same year the houses and convents of the religious were restored. Both clergy and laity responded patriotically to the call of their country during the World War. The clergy remaining at home devoted themselves to the care of the destitute and orphaned, and in every parish stations were erected for the relief of suffering. In this work the Jesuits, Redemptorists, Lazarists, and Franciscans deserve special mention. One priest was unjustly put to death by the Hungarian soldiers, and one was exiled into Austria.

The present bishop is Marianus Leo Fulman, born 27 March, 1866, ordained 1 May, 1889, preconized 24 September, 1918, consecrated 17 November, and enthroned 1 December of the same year. The present auxiliary bishop is Adolph Jelowski, born 25 February, 1863, ordained 7 December, 1890, preconized 9 November, 1918, consecrated 23 March, 1919, vicar general and domestic prelate of His Holiness, titular Bishop of Loryma. Among the clergy of note recently deceased are: Francis Jaszewski, Bishop of Lublin, born 9 May, 1832, ordained 1855, administrator of the diocese 1885, consecrated bishop 18 May, 1890, domestic prelate, assistant at the pontifical throne, died 23 July, 1914; Anthony Nojszewski, rector of the diocesan seminary, d. 10 September, 1921; Victor Suski, Dean of Zaklikow, d. 22 April, 1919; Anthony Komorowski, Dean of Lubartow, d. 14 June, 1919; Adolph Majewski, prelate of the collegiate chapter of Zamosc, d. 7 December, 1919; Adam Decjusz, canon of the collegiate chapter of Zumosc, dean of Kramystaw, d. 25 December, 1920; Venceslaus Koscielniakowski, honorary cathedral canon, dean of Kramystaw, d. 7 March, 1920.

The diocese is divided into 21 deaneries. The Cathedral chapter consists of 4 prelates, 8 canons, and 3 honorary canons; there is also a collegiate chapter at Zamosc with 3 prelates, and 12 canonries, of which 3 are vacant. The Catholic population numbers 909,912 Poles. There are 325 secular and 20 regular priests, and 10 lay brothers; 190 parishes with 249 churches; 5 convents for men and 20 for women; 1 diocesan seminary at Lublin with 11 professors and 102 students; 1 university at Lublin with a teaching faculty of 38 professors and a student body of 1250; 1 college for girls with 350 students; 11 asylums; 2 hospitals. The Government does not contribute to the support of the Catholic institutions. Among the clergy there is an association called "Unitas." The religious organizations among the laity are numerous, totaling about 400. One Catholic monthly is published, called "Wiadomosci Diecezjalne Lubelskie." The statistics of religious orders within the diocese are as follows: 2 Jesuits, 3 Discalced Carmelites, 4 Capuchin Friars Minor, 6 of the Observance, 17 Ursulines, 44 Sisters of Charity with 7 establishments; 6 Sisters of Divine Providence; 16 Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis with 3 orphanages, 10 Little Servants of the Blessed Virgin with 2 orphanages.

Lucca, ARCHDIOCESE OF (LUCANENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-405a), in the province of the same name, in Tuscany, Central Italy, directly dependent on the Holy See. This see was filled by His Eminence Benedetto Cardinal Lorenzelli from 14 November, 1904, until April, 1910, when he retired. His successor was appointed in the person of Most Rev. Angelo Arturo Marchi, born in Copparo, Italy, in 1846, ordained in 1868, made canon and pastor of the cathedral of Bologna, appointed archbishop of Reggio-Emilia 16 December, 1901, and transferred 27 November, 1911. The 1920 statistics credit the archdiocese with 221,432 Catholics, 246 parishes, 512 secular priests, 120 seminarians, and 623 churches or chapels.

Lucera, DIOCESE OF (LUCERINENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-406b), in the province of Foggia, Southern Italy, suffragan of Benevento. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Giuseppe di Girolamo, born in Vallecorsa, Italy, 1872, was made an assistant in the office of the Congregation of the Council in 1917, was named an honorary chamberlain in 1918, and appointed 21 April, 1920, succeeding Rt. Rev. Lorenzo Chieppa, transferred to this see 23 June, 1909, died 15 October, 1918. During the vacancy the diocese was administered by His Eminence Cardinal Ascalesi, Archbishop of Benevento. The Catholic population of the diocese numbers 76,870, and by 1920 statistics there are 18 parishes, 187 secular and 20 regular clergy, 40 seminarians, 12 Brothers, 40 Sisters, and 110 churches or chapels. By a Decree of 1908 the diocese was united to that of Troia, and a Decree of 4 March, 1914, gave to it the territory of Roseto Valforte, while another Decree of 23 February, 1916, gave it another parish.

Luck and Zytomierz, DIOCESE OF (LUCBORIENSIS ET ZYTOMERIENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-463d), in the Russian provinces of Volhynia and Kiev (part of Volhynia is now in the new republic of Poland), suffragan of Mohileff. It is a diocese of both the Latin and Ruthenian Rites, but for the latter rite it is a suffragan of Lwow. From 1866 until 24 June, 1918, the Bishop of this see also administered the diocese of Kamenetz-Podolski. The Latin see is filled by Rt. Rev. Ignatz Dubowski, born in the diocese in 1874, ordained in 1899, made an honorary canon of Mohileff, pastor and vice rector of the cathedral of Zytomierz, named an honorary chamberlain in 1910 and again in 1914, appointed bishop 16 October, 1916, to succeed Rt. Rev. Charles Anthony Niedzialkowski, died 7 April, 1911. The bishop is usually assisted by three auxiliaries residing at Luck, Zytomierz, and Kiev, but at present there is only one, Rt. Rev. Michel Godlewski, titular Bishop of Ægea, who resides at Luck. The 1920 statistics credit Zytomierz with 8 deaneries, 76 parishes, and 242,917 Catholics, while Luck has 10 deaneries, 92 parishes, 1 collegiate chapter at Olyka, the provost of which is mitred, and 303,683 Catholics.

As a bishopric of the Ruthenian Rite this see is of very ancient origin, but it was suppressed in the eighteenth century and only re-established in 1915. Its re-establishment had not yet been approved by the Polish Government. Rt. Rev. Joseph Bocian was appointed and consecrated for the see in 1915 by Most Rev. Andrew Szeptycki, Archbishop of Lwow, in virtue of special powers conferred by Pius X. The appointment was confirmed by the Holy See 23 February, 1921. Statistics are not published for this Rite.

Luçon, DIOCESE OF (LUCIONENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-413a), in the province of La Vendée, France, suffragan of the Archdiocese of Bordeaux. Rt. Rev. Clovis-Nicholas-Joseph Catteau, appointed to this see 21 September, 1877, filled it for over thirty-seven years, until his death, 28 November, 1915. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Gustav-Lazare Garnier, born in Chatillon-en-Bazois 1857, made his studies at Pignelin and Nevers, ordained in 1881, served as a professor in the lower seminary, pastor, vicar general, and made superior of the upper seminary in 1903, named a prothonotary apostolic in 1911, and appointed bishop 27 May, 1916. By 1920 statistics the diocese has a total population of 438,520, 301 parishes, 4 archpriests, 30 deaneries, 271 succursal parishes, 146 vicariates, and 10 annexes or stations.

Ludden, PATRICK A. See SYRACUSE, DIOCESE OF.

Lugano, DIOCESE OF. See BASLE-LUGANO.

Lugo, DIOCESE OF (LUCENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-417d), in Galicia, Spain, is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Compostela. Rt. Rev. Bishop Basulto y Jiménez, who came to this see in 1909, was transferred to the diocese of Jaén 18 December, 1919, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Plácido Angel Rey-Lemos, O. F. M. Bishop Rey-Lemos was born at Lugo 1867, ordained 1890, entered the Order of Friars Minor 1892, made procurator general of the Order 1911, appointed titular

Bishop of Amatha 1917, and administrator apostolic of Jaén, transferred to the see of Lugo 18 December, 1919.

The seminary at Lugo was founded in 1591, and the present building was erected by Rt. Rev. Gregorio Mario Aguirre, then Bishop of Lugo, afterwards Cardinal Archbishop of Toledo. The cathedral is dedicated to the Blessed Virgin.

By present (1921) statistics the inhabitants of this diocese number 392,500; there are 950 priests, 635 parishes, 452 missions, 5 religious orders of men, 5 cloistered orders of women, and 6 other orders of women.

Lugoj (or LUGOS), DIOCESE OF (LUGOSTENSIS RUMENORUM; cf. C. E., IX-419b), a diocese of Greek Rumanian Rite, in Rumania, suffragan of Fogaras. The see is filled by Rt. Rev. Valerius Trajan Frentiu, born in this diocese in 1875, named vicar forain, and appointed bishop 14 December, 1912, succeeding Bishop Hosszu, transferred to Gherla 15 December, 1911. On 12-13 August, 1920, a diocesan synod was held and the following subjects were brought up for discussion: a diocesan seminary, diocesan boarding houses in connection with the secondary schools, a diocesan normal school for young girls, the recruiting of priests, the association of priests adorers, singing schools, associations for women, etc. By 1920 statistics the diocese comprises 5 deaneries and 1 vicariate forain, divided into 15 archpresbyteries and 174 parishes, of which three are outside of the newly established frontier, 2 being in Jugoslavia and 1 in Hungary, 186 secular priests, and 188 churches or chapels.

Lungro, DIOCESE OF (LUNGRENSIS), a diocese of the Greek Rite, in the Province of Calabria, Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. This diocese was erected by a Decree of 13 February, 1919, which took the eighteen Greek parishes included in the Latin dioceses of Rossano, Bisignano, Cassano, and Anglona, to form the new diocese. The bishop, Rt. Rev. Giovanni Mele, of the Greek Rite, born in Calabria in 1888 and appointed 10 March, 1919, has jurisdiction over all the Greek Catholics scattered through the Latin parishes of Rossano. The church dedicated to St. Nicholas of Myra, at Lungro, was made the cathedral. The seminary is at Grotta Ferrata. Latest statistics credit the diocese with 21 parishes, 21 churches, 30 secular priests and a Catholic population of 35,000; four associations are organized among the laity. During the World War about 400 men from this diocese gave up their lives for their country, and those at home took an active part in all patriotic works.

Luni-Sarzana and Brugnato, DIOCESE OF (LUNENSIS SARZANENSIS ET BRUGNATENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-436a), in the province of Genoa, Italy. The first of these dioceses is directly dependent on the Holy See, while the second is suffragan of the Archdiocese of Genoa. The episcopal residence is at Sarzana. These united sees are filled by Rt. Rev. Bernardo Pizzorno, born in Varazza, Italy, 1861, canon provost of the cathedral, professor of moral theology in the seminary, and vicar general, appointed titular Bishop of Comana 29 April, 1909, and auxiliary to the Archbishop of Sassari, named administrator apostolic of the diocese 12 April, 1910, transferred to the see of Crema 14 January, 1911, retired and transferred to the titular see of Flaviopolis 6 December, 1915, and again transferred to Luni Sarzana and Brugnato 7 March, 1921. According to statistics of 1920 Luni Sarzana counts a Catholic population of 161,755, 91 parishes, 225 secular and 70 regular clergy, 94 seminarians, 30

Brothers, 136 Sisters, and 300 churches or chapels. Brugnato is credited with 19,403 Catholics, 27 parishes, 53 secular and 14 regular clergy, 32 seminarians, 8 Brothers, 57 Sisters, and 75 churches or chapels.

Lutheranism (cf. C. E., IX-458a) continues in Germany and Scandinavia to be agitated by heated controversies between orthodox and rationalistic elements and tends in the United States toward central administrative organization or at least larger denominational combinations.

I. HISTORY.—The third centenary of Martin Luther's revolt was commemorated in 1817 with such enthusiasm that it constituted one of the outstanding events in the history of Lutheranism in the nineteenth century. An even more extravagant glorification of the heresiarch and of his pseudo-reform was to signalize in 1917 the fourth centenary of the publication of Luther's ninety-five theses. But the World War then in progress and the internal dissensions among Lutherans prevented celebration on any extensive scale. Germany was too much absorbed in the war and other nations were too hostile to glorify the memory of Luther. Moreover, some of his own followers in Germany saw little reason and showed no eagerness to commemorate the establishment of a church then in rather precarious condition. Hansen, a zealous defender of Lutheran orthodoxy, frankly declared in 1917 that "Protestantism had no ground for celebrating jubilees, but ample reason for doing penance in sackcloth and ashes." To outsiders the multiplicity of opinions among Lutherans themselves as to what constitutes the essentials of Lutheran faith and practice suggests the conclusion that Luther confused rather than "freed" the human mind. To the confusion of religious ideas were added, with the separation of Church and State in 1818, uncertainty of financial support and diversity of administrative direction in the Lutheran churches of Germany (see EVANGELICAL CHURCH). Lutheranism, however, still remains the state church in the three Scandinavian kingdoms of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden.

In the United States two important combinations were recently effected among Lutherans. The Lutheran General Synod, Lutheran General Council and Lutheran United Synod, South, combined and formed the United Lutheran Church in America (15 November, 1918). Three Norwegian synods, the Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Synod of North America, the Norwegian Hauge Synod and the United Norwegian Lutheran Church took similar action and formed the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America. In foreign missionary work Lutheranism has been adversely affected by the issue of the war and the consequent exclusion of German missionaries from most of their fields of evangelistic endeavor. American Lutherans have made efforts to add these territories to those already in their charge. They also conduct home missions among the negroes and Indians of the United States, but have for generations sustained heavy losses because, differing in race, language and customs, they found it difficult to adapt themselves to religious life in America. A campaign among them for $500,000 to be spent in reconstruction service was eminently successful in 1919. The denomination maintains a large number of educational institutions in America, and is, as the Catholic Church, a strong believer in and defender of parochial schools. Among its institutions for higher education are the following: in Pennsylvania, Muhlenberg College at Allentown, and Susquehanna University at Selinsgrove; in Illinois, Carthage College at Carthage and Augustana College at Rock Island; in Kansas, Bethany College at Lindsborg and in various States many Concordia, Wartburg, Luther or Lutheran colleges or seminaries.

II. STATISTICS.—There are at present approximately 60,000,000 Lutherans in the world. They are most numerous in Germany which has to-day 39,000,000 Evangelicals. In this number are included not only Lutherans, but also millions of members of the Reformed Church. The relative strength of these two denominations in German lands cannot be accurately determined. Sweden has 5,800,000 Lutherans; Finland, 3,283,000; Denmark, 3,100,000; Norway, 2,600,000; Poland, 1,500,000; Estonia, 1,458,000; Hungary and Rumania together, 1,360,000; Latvia, 1,200,000.

In the United States the Lutherans are the fourth largest denomination ranking after the Catholics, Methodists, and Baptists. They had in 1921, 2,493,000 members with 14,000 churches and 10,000 ministers. Canada has approximately 65,000 Lutherans.

Lutzk, DIOCESE OF. See LUCK.

Luxemburg, DIOCESE OF (LUXEMBURGENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-465a), comprising the duchy of the same name, is directly subject to the Holy See, and was erected a vicariate apostolic in 1833 and raised to a diocese in 1870. The second bishop of this diocese, Rt. Rev. Jean-Joseph Koppes, b. in Luxemburg 1843, appointed bishop 28 September, 1883, assistant at the pontifical throne 1896, d. 30 November, 1918, was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Pierre Nommesch. Bishop Nommesch was born in this diocese, was made bishop 8 March, 1920, and consecrated 25 March. The duchy is almost entirely Catholic; the total number of inhabitants was 246,000 by the 1920 statistics, and of this number 242,272 are Catholics, 1230 Protestant, and 970 Jews. The language of the people is a dialect of their own, a kind of Low German with many words borrowed from the French. With the death of the Grand Duke William the male line of rulers became extinct, and, according to the Nassau pact of 1783 and the statute of 1907, his daughter Marie Adelaide succeeded him, taking the throne in 1912. On 1 August, 1914, two days after Germany's declaration of war on France, German troops invaded the duchy, and throughout the war vast quantities of war materials passed over the railways of this country, in spite of the convention of 11 November, 1902, which forbade such transportation. During the whole war, in spite of blockade, isolation, and hardship, the people of the little duchy showed heroic charity toward the sufferers of France and Belgium, sending trainloads of food and clothing. After the signing of the armistice the same charity was shown toward the suffering people of Central Europe, particularly Austria and the Tyrol. In 1918, upon the heels of the retiring enemy, the victorious armies, headed by the Americans, passed through the gayly decorated capital and were viewed from the palace steps by the Grand Duchess and General Pershing.

In 1912 the religious convictions of the Grand

Duchess, a staunch Catholic, made her hesitate to sign the education bill which would banish all religious instruction from the schools, and although she finally signed it, the Liberals and Socialists attacked her severely. Thenceforth serious accusations were launched against her, particularly that of pro-Germanism during the war. The charges had very slight foundation, and many of them were gross calumnies, but in an effort to bring peace to her country; she abdicated in 1919 and entered a Carmelite convent. On 28 September of the same year a referendum was taken in Luxemburg to decide on the political future of the country, and a continuation of the existing government was favored four to one. The Princess Charlotte, younger sister of Marie Adelaide, then ascended the throne, and shortly after her accession she married Prince Felix of Bourbon-Parma. A son was born in February, 1921, and christened John Benedict, after John the Blind, King of Bohemia, and the present Holy Father Benedict XV. The papal nuncio came from Brussels to represent His Holiness, both at the marriage of their Highnesses and at the baptism of the infant prince.

In October, 1915, Paul Eyschen, the well known minister of state, died, having filled this office since 1888. The present Prime Minister is Herr Emile Reuter. In 1918 a change was made in the constitution, granting universal suffrage to all citizens of both sexes over twenty-one years of age. In recent years the duchy also lost two prominent ecclesiastics, Mgr. Frederick Loch, of the parish of Notre Dame of Luxemburg, and Rev. Peter Schilz, D.D., canon and member of the Legislature and director of the diocesan boarding school.

Since 1881 education in the grand duchy has been obligatory, but gratuitous. The educational bill of 1912, anti-Catholic in spirit, was so vigorously protested by the bishop and clergy that in 1921 some slight changes were made in it, and the priests are again permitted to go into the schools to give religious instruction. Primary education is given to all children from six to thirteen years of age, when secondary education begins. Priests are allowed to teach in the secondary schools, provided they hold university degrees and have passed the State examining board. Primary education is under a board of inspectors and, with very few exceptions, education is entirely under State control, and all parish priests, vicars, chaplains, professors, and teachers are paid by the government. In the elementary schools both French and German are taught.

The statistics of 1919-20 show 19,376 boys and 18,662 girls attending the primary schools; 5476 boys and 5390 girls attending other schools preparatory for secondary education; 2632 boys and girls in kindergartens. For secondary education there are 3 Athenacums, 1 at Luxemburg with 43 professors and 650 boys, 1 at Echternach with 20 professors and 300 boys, 1 at Diekirch with 16 professors and 320 boys; 3 lyceums or high schools for girls, 1 at Luxemburg with 24 professors and 220 girls, 1 at Sainte Sophie with 15 professors and 250 girls; a normal school for men and one for women at Luxemburg; 2 industrial and commercial schools, 1 at Luxemburg with 35 professors and 461 boys, and 1 at Esch with 22 professors and 200 boys. In addition to these there are State schools for mechanics and handicraft, for agriculture, a school of mines, a school for deaf mutes, for the blind, and for the weak-minded. The charitable institutions include a lunatic asylum in charge of Sisters, a home of correction, and homes for foundlings and orphans, in charge of Sisters. The religious communities established in the duchy are: men, Benedictines, Dominicans, Jesuits, Redemptorists, White Fathers, Sacred Heart Fathers, Christian Brothers, and Brothers of Mercy; women, Sisters of Notre Dame, Benedictines, Dominicans, Franciscans, Sisters of St. Elizabeth, of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, of St. Charles Borromeo, of the Poor Child Jesus, of St. Joseph, of Mercy, the School Sisters and the Sisters of St. Zita. There are 331 secular and 61 regular clergy, 27 of these teach in the secondary schools. The "Unio Sacerdotalis," a mutual aid, and support union is formed among the clergy; and the unions of Catholic people, of Catholic workmen, and of Catholic young men and women, besides various sodalities of men, women, and children, are established among the laity. Thirteen Catholic newspapers are published.

Lwow (LEMBERG), ARCHDIOCESE OF (LEOPOLIENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-144d), in Poland, a see for three Rites, Latin, Armenian, and Greek-Ruthenian. For the Latin Rite the present incumbent is Most Rev. Joseph Bilczewski, born in the Diocese of Cracow 1860, appointed 17 December, 1900, made a member of the academy of science of Cracow and appointed an assistant at the pontifical throne 11 May, 1904. He is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Boleslas Twardowski, titular Bishop of Telmessus. By 1920 statistics the diocese is divided into 29 deaneries for this rite, and comprises 256 parishes, 129 filial parishes, 649 secular priests, 49 clerics, and 45 convents of men with 178 religious.

Most Rev. Joseph-Theophilus Teodorowicz, born in Zywiec, Poland, in 1864, was appointed bishop for the Armenian Rite 16 December, 1901, at the age of thirty-seven. In 1919 he was appointed a deputy to the Diet of Poland. According to 1920 statistics the diocese comprises 3878 Catholics of this rite, and about 800 Armenian Schismatics, 10 parishes, 14 Armenian and 7 Latin priests, and 24 churches and chapels.

For the Greek-Ruthenian Rite the diocese also bears the title of Halicz and includes the diocese of Kamenetz Podolski in Russia. The see is now filled by Most Rev. Andrew Alexander de Szeptycky, Basilian, born in Poland of a noble family in 1865, studied at the universities of Cracow, Vienna, and Breslau, ordained 1892, served as a missionary, professor, and master of novices, proving himself especially valuable because of his knowledge of languages. He was appointed Bishop of Stanislawow at the age of thirty-four 19 June, 1899, and promoted 17 December, 1900. In 1914 he was deported to Kiev by the Russians, and in 1916 the press made a false announcement of his death. The Holy See was unsuccessful in trying to obtain his liberation from Nicholas II, and it was only after the abdication of the Tsar that he was freed, in March, 1917, and in August he returned to Vienna. By 1920 statistics there are in the diocese 1,335,977 Catholics of this Rite, 1017 secular priests, 20 regular clergy, 754 parishes, 519 filial parishes, 1250 churches and 35 chapels.

Lyons, ARCHDIOCESE OF (LUGDUNENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-472a), in France, is under the administration of His Eminence Louis-Joseph Cardinal Maurin, Archbishop of Lyons and Primate of Gaul, b. 1859 in the diocese of Marseilles, ordained 1882, appointed Bishop of Grenoble 1911, and promoted to the Archdiocese of Lyons 1 December, 1916, made cardinal 4 December of the same year. On 11 September, 1912, Cardinal Coullié, who had filled the see of Lyons from 1893, died, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Hector-Irénée Sevin, b. Simandre 1852, appointed Bishop of Châlons 1908, and Archbishop of Lyons 2 December, 1912, created cardinal 1914. Cardinal Sevin died 4 May, 1916, and was succeeded by the present incumbent.

During the World War about 800 priests of the Archdiocese were mobilized, and of these 57 gave up their lives, as well as 93 seminarians, from 450 to 500 priests were wounded, about 350 received the croix de guerre, 30 were decorated with the légion d'honneur and 50 with the médaille militaire.

Numerous religious orders are represented in this district, but it is impossible to give exact statistics, as since the persecution many of them are no longer permitted to wear the religious habit. However, the famous property of the Chartreux which had been awarded to the city by the Law of Separation, has been bought back by a lay society and turned over to the monks.

Statistics for 1921 give 688 parishes, 700 churches, 1990 secular priests and 300 regulars, 1 university with 50 professors and about 400 students, 15 secondary schools for boys with 300 teachers and 4500 students, 48 secondary schools for girls with 360 teachers and 3100 students, 2 normal schools with 16 teachers and 90 pupils, 11 professional schools with 58 teachers and 1050 pupils, 720 elementary schools with 1790 teachers and 60,000 pupils. The charitable institutions include about 60 hospitals. Numerous societies are formed among the clergy and laity, and 70 daily or weekly journals are published.

M

McAndrew, JAMES, major-general in the United States army, b. at Hawley, Penna., in 1862; d. at Washington on 30 April, 1922. Graduating from the Military Academy at West Point he took part in the Spanish American War in Cuba and the Philippines. When the United States entered the World War, McAndrew was sent across with the first detachment of the American troops in 1917, commanding the Eighteenth Infantry of the first Division. He was detailed to organize the army staff college and schools at Langres, where the army officers received a course in modern warfare as it had developed during the past three years. On 1 May, 1918, he became General Pershing's right-hand man as chief of staff of the American Expeditionary Force. It was he who directed from headquarters the operations at Chateau Thierry, St. Mihiel and the Argonne Meuse; and his work in both the defensive and offensive campaigns placed him in the first rank of the great generals of the United States. After the war he received an honorary degree in law from Fordham University and was made commandant of the General Staff College in Washington, but his health broke down toward the end of 1920, though he lingered for fifteen months in hospital.

Macao, DIOCESE OF (MACAONENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-481b), in the Portuguese settlement of Macao in the Island of Hueng-Shan, adjacent to the coast of the Chinese Province of Kwang-tung. Rt. Rev. João Paul Azeredo e Castro, appointed to this see 9 June, 1902, died 17 February, 1918, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. José da Costa Nunes, vicar general of the diocese, appointed 16 December, 1920. By a decree of 3 February, 1903, which became effective in 1908, the jurisdiction of the diocese extends over the neighboring islands as far as the mouth of the river (with the exception of Hong-Kong), the prefecture of Tchao-King with twelve sub-prefectures, the prefecture of Hiang-Chan, a part of Timor and the Portuguese Missions of Malacca and Singapore. The territory has a total population of 8,000,000, of whom 40,000 are Catholics. Statistics for 1920 credit it with 3 parishes, 22 missions, 52 European and 9 native priests, 1 seminary with 120 Portuguese and Chinese students, 74 churches and chapels, 6 convents for girls, 1 boarding school for boys, 2 asylums, 36 schools, and 1 hospital.

MacDonagh, THOMAS, Irish poet, scholar and patriot, born in Cloughjordan, County Tipperary, 1878, d. Dublin, 1916. His father and mother were both teachers in the primary schools. He was trained by a religious order and even entered a novitiate in his early youth. He became a teacher in a college in Kilkenny and later in Fermoy. Afterwards he went to the Aran Islands and to Irish-speaking districts in Munster and made himself fluent in the language. Just before Pearse (q. v.) opened his school (St. Enda's) MacDonagh came to Dublin to try to get a play of his ("When the Dawn Is Come") produced. The scene was laid in the revolutionary Ireland of the future. When the play was produced in the Abbey Theatre MacDonagh had already joined the staff of St. Enda's school. MacDonagh's two passions were love of art and love of country and his greatest interest was poetry, which he knew well in English, French, Latin and Irish. He was drawn to the classical poets but after coming to Dublin he wrote more personal poetry. During the period before he came to Dublin he published "The Golden Joy" (1906), and later "Songs of Myself." After publishing this work he went to Paris to do some reading. Then he took his M.A. in the National University. Padraic Colum, James Stephens, and a professor in the College of Science and MacDonagh started the "Irish Review" as associate editors and after an interregnum, he took over the paper and edited it with his friend and pupil, Joseph Plunkett. MacDonagh wrote a thesis on "Thomas Campion and English Poetry" and was made assistant professor of English literature in the National University, Dublin. In 1916 he published a critical prose work, "Literature in Ireland." MacDonagh's country was always in his mind and he would have welcomed a reasonable settlement of Irish political conditions from the Government of Great Britain. He was happily married and his first son was born in 1912, and a second one six months before the insurrection. When the nationalists created their volunteers MacDonagh had a place in the Executive and command of a corps. From this time until the Easter Rebellion that ended with his death, MacDonagh was associated with the Volunteer movement with his friends Pearse and Plunkett. Like them he was a combatant-poet, fighting a combat that was passionate, intellectual, spiritual.

MacDonald, WALTER, theologian and philosopher, b. at Kilkenny in 1854; d. on 2 May, 1920. While still busy with what is called "the most controversial of all modern books," "Some Ethical Questions of Peace and War," Dr. MacDonald's death was approaching. After his preparatory studies he went to Maynooth College, and on his ordination in 1876, he became rector of St. Kieran's College, where he had formerly been a pupil. He returned to Maynooth in 1881 where he served as librarian, Prefect of the Dunboyne Establishment, and professor of theology. He founded the "Irish Theological Quarterly" in 1906. One of his treatises, on "Motion," was withdrawn from circulation because of certain peculiar views it presented.

McDonnell, CHARLES E. See BROOKLYN, DIOCESE OF.

Macedonia, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (MACEDONIENSIS BULGARORUM), a vicariate in Greece, for the Greek-Bulgarians, with residence at Salonica. The present vicar is Rt. Rev. Epiphanius Scianow of the Græco-Slavic Rite, appointed titular Bishop of Livia, 23 July, 1895. By 1920 statistics the territory comprises a Catholic population of 10,200; 41 missionary priests and 33 churches and chapels. At the outbreak of the Balkan War (September, 1912) this vicariate was much more flourishing, counting 27 parishes and 36 priests. The Greeks, however, destroyed 12 parishes and forced six others to pass to the Orthodox Church, while the Serbs seized two more and forced them to become schismatic, putting to death one of the pastors. Large numbers of Catholics were massacred but the exact number is not known.

Maceio, ARCHDIOCESE OF (MACEJENSIS; cf. C. E., I-244c), in the State of Alagoas, Brazil. This see was erected in 1900 under the name of Alagoas, but a Decree of 27 August, 1917, changed it to the present title, and a subsequent Decree 13 February, 1920, raised it to the dignity of a metropolitan see. The first bishop, Rt. Rev. Antonio Manuel de Castilho-Brandao, died in Maceio, 15 March, 1910, and his death was deeply mourned throughout the diocese, his zeal and devotion having been greatly appreciated by his people. He had made himself much loved, and almost all the dioceses of Brazil held solemn services for the repose of his soul. The second bishop was appointed in the person of Rt. Rev. Manuel Antonio de Oliveira Lopes, born in São Gonçalo de Campos, Brazil, in 1861, ordained 1886, served as a pastor and canon of the cathedral of Bahia, founded the journal "O Mensageiro de Fé," was appointed titular Bishop of Tabia 25 January, 1908, and made coadjutor to the Bishop of Fortaleza, and transferred 26 November, 1910. By the Decree which raised Maceio to an archdiocese he was named first archbishop. This territory covers an area of about 22,525 sq. miles and comprises a total population of 800,000. No statistics are published.

Macerata and Tolentino, UNITED DIOCESES OF (MACERATENSIS ET TOLENTINENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-492a), in the Marches, Central Italy, suffragan of Fermo. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Domenico Pasi, born in Faenza, Italy, 1870, served as a pastor and was named a prelate of the Holy See in 1909, prothonotary apostolic 3 August, 1912, and appointed titular Bishop of Philadelphia, 9 September, 1913, and made auxiliary and vicar general of the Diocese of Comacchio, and then administrator of the Diocese of Ferrara. He was promoted 15 December, 1919, to succeed Rt. Rev. Romolo Molaroni, appointed 30 September, 1916, died 14 August, 1919. By a Brief of 21 April, 1921, the Sanctuary of Our Lady at Macerata, which bears the title of Mary, Mother of Mercy, was erected into a minor basilica. The statistics of 1920 credit Macerata with a Catholic population of 31,112 Catholics, 17 parishes, 65 secular and 6 regular clergy, 30 seminarians, 5 Brothers, 53 Sisters, and 92 churches and chapels. Tolentino has 15,090 Catholics; 8 parishes, 28 secular and 9 regular clergy, and 48 churches and chapels.

McGloin, FRANK, jurist and publicist, b. at Gort, Galway, Ireland, on 22 February, 1846; d. in New Orleans in September, 1921. The son of Patrick and Nora (Comber) McGloin, he was brought to New Orleans in early childhood, and fought in the Confederate Army, after which he was admitted to the bar. He was one of the chief assistants of the late Chief Justice White, in his fight, as an attorney, against the Louisiana lotteries. In 1880 he was appointed Justice of the Louisiana State Court of Appeals. A zealous Catholic, he was one of the great forces in upbuilding the Church in Louisiana; he was the editor of the "Hibernian," the "Holy Family," the founder and president of the Society of the Holy Spirit, the builder of St. George's Chapel, Siegen, Louisiana, and one of the founders of the Catholic Winter School. In 1910 he was made a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Gregory by Pope Pius X. Among his writings are: "The Story of Norodom," a romance of the Far East; "The Conquest of Europe;" "The Light of Faith" (1905); "The Mystery of the Holy Trinity in Oldest Judaism" (1916).

Mackenzie, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (DE MACKENZIE; cf. C. E., IX-504a), in Canada, suffragan of Edmonton, with episcopal residence at Fort Resolution. By a decree of 1908 the limits of this vicariate were somewhat changed and it now comprises that part of the Northwest Territory which lies north of the 60° latitude, east of Yukon Territory and west of the 100° longitude. The territory is entrusted to the Oblates of Mary Immaculate, the present vicar being Rt. Rev. Gabriel-Joseph-Elie Breynat, appointed in 1901 and consecrated titular Bishop of Adramattium 6 April, 1902. Latest statistics (1922) credit the vicariate with a Catholic population of 4500; 19 regular clergy, 31 religious women (Gray Nuns), 2 hospitals, 2 dispensaries, 12 churches, and 4 schools.

MacSwiney, TERENCE; the famous Lord Mayor of Cork, b. on 28 March, 1879; d. at Brixton prison of a hunger strike on 25 October, 1920, which he began as a protest against English rule. The strike lasted seventy-three days. When the Irish "Rising" occurred he was frequently in jail, and at one time in exile; when his intimate friend, Thomas MacCurtain, the Lord Mayor of Cork, was murdered, MacSwiney was elected in his place. He is the author of "Principles of Freedom."

Madeleine-Sophie Barat, BLESSED (cf. C. E., II-283b), was beatified 24 May, 1908, by Pope Pius X, and her feast is celebrated 25 May.

Madras, ARCHDIOCESE OF (MADRASPATAN; cf. C. E., VI-603c), now has a Catholic population of about 58,246, divided as follows: 30,000 Telegus, 20,000 Tamilians, and 8000 Anglo-Indians, out of a total heathen population of nine million. On 12 February, 1911, Archbishop Colgan died after twenty-nine years in this see. He was nominated Bishop of Aureliopolis and Vicar Apostolic of Madras in 1882, and raised to the archiepiscopal dignity by the decree of 25 November, 1886, and was nominated assistant at the papal throne on the occasion of his golden jubilee. He died at the age of eighty-six, and was buried in the Cathedral of St. Mary of the Angels. His successor is the Most Rev. Jean Aelen, D. D., of the Mission Hill Fathers. He was born at Waspit, Holland, in 1854, and was named titular Bishop of Themisonium in December, 1901, and coadjutor to the Archbishop of Madras in 1902.

In 1921, on 4, 5 and 6 of January, the All Indian Marian Congress was held at Madras, and was presided over by the Apostolic Delegate to India, Archbishop Pisani. This congress, originally intended to be held in 1914, had the war not interfered, was, when finally accomplished, an impressive manifestation of the Catholic Faith. It was the first Marian Congress ever held on the continent of Asia, and gathered a vast variety of Catholics, from the uncultured Telegu to the refined Brahmin, from the Burmese, with his flat Chinese face to the distinctive Madrassi; at least twenty different languages were being spoken in this great gathering. All the bishops and archbishops of India attended or sent representatives and the apostolic delegate, speaking to the 1200 assembled in the hall, which had been especially erected, declared that the time was near when India would have her own clergy under her own Indian bishops. A daily bulletin, "The Marian Congress Bulletin," giving the events of the meeting, was published during the congress.

The 1921 statistics of the diocese show: 44 parishes, 42 churches, 5 missions, 269 stations, nearly all having chapels, 2 convents for men and 27 for women, 27 secular priests and 38 regular (Foreign Missionaries of Mill Hill, London), 8 lay brothers, 274 Sisters, 20 seminarians, 5 high schools with 60 teachers and attendance of 682 boys and 494 girls, 2 training schools with 11 teachers and 55 students, 98 elementary schools with 312 teachers and 6965 students, and 1 industrial school with 2 teachers. Charity is administered through 2 homes for the aged, 2 homes for babies and 4 refuge homes, while 2 of the government hospitals and 1 government training school and college permit Catholic priests to minister in them. The Catholic schools are aided financially by the Government, but none of the institutions. A "Sick Fund" is organized among the clergy, and among the laity the Catholic Indian Association and a philanthropic society. The diocese publishes the "Catholic Leader" (weekly), the "Nalla Ayan" (monthly), and the Catholic Directory of India, Burma, and Ceylon yearly.

Madrid-Alcalá, DIOCESE OF (MATRITENSIS-ALCAHENSIENSIS or COMPLUTENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-516a), in Spain, suffragan of Toledo. These united sees are filled by Rt. Rev. Prudencio Melo y Alcalde, born in Burgos, 1860, ordained in 1883, served as vice-secretary to the Archbishop of Burgos, professor at the University of Valladolid, Central University, and the Seminary, grand chaplain of the Sisters of the Visitation, vicar general, named a canon lector of the cathedral of Burgos in 1898, then pro-vicar general, appointed titular Bishop of Olympia 19 December, 1907, and auxiliary at Toledo, transferred to Vitoria 18 July, 1913, and again transferred to Madrid 4 December, 1916, to succeed Rt. Rev. José María Salvador y Barrera, promoted to Valencia 4 December, 1916. According to 1920 statistics the diocese comprises a Catholic population of 1,500,600; 251 parishes divided into 18 archpresbyteries, 1170 priests, 776 churches and chapels, 120 convents with 536 religious, and 736 Sisters. A Catholic university was founded in the diocese in 1908, with the faculties of philosophy and social sciences. On 30 May, 1919, the solemn inauguration of the Basilica of the Sacred Heart took place, in the presence of the royal family and many of the Spanish bishops.

Magellan (or MAGALLANES), VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (MAGELLANENSIS), in Chili, suffragan of Santiago, with episcopal residence at Punta Arenas. This vicariate was erected by a Decree of 4 October, 1916, and comprises the territory of the old prefecture of Southern Patagonia. It extends from the 47° latitude on the North to the Malvine Islands, belonging to England, which form the South and West boundaries, and on the East as far as the boundary line between Chili and Argentina. It is entrusted to the Salesians, the present vicar being Rt. Rev. Abraham Aguilera, appointed titular Bishop of Issus 22 December, 1916. In 1920 the vicariate comprised 2 parishes and a number of mission stations, served by about 40 missionary priests.

Maher, MICHAEL, psychologist, b. at Leighlin-bridge, Ireland; d. at Petworth, England, on 3 September, 1918. He received his early education at Tulla-more, Mt. St. Mary's and Tullaby, and became a Jesuit in England in 1880 when he was twenty years of age. Immediately after his course of philosophy at Stonyhurst, he taught psychology from 1885 to 1891 and subsequently from 1897 to 1903. He attempted some missionary work at Edinburgh, but was unable to continue on account of ill-health. He then wrote for the "Stonyhurst Series" his volume on "Psychology," which was declared by the London University to be of such special excellence that no further test was required for according his application for the degree of Doctor of Literature. Another of his works was "Tatian's Diatessaron," and he contributed several articles to THE CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA.

Mahnig, ANTHONY. See KRK, DIOCESE OF.

Maine (cf. C. E., IX-541c).—INDUSTRIES.—The manufacturing census of 1919 shows a decrease in the number of manufacturing establishments from 3378 in 1914 to 2996 in 1919. There was, however, an increase in capital ($233,844,000 in 1914, $420,-651,000 in 1919), and in value of products ($200,-450,000 in 1914; $461,415,000 in 1919).

AGRICULTURE.—In 1918 the potato crop of the entire State brought nearly $25,000,000. In 1919 five million barrels of apples were grown. The agricultural products of the entire State equal $100,000,000 in an average year, while through its varied industries Maine produces $275 to $400 for each inhabitant.

POPULATION.—The population of the State was 742,271 in 1910; 768,014 in 1920. The latest census shows an increase of 25,643, or 2.5 per cent from 1910 to 1920, smaller than the increase during the previous decade of 47,905, or 6.9 per cent. The Catholic population is 153,225.

EDUCATION.—According to the report of the State superintendent for the year 1919, the number of school children in the State was 228,489, and the amount expended for school purposes was $5,149,386.

The following favorable opinion on the subject of Bible reading in the public school was rendered by the Supreme Court of Maine: "If the Bible, or any particular version of it, may be excluded from the schools because its teachings may be opposed to the teachings of the authorities of any church, the same result may ensue as to any other book. If any sect may object, the same right may be granted to others. This would give the authorities of any sect the right to annul any regulations of the constituted authorities of the State as to the course of study and the books to be used. It is placing the legislation of the State, in the matter of education, at once and forever in subordination to decrees and teachings of any and all the sects, when their members conscientiously believe such teachings. It at once surrenders the power of the State to a government not emanating from the people nor recognized by the Constitution."

The State laws relative to private and parochial schools are as follows: The basic language of instruction in the common branches of all schools, public and private, shall be the English language. Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit the teaching in elementary schools of any language as such; the State superintendent shall prescribe or approve courses of study and methods of instruction of public and private schools; all professors and instructors and teachers in public and private institutions shall teach humanity, morality, etc.; American history and civil government are to be taught; for children attending private schools certificates of attendance must be filed with the public school officials; all private schools shall make such statistical and other reports as the State superintendent may require.

STATE GOVERNMENT.—The following have been added as heads of State departments: 2 highway commissioners, 1 bank commissioner, 3 public utilities commissioners, a deputy secretary of State commissions and corporations, a commissioner of labor and industry, a superintendent of public buildings, a commissioner of health, 3 industrial accident commissioners, a commissioner of harbor and tidal waves, a live stock sanitary commissioner, 3 prison commissioners, and one woman factory inspector. The commission of inland fisheries has been reduced from three to one member. There are also appointed 3 for the board of accountancy, 4 instead of 8 for the public health council, 4 embalming examiners, and 3 for the board of arbitration and conciliation.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.—Superior Courts have been established in the counties of Cumberland, Kennebec, Androscoggin, and Penobscot. Maine has 20 cities, 434 towns, and 69 plantations. The State Board of Charities and Corrections, established by the Legislature of 1913, is composed of five members, unsalaried, one of them a woman, appointed by the governor and with the consent of the council. The board appoints a salaried secretary and other agents. The board is required to investigate and inspect the whole system of public charities and correctional institutions of the State, to examine into the conditions and the management of all prisons, jails, reform schools, schools of a charitable and correctional nature, and all such institutions as hospitals, houses, sanitariums, orphanages, to give its opinion of their organization and to pass upon all plans for new institutions under their supervision. It acts ex officio as a board of mother's aid, and also as a board of children's guardians. A number of associations, hospitals, and other institutions receive appropriations from the State, and are subject to supervision by the State board, as long as they receive such aid. Appropriations are made for certain charitable and benevolent institutions, not owned by the State, for the care, support and medical treatment of dependent persons; among these are St. Elizabeth's Orphan Asylum, Portland, and St. Mary's General Hospital at Lewiston. Overseers of the poor, not to exceed seven in number, are chosen by each town. The semi-intermediate sentence law is applicable to all State institutions, for each of which the governor acts as a parole board. Any property left to educational, charitable, religious or benevolent institutions is exempt from the inheritance tax. A legislative Act of 1913 allowed any corporation or association holding funds bequeathed for religious, moral, and benevolent purposes to transfer the same to another corporate body for similar purposes with the approval of the resident judge.

LEGISLATIVE CHANGES.—Maine was the first State to enact prohibition. The first prohibition law, passed through the influence of Neal Dow in 1851, was repealed. In 1850 another law went into effect, but the enforcement was very lax. In 1884 an amendment was voted into the State constitution, forbidding the sale of liquor except to invalids. Though the Legislature of 1905 enacted the Sturgis Law, creating a State Enforcement Commission, prohibition has always been considered a farce in the State. The extreme bitterness of the campaign and the accompanying charges of fraud led to the initiation and passage of the Davies Direct Primary law, which applies to the election of county officials as well as federal officials. In 1912 the constitutional amendment was re-submitted to a popular vote, and retained by a majority of 758 votes. The national Prohibition Act was ratified in 1919 by the State legislature.

The State constitutional amendment of 1841 forbidding the legislature to loan the credit of the State, directly or indirectly, or to increase the State debt over $300,000, except in emergency cases, was felt by many to be a serious obstacle to the development of Maine, but in 1912 the State was allowed to increase a debt of not over $2,000,000 for highway purposes. In 1913 another law allowed the legislature to tax intangible personal property without regard to the rate applied to other classes of property. In 1915 child labor was prohibited in factories or mercantile establishments, and in the same year the Workmen's Compensation Act was passed. In 1916 the first national park east of the Mississippi River, comprising 500 acres, known as the Sieur de Montes National Monument, was created on Mount Desert Island. In 1918 the legislature passed an Act forbidding the feeble-minded to marry. The federal suffrage amendment was ratified on 5 November, 1919.

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES.—There is a county jail in each county, except Lincoln and Sagadahoc, which use jails in other counties. There is an Industrial School for Girls at Hallowell, a State Reformatory for Women at Skowegan (1915), and one for men at Windham (1919).

RECENT HISTORY.—During the European War Maine contributed 24,252 soldiers to the U. S. Army (0.65%). The members of the national guard joined the 26th Division, and those of the national drafted army the 76th Division, both at Camp Devens. The summary of casualties among the Maine members of the American Expeditionary Forces is as follows: deceased, 21 officers, 497 men; prisoners, 2 officers, 15 men; wounded, 64 officers, 1491 men.

For ecclesiastical history see PORTLAND, DIOCESE OF.

Mainz DIOCESE OF, (MAGUNTINENSIS; cf. C. E., IX—552c), in Germany. The present incumbent is the Rt. Rev. Ludwig Hugo, who was named coadjutor to Rt. Rev. George Heinrich Kirstein (d. 15 April, 1921) with the right of succession, succeeding 7 March, 1912, consecrated 10 April, 1921, published 15 April, 1921. The diocese is divided into deaneries and 188 parishes and contains 186 parish priests, 1 rector, 80 curates, 43 priests in other positions, and 20 who are pensioned or on leave of absence. The diocesan seminary has 10 professors and 60 students. The only male order existing in the diocese is that of the Capuchins with 3 houses (Mainz, Bausheim and Dieburg), 19 Fathers and 17 brothers. The female orders are: Sisters of Mercy from the mother-house at Trier, 2 houses, 26 Sisters; English Ladies, 7 houses, 271 Sisters; Franciscan Sisters from Aachen, 3 houses, 27 Sisters; Franciscan Sisters of the Perpetual Adoration, 1 house, 42 Sisters, Sisters of Divine Providence, mother-house at Mainz, 85 filial houses, 657 Sisters; Sisters of the Most Sacred Redeemer, mother-house at Niederbronn, 23 houses, 230 Sisters; Sisters of the Good Shepherd, 1 house, 29 Sisters; Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul, 9 houses, 137 Sisters.

Maitland, DIOCESE OF (MAITLANDENSIS; cf. C. E., IX—555d), in New South Wales, Australia, is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Sydney. It has been growing steadily in recent years during the incumbency of the present bishop, Rt. Rev. Patrick Vincent Dwyer, and now numbers a Catholic population of some 38,000, of whom 36,000 are Australians, 100 Irish, 500 German, 300 Syrians, and about 200 of other nationalities.

By the present (1921) statistics there are 21 parishes, 85 churches, 30 mission stations, 36 convents for men, 48 secular priests, and 7 regular; 14 lay brothers (10 Marists and 4 Redemptorists); 340 Sisters (Dominicans, Sisters of Mercy, and Sisters of St. Joseph); 5 high schools with 20 teachers and an attendance of 230 boys and 420 girls; 52 elementary schools with 120 teachers and an attendance of 5300. The only Catholic Institute for Deaf Mutes in Australasia is conducted at Waratah by the Dominican nuns, and counts 55 girls and small boys among its pupils; an orphanage for girls is conducted at Maitland by the Sisters of Mercy and has 85 children, and a hospital at Waratah is also under the direction of these Sisters. A number of the public institutions admit the priests of the diocese to minister in them, and the government allows a small grant to the Catholic orphanages for their support. The Sick Clergy Fund and the Priests' Eucharistic League are established among the clergy, and the Australian Catholic Guild Benefit Society and the Hibernian Australian Catholic Benefit Society among the laity. The Diocesan Almanac is published annually.

Majorca and Iviza, DIOCESE OF (MAJORICENSIS ET IBUSENSIS; cf. C. E., IX—556d), suffragan of Valencia, with the residential seat at Palma on the Island of Majorca. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Rigobert Domenech y Vallo, b. 15 November, 1870, at Valencia, ordained 19 May, 1894, honorary chaplain and preacher to His Majesty in 1906, appointed bishop 5 May, 1916, proclaimed 4 December following, succeeding Mgr. Pietro-Juan Campins y Barcelo, b. 14 January, 1859; d. 1915. The cathedral church was restored in 1904. In 1909 the remains of King Jaime III were transferred from Valencia. There are in the diocese (1922): 71 parishes and 23 affiliated parishes; 371 churches; 684 secular and 60 regular priests; 9 monasteries for women; 41 convents for men and 142 for women; 244 lay brothers; 1674 Sisters; 1 seminary with 244 seminarians; 4 colleges for boys with 75 teachers and 219 pupils; 11 colleges for girls with 125 teachers and 1200 pupils; 4 academies with 20 teachers and 90 pupils; 204 elementary schools with 546 teachers and 18,120 pupils; 3 asylums; 10 hospitals, 2 refuges; 3 lay charitable centres, 4 day nurseries. The Government maintains 200 schools; an Institute and a normal school for men and women teachers. Three societies are organized among the clergy. There are 60 organizations among the laity in Palma and 200 in the towns. The Catholic press is represented by eleven periodicals. The population of 297,194 is entirely Spanish and Catholic with the exception of 60 French and 20 English. The diocese lost two of its prominent men by the death of Don Miguel Mauro, brother of Antonio Mauro, present president of the Council of Ministers, and Don José Mari Quadrado, polemist, archaeologist, and historian.

Malacca, DIOCESE OF (MALACENSIS; cf. C. E., IX—562c), in the Malay Peninsula, comprises Singapore Island, the Malacca territory proper, Penang Island, Province Wellesley, Perak, Selangor, Negri-Sembilau, Pahang, Johore, Kedah, Trengganu, Kelantan, Patani, Perlis, and several Siamese provinces on the west coast up to the Isthmus of Kra, with an area of about 700 miles from north to south, and 200 miles from east to west. The diocese is suffragan to Pondicherry, with episcopal residence at Singapore. It has a total population of about 3,500,000 and a Catholic population of 41,760, of whom about 8000 are Europeans and Eurasians, 18,000 Chinese, and 16,000 Indians.

The bishop is Rt. Rev. Marie-Luc-Alfonse-Emile Barillon, b. 18 October, 1860, at Chartres, appointed 10 May, 1904, consecrated 18 September, proclaimed 14 November following, succeeding Mgr. René-Michel Fée, b. 4 February, 1856, d. 20 January, 1904. Since 27 November, 1920, the bishop has a coadjutor in the person of Mgr. Louis Perrichon, titular Bishop of Corona. The bishop and all the clergy belong to the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris. During the World War twelve of the priests were mobilized, of whom three were killed, and ten died of exhaustion in the mission, so that the number of missionaries has decreased since the war, but the native clergy, for whom there is a seminary at Penang, are beginning their labors on the mission. There are in the diocese: 33 priests having charge of 69 churches and chapels, 52 schools with 10,675 pupils, 25 orphanages and crèches with 808 children, 49 Brothers of the Christian Schools (7 communities), and 86 Sisters of the Infant Jesus. The English schools receive a "grant-in-aid" from the government.

Malaga, DIOCESE OF (MALACITANENSIS; cf. C. E., IX—565c), in Spain, suffragan of Granada. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Manuel Gonzalez y Garcia, born in Seville, 1877, named archpriest of Huelva and made a private chamberlain in 1913, appointed titular Bishop of Olympia 6 December, 1915, and made auxiliary at Malaga, where he succeeded 22 April, 1920, Rt. Rev. Juan Muñoz y Herrera (d. 26 December, 1919). The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with 542,440 Catholics; 135 parishes divided among 16 archpresbyteries, 373 priests, 147 chapels or sanctuaries, and 68 convents with 106 religious and 842 Sisters.

Malines (or MECHLIN), DIOCESE OF (MECHLINIENSIS; cf. C. E., X—104a), comprises the two Belgian provinces of Antwerp and Brabant. The ecclesiastical province of Malines is co-extensive with the Belgian kingdom (suffragan bishoprics, Tournai, Liège, Namur, Ghent, and Bruges). The ancient metropolitan cathedral of St. Rombaut is the church of the Archbishop of Malines, who is the primate of Belgium. His Eminence Désiré-Joseph Cardinal Mercier, Archbishop of Malines, founder of the Institute of Philosophy at Louvain and eminent patriot, is known throughout the world for his bearing towards a triumphant enemy and his devotion and unceasing labor for his people, country and God during the late war. Cardinal Mercier was born at Braine-l'Alleud in the Diocese of Malines, 21 November, 1851, entered the seminary of Malines, 1 October, 1870, ordained 4 April, 1874, student at Louvain, professor at seminary of Malines, professor at Louvain (1822), director of Institute of Philosophy at Louvain 1891, president of the Leonine in 1892, prelate to Holy See in 1896; named Archbishop of Malines 7 February, 1906, consecrated by the Apostolic nuncio, Mgr. Vico, at Malines 25 March and enthroned 16 April following, succeeding Cardinal Goossens, deceased. Created cardinal 15 April, 1907, received the hat and title of San Pietro in Vincoli 18 April following. During the German occupation Cardinal Mercier was kept under constant surveillance and suspicion, shut in his palace many times and hindered in his ministry but he dared to face the enemy, to protest to German authorities in person and by letter against their actions in Belgium. The Cardinal became recognized as a spokesman for the oppressed country, his letters to the German officials and German bishops and to his own flock effected good results and showed the Cardinal to be one of the greatest figures of the age. Cardinal Mercier has been decorated and honored by many countries, receiving the croix de guerre from France and Italy, the croix civile and grand cordon of the Order of Leopold from Belgium, prizes and honors from French and Spanish Academies of Political and Moral Sciences, degrees from numerous universities and many other rewards. From September to November, 1919, Cardinal Mercier received a continuous tribute when he traveled in the United States. The Cardinal has published many important works on Scholastic philosophy and besides his letters of war times, which included the famous pastoral, "Patriotism and Endurance," has written works on spiritual life. In 1919 was published "La Vie intérieure, appel aux âmes sacerdotales," which will be followed by other similar works. In 1920 a provincial council was held at Malines.

There are two auxiliaries to the archbishop, Rt. Rev. Louis-Joseph Legraive, b. at Ohain, 18 December, 1858, consecrated titular bishop of Parnassus 17 November, 1907, and made superior of the Upper Seminary at Malines in 1909, and Rt. Rev. Antoine Alphonse de Wachter, b. at Puers 10 April, 1855, and consecrated titular bishop of Dionysias 25 July, 1909. Mgr. Legraive was brought before the council of war at Antwerp, 16 March, 1917, for having given hospitality to a Frenchman unfit for service who wished to return to his own country; he was condemned to nine month's detention and sent to Germany. In the beginning of April, upon the intervention of the Pope, he recovered his liberty.

The statistics for 1912 are the latest available. They give 2,527,850 inhabitants in 52 deaneries with 768 parishes, secular priests 2410, regular priests 1137, scholastics 596, lay brothers 319, Brothers 1308, novices 560, total religious men 3920, religious women, including novices, 13,331.

The communities for men include 3 abbeys and 1 house for Benedictines, 2 Cistercian abbeys, 5 Norbertine abbeys and 1 priory, 11 colleges and houses of Jesuits, 16 convents of orders destined for foreign missions, 22 monasteries for other orders, 65 convents for religious priests, total 126; 70 convents of Brothers, 985 convents of women; general total of convents 1181. Many of these convents have only a few Brothers or Sisters who teach in the schools or Sisters who look after sick or aged in hospitals and refuges of rural communities.

EDUCATION, SEMINARIES.—There is a seminary at Malines with an upper division for theology with 250 students and a lower division for philosophy with 151 students. Also a seminary for vocations that come late in life with 27 students. There is a preparatory seminary at Hoogstraeten and 2 others, these schools teaching almost exactly the same courses in classical study as the colleges. The Seminary of Leo XIII attached to Institute of Philosophy at Louvain is interdiocesan, and there is also an American seminary at Louvain under direction of American bishops with all foreign students.

HIGHER EDUCATION.—The University of Louvain, founded in 1834 by the Belgian episcopate with 140 professors (secular priests, 1 regular and laymen), 3248 students, of whom 141 are foreigners (1921); the faculty of philosophy and letters at the Institut St. Louis at Brussels has 5 professors and 103 students (December, 1921), while the scientific section of the same school has 9 professors and 68 students; the Institut Supérieur de Commerce under the Jesuit fathers with 23 instructors and 177 students. These schools confer degrees in the same title as similar State institutions, the university being fully independent, the other schools having a board of examiners appointed by the Government. A school (école supérieure) for young ladies at Brussels has 17 professors and 89 pupils; a similar school at Antwerp in the Flemish language has 23 professors and 160 pupils. The diplomas have no legal value, but as a guarantee of their scientific value they are countersigned by the rector of the University of Louvain.

SECONDARY EDUCATION.—Twenty-five colleges or institutes with intermediate instruction of higher degree and under direct authority of the archbishop, have about 430 instructors and 10,000 students, 7 establishments of the same degree in charge of religious (5 Jesuit, 1 Josephite, 1 Crosier Father) with about 4000 students, 1 establishment of Greco-Latin studies in charge of Ursuline nuns at Wavre-Notre-Dame and a very great number of similar institutions in charge of religious with about 19,000 students. Many schools with intermediate instruction of a lower degree are run by the Brothers (of Mercy, Christian Schools, St. Gabriel, etc.). The diplomas given by schools of higher degree have the same value as those of Government schools. The Government intermediate schools of higher and lower degree have religion as part of the program and the course is given by a secular priest appointed by the bishop. The same arrangement exists in the official normal schools and two communal colleges. Thirty-eight priests are assigned to this instruction. The regimental and cadet schools as well as the école militaire, have chaplains and their course in religion. The church schools of this degree do not receive any government subsidy except two colleges at Ghent and Herenthals and four institutes at Antwerp which are supported by the commune.

NORMAL SCHOOLS.—There are two schools of regents for the training of professors of intermediate schools of lower degree under the authority of the archbishop, also 7 schools of regents in charge of the nuns. Then there are 3 primary normal schools for instructors in primary schools and 2 others of same sort for girls under direct charge of the archbishop, with 11 normal schools for girls under the nuns, 1 school for regents and 2 primary normal schools under the Brothers. These normal schools receive large subsidies and also burses in favor of pupils. The diplomas from these schools have the same value as those of the governmental normal schools.

PRIMARY SCHOOLS.—There exists nearly everywhere in the diocese a primary school of the Sisters. Often in the Flemish section of the diocese the Sisters have charge of the communal schools and usually these Sisters' schools are the only ones for girls in the commune. The school for boys is directed by instructors in whom the religious authority has confidence. In the cities, except Antwerp, Brussels and their suburbs, religious instruction is given in all the schools as a branch of the program from which parents can exempt their children. In localities where the religious interest of population demands it the clergy have erected free schools directed by the Sisters, Brothers or lay persons. The total of these schools is 650 with about 150,000 pupils. There are 204 professional and industrial free schools, 102 for boys with 14,000 pupils and 102 for girls with 6700 pupils. The Government pays the entire salary of the lay instructors who have diplomas, assigned to free primary schools which accept the program and instruction of the State, which is practically in every case, and also that of the religious on a reduced basis. Besides the government pays eight-tenths of the salary of the teachers personnel and the same percentage of several other parts of the budget of the industrial and professional schools. The city of Antwerp pays a subsidy of 2,000,000 francs to the Catholic schools.

At Turnhout there is an apostolic school under the Jesuits for young boys who propose to enter the congregations whose members are destined for mission work; and 2 apostolic schools under the Fathers of the Holy Ghost.

HOSPITALS.—Since the confiscation of hospitals, hospices, and charitable establishments during the French occupation (1794-1815), these institutions have been under civil control, but the religious continued their care of the sick, for which they receive a slight remuneration. Lately some lay nurses have been introduced. The Sisters serve in the military hospitals, and nearly all others in the country, besides owning numerous hospitals, sanatoriums, and clinics themselves.

ASSOCIATIONS.—In all the urban communes there exists a Catholic political organization, working men's and youth's circles, military training classes, gymnastics, etc. In the rural communities nearly all the interests are affiliated. In the Flemish region there is a powerful agricultural organization which has 90,000 members in the Flemish provinces.

NEWSPAPERS.—The principal Catholic dailies are "La Libre Belgique," "Le XX^e siècle," "De Handaard," Brussels; "La Métropole," "De Morgenpost," "Het Handelsblad," Antwerp; in Flemish, "De Gazet van Antwerpen," Antwerp and "Het Nieuws van der Tag," Brussels; less important dailies are "Le Démocrat," Brussels and "De Gazet van Mechelen," Malines.

Malta, DIOCESE OF (MELITENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-576b), comprising the Island of Malta, is immediately subject to the Holy See. The bishop, also titular Archbishop of Rhodes, is Rt. Rev. Maurus Caruana, O.S.B., b. 16 November, 1867, in Malta, studied at the College of St. Ignatius and at Fort-Augustus, professed 11 November, 1885, ordained 14 March, 1891, missionary in Scotland, appointed at the Consistory of 22 January, 1915, consecrated at Rome 10 February, by the Cardinal Merry del Val, enthroned 25 February following, succeeding Mgr. Pietro Pace (b. 9 April, 1831, d. 26 July, 1914). The diocesan statistics for 1921 are: 46 parishes, 510 secular and 248 regular priests, 2 abbey for women (Benedictine), 26 convents for men and 47 for women, 105 lay brothers, 611 Sisters, 1 seminary with 44 seminarians, 1 university with 84 students, 2 colleges for men with 220 students, 4 high schools with 510 boys and 640 girls, 1 training school with 120 pupils, 102 elementary schools with 775 teachers and 16,407 pupils, 1 industrial school with 100 pupils. A diocesan missionary institute was founded in 1920 for missionary work among Maltese emigrants; there are 3 homes, 1 asylum, 3 hospitals, 1 refuge (Good Shepherd), 1 settlement, 3 day nurseries. All public institutions have chaplains paid by Government, and all the schools except the high schools are supported by the Government. Four societies are organized among the clergy. The Catholic press is represented by monthly magazines or bulletins issued by almost all the religious orders in connection with their special works. The diocese comprises 200,000 Maltese Catholics.

In 1921 Malta was granted self-government, and the New Parliament was opened by the Prince of Wales, 1 November, 1921; two out of seventeen members of the senate are nominated by the archbishop. During the World War twelve priests acted as military chaplains on the various fronts. From the time of the Gallipoli Expedition a base hospital was established at Malta, the largest number of patients received at one time being 25,000.

Managua, ARCHDIOCESE OF (MANAGUENSIS; cf. C. E., XI-46d), in the Republic of Nicaragua, Central America. Erected 26 February, 1931, under the name of Nicaragua, it was raised to the rank of a metropolitan see by Pius XI, 2 December, 1913, with two suffragan dioceses under its jurisdiction. It comprises the provinces of Managua, Masaya, Carazo, Matagalpa, and Jinotega, with an area of about 6563 square miles. It is bounded on the north and west by the Diocese of Leon, on the east by the Diocese of Granada and the Vicariate of Bluefields, and on the south by the Pacific Ocean. The population is estimated at 250,000. The first archbishop is Most Rev. José Antonio Lezcano y Ortega, b. 10 April, 1865, at Granada, ordained 15 April, 1888, elected archbishop 10 December, 1913, enthroned 3 May, 1914, proclaimed 28 May following, elected in 1915 and 1916 president of the Supreme Congress of the Republic. The auxiliary for Matagalpa is Rt. Rev. Carillo y Salazar, titular Bishop of Torono. There are in the archdiocese: 30 parishes, 45 churches, 1 mission, 27 secular and 3 regular clergy, 18 Brothers, 24 Sisters, 1 seminary with 19 seminarians, 4 hospitals.

Manchester, DIOCESE OF (MANCHESTERIENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-584d), comprising the State of New Hampshire, an area of 9305 sq. m., suffragan of Boston. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. George Albert Guertin, born in Nashua, New Hampshire, 1869, studied at Brighton, Sherbrooke and St. Hyacinthe, ordained in Manchester in 1892, served as pastor of St. Anthony's Church and appointed bishop at the age of thirty-eight, 16 December, 1906, to succeed Rt. Rev. John B. Delaney, died 11 June of the same year. The religious orders established in the diocese include, men: Benedictines, Christian Brothers, Brothers of the Sacred Heart, Marist Brothers of the Schools, and Xaverian Brothers; women: Sisters of Mercy, Sisters of Jesus Mary, Presentation Sisters, Sisters of Charity of Providence, Gray Nuns, Sisters Adorers of the Precious Blood and Sisters of the Holy Cross and of the Seven Dolours. By latest statistics 1922, the Catholic population of the diocese numbers 141,489; it comprises 81 churches with resident priests, 31 missions with churches, 144 secular and 14 regular clergy, 28 chapels, 39 mission stations, 36 seminarians, 1 college with 250 students, 1 high school with 160 boys, 2 academies with 225 pupils, 41 parochial schools with 19,900 pupils, 7 orphan asylums caring for 1009 orphans, 4 hospitals, 2 homes for the aged, 2 homes for working girls, and 1 infant asylum.

Manchuria, NORTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (MANCIURENSIS SEPTENTRIONALIS; cf. C. E., IX-585d), one of the two ecclesiastical divisions of the civil province of the same name, in China. It comprises territory separated from the vicariate apostolic of Southern Manchuria, 10 May, 1898, and is entrusted to the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, the present Vicar Apostolic being Rt. Rev. Pierre-Marie-François Lalouyer, appointed titular Bishop of Raphana 24 July, 1897, and named first vicar of this territory 16 May, 1898. He is assisted by a coadjutor, Rt. Rev. Auguste-Ernest Gaspais, appointed titular Bishop of Canopus 16 December, 1920, and named coadjutor 20 December following. Out of a total population of 10,000,000 this vicariate counts 23,311 Catholics and 2556 catechumens. The 1920 statistics credit it with 700 Protestants, 25 missionaries, 11 native secular priests, 32 catechists, 21 churches, 66 chapels, 1 upper and 2 lower seminaries with 50 students, 123 schools teaching nearly 3000 children, and 9 orphanages. The religious congregations working here include the Franciscan Missionaries of Mary, who came to the mission in 1911, 35 native Sisters of the Sacred Heart of Mary, and about 135 Chinese women who have taken religious vows but live with their families and work in the mission.

Manchuria, SOUTHERN (or LIAO-TUNG), VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (MANCIURENSIS MERIDIONALIS; cf. C. E., IX-585d), one of the two ecclesiastical divisions, of the civil province of the same name in China. It is entrusted to the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, the present Vicar Apostolic being Rt. Rev. Marie-Félix Choulet, appointed 19 February, 1901, and named titular Bishop of Zela, two days later. According to 1920 statistics, out of a total population of 10,000,000, this territory counts 27,847 Catholics; the vicariate is credited with 3814 catechumens, 32 European and 16 native priests, 95 catechists, 144 churches or chapels, 190 stations, 35 seminarians, 63 schools, 11 orphanages, 15 Sisters of Portieux, and 30 Chinese religious. These native religious belong to the Congregation of the Most Pure Heart of Mary, which in 1919 had two convents, one, the mother-house, at Siao-Pa-Kia-Tse, in the province of Ghirin, the other at Houlan, in the province of He-Lung-Kiang. In 1920 this congregation furnished forty-one teachers to the vicariate.

Manfredonia, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SIPONTINENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-588b), in the province of Foggia, Southern Italy, with the perpetual administration of the diocese of Viesti (Vestianensis). For twenty-five years this see has been filled by Most Rev. Pasquale Gagliardi, born in Tricarico 7 December, 1859, appointed 19 April, 1897. The statistics of 1920 credit Manfredonia with 101,800 Catholics, 16 parishes, 140 secular and 14 regular clergy, 7 Brothers, 15 Sisters and 154 churches and chapels. Viesti, comprising only the city of that name, counts 8005 Catholics, 2 parishes, 36 priests and 11 churches and chapels.

Mangalore, DIOCESE OF (MANGALORENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-588d), in the province of Madras (India), suffragan of Bombay, with residence at Codialboil. It has a total Catholic population of 112,000. The bishop is Rt. Rev. Paul-Charles Perini, S. J., b. 12 January, 1867, ordained in 1897, consecrated 4 December, proclaimed 3 November, 1911, succeeding Mgr. Abbondio Cavadini, S. J., b. 5 February, 1846, d. 26 March, 1910. The diocesan statistics for 1922 are: 61 parishes, 61 churches, 8 chapels, 2 missions, 8 mission stations, 82 secular and 43 regular priests, 1 convent for men and 3 for women, 14 lay brothers, 165 Sisters, 1 seminary with 86 seminarians, 1 college for men and 1 for women, 2 high schools for boys and 3 for girls, 2 normal schools, 1 training school for catechists, 90 elementary schools, 5 industrial schools, 1 home for the aged and infirm, 4 asylums (2 for men, 2 for women), 3 hospitals, 1 settlement house for Korgars. The Government Civil Hospital and the Government Civil Jail admit the ministry of priests, and schools such as are on the Government list of recognized schools receive Government grants. Two associations are organized among the clergy and five among the laity. There are published in the diocese: "Trumpet Call," the organ of the Priests' Apostolic Union; "Ange," the messenger of the Sacred Heart in Konkany; Indian Catholic Truth Society publications in Konkany; "The Catholic Educational Review," and the Konkany "Dirven," a bi-monthly publication. The total Catholic population of the diocese is 112,000, of whom 107,000 are Konkany Catholics of Aryan origin, 3500 Malabar and Tamil Catholics of Dravidian origin, and 800 Eurasians, mostly of Indo-Portuguese descent. Clergymen of note deceased since 1910 are: Rev. Augustus Muller, S. J., of the New York province of the Society of Jesus, who founded the charitable institutions now called "Father Muller's Charitable Institutions," labored for over thirty years, and died 1 November, 1910, aged 69, his services being recognized by the late King Emperor, Edward VII, who honored him with the Kaiser-i-Hind Medal; Rev. E. Frachetti, S. J., who spent twenty-nine years in the mission, filling important posts, and died 8 June, 1915. "The Father Frachetti Memorial Ward" in Father Muller's Hospital was erected in his memory by the Catholic Community of Mangalore. During the World War Mangalore was the first diocese in India to send out an Indian chaplain for the Indian army in Mesopotamia. The Indian army is not entitled to have a chaplain, but during the war the Indian Government initiated a departure from its usual policy, and it was Mangalore that volunteered the first chaplain.

Manifestation of Conscience (cf. C. E., IX-587). It is strictly forbidden for any religious superior whosoever to induce in any way his subjects to manifest their consciences to him; but subjects may open their souls to their superiors, if they so desire; it is even laudable for them to show this filial trust in their superiors, and if the latter are priests to discuss their doubts and troubles of conscience with them. There is no longer any obligation to denounce a superior who violates this law, as was prescribed in the decree "Quemadmodum" of Leo XIII.

Manila, ARCHDIOCESE OF (DE MANILA; cf. C. E., IX-597c), comprises the city of Manila, the provinces of Bataan, Bulacan, Cavite, Nueva Ecija, Pampanga, Rizal, Tarlac, Pangasinan, and Zambales. The area of the territory is 9276 square miles. The population, nearly all Catholics, is estimated at 2,026,269. By the appointment (March, 1910) of the Rt. Rev. José Petrelli as first Bishop of Lipa, Batangas, the provinces of Batangas, Tayabas, and Laguna were separated from the archdiocese, of which they had until then been a part. The archdiocese includes some 200 towns with a population of two or three thousand each. On 16 May, 1916, Archbishop Harty was translated to Omaha, and Rt. Rev. M. J. O'Doherty, Bishop of Zamboanga, elevated to the see of Manila. Bishop Petrelli, who had succeeded Mgr. Agius as Apostolic Delegate, established a permanent residence of the Papal Delegation in the district of Malate, Manila, but was later appointed Nuncio at Lima, and left the islands in July, 1921.

The second organic Act of Congress for the government of the Philippine Islands, called the "Jones Law" (1916), prohibited the use of public money for the support of any sectarian institution. As the result of this clause of the law it became necessary to close the Catholic Boys' Reformatory at Lolomboy, theretofore aided by the city of Manila; the Hospital de San José de Cavite, where a large number of insane persons (partially maintained by Government grants), had been cared for by Sisters of Charity; and the Hospicio de San José, also suffering from the withdrawal of government aid for its orphans, has become partially converted into a scholastic institution. The repeated declarations of the Government to change the official language from Spanish to English has necessitated the introduction of English-speaking communities and congregations. Prior to the American régime the Assumption Mothers were the only English-speaking community in the islands.

In response to appeals the Christian Brothers came, in 1910, and established a school; Benedictine Mothers, a girls' academy; Sisters of the Divine Word, Holy Ghost College; the Belgian Canonesses Mission, the Tondo Orphanage, St. Teresa's Hall, and the Immaculate Conception Sisters, Chinese Hospital. In 1921 Sisters of the Good Shepherd established their first house in the Philippines in the District of Sta Ana, Manila, and the same year the historic academy of the Jesuits, the alma mater of the most famous Filipinos, recognizing the needs of the hour, in the course of 1921 declared English the official language of the Ateneo de Manila, and the staff is now mainly composed of American Fathers.

The unprecedented experiment of the United States in undertaking to educate in the English language on secular lines an illiterate Catholic population of at least one million children has been responded to by the Filipinos with enthusiasm. The Government schools, primary, intermediate, high, and university, are crowded with pupils, for whom, however, no religious education is provided. Keenly alive to the urgent necessity of making provisions for the teaching of the faith to the young people, the archbishop erected the Catholic dormitory, St. Rita's Hall, at a cost of $300,000 in 1917 for 350 Catholic students, and in 1918 he purchased a suitable building, St. Mary's Hall, as a Catholic dormitory for 130 young women students. Since 1917 in parishes in this diocese Catholic elementary schools recognized by the Government are educating a majority of the municipal students of school age according to Government standards. The Christian Brothers in 1910 established an elementary and secondary school for boys; this has increased and now magnificent buildings are being erected which will make La Salle College one of the foremost academic establishments in the Orient. Another costly building which was erected in 1913 is St. Escolastica College, where upwards of 400 girl students are in daily attendance. Besides the royal university of St. Tomas there are now twenty Catholic scholastic institutions offering academic courses to young men and women, several of which are recognized by the Government as qualified to grant the baccalaureate and other degrees. There is also established in almost every parish an elementary school of Christian doctrine. The attendance in these schools fluctuates, but may be estimated at not less than 8000. Regarding Catholic schools recognized by the Government, the figures can not be ascertained accurately; the total number in attendance in November, 1921, was 13,460.

The Knights of Columbus have grown from one council to three and are expecting the establishment of more. The year 1921 records the death of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Cayetano Arellano, a Knight of Columbus, an eminent jurist, and a humble minded Christian gentleman. A month or two later the Hon. Norberto Romualdez, then Grand Knight of the Manila Council, was appointed by the President of the United States an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court.

Shortly after his installation Archbishop O'Doherty established a Catholic Federation of Men, and another of Women, both of which are doing good work. Lately an American Women's Catholic Club has also come into existence to take its part in social, economic, and charitable activities in Manila and the nearer provinces.

The old established Dominican daily paper, "Libertus," withdrew from publication in April, 1917. Shortly after "La Defensa," a successful daily evening paper, came into being and has acquired a wide circulation, under the direction of "The Association of the Catholic Press."

By 1921 statistics there are in the archdiocese 142 secular priests, 150 priests representing 9 religious orders, 187 parishes (144 of which have resident priests), 70 lay brothers, 309 members of 9 religious communities of women, 1 general seminary and 3 preparatory, 1 university, 43 colleges, academies, and schools, with a total attendance of about 13,500, and 3 charitable institutions with approximately 200 inmates.

Manizales, DIOCESE OF (MANIZALENSIS; cf. C. E., X—117a), in Colombia, Central America, suffragan of Medellin. This see was erected in 1900 and Rt. Rev. Gregory Nazianza Hoyos, born in Vahos in 1849, was appointed the first bishop, 11 May, 1901. He died 26 October, 1921, and his successor has not yet been appointed. A decree of the Consistory of 11 June, 1920, separated the territory of Balsa from this diocese and united it to the diocese of Cali. The cathedral is dedicated to Our Lady. No statistics are published.

Mantua, DIOCESE OF (MANTUANENSIS; cf. C. E., IX—611b), in Lombardy, northern Italy, suffragan of Milan. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Paolo Carlo Francesco Origo, born in Milan in 1840, ordained in 1863, appointed 18 March, 1895, to succeed Bishop Sarto who was promoted to Venice, and who later became Pope Pius X. Bishop Origo was named an assistant at the pontifical throne 16 November, 1903. The Catholic population of this diocese numbers 257,500; the 1920 statistics credit it with 153 parishes, 307 secular and 25 regular clergy, 120 seminarians, 10 Brothers, 270 Sisters and 259 churches or chapels.

Maranon, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF. See SAN GABRIEL DELL' ADDOLORATA DE MARANON.

Marash, DIOCESE OF (MARASCENSIS; cf. C. E., IX—636b), a see of the Armenian Rite, in Cilicia, Asiatic Turkey. The see is filled by Rt. Rev. Nonce-Avedis Arpiarian, born in Eghin, Armenia, 1856, appointed Bishop of Karpouth 23 September, 1890, promoted to the titular metropolitan see of Anazarbe 5 April, 1898, and made auxiliary to the Patriarch of Cilicia, transferred 27 August, 1911, succeeding Bishop Monradian, who died in 1906. During the World War the Abbé Stephen Paramian and Joseph Akrabian, both of whom had studied at the Seminary of St. Francis Xavier at Beirut, were martyred. In all 70,000 Armenians of this region perished, leaving now about 30,000, of whom 1600 are Catholics. The diocese is served by 11 missionary priests, 7 regulars and 4 churches or chapels.

Marbeau, EMMANUEL-JULES-MARIE, BISHOP OF MEAUX, b. at Paris on 12 November, 1844; d. on 31 May, 1921. He was ordained at Orléans in 1874. When the city of Meaux was deserted by all the authorities during the World War, Bishop Marbeau remained at his post and practically administered the affairs of the municipality. This made him one of the heroes of the Marne. For this defensio civitatis he was awarded the Cross of the Legion of Honor. He was consecrated Bishop of Meaux in 1910 and died two or three days after celebrating his golden jubilee as a priest.

Mardin, a mission in Mesopotamia, Asia Minor, erected in 1627, made a prefecture apostolic in 1842, and again returned to the status of a mission 12 September, 1896. It is entrusted to the Capuchins, with official residence at Diarbékir. The present

Superior is Rev. Ange de Clamecy, born in Clamecy, France, 1 July, 1863, entered the Congregation of Capuchins in 1892 and was named head of this mission 18 March, 1910. According to 1920 statistics the mission comprises 1445 Catholics of the Latin Rite, 9 stations with resident priests, 11 churches or chapels, 18 schools with 2585 children, 1 college with 48 students, and 2 orphanages with 22 orphans. The mission is served by 10 Capuchin Fathers and 5 Brothers, 6 secular priests and 22 Sisters, Tertiaries of Lons-le-Saunier.

Mardin, ARCHDIOCESE OF (MARDENSIS; cf. C. E., IX—650d) of the Syrian Rite and a diocese of the Armenian and Chaldean Rites in Mesopotamia, Asiatic Turkey. This is a patriarchal see of the Syrian Rite, the Patriarch of Antioch, His Excellency Ignatius Dionysius Rahmani, resides here. A patriarchal vicar also resides here, at present, Most Rev. Behnan Kalian, titular Archbishop of Sarugh. The diocese comprises 4200 Syrian Catholics, 3900 Schismatics, 350 Protestants, 10,000 Mussulmans and 1000 Jews. The 1920 statistics credit it with 14 secular and 13 regular clergy, and 8 churches or chapels.

The see for the Armenian Rite is vacant, the bishop, Rt. Rev. Hussig Ghulian, having died, 18 February, 1922. The diocese comprises 6500 Armenian Catholics and 20,000 Schismatics; 14 missionary priests, 2 regulars and 14 churches or chapels. The diocese is administered for the Chaldeans by Rt. Rev. Israel Audo, born in Alkosch, Mesopotamia, 1859, studied at the Seminary of Mossul and was ordained in 1886, served as patriarchal vicar at Bassorah in 1892 and appointed bishop 11 May, 1909. Statistics of 1920 credit the diocese with 1670 Chaldean Catholics, 6 regular clergy, 3 churches or chapels, 2 stations and 3 schools.

Margaret Mary Alacoque, SAINT (cf. C. E., IX—653b), canonized by Benedict XV, on 13 May, 1920.

Margaret of Lorraine. BLESSED (cf. C. E., IX—655b).—Her cultus was approved at Rome, 20 March, 1921.

Mariana, ARCHDIOCESE OF (MARIANENSIS; cf. C. E., IX—660b), in the state of Minas Geraes, Brazil. This see is filled by Most Rev. Silvére Gomes Pimenta, born in Congonhas do Campo, in this diocese, in 1840, ordained in 1862, made a professor in the seminary, vicar capitular, vicar general, and protonotary apostolic in 1878, appointed titular Bishop of Camachus 20 June, 1890, and transferred to Marianna 3 December, 1897. When the diocese was raised to the dignity of an archdiocese in 1906, he was made its first archbishop 1 May of that year. On 19 June, 1912, he was made an assistant at the pontifical throne, and on 28 May, 1920, he was made a member of the literary academy. He is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Antonio-Augusto de Assis, titular Bishop of Diocletianopolis, appointed 2 August, 1918. By a decree of 22 February, 1921, the limits of the archdiocese, as well as those of the diocese of Aterrado were slightly changed. The diocese of Aterrado had been erected in 1918 by a division of the archdiocese. Statistics of the archdiocese have not been published since this division was made.

Mariana and Caroline Islands, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (MARIANENSIS ET CAROLINENSIS; cf. C. E., IX—660d), formerly a prefecture apostolic and raised to a vicariate 1 March, 1911. On 18 June, 1907, this territory was entrusted to the Capuchins of Westphalia, the present vicar apostolic being Rt.

Rev. Salvator Peter Walleser, appointed titular Bishop of Tanagra, 21 August, 1912. He is the author of a Palan dictionary and grammar. Having submitted to Japanese domination, these islands are dependent on the apostolic delegate for Japan, since 3 March, 1921. The official residence is at Ponapa. In 1911 the Caroline Islands had a total population of 20,000, of whom 1700 are Catholic; 12 missionaries, 12 Brothers, 11 religious, 11 stations, 11 churches or chapels and 14 schools with 600 pupils. The Mariana Islands count a Catholic population of 2800, and 1000 non-Catholics; 3 Capuchin priests, 2 Brothers, 3 stations, 3 churches. The mission does not conduct any schools here as the Government holds complete control over education.

Mariannhill, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (MARIANNHILLENSIS), in South Africa. On 27 July, 1921, a portion of the Vicariate Apostolic of Natal was taken and entrusted to the missionaries of Mariannhill, and on 10 September, following, it was erected into a separate vicariate under the name of Mariannhill. It extends from East to West between the Rivers Umkomaas and Umlaas, and is bounded on the North by the Division of Impendhle, on the West by the Drakensburg and on the South by the Great Key River. Rev. Father Fleischer has just been appointed vicar apostolic and titular Bishop of Tiberiopolis. Statistics are not yet published.

Marquesas Islands, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (INSULARUM MARCHESI; cf. C. E., IX—688c), in Polynesia, with residence at Atouana, on the Island of Hiva. It is entrusted to the Congregation of Picpus, the present vicar being Rt. Rev. David Le Cadre, made provincial of these islands 29 June, 1912, administrator apostolic 11 November following, named vicar apostolic 30 December, 1920, and appointed titular Bishop of Demetrias 5 January, 1921. The population comprises 2750 Catholics, 450 Protestants and 100 pagans. By 1920 statistics the vicariate is served by 8 missionary priests, 2 Brothers, 9 Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny, 9 catechists, and 37 churches or chapels. The schools were closed in 1904 by order of the French Government, which has had control of these islands since 1841.

Marquette (SAULT STE MARIE AND MARQUETTE), DIOCESE OF (MARIANAPOLITANA ET MARQUETTENSIS; cf. C. E., IX—689a), is under the administration of the fourth bishop, the Rt. Rev. Frederick Eis, D.D., who was consecrated 24 August, 1890. The present (1921) statistics for this diocese show a Catholic population of approximately 85,896; 90 secular priests and 8 regulars, 76 churches with resident priests, 61 missions with churches, 54 mission stations, 29 chapels, 12 ecclesiastical students, 3 academies, 27 parochial schools, 8413 pupils in schools, 1 orphan asylum with 100 orphans, 1 school for Indians, and 4 hospitals. The diocese comprises the northern peninsula of the State of Michigan and is suffragan of Milwaukee.

Marquette University, situated in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, was founded by the Jesuits in 1857 as St. Aloysius Academy and incorporated in 1864 as Marquette College until 1907, when a new charter was obtained and the institution became a university. This same year the Milwaukee Medical College was affiliated with the University, and in 1908 the Milwaukee Law School, the College of Applied Science and Engineering being begun at the same time. In 1910 the College of Economics, School of Business Administration and School of Journalism were opened. The affiliation between Marquette University and the Milwaukee Medical School was discontinued in 1912 when the University acquired complete control of the schools of Medicine and Dentistry, and the Training School for Nurses of Trinity Hospital. The following year property was purchased from the Wisconsin College of Physicians and Surgeons and the two Medical Colleges of Milwaukee were merged into the new medical department of the university. A complete reorganization of the College faculties took place after this and in February, 1915, Marquette School of Medicine was accorded a "Class A" rating by the American Medical Association. In 1918 the Carnegie Foundation offered the University two-thirds of a million dollars for the Medical School on condition that the University raise one-third, and this having been done, the Medical School now has an endowment fund of one million dollars.

The present organization of the University comprises the College of Arts and Sciences with a total registration of 325; College of Applied Science and Engineering, registration 500; College of Dentistry, registration 425; College of Economics, registration 500; School of Journalism, registration 70; College of Law, 250; School of Medicine, 155; Conservatory of Music, 1100; Training School for Nurses, 62; and University High School, 450. Rev. Herbert C. Noonan, S. J., is president of the university, with a faculty of 264.

Marriage (cf. C. E., IX-699).—In 1921 the Holy See instructed ordinaries to insist, even by the infliction of penalties, that their priests should observe most carefully the canons prescribing the investigation of the status of parties wishing to get married and the notification of the parish priest of their place of baptism after the marriage ceremony. The Code prescribes that before a marriage takes place it is necessary to ascertain if the parties are free to marry validly and licitly. If there was danger of death the oaths of the contracting parties affirming their baptism and freedom to contract would in case of necessity suffice. Ordinarily the procedure is to publish the banns of marriage; in addition the parish entitled to assist at the ceremony must examine the parties separately in accordance with regulations to be drawn up by the local ordinary, and ascertain from them if there is any impediment and if they, especially the woman, are contracting freely. If they have not been baptized in his territory the parish priest who is to assist at the marriage must obtain baptismal certificates from both parties, or from the Catholic party if a dispensation has been granted from the impediment of disparity of worship. Moreover, those who have not been confirmed are to receive that sacrament before marriage, if that can be arranged without grave inconvenience. The parish priest must exhort minors not to marry without the knowledge or reasonable consent of their parents; should the minors disregard this advice he must not assist at their marriage without first consulting the local ordinary; finally, he must instruct the parties, according to circumstances, on the sanctity of the sacrament, the duties they are about to assume, and earnestly exhort them to go to confession and receive Holy Communion before their marriage.

Matrimonial Consent.—A simple error concerning the unity, indissolubility, or sacramental dignity of marriage, even if it gave rise to the contract, does not vitiate matrimonial consent; nor does knowledge or belief that the marriage is void necessarily exclude it. A valid marriage cannot be contracted unless the parties are present personally or by proxy; consequently marriage cannot now be contracted by letter, the parties must express their consent verbally, and may not employ equivalent signs, if they are able to speak. If the marriage is by proxy: (a) the diocesan regulations must be observed; (b) for validity, the proxy must have a special commission to contract with a specified person; the commission must be signed by the principal and either the parish priest or the ordinary of the place where the commission is given, or by a priest delegated by either, or by at least two witnesses; (c) if the principal does not know how to write, the fact is to be noted in the commission and another witness added who must also sign the document; if these provisions are not observed the commission is invalid; (d) if prior to the contracting of the marriage, the principal should withdraw the commission or become insane, even without the knowledge of the proxy or of the other principal, the marriage would be invalid; (e) the proxy must discharge his commission personally, otherwise the marriage would be void. Marriage can be contracted also with the aid of an interpreter, but the parish priest must not assist at a marriage by proxy or by the help of an interpreter without just cause, and unless the authenticity of the commission or the trustworthiness of the interpreter is undoubted; if time permits he must, moreover, get permission from the ordinary.

In all cases of marriage a record should be made as soon as possible (quamprimum, the word statim—immediately—was used in the earlier law) by the parish priest or his substitute, even when another priest was delegated to assist. The marriage is to be recorded also in the baptismal registers; consequently if either or both of the principals were baptized elsewhere the parish priest who assisted the marriage must personally or through the episcopal curia and without delay notify the pastor of the place of baptism. This notification must give the age and names of the parties, the names of their parents, the place and date of the ceremony, the names of the witnesses, and of the parish priest; the document must be stamped with the parochial seal and should be sent through the diocesan chancery. The Holy See has recently called the attention of parish priests to the fact that many of the emigrant workers are vagi or if not it is difficult to be sure that there is no impediment to their marriage and that in such cases it is necessary for the priest to refer the matter to the ordinary before assisting at their marriages. If marriage took place under circumstances in which no priest was necessary for validity, the obligation of procuring its record in both books devolves primarily on the priest, if any, who assisted, and secondarily on the witnesses and the contracting parties.

Marriages of conscience, that is secret marriages for which the banns have not been published, can be authorized by the local ordinary, but not by the vicar general without a special mandate, for a very urgent and grave reason only. The assistant priest, the witnesses, the ordinary and his successors, and either spouse unless with the consent of the other are bound to secrecy. The marriage is to be recorded in a special book kept in the secret curial archives. The promise of secrecy does not bind the ordinary if its observance would constitute a danger of scandal or reflect gravely on the sanctity of marriage, or if the parents neglect to have the offspring of such a marriage baptized, or if they have them baptized under fictitious names without notifying the ordinary of the birth and baptism with the real names of the parents within thirty days, or if they neglect to give the children a Christian education.

Marriage may be contracted at any time of the year, but the solemn nuptial blessing is forbidden from the first Sunday of Advent till Christmas Day inclusive and from Ash Wednesday to Easter Sunday inclusive; the local ordinary, however, may for just cause permit the blessing during those periods, while observing the liturgical laws regarding the Mass to be said; but the parties are to be admonished to abstain from too great a display. The marriages of Catholics are to be celebrated in the parish church and not in another church or public or semi-public oratory without the permission of the local ordinary or the parish priest. Local ordinaries can allow marriage in private buildings only in extraordinary cases when there is a just and reasonable cause; they are allowed in churches or oratories of seminaries or of nuns only in case of urgent necessity, when due precautions have been taken. Mixed marriages are to be celebrated outside the church without sacred rites; an ordinary may, however, dispense from this to avoid greater evils, but he may not allow Mass to be celebrated.

Codez jur. can., 1019-32; 1094-1109; VLAHINE, Praelat. jur. matr. (1920-21); AYNHAC, Marriage Legislation.

Marriage, Mixed (cf. C. E., IX-698).—Before granting a dispensation for a mixed marriage, which the Church forbids most severely and commands ordinaries and other pastors of souls to deter the faithful from contracting as far as they can, there must be grave and just reasons, and guarantees, ordinarily to be in writing, that the non-Catholic party will remove from the Catholic party the danger of perversion, and the promise of both parties that all the children will be baptized and brought up exclusively in the Catholic Faith. There must be, moreover, moral certainty that the promises will be fulfilled. As was said above in treating of disparity of worship (q.v.), the parties must be married only by a Catholic ceremony.

Marseilles, DIOCESE OF (MASSILIENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-715b), in the province of Bouches-du-Rhône, France, suffragan of Aix. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Joseph-Antoine Fabre, born in La Ciotat, France, 1844, ordained in 1867, served as a curate and rector, made pastor-dean of Roquevaire 25 May, 1881, named an honorary canon in 1898 and a titular canon in 1904, vicar general in 1906, prothonotary apostolic 29 January, 1908, vicar capitular in 1909, and appointed bishop the same year, 29 April, succeeding Cardinal Andrieu, promoted to Bordeaux, 2 January preceding. He is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Daniel Champavier, titular Bishop of Sora. In 1921 Bishop Fabre was named a commander of the Order of Leopold by the Belgian King, and received the cross on 6 May, from the Belgian Consul. The first diocesan synod since 1907 was held in 1920 and presided over by Bishop Fabre, assisted by Mgr. Durand. A new upper seminary was opened at St. Joseph the same year, in the former school of the Religious of the Sacred Heart; it comprises a large chapel, the old chateau of the Barony of St. Joseph, a new building, and the old boarding school, which is used for the seminary proper, and a number of small buildings. During the World War 127 priests and 67 seminarians were mobilized from this diocese, and of this number 21 were killed or disappeared, 6 were decorated with the Médaille Militaire, 44 with the Croix de Guerre and 2 with the Médaille des Epidémies.

Latest statistics, collected in 1911 give the total population of this diocese as 622,056, of whom 492,663 are Catholics. It comprises 8 first class, 3 second class and 82 succursal parishes, 115 vicariates, 1 church for the Greek Uniat Rites, 1 church for Italian speaking, and 1 for German speaking Catholics, 1 upper and 1 lower seminary, and 3 colleges and ecclesiastical institutions. The "Ordo" of 1920 gives 399 secular and regular clergy; 37 priests deceased in 1918 and 15 in 1919.

Marshall Islands, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (INSULARUM MARSHALL; cf. C. E., IX-718c), in the Pacific Ocean, is entrusted to the Congregation of the Sacred Heart of Issoudun, the present Superior of the mission being Rev. Bruno Sching, named in November, 1911. These islands have become subject to Japan and therefore are dependent on the apostolic delegate for Japan, since 3 March, 1921. Although erected into a vicariate in 1905 this territory is not yet invested with the full episcopal character. It comprised in 1920, 6 stations, 8 missionary priests, 8 Brothers, 13 religious of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart, 4 churches, 6 stations and 6 schools with 225 children.

Marsi, DIOCESE OF (MARSORUM; cf. C. E., IX-718d), in the province of Aquila, Southern Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. The episcopal residence is at Pescina and for this reason the bishopric is sometimes known by that name. The see is at present filled by Rt. Rev. Pio Marcello Bagnoli, O.C.D., born in the diocese of Florence, 1859, definitor general of his Order, named consultant to the Congregation of Bishops and Regulars in 1907, then to that of the Council in 1908, and later consultant of the Congregation of Religious, appointed bishop 14 December, 1910, succeeding Rt. Rev. Niccolo Cola, transferred to Nocera 26 August, 1910. This diocese has a Catholic population of 165,000, 80 parishes, 132 secular and 25 regular clergy, 30 seminarians, 30 Brothers, 60 Sisters and 303 churches or chapels.

Marsico Nuovo and Potenza, DIOCESE OF (MARCISENSIS ET POTENTINENSIS; cf. C. E., IX-719a), in the province of Potenza, Southern Italy. The first see is a suffragan of Salerno and the second of Acerenza. Rt. Rev. Roberto Achille Razzoli, O.F.M., b. 29 January, 1863, studied at the college of Giaccherino, entered the Order of Friars Minor 29 August, 1879, ordained 9 August, 1885, provincial definitor in 1901, custodian of the Holy Land from January, 1906, to January, 1913, appointed to this see 27 August, 1913, consecrated in Florence, 18 September following, enthroned 21 May, 1914, succeeding Mgr. Ignazio Monterisi (b. 6 October, 1860; d. 16 February, 1913). The united sees comprise 24 parishes, 104 churches, 70 secular priests, 1 monastery and 7 convents for women, 60 nuns, 10 seminarians, 2 missionary societies, 2 homes, 5 asylums, 1 hospital under the care of the Sisters of Charity, 2 orphanages. Five public institutions admit the ministry of the priests. Seven associations are organized among the clergy and seven among the men and women. "L'Aurora," the diocesan bulletin, is published here. The diocese has an entirely Latin population of 100,000 Catholics. The District Catholic Congress was held in 1911 and the Women's Social Week in 1921.

Martinelli, SEBASTIANO, Cardinal, b. at Santa Anna, near Lucca, Italy, on 20 August, 1848; d. at Rome on 4 July, 1918. He was the successor of Cardinal Satolli as Delegate Apostolic in the United States, became an Augustinian when he was 15. He was ordained in 1871. After teaching theology in his Order he was made Prior General in 1869, and re-elected in 1896, and after being made Archbishop of Ephesus in 1896, went to Washington. He was elevated to the Cardinalate in 1901, and in 1909 he was Prefect of the Congregation of Rites. He was member of the Canon Law Commission from 1906 till 1917.

Martinique, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI PETRI ET ARCIS GALICÆ; cf. C. E., IX-731b), one of the French Lesser Antilles, was suffragan to the Archdiocese of Bordeaux from 1850 to 1905, when it was restored to the Sacred Congregation of Propaganda, and by a decree of 4 March, 1912, it was entrusted to the Congregation of the Holy Ghost.

Bishop Marie-Charles-Alfred de Cormont, who came to this see in 1899 as successor to Bishop Tanoux, died in 1911, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Joseph-François Malleret (1912-14). Upon his death, Bishop Malleret was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Paul-Louis-Joseph Lequien, C.S.Sp., b. in the diocese of Lille, 1872, appointed bishop 15 March, 1915. The town of St. Pierre, which was completely destroyed by the eruption of Mont Pelée in 1902, is in process of reconstruction and the parish has been re-established since 1914. A modest chapel has been built on part of the ruins of the old cathedral and at present (1922) there are about 3000 inhabitants in the territory. The population of the whole diocese numbers about 190,000, comprising Europeans, Creoles, half-breeds, Blacks, and some four or five hundred Indians; with the exception of these last mentioned it is entirely Catholic. The diocese has 34 parishes, 36 churches, 1 convent of men and 2 of women, 37 secular and 22 regular clergy, 1 secondary school for boys with 9 teachers and 75 students, 2 for girls with 18 teachers and 128 pupils, 1 asylum, 7 hospitals and 1 nursery. Six public institutions permit the priests of the diocese to minister in them. A Catholic journal and a religious bulletin are published.

Martinsberg (OR PANNONHALMA, cf. C. E., IX-734c), an archabbey, belonging to the Benedictines, in Hungary, about fourteen miles south of Győr. It includes a Catholic population of 33,333 and 6230 Protestants.

MARY, LITTLE BROTHERS OF (cf. C. E., IX-749b).—The Institute of the Little Brothers of Mary, generally known as Marist Brothers of the Schools (F.M.S.), celebrated the centennial of its foundation in 1917, the festal celebrations being auspiciously inaugurated at St. Ann's Hermitage, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., 2 January, 1917. The progress of the order in the first century of its existence is a notable achievement in the face of almost insurmountable obstacles. It marks the success of the work of the founder, Venerable Joseph Benedict Champagnat (q.v.), a humble curate of a poor parish with nothing to sustain him but his trust in God and a desire to do something to promote His glory by bringing children closer to Him. By a decree of 11 July, 1920, Pope Benedict XV declared that the Venerable Champagnat had practiced virtue to a heroic degree.

The twelfth general chapter of the order was held at Turin, May-June, 1920, and was attended by Brothers from all parts of the world. The chapter unanimously elected as superior general Very Rt. Rev. Brother Diogène, assistant general to Brother Superior Stratonique, who declined reelection. Eight assistants, together with a procurator general, secretary general, etc., were also elected for the ensuing twelve years. Brother Diogène, for many years head of one of the largest normal schools of the institute, had moulded the future Marist teachers on broad and thorough lines. Later as provincial and then as assistant general he was frequently entrusted with delicate missions, which were skilfully executed. During the German occupation of Belgium and Northern France, he remained in the danger zone for more than three years, devoting himself to the welfare of some aged and infirm Brothers, and of the neighboring populations. At the special request of the inhabitants of Beaucamp (a few miles from Lille) and of the neighboring townships he accepted the difficult position of Mayor, and thus became the connecting link between the people and the German authorities. His fearlessness carried him through this and other critical situations. Shortly after the signing of the armistice the people whom he had protected so effectively claimed for him the Cross of the Legion of Honor.

For over a month the general chapter deliberated questions affecting administration, finance, normal schools, professional and religious training, and numerous commissions were appointed to deal with the whole work of education, the system of teaching followed by the Marist Brothers being modified where necessary to meet the requirements of the times. Varied outlooks upon the educational question arising out of personal knowledge and experience were considered, and the result published in the modified "Educational Guide and School Method." A study of the complete statistics of the order evidenced the vitality and power of the Marist Institute. Despite persecutions in certain countries, the fact that nearly a thousand of its members were called to the colors during the World War, and opposition to the development of its schools in various places it has grown and multiplied. There are at present (1921) 25 provinces and 7000 members.

In 1921 the canonical visitation of the Marist educational establishments was made by special delegates of the superior general. The canonical visit of the Marist institutes in the United States was made by Very Rev. Brother Stratonique, former general of the order, and Very Rev. Brother Angelicus, assistant general, who had previously had several years of successful educational work in Canada and the United States. During the course of this visitation the corporation of the Marist Brothers secured the site for a juniorate or junior novitiate in the Diocese of Boston where they have several schools. It is known as Tyngsboro Mansion, a house erected by Captain Tyng (d. 1772), an important landmark of the country-side, and admirably adapted for the purpose of the Marist institution. The juniorate is a preparatory school for boys from thirteen to sixteen years of age, who are willing to consecrate their lives to the noble cause of Catholic education in the Marist Institute. The juniorate is to the regular novitiate what the preparatory seminary is to the theological seminary of the diocesan clergy. It brings the aspirant simply to the threshold of the novitiate, to which he is promoted when he has attained the required age and given proof of possessing the essential qualifications.

The Marist Brothers have recently purchased also twenty-one acres advantageously situated in one of the highest points of the Bronx, N. Y., for the purpose of erecting a boarding and day school. Work on the buildings will be begun within two or three years, and meanwhile parts of the grounds are used as the athletic field of St. Ann's Academy conducted by the Marist Brothers on Lexington Avenue and 76th Street. St. Ann's, established 1892, the chief Marist institution in New York City, is a high school, where graduates of parochial schools may find, besides all the advantages of an incorporated school, every safeguard for mind, conscience, and heart. St. Ann's Camp, conducted by the Marist Brothers on Lake Champlain, N. Y., solves the vacation problem for Catholic boys.

Mary, SERVANTS OF (ORDER OF SERVITES; cf. C. E., IX-750b).—At the general chapter of the order, held in Florence in 1913, Rev. Alexis Lepicier, b. at Vancoeurs, France, and professor of dogma at Propaganda, was elected prior general to succeed Rev. Guiseppe Lucchesi. On account of the trouble-time the next general chapter was not held until 1920, and Fr. Lepicier ruled the order for seven instead of six years. His successor is Aloysius Tabanelli, professor of moral theology at the Bologna Seminary, elected prior general at the general chapter held at Monteberico, Vicenza, 1920. In 1913, the order assumed a mission, detached from the Vicariate Apostolic of Natal, in Swaziland. The superior of the mission resides at the capital, Nbabanc. In 1914 apostolic work was also taken up at S. Antonio de Obligado, Santa Fe, Argentina. In 1920 Mgr. Prosper Bernardi, consecrated titular Bishop of Paltus, became the first prelate of the Prelature of Acre and Purus in Brazil, detached from the Diocese of Manaos. He reached his new official residence, Senna Madureira, in August. In 1910 two new houses of the order were opened, one in Chicago, and one at Ladysmith, Wis., and also two missions in Missouri, one at Malden, and one at Wilhelmina; in 1912 Notre Dame de la Défense, Montreal, Canada; in 1913 Notre Dame du Mont Carmel, also at Montreal, and one at Vancouver, B. C.; in 1914 one at Ottawa; in 1916 one at Welby, Col.; and in 1917 one at Portland, Ore. The novitiate of the American Sisters has been transferred from Cheropee, Ia., to Omaha, Neb. Mgr. Pellegrino Stagni, former prior general of the Servites and Apostolic Delegate to Canada, died 23 September, 1918.

Mary, SOCIETY OF, OF PARIS (MARIANISTES; cf. C. E., IX-752b).—In 1917 the Society had 170 houses and 1800 religious. The superior general, Very Rev. Joseph Hiss, celebrated his sacerdotal golden jubilee in 1921, the occasion being commemorated throughout the order. For its scholarly works in Japan the Society was awarded a prize of 10,000 francs by the French Academy, 25 November, 1920. This prize was instituted for spreading a knowledge of the French language outside of France. And according to a statement in "Tunisie catholique" (2 Oct., 1920) it is through the Marianistes that the intellectually élite of the bourgeoisie and the official world in Japan have learned to know France in her language, her history, and her spirit, as have also the common people. They reach all classes of people in Japan, through their academies, commercial schools, night schools and vocation schools for adults, and normal school. The academy at Tokio numbers 1200 pupils, of whom 553 are in the primary classes and 647 in secondary classes; the commercial school at Osaka has 868 pupils; and the academy at Nagasaki has 547. There are 54 students at the apostolic school at Urakami. The College of St. Joseph at Yokohama has 253 pupils recruited chiefly from the foreign settlement in the city composed mostly of English and Americans. The Marianistes wish to found other schools at Osaka and Fukuoka, but the losses suffered by the Society during the war and the lack of subjects, due to difficulties in the recruiting of religious since 1903, make this at present impossible. In Hawaii the Marianistes direct the College of St. Louis at Honolulu, with 950 pupils of whom 400 are non-Catholics. Since its foundation in 1883 there have been 273 conversions to the faith at this college, and in 1920 alone there were 74.

In the United States the Society numbers 551 members, located in 59 establishments of which 6 are colleges, 20 high schools, and the remainder parish schools. St. Mary's College at Dayton, Ohio, was established as the University of Dayton in 1920, in which year colleges of Education and of Finance and Commerce, and the School of Sociology were added; the College of Engineering was opened in 1911; and the pre-Medical School began its courses in 1915. The Society has 2 provinces in the United States: the Cincinnati Province with 39 institutions and 370 members; and the St. Louis Province with 20 institutions and 181 members. The latter has its provincial house and novitiate at Maryhurst, near Kirkwood, Mo., with a normal school under erection. The residence of the provincial of the Cincinnati Province is at Mount St. John, Dayton, Ohio. New foundations in the Cincinnati Province are: Cathedral Latin School, Cleveland, Ohio; West Philadelphia Catholic High School for Boys, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mount St. John Normal School, Dayton, Ohio; and a new Juniorate at Beacon, N. Y.

Maryland (cf. C. E., IX-755b).—The total area of the State of Maryland is 12,327 square miles, of which 2386 are water.

POPULATION.—The total population in 1920 was 1,449,661, an increase of 154,315 or of 11.9 per cent since 1910. The average number of persons to the square mile was 145.8. The urban population was 60 per cent; the rural population 40 per cent. The numerical rank of the State has decreased in every census, being sixth in 1790 and twenty-seventh in 1920. The negro population is about 244,000. Baltimore increased 31 per cent in population during the census decade 1910-20. The federal census of 1920 gives it 733,826 inhabitants as against 558,485 in 1910. The religious census of 1916 shows 2936 church organizations with a membership (communicants) of 602,587. The Census Bureau dropped the word "communicants" and accepted from each body its own report of members. The number of Catholics is therefore put down in 1916 as 219,530. Other totals are: Baptists, 44,866; Disciples, or Christians, 5719; Dunkers, 6538; Friends, 4790; Methodists, 166,445; Presbyterians, 21,551; Reformed Presbyterians, 15,801; United Brethren, 8428. The total number of church edifices reported was 2879, with a valuation of $29,162,381.

RESOURCES.—There were 4937 manufacturing establishments in the State in 1919, with 140,400 wage earners. The capital invested was $619,607,000 and the total value of products $873,945,000. In 1920 Maryland had 47,908 farms valued at $463,638,120. In the same year the value of the agricultural crops was $109,811,164; corn, wheat, hay, and tobacco are the principal crops. The fisheries of the state are very valuable, especially the oyster fisheries which yield more than those of any other state. There are ample facilities for traffic both by sea and land, the state having 1409 miles of railway track, while 30 or more steamboat lines enter the port of Baltimore. The construction of a Chesapeake and Delaware ship canal by the Federal Government is in progress and its extension from Norfolk to North Carolina has been recommended.

EDUCATION.—In 1920 there were in Maryland 64,434 illiterates over 10 years of age. Of the native whites, 13,884 illiterates or 2 per cent, were of native parentage, 1484 or 9 per cent, were of foreign or mixed parentage. The illiterates among the foreign born whites numbered 13,575 or 13.4 per cent; among the negroes, 35,404 or 18 per cent. The decrease of illiteracy among negroes from 23 per cent in 1910 to 18 per cent in 1920 shows the gain in Maryland's educational standards. In 1920 there were 2423 public elementary and high schools with 181,547 white and 43,543 colored elementary pupils and 15,541 white and 987 colored high school pupils. The state expenditure was $8,918,441. Bible reading is neither permitted nor excluded in the public schools. The State Board of Education (seven members appointed by the governor) selects the state superintendent as the executive officer of the board and through him has control of the public school system. The appointment of county superintendents and supervisors is made by county boards of education, subject to the approval of the state superintendent.

The State laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: The State Board shall require all private educational institutions to report as to enrollment and courses of study; no private institution not approved shall issue any certificate, diploma, or degree. St. Charles College at Ellicott City was destroyed by fire in 1911; the new St. Charles was built at Cantonsville. For Catholic educational details, see BALTIMORE, ARCHDIOCESE OF.

CHARITIES.—There are (1921) 8 Catholic hospitals, 12 orphan and infant asylums, and 6 trial reform schools in the state.

RECENT LEGISLATION.—In 1913 an amendment to the Constitution placed the penalty of bribery at elections on the buyer of votes as well as the seller. In the next year, a State Tax Commission was created to supervise and equalize assessment of property and taxation; a Workmen's Compensation Act was passed, and a measure providing for the county unit of electing United States Senators. In 1915 four amendments to the constitution provided for referendum, reclassification of property for taxation purposes, parole in criminal cases, and home rule for Baltimore. A State Board of Prison Control was established in 1916. In 1918 child and woman labor was regulated. The legislation of 1920 aimed to correct some abuses in state government by providing for the merit system, and for the centralization of the purchasing department; a State Athletic Commission was created to supervise boxing and another commission was created to supervise and prepare industrial and welfare laws. Maryland refused to ratify the Woman's Suffrage Amendment, 17 February, 1920, and was the sixth State to ratify the National Prohibition Amendment, 12 February, 1921.

WAR RECORD.—During the European War Maryland's contribution of soldiers numbered 47,054 or 125 per cent of the United States Army. The Maryland members of the National Guard united with the 29th Division at McClellan, Alabama, and those of the National Army with the 79th Division at Camp Meade, Maryland. A summary of casualties among the Maryland members of the American Expeditionary Force gives the following figures: deceased, 62 officers and 913 men; prisoners, 54 officers and 1109 men; wounded, 129 officers and 2675 men.

Marymount College, Tarrytown-on-Hudson, New York.—This institution, conducted by the Religious of the Sacred Heart of Mary, was established in 1908 through the munificence of Mr. James Butler, K. G. C., of New York City, who also founded Marymount School for Girls. The college comprises four buildings, and has a well equipped laboratory, conservatory, and gymnasium. Three classes of students are admitted to the lectures and class work: matriculated, non-matriculated, and special two-year course students. A special secretarial course is offered, and a very distinctive feature of the institution is its Paris branch, situated in the most desirable quarter of Paris, where girls of the junior year of college may spend a year in travel and study, taking courses at the Catholic Institute, the Sorbonne, and the conservatories of music and art. Various societies and clubs are organized among the students; Apostleship of Prayer, Association of the Children of Mary, La Société de Ste Constance, English Dramatic Club, Classical Club, Debating Society, Orchestral Society, Glee Club, Riding Club, and Athletic Association. Mother M. Gerard, R. S. H. M., is the present (1922) dean of the college; the faculty number 8 religious and 5 lay professors; total registration of students, 50.

Mass, CHAPTER AND CONVENTUAL (cf. C. E., IX-790).—A conventual Mass should ordinarily be sung, but the chanting may be omitted when the bishop or his substitute says Mass pontifically in the church. It must be applied for the benefactors in general. If a canon is unable through illness to offer Mass he is not bound to give an alms to the priest who fulfills the obligation for him, unless the capitular statutes or a special custom provide otherwise.

Mass, SACRIFICE OF THE (cf. C. E., X-20).—All priests are bound to say Mass several times each year, bishops and religious superiors, however, should see that they all do so more frequently, on Sundays and other feasts of precept at least. Regarding the Mass pro populo, the Code provides that if a feast is transferred so that not only the office and Mass but the obligation of hearing Mass and of abstaining from servile work is transferred to another day, bishops, vicars capitular, and parish priests (parochial vicars representing chapters or other moral persons; also vicars œconomi), are obliged to apply Mass for their flocks on the latter day, but not on the original feast. If a bishop or parish priest has charge of more than one territory he need offer only one Mass; hitherto his obligation was multiple. The parish priest should say the Mass for the people in the parish church, unless it is necessary or advisable to say it elsewhere, and for a just cause the local ordinary may allow him to change the day of celebration. In May, 1911, the Holy See declared that in parish churches where only one Mass was said parish priests were obliged to say the Mass pro populo, according to the office of the day even on Sundays to which had been transferred the solemnization of the feasts of the Epiphany, Corpus Christi, Sts. Peter and Paul, the chief local patron and other feasts, and that they would not fulfil their obligation by the Mass of the solemnizations mentioned. If a priest is obliged to say a conventual Mass and the Mass for the people on the same day, he must celebrate and apply the former Mass personally, and the following day must offer the latter himself or get another priest to do so. Vicars Apostolic, prefects Apostolic, and quasi-parish priests are bound to do so at least on the feasts of Christmas, the Epiphany, Easter, Ascension Thursday, Pentecost, Corpus Christi, the Immaculate Conception, the Annunciation, St. Joseph, Sts. Peter and Paul, and All Saints; in other respects they are bound by the ordinary regulations in this matter.

A priest should always use the altar bread prescribed in his Rite when saying Mass. It is an impious thing, even in case of extreme necessity, to consecrate the bread without the wine, or vice-versa, or to consecrate them when not celebrating Mass. All customs to the contrary being reprobated, priests in saying Mass must observe the rubrics of the liturgical books, and beware of adding any ceremonies or prayers of their own accord; they must, moreover, use the liturgical language prescribed for their Rite.

Massa di Carrara, DIOCESE OF (MASSENSIS; cf. C. E., X-24c), in Central Italy, is suffragan of Modena. It is under the administration of the Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Bertazzoni (b. at San Rocco, 1865), who was consecrated 12 September, 1917, succeeding Rt. Rev. Bishop Marengo. The diocese comprises a Catholic population of 165,000 and includes 213 parishes, 280 churches, 4 convents for men and 12 for women, 230 secular priests and 15 regular, 6 lay brothers, 100 religious women, 3 seminaries with 56 seminarians, 1 college for men with 40 students, 4 colleges for women with 14 instructors and 150 students. The various charitable institutions include 1 female orphanage, 15 asylums for children and 2 homes, in addition to schools and oratories. A Mutual Aid Society is established among the clergy and a Catholic Young Men's Society among the laity.

Massa Maritima, DIOCESE OF (MASSANENSIS; cf. C. E., X-30a), in the province of Grosseto, Central Italy, with the united title of Populonia, suffragan of Siena. The see is filled by Rt. Rev. Giovanni Battista Boracchia, born in Santa Croce di Beverino, Italy, 1849, appointed 11 July, 1892. This diocese counts 80,000 Catholics, 29 parishes, 60 secular and 7 regular clergy, 10 seminarians, 6 Brothers, 54 Sisters and 64 churches or chapels.

Massachusetts (cf. C. E., X-24d).—The total land area of the State of Massachusetts is 8039 square miles.

POPULATION.—In 1920 the population was 3,852,356; less than 6 per cent lived in communities having a population of 2500 or less. In 1920 the ratio of decrease in the foreign-born of the population was 3.2 per cent; the number of native-born in the total population being 2,725,990, and that of the foreign-born 1,045,106. Ireland has furnished 17.0 per cent of the total of foreign-born. Canada (exclusive of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island) is second, with a population of 14.2 per cent of the total foreign-born population. In 1920 Russia supplied the largest increase in foreign born, having risen from one-half of one per cent in 1885 to 8.5 per cent. Italy's contribution in the same period rose from .76 per cent to 10.9 per cent. In the cities of Fall River, Lawrence, and New Bedford it runs over 70 per cent of the entire population. In Boston the population of foreign parentage forms 63 per cent, while at Holyoke it has risen to 66 per cent; at Worcester to 67 per cent; at Lowell it is 66 per cent; the Greeks, who formed 1.1 per cent of the foreign-born population in 1910, now form 1.9 per cent of the foreign-born population. In the city of Boston Irish parentage gives a total of 57,011 out of a census of 238,919 persons of foreign parentage, and this nationality predominates in every ward except five, where either the Russians or the Italians have the majority.

The present order of religious denominations in this State is: Catholics, 71.3 per cent, or 1,140,208; Congregationalists, 6.8 per cent, or 133,509; Baptists, 4.4 per cent, or 86,551; Methodists, 3.8 per cent, or 75,965; Episcopalians, 3.8 per cent, or 75,217.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—According to the State statistics of manufactures for 1918, in rank of industries by gross value of product, cotton goods came first, with $537,631,796; boots and shoes second, with $479,400,878; woolen goods third, with $464,067,705. According to the Federal census of manufactures for 1919 Massachusetts had 11,904 manufacturing establishments with a product valued at $4,007,452,000. The total capital devoted to production in the State was $2,964,177,000, and the average number of wage earners 716,600.

Massachusetts laws prohibit more than forty-eight hours' weekly employment for women and children, and limit the day's labor to nine hours. No woman or minor may be employed for purposes of manufacturing between five o'clock p. m. and six o'clock a. m. In 1912 the State Board of Labor and Industries was created to take over the enforcement of all the labor laws in the State. In the same year Massachusetts was a pioneer in establishing a commission to provide for the determination of minimum wages for women and children. Refusal to pay the minimum wage incurs only the penalty of publicity; this is abrogated when the prosperity of the establishment is threatened.

RECENT LEGISLATIVE CHANGES.—The new constitution submitted by the Constitutional Convention (1917-19) and constituting a re-arrangement of the previous instrument, was ratified on 4 November. It provided for direct legislation by the people by means of the initiative and referendum, gave the Legislature far-reaching powers to engage in trading, and to promote the general welfare by utilizing the natural resources of the State. It established a modern budget system and formulated the "anti-aid" amendment, refusing State money to all schools under private control. It authorized the Legislature to provide for compulsory voting at elections. Most far-reaching was its reform of the State administration. The administrative and executive branches were reorganized into not more than twenty departments, in one of which every executive and administrative office, board, and commission, except those serving directly under the governor and council, must find place. The Public Utilities Department was created in 1919 to take over the duties of two of the old boards. Massachusetts was the eleventh State to ratify the Prohibition Amendment, 2 April, 1918, and the eighth to ratify the Federal Suffrage Amendment, 25 June, 1919. The Board of Charity is now the Department of Public Welfare, and its secretary has the title of Commissioner. The annual election of the governor, to which Massachusetts clung so long, is replaced by the biennial election, although the Legislature meets every year. In 1920 Governor Calvin Coolidge, of Northampton, was elected Vice-President of the United States.

EDUCATION.—The amendment of 1855 was modified in 1918, to prohibit the appropriation of public money not only to sectarian institutions, but also to any institution not under public control. The State laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: To satisfy compulsory education laws children must attend public day schools or some other day school approved by the (town or city) school committee; school committees shall approve private schools only when the instruction in all the studies required by law is in the English language; studies taught in private schools must be those required for public schools, and instruction must equal in thoroughness and efficiency that given in public schools; private and parochial schools report annually to the State Board of Education such statistics as it shall prescribe relative to the number of pupils and instructors, courses of study, cost of tuition, and the general condition of the institution or school under their charge; school moneys shall never be appropriated to any religious sect for the maintenance exclusively of its own schools. Cities and towns containing more than 500 families must maintain high schools. Cities of 20,000 inhabitants must provide manual training, and cities of 50,000 inhabitants must maintain evening high schools. A system of continuation schools provides for the education of illiterate minors between fourteen and sixteen who are at work. There are also stringent provisions as to the employment of minors between sixteen and twenty-one, intended to prevent illiteracy. A department of University Extension under the State Board of Education organizes and maintains a comprehensive system of extension teaching. The student enrollment between January, 1916, and December, 1920, was: in courses, 43,455; correspondence courses, 13,012. The recent establishment of Smith's Agricultural School in Northampton and the Independent Industrial Shoe-making School in Lynn show the trend of education in Massachusetts.

There are (1918) 181 teachers in the normal schools of the State; in the public schools there are 630,878 pupils with an average attendance of 93 per cent. The proportion of teachers is 2089 male and 16,913 female. The total support of the public schools amounts annually to $36,614,623.

The State law relative to Bible reading in the public schools reads: A portion of the Bible shall be read daily in the public schools, without written note or oral comment; but a pupil whose parent, or guardian, informs the teacher in writing that he has conscientious scruples against it, shall not be required to read from any particular version, or to take any personal part in it. The school committee shall not purchase or use school books in the public schools calculated to favor the tenets of any particular religious sect. There are 97 high schools and academies with 10,645 pupils. The local annual tax for school support per child between the ages of five and fifteen is $43. The total valuation of all public school property is $94,608,586. There are within the State 17 colleges or universities, 5 of them devoted to the education of women. There are 3 medical schools; 2 additional law schools have been recently opened. The Massachusetts Institute of Technology is the only college receiving State and Federal subsidies. There are forty schools for the dependent and the afflicted.

For Catholic educational and religious statistics see BOSTON, ARCHDIOCESE OF; FALL RIVER, DIOCESE OF; SPRINGFIELD, DIOCESE OF.

RECENT HISTORY.—During the European War the State contributed 132,610 soldiers to the U. S. Army (353 per cent). As in the case of all New England regiments, the soldiers were stationed at Camp Devens, which was established near Ayer, Massachusetts, incorporated either in the 26th Division as were the Massachusetts national guards, or in the 76th Division as the members of the national army. The summary of casualties among the Massachusetts members of the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 206 officers, 2749 men; prisoners, 25 officers, 205 men; wounded, 456 officers, 9864 men. The Massachusetts men served valiantly at Belleau Wood, Argonne Wood, and Soissons, and were in the thick of the fight in France when the armistice came.

Matadi, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (DE MATADI), erected through a separation of the Vi-

carate Apostolic of Belgian Congo, and entrusted to the Redemptorists. By a Decree of 31 May, 1921, the boundaries were somewhat enlarged by the addition of certain territory taken from the Vicariate Apostolic of Leopoldville. The present and first prefect apostolic is Rev. Joseph Heintz, appointed 1 August, 1911. Statistics are not yet published.

Matanzas, DIOCESE OF (MATANZANSIS; cf. C. E., XVI—36a), in Cuba, suffragan of Santiago de Cuba. The first bishop of this see, Rt. Rev. Charles Warren Currier was transferred to the titular see of Hetalonia in June, 1915, and his successor was appointed in the person of Rt. Rev. Severiano Sainz y Bencano, 11 February of the same year. Born in Cuba in 1871 he served as vicar general of San Cristoforo de Laguna, and was named a prelate of the Holy See 14 July, 1914. The diocese covers an area of 5728 sq. miles and embraces a total population of 230,000. According to 1920 statistics it comprises 21 secular and 30 regular clergy, 3 schools for boys and 2 for girls.

Matera, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See ACERENZA.

Maturin, Basil—Churchman, b. in 1847 in Ireland, where his father, an Episcopalian clergyman, had a living at Grangegorm; drowned in 1915 in the "Lusitania" catastrophe. After graduating at Trinity College, Dublin, he went to England and became Mr. Jebb's curate at Peterstow. He remained there for three years and then joined the Cowley Fathers and was sent to St. Clement's in Philadelphia, Pa., where he achieved great popularity as a preacher. In 1897 he became a Catholic at Beaumont, was ordained in 1898, and was made Chaplain of the Oxford undergraduates. He is the author of several books on the spiritual life.

Mayotte, Nossi-Bé and Comores, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (INSULARUM MAJOTTAE, NOSSIBEE ET COMORE; cf. C. E., X—90d), off the coast of Africa. These islands, with the rest of the Comoro group, are entrusted to the Fathers of the Holy Ghost. At present the prefecture is administered by Rt. Rev. Auguste Fortineau, C. S. Sp., titular Bishop of Chytri and vicar apostolic of Diego-Suarez. It embraces a total population of 50,810, and by 1916 statistics (the latest available) is credited with 5000 Catholics, 6 churches and 4 missionaries.

Mazara del Vallo, DIOCESE OF (MAZARIENSIS; cf. C. E., X—94c), in the province of Trapani (Sicily), suffragan of Palermo, has a Catholic population of 300,000. The bishop, Rt. Rev. Nicola Audino, b. 15 October, 1861, at Caltanissetta, appointed to the see of Lipari, 28 November, 1893, transferred to the Diocese of Mazara del Vallo, 22 June, 1903, succeeding Mgr. Gaetano Quattrocchi, deceased. The diocese numbers 27 parishes, 6 convents for men, 300 secular priests, 30 Brothers, 80 Sisters, 1 seminary with 30 seminarians, 16 elementary schools with 16 teachers and 250 pupils, 1010 homes, 8 asylums, 14 hospitals, 2 day nurseries. Eleven associations are organized among the clergy and twenty-eight among the laity. One diocesan and fourteen parochial bulletins are published in the diocese.

Persons of importance deceased since 1910 include Can. Prof. Antonio Castiglione, orator, historian, and founder of a charitable institution, and Can. Davide Ajello, educator, and founder of the Mutual Aid Association.

A diocesan synod was held in 1908, the first diocesan Eucharistic Congress in 1910, and the second in 1921. During the World War the diocese contributed two military chaplains, Can. Dr. Giovanni Battista Quinci in the navy and Can. Dr. Benedetto Vivona in the army. Two priests, officers in the army, were decorated, 73 were non-commissioned officers or soldiers.

Meath, DIOCESE OF (MIDENSIS); in the province of Leinster, Ireland, suffragan of Armagh, with episcopal residence at Mullingar. Rt. Rev. Lawrence Gaughran was appointed to this see 16 April, 1906. Born in Lobinstown, this diocese, in 1842, he studied at Navan and Maynooth, was ordained in 1868, served as a professor at Navan, was made administrator of Mullingar in 1877, pastor of Kells and vicar forane in 1885, vicar general in 1894, and named a prelate of the Holy See 24 January, 1896. The various religious orders established in the diocese include men: Franciscans, Carmelites, Jesuits, Christian Brothers and De la Salle Brothers; women: Sisters of Loretto, Presentation Nuns and Sisters of Mercy. By the 1911 census the total population of the diocese is computed at 137,595, of whom 127,729 are Catholics. The 1922 statistics credit it with 66 parishes, 153 secular and 21 regular clergy, 144 churches, 13 convents of nuns with 124 members in the communities, and 3 monastic houses with 17 members in the communities.

Meaux, DIOCESE OF (MELDENSIS; cf. C. E., X—98b), in the department of Seine-et-Marne, France, suffragan of Paris. Rt. Rev. Emmanuel-Jules-Marie Marbeau, appointed to this see 3 February, 1910, was made a chevalier of the Legion of Honor 30 October, 1920, and an assistant at the pontifical throne 19 April, 1921, on the occasion of the golden jubilee of his ordination. He died 31 May, 1921, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Louis Gaillard, born in Beauvais, 1872, studied at St. Sulpice and was ordained in 1902, made an honorary canon and director of charities in 1907, vicar general in 1908, named a private chamberlain the same year, and again in 1915, served as a hospital chaplain from 1914 to 1918, and appointed bishop 21 November, 1921. During the World War 150 priests were mobilized from this territory and a large number of seminarians. Out of the total number 12 priests and 16 seminarians gave up their lives, 3 were decorated with the Legion d'honneur, 4 with the medaille militaire, 40 with the croix de guerre and 1 with the cross of St. George.

By 1920 statistics the diocese counts a Catholic population of 363,561, 39 parishes, 402 succursal parishes and 8 vicariates formerly supported by the state.

Mechlin, DIOCESE OF. See MALINES.

Medellin, ARCHDIOCESE OF (MEDELLENSIS; cf. C. E., X—116c), in Colombia, South America. This see is filled by Most Rev. Manuel José Cayzedo y Cuero, born in Bogota 1850, made his studies in the South American College in Rome, ordained in 1883, served as prefect of studies and vice rector of the Seminary of Bogota, appointed Bishop of Pasto 11 February, 1892, transferred to Popayan 2 December, 1895, made archbishop 14 December, 1901 and transferred 14 December, 1905. He was made an assistant at the pontifical throne 15 February, 1917. The statistics of 1920 credit the archdiocese with 363,710 Catholics, 110 secular and 15 regular clergy, 55 parishes, 75 churches or chapels and 141 Catholic schools with 18,035 pupils.

Meissen, DIOCESE OF (MISNENSIS; cf. C. E., X—148d), in Saxony, directly subject to the Holy See. This ancient see, founded in 968 and suppressed after the Reformation and changed to the Vicariate Apostolic of Saxony, was reestablished, amidst great rejoicing 24 June, 1921. The religious ceremonies were presided over by the papal nuncio, Mgr. Paelli, and on 26 June, the seven-hundredth anniversary of the foundation of the Cathedral of Bautzen, the residential city, was celebrated. Rt. Rev. Christian Schreiber, born in 1872, studied in Rome and was ordained in 1899 and later professor and rector of the Seminary of Fulda, was appointed first bishop of the newly established see, 12 August, 1921, he is the forty-second bishop since the foundation of the see. The new diocese covers an area of 6741 square miles, and embraces the old Vicariate Apostolic of Saxony and the Prefecture Apostolic of Lusactia. It includes the ancient Kingdom of Saxony and the Principality of Saxe-Altenburg. About forty-five per cent, or 236,000, of the entire population are Catholic and these are served by 100 priests. Only about a quarter of the population belong properly to Saxony, about a quarter are Germans, and the rest foreigners, with a large majority of Austrians.

Melbourne ARCHDIOCESE OF (MELBURNENSIS; cf. C. E., X—155a), in Australia, is at present under the incumbency of Rt. Rev. Daniel Mannix, b. 4 March, 1864, in the Diocese of Cloyne, studied at St. Solman Fermoy and Maynooth, where he was by turns professor, vice-president, and president from 1903 to 1912, titular chancellor in 1904, senator of the University of Ireland, prelate of the Holy See, 20 March, 1906, appointed Archbishop of Pharsalus 3 July 1912, and coadjutor of the Archbishop of Melbourne, proclaimed 2 December following, succeeded 6 May, 1917, Mgr. Thomas Carr, b. 7 January, 1840, d. 6 May, 1917, the outstanding feature of whose episcopate being the building up of the Catholic primary school system. The statistics for 1921 are: 82 districts, 198 churches, 158 secular and 48 regular clergy, 100 Brothers, 1091 nuns, 2 colleges within the University of Melbourne with 135 students, 2 training colleges with 65 students, 10 superior schools for boys, 27 for girls, with 5262 pupils, 126 parochial primary schools with 31,145 students. The total number receiving education in Catholic Colleges and schools is 37,607. Charitable institutions comprise 4 orphanages, 2 industrial schools, 1 for boys and 1 for girls, 1 reformatory for girls, 2 Magdalen Asylums for penitent women, 1 home for neglected children, 1 home for the aged poor, 1 home for women and girls out of employment, 1 foundling hospital, 1 receiving home in connection with the foundling hospital. The Catholic population is estimated at 193,924 souls. Since 1910 the archdiocese lost two clergymen of note in the persons of the Archbishop of Melbourne and the Rev. S. A. Robinson (died 6 July, 1921), who had erected a beautiful church at Camberwell as a national tribute to Our Lady of Victories. Events of importance were the opening of Newman College for men and St. Mary's Hall, college for women within the University of Melbourne in 1918. Twenty-five new parishes were instituted, and twenty new Catholic primary schools opened. During the War eleven chaplains from the archdiocese served overseas with the troops of whom one received the military cross and another the croix de guerre.

Melfi and Rapolla, DIOCESE OF (MELFIENSIS AC RAPOLLENSIS; cf. C. E., X—165a), in the province of Potenza, Southern Italy, is immediately subject to the Holy See. Rt. Rev. Alberto Costa, b. at Borgo San Donnino, 15 March, 1873, vicar general, professor at the seminary and private chamberlain 24 November, 1908, appointed 4 January, 1912, consecrated 28 April following, Bishop of Melfi and Rapolla, succeeding Mgr. Giuseppe Camassa retired and appointed Patriarch of Jerusalem.

The united sees include (1921 census) 14 parishes, 47 churches, 52 secular priests, 5 convents for women, 450 Brothers, 32 Sisters, 1 seminary with 4 seminarians, 1 asylum, 1 hospital, 1 day nursery at Rapolla; one war hospital only is supported by the Government. The Juvenile Circle is organized among the laity in Rapolla. In May, 1913, the Peace of Constantine was solemnly commemorated, and a great mission was preached by the Capuchin Fathers in 1914 and 1921. During the World War the clergy, with the co-operation of the laity, ministered to the needy spiritually and materially.

Melo, DIOCESE OF (MELENSIS; cf. C. E., X-169b), in Uruguay, suffragan of Montevideo. This see is filled by its first bishop, Rt. Rev. José Marcos Semeria, born in Tacuarembó, Uruguay, 19 March, 1855, served as vicar general and was appointed bishop 3 July, 1919. Although erected by a decree of 14 April, 1897, the see was never actually established until 1919. Its establishment was one of the conditions named upon the restoration of diplomatic relations with the Holy See.

Mende, DIOCESE OF (MINNTENSIS; cf. C. E., X-180a), in the department of Lozère, France, suffragan of Albi. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Jacques Gély, born in Rigols, France, in 1849, ordained in 1873, served as chaplain of St. Louis of France, diocesan missionary and vicar general, and appointed bishop 21 February, 1906. He is assisted by a coadjutor, Rt. Rev. Jules-Alexandre Cusin, titular Bishop of Nyssa. During the World War, 205 priests and 150 seminarians were mobilized from this territory, and of this number, 17 priests and 24 seminarians gave up their lives, 2 were decorated with the Legion d'Honneur, 93 with Croix de Guerre and 2 with the Médaille Militaire. The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with a population of 122,738, 29 first class parishes, 191 succursal parishes and 143 vicariates formerly supported by the state, and 23 chaplaincies.

Mendez y Gualaquiza, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (DE MENDEZ AC GUALAQUIZA; cf. C. E., X-183a), in the province of Oriente, Ecuador, with residence at Sig-Sig, is entrusted to the care of the Salesians. It is bounded on the north by the Apatemona River, on the south the Zamora River, on the east the Marañon and Morona rivers, on the west with the dioceses of Loja and Cuenca; the population is composed of 20,000 Jibaros and 2000 whites and Indians.

The vicar apostolic, Rt. Rev. Domingo Comin, Salesian, titular Bishop of Obba, b. 9 September, 1874, appointed at the Sacred Congregation of the Consistory of 8 March, 1920, consecrated at Cuenca 17 October following, appointed Vicar Apostolic of Mendez y Gualaquiza 5 March preceding, to succeed Mgr. Santiago Costamagua, titular Bishop of Colonia (b. 2 January, 1846; retired in 1919; d. 8 September, 1921, aged seventy-six).

There are (1922 census) 6 churches, 1 mission, 4 stations, 4 convents for men, 6 regular priests, 3 Brothers, 1 seminary with 21 seminarians.

During the administration of Mgr. Santiago Costamagua the mission was supported by the alms collected by him, and the headquarters of the mission, the seminary and the residence of the Vicar Apostolic in Cuenca were built by him. In 1918 he celebrated his jubilee, and for the occasion received a letter of praise from the Pope, dated 31 July, 1918.

Menevia, DIOCESE OF (MENEVENSIS; cf. C. E., X-187d), comprises all of Wales, except Glamorganshire, and is suffragan of Cardiff. The see is administered by Most Rev. Francis Mostyn, Archbishop of Cardiff, who had filled this see, as its first bishop until his promotion 7 March, 1921. The religious communities established in the diocese include, men: Benedictines, Franciscans, Jesuits, Oblates of Mary Immaculate and Passionists; women: Benedictines, Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, Institute of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Sisters of Charity of Our Lady of Mercy, Sisters of Charity of St. Paul, Sisters of Mercy, of the Good Saviour, of the Holy Ghost, of Sainte Marie, and Ursulines. The total Catholic population of the diocese is estimated at 9822. Latest statistics credit it with 29 secular and 62 regular clergy, 19 convents, 52 public churches or chapels, 6 private chapels with Sunday mass, 13 public elementary schools receiving Government grants, and 4 without grants, with 2159 pupils, 11 other schools with 416 boys pupils, 1 residential institution for poor children and 1 home.

Mennonites (cf. C. E., X-190b).—There are now (1922) 16 branches of this sect in the United States instead of 12 as reported in 1906. There has been an attempt in the last two decades to bring about a union of the different branches. As a result there are now two conference-groups which loosely unite the major portion of the sect. In 1918 the Mennonites reported 11 missionaries in Latin America. In Asia, Africa, and Oceania they reported in 1920, 107 missionaries, 5747 members, and 15 hospitals and dispensaries. The total number of members in the world is less than 300,000. In the United States the 16 bodies reported (1921) 887 churches, 1488 ministers, and 82,722 members. About 1500 Mennonites are now migrating to Durango, Mexico, from Manitoba and Saskatchewan, owing to differences of opinion with the Canadian Government regarding war and education.

Mercy, FATHERS OF (cf. C. E., V-794c).—At the general chapter of the society held in Rome, July, 1909, Eugene Porcile, founder-rector of Our Lady of Lourdes Parish, Brooklyn, was elected superior general. Owing to ill health he resigned in less than a year after taking office, and retired to Ciply, Belgium, where he died 2 January, 1912. He was succeeded by Peter Hattais, who was appointed vicar general of the society by the Congregation of Religious in January, 1910. At the general chapter held in Rome, July, 1919, René Delaplanche was elected superior general of the society for the regular term of six years. In 1910, at the request of Cardinal Farley, the Fathers opened the new parish of Notre Dame located at 114th Street and Morningside Drive. This magnificent church, whose style is Classical Renaissance, represents an expenditure of more than one million dollars. The first pastor of Notre Dame was Fr. Maurice Reynaud, who enlisted in the French Army at the outbreak of the World War. He was the first priest from the United States to enter the war, and the first to lay down his life in his country's cause, having fallen in battle 23 October, 1917. His remains are interred in the Military Cemetery at Montgarni. In order to further more rapidly the development of the American province, the new-elected superior general, René Delaplanche, applied for and received from Rome a rescript empowering him to establish in America a novitiate for the reception of American subjects. The novitiate is located at Oregon, N. Y., near Peekskill, on the banks of the Hudson River. In addition to conducting missions, their real end and aim, the Fathers of Mercy have care of both French and English speaking parishes in America.

Mercy, SISTERS OF, OF ST. BORRAMEO (cf. C. E., X-201b).—During the World War 45 institutions of the order were given over to the care of wounded soldiers and 137,000 soldiers were nursed in these hospitals. Owing to the privations and hardships of the war the death rate of the members doubled. Sister Salesia Backes, mother general of the order at Trier, died 10 March, 1912. Her successor Sister Eugenia Coenzler, died 14 December, 1920. The present general superior is Sister M. Aloisia Schmitz. After a postulate of eight to ten months, candidates remain at the mother-house for the canonically prescribed novitiate of one year. Temporary vows are then made for three years, after which final vows are taken. At the present time (1921) the order at Trier numbers 1400 members, 66 branch houses, 56 hospitals and orphanages, 10 boarding schools, day schools, and sewing schools. On 6 March, 1921, the constitutions of the order, with mother-house at Prague, were definitely approved.

Merida, DIOCESE OF (EMERITENSIS IN INDIIS; cf. C. E., X-202a), in Venezuela, suffragan of the Archdiocese of Venezuela. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Antonio Raimondo Silva, born in Caracas 1850, ordained in 1873 and appointed 21 May, 1894. He was named an assistant at the pontifical throne 17 January, 1916. Statistics of 1920 credit the diocese with 425,000 Catholics, 20,000 Indians and 300 Protestants, (census of 1888); 100 priests, and 150 churches or chapels.

Meschler, MORITZ, ascetical writer, b. at Brig, Switzerland, on 16 September, 1830; d. at Exaeten, Holland, on 2 December, 1912. He entered the Society of Jesus in 1850, when his native land was persecuting it. He had studied first at the Benedictine School of Engleberg, and then at a little college of his Jesuit compatriots. He studied philosophy for two years at Bonn, taught humanities to the junior scholastics; made his theology at Ratisbon, was ordained to the priesthood in 1862, and finished his theology at Maria Laach. He passed his life of sixty-two years as a Jesuit, almost exclusively among his fellow-countrymen, engaged mainly in writing. He was eighty-two years old when he published his last book, and for still another year he wrote for the "Stimmen." He never taught theology, but because of his profound studies in that particular science and his thorough knowledge of Suarez in particular, his works on the Holy Ghost, the Sacred Heart, St. Joseph, the Blessed Virgin, his life of Christ, and his "Meditations" place him in the ranks of theological specialists. He was twenty-one years master of novices, sixteen years rector of great colleges; he served three times as provincial and fourteen years as assistant general. In 1872 he was thought to be at the end of his career, but it was precisely then that his literary activity began to display itself, and books and articles came from his pen year after year.

Mesopotamia.—An independent State, under Great Britain as mandatory, which has an area of 143,259 square miles, and a population, according to the census of 1920, of 2,849,282.

RELIGION.—The following statistics are given in the 1920 census:

Vilayet	Sunni	Shi'ah	Jews	Christian	Others
Baghdad	524,414	750,421	62,565	20,771	2,133
Basra . .	42,558	721,414	10,088	2,551	8,989
Mosul . .	579,713	22,180	14,835	55,470	31,180
Total.	1,146,685	1,494,015	87,488	78,792	42,302

GOVERNMENT.—In 1920 a Council of State was formed to administer the country until the future government is decided upon. Municipalities have been established wherever possible.

EDUCATION.—Before the war the Department of Public Instruction under the Ottoman government maintained in every sanjak and caza, a primary school, in which Turkish and Arabic were taught free of charge. The various religions had their own schools in Baghdad and Basra. In 1906 the German consul at Baghdad offered to subsidize the Carmelite schools in the country if they would undertake to teach German. The French Dominicans and nuns at Mossul conducted over a dozen schools in the neighborhood and carried on educational work among the Chaldeans. The people as a whole are very illiterate and education is the crying need of the country. Since their occupation, the British have opened up about 90 schools.

ECONOMICS.—Mesopotamia is a land of great potentialities, especially in the matter of oil deposits. In June, 1919, the ancient canal Saqlawiyah, near Fellujah, was formally reopened, and the waters of the Euphrates allowed to pass through. Before the war the only railway in Mesopotamia was the small section of the Baghdad Railway running from Baghdad north to Samarra (80 miles), which was built by the Germans. During the war several lines were built for military purposes (1100 miles) On 15 January the line running from Bassorah to Baghdad was opened to traffic. A railway from Teheran to Baghdad is under consideration. The total commerce in 1919 amounted to $95,453,362, of which the total exports were $35,751,342; the imports, $59,702,020. Cotton constituted about 50 per cent of the imports.

RECENT HISTORY.—Mesopotamia belonged to the Turkish empire until the World War when it was conquered by Indian and British troops, who occupied Basra on 22 November, 1914, and Baghdad on 11 March, 1917. In the Treaty of Versailles (1919) Mesopotamia is recognised as an independent state, to be placed under mandatory power. The Supreme Council awarded the mandate to Great Britain.

Messina, ARCHDIOCESE OF (MESSANENSIS; cf. C. E., X-216c), in Sicily, also bears the title of the Archimandrite of San Salvatore (Sanctissimi Salvatore Messanæ.) The present incumbent is Most Rev. Letterio d'Arrigo Ramondini, born in Messina, 15 November, 1849, appointed 24 March 1898. He is assisted by a coadjutor, Most Rev. Angelo Paino, promoted to the titular see of Antinice and named coadjutor 10 January, 1921. This diocese has a Catholic population of 313,932, and comprises 139 parishes, 300 priests and 540 churches or chapels. The Archimandrite of San Salvatore of Messina has 9 parishes, 1 vicar, 6 vicarial chapels, 58 priests, 59 churches or chapels and a Catholic population of 22,000, (1920 statistics).

Methodism, following the general Protestant trend, has in recent years agitated the question of union, but without definite results. Negotiations for the union of the Methodists, Congregationalists, and Presbyterians in Canada were in 1917 postponed until the second year after the war. No definite action has yet (1922) been taken. Efforts to unite the Methodists and the United Brethren came to naught and negotiations for the proposed union of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, were finally abandoned in 1918, the chief obstacle being the status of the colored Methodists. The proposals of the Lambeth Conference of 1920 on church union were definitely rejected by the Methodists in 1922, they refusing to submit to reordination as a condition of reunion. The proposal to extend laity rights to women has been generally accepted, the Canadian General Conference (1918) being the first to grant such rights, with the proviso that women be not considered as eligible for the ministry. Despite the general trend in Methodism on this point, a radical departure is reported on the part of the Northeastern Oklahoma Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which in 1922 is declared to have granted a license to preach to a thirteen-year-old girl.

A summary of the foreign missionary work of all Methodist bodies in 1916 showed 34 countries occupied; 552 stations; 1937 American missionaries; 14,134 native helpers; 3316 churches; 518,000 members; 3342 schools; 118,631 pupils; 120 hospitals, dispensaries, and orphanages. Methodist propaganda has of late been particularly aggressive in the city of Rome, and the late Pope Benedict XV called on the Knights of Columbus and the Paulists of America to help counteract it. The domestic missions in the United States reported for all Methodist bodies in 1916, 4576 missionary workers, 258 colleges and 89,134 students, and 194 hospitals, orphanages, and homes for the aged, of which about 45 were hospitals. Among the better known educational institutions controlled by the Methodists are Boston University, Cornell College, De Pauw University, Dickinson College, Goucher College, and Northwestern University. An important factor in the general work of the Methodist Episcopal Church is the Deaconess movement, which had its origin in 1837 in connection with the Chicago Training School for Missions. There were in 1916 about 200 deaconess institutions of various kinds in the United States and foreign countries, the general purpose being to care for the sick and unfortunate. There were in 1916 in the United States 922 licensed deaconesses, 130 probationers, and 546 associate workers; in Europe, 668 deaconesses; there were 600 nurses in Germany and Austria-Hungary (1916), and deaconess hospitals in Berlin, Hamburg, Frankfurt, and Zurich. The Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church, with headquarters in Washington, D.C., played a prominent part in obtaining the passage of the 18th amendment (prohibition) to the constitution of the United States.

The official list of Methodist bodies includes, besides those enumerated in the article Methodism (1) the Colored Methodist Protestant Church, organized along the same lines as the Methodist Protestant Church, by Negro Methodist churches in Maryland and adjoining states in 1840; (2) the African American Methodist Episcopal Church, organized in Baltimore in 1873, as a "reformed Methodism" and reported in the government statistics for the first time in 1916; (3) the Reformed Methodist Union, Episcopal Church, a colored organization formed in 1885 as the Independent Methodist Church, the present name being adopted in 1896. Since 1916 it is in full accord with the Methodist Episcopal Church in doctrine and polity. The Zion Union Apostolic Church is officially the Reformed Zion Union Apostolic Church. The Evangelist Missionary Church has not reported any statistics since 1890 and has in all probability disappeared. In 1921, all Methodist bodies in the United States reported 67,493 churches, 46,364 ministers, 7,867,863 members (7,797,991 in 1922). Five bodies of Methodists reported 836,113 members in Great Britain in 1915; the latest figures for Ireland (1911) claim 62,382; South Africa (1918), 91,199 Europeans and 456,018 non-Europeans; Australia, 547,800; Canada and Newfoundland, 1,148,000. It is to be noted that for Ireland and for the British colonies the above figures are for constituents (communicants and their families), while in all other cases communicants only are listed (see PROTESTANTISM). The total of Methodist communicants in the world is between nine and ten million. The total Methodist constituency in the world is placed by some writers as high as 35,000,000. In all probability it is between 25,000,000 and 30,000,000.

Mets. DIOCESE OF (METENSIS; cf. C. E., X—247a), in Lorraine, France, is immediately subject to the Holy See, and comprises a Catholic population of 540,000 French and 44,000 Germans. The bishop, Rt. Rev. Jean-Baptiste Felt, b. 6 April, 1863, ordained in 1886, doctor of canon law and theology, author of a manual, vicar at St. Martin, professor and superior of the Upper Seminary, vicar general and archdeacon in 1906, prelate to the pontifical throne, nominated by the French Government 24 April, 1919, appointed by the Pope 1 August, consecrated 29 September, 1919, succeeding Mgr. Willibrod Benzler, retired in 1919, with the title of Archbishop of Attalia, died 16 April, 1921.

The diocesan statistics for 1922 are: 646 parishes, 726 churches, 836 secular and 46 regular clergy, 3 monasteries for men, 2 for women, 1 abbey for women, 4 convents for men, 21 for women, 45 Brothers, 2786 nuns in the various houses. Besides the religious houses existing in the diocese in 1910, there are now: the Fathers of the Assumption with 1 house, Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny, 1 house; Sisters of Perpetual Adoration (at Biding), 1 house; Sisters of the Faith (at Herrenwald), 1 house; 3 seminaries (1 upper and 2 lower), with 494 seminarians, 1 College for boys with 22 teachers and 400 boys, 10 high schools, 1 normal school with 50 students, about 1500 elementary schools (public and private), 2 lunatic asylums and 1 for the aged, and 17 hospitals. The ministry of priests is unrestricted in public institutions. All public primary schools receive Government aid. Four associations are organized among the clergy: The Apostolic Union, Priest Adorers, Priests of St. Francis de Sales, and the Retreat Fund; among the laity: "Action populaire catholique lorraine," French Women's Patriotic League, Societies for young people and Federation of Works of Charity. The periodicals published are: in French "Le Lorrain," "Le Courrier de Mets," "Le Courrier de la Sarre"; in German: "Die Lothringer Volkszeitung," "Lothr. Volksblatt."

Mexico. (cf. C. E., X—250b).—With the exception of one term (1880-1884), Porfirio Diaz filled the office of President from 1877 to 1911, the law against re-elections being repealed in 1887. Diaz aimed from the first at setting up an efficient dictatorship under which economic development was possible and which would gain the good opinion of foreign statesmen and capitalists. To this end he reorganized the "guardias rurales," a force of mounted police to deal with brigandage. He changed none of the laws against the church; neither did he enforce them. Religious orders were quietly permitted to resume their missionary activities. Supposed to be a constitutional president, Diaz headed a government more autocratic than Russia. Herein lay the seed of the disaster that overwhelmed Mexico after his departure, for he had trained no one for the task he might lay down. He maintained close relations with the state governors and through them controlled the jefes politicos who administered the districts. No outside interference was possible as the elections were entirely in the hands of the administrative hierarchy. This together with the ever present perplexing land question was the cause of the discontent that led to Diaz's overthrow. Under the law of Disamortization (1856), the common lands were enclosed at the same time that the Church lands were sold. The failure of the Indians to maintain their holdings led to the concentration of large areas in the hands of a few. According to the Mexican census of 1910, seven thousand families of Spanish creole descent owned nearly all the fertile soil of Mexico, each feudal estate averaging over 100 square miles. The Terrazas estate in Chihuahua contained 13,000,000 acres, an area as large as Holland and Belgium combined. Insurgency soon spread all over Mexico. To save the country from further bloodshed, Diaz resigned and a provisional government was formed under Señor de la Barra. On 2 October, 1911, Francisco I. Madero was unanimously elected president, with Suarez as vice-president. The new Government failed utterly to put an end to the disorder which had broken out everywhere on the fall of Diaz. Zapata and his Indians revolted in Morelos. General Bernardo Reyes attempted an unsuccessful insurrection. General Pascual Orozco rebelled and captured Juarez. General Felix Diaz took Vera Cruz, but was captured and imprisoned. General Mondragon, backed by his own troops and students of the Military Training School at Tlapam, rose against the Government 9 February, 1913, liberated General Reyes and General Felix Diaz, and the three marched to the capital, where Reyes was killed in an attack on the National Palace. In a meeting arranged by the mediation of H. Lane Wilson, United States Minister, Madero was forced to resign and Huerta became provisional president of Mexico until the formal election of Diaz. On 23 February President Madero, his brother Gustavo, and Vice-president Suarez were murdered. Felix Diaz escaped to Europe. The new dictator, Huerta, was recognized by Congress and by the States, except along the frontier. Here the Constitutionalists, Gonzalez, Maytorena, and Carranza refused to compromise or to recognize the new Government. It is doubtful whether their hesitation would have had any important result, had not Huerta driven them to desperation by the murder of Gonzalez who had withdrawn his opposition. Maytorena, thereupon, fled to the United States and Carranza launched his revolution in 1913. Villa, a former bandit, who had a genius for military leadership, joined the revolution, the progress of which was largely due to the favorable attitude of the United States which refused to recognize Huerta on account of the murder of the Maderos and threw its strength into the rebellion. A division among the revolutionists, however, prevented them from getting full control of the country, for Villa turned against Carranza.

The programme of the Constitutionalists was of an extreme revolutionary nature. It included the ownership and control of land and natural resources, the solution of the land question by the division of large estates, and by the return to the villages of all common lands confiscated or sold. Moreover, the Constitutionalists felt that in order to make Mexico a true democracy it was necessary that the influence of the Church should be utterly and finally suppressed. The end was to be attained by the prohibition of all religious education, whether public or private, the confiscation of Church property, and strict Government supervision of the clergy. The action of the Constitutionalists went far beyond this official programme and the victory of the revolution was followed by a campaign of extermination against the Church, the higher clergy being driven out of the country, the churches in several States being closed, and many members of the clergy and religious orders being executed or imprisoned. During the confused period of civil war after 1914 several religious uprisings broke out in districts where the anti-clerical measures were most severe, especially in Michoacan. The rising in Oaxaca was also partly of religious origin. The fall of Huerta was hastened by the action of the United States in raising the embargo on the export of arms in favor of the Constitutionalists only and by the occupation of Vera Cruz by an American armed force on 21 April, 1914. At this juncture Argentine, Brazil, and Chile, known as the A. B. C. powers, offered to serve as mediators and sent their diplomatic representatives to Niagara Falls, but failed to obtain any results. In the meantime Obregon entered Guadalajara, Villa, the noted bandit leader, took Zacatecas with great slaughter, while Monterey and Saltillo fell into the hands of the Constitutionalists. The capture of Tampico on 13 May deprived Huerta of his base in the north and his chief remaining source of revenue. A new war, however, broke out among the revolutionists. Maytorena, supported by the Yaqui Indians, rose against Carranza, and Villa allied himself with Maytorena. A convention at Aguascalientes demanded the resignation of Carranza and declared Eulalio Gutierrez provisional president. Villa and Zapata occupied Mexico City in his name. Gutierrez was, however, disowned by the convention, which ruled the city until its occupation by Obregon, the Carranza commander. He, in turn, was forced to retreat by the incoming Zapatist force on 10 March, and Gonzalez was now recognized as President. The north was in the hands of the Constitutionalists. The siege of the Carranzist forces in Sonora called forth the vigorous protests of the United States and the concentration of the United States troops along the frontier. The climax came when an armed band of Villistas attacked Columbus, New Mexico, killing eight soldiers and nine civilians. The United States Government acted at once, sending 12,000 soldiers under General Pershing to "take Villa dead or alive." Further trouble was caused when President Wilson of the United States demanded the release of seventeen United States prisoners taken in a collision between the Carranzist troops and a body of negro cavalry. The new Government of Mexico, however, was gradually recognized by the different powers (the South American Republics in October, 1915, Austria-Hungary, 21 October; Germany, 10 November; France, Great Britain, Italy, and Russia, 4 December). In November, 1916, a national convention met at Queretaro to consider an amendment to the Constitution and on 31 January, 1917, it was signed. In March, 1917, Carranza was elected president. The new Government was doomed like the rest, for in another revolution (1920), centering at Sonora, Carranza was forced to flee the capital, and de la Huerta became provisional president. Carranza was murdered later by his own troops. In September, 1920, Alvaro Obregon was elected.

The new Constitution, while declaring "that Congress shall not enact any law establishing or forbidding any religion whatsoever," not only eliminates freedom of worship but makes provisions which tend to the destruction of religion itself. This is apparent from article 130, which runs as follows: (1) The Federal authorities shall have exclusive power to exercise in matters of religious worship and outward ecclesiastical forms, such intervention as by law authorized. (2) Marriage is a civil contract. (3) The law recognizes no corporate existence of the religious associations known as churches. (4) The ministers of religious sects shall be considered as persons exercising a profession and shall be directly subject to the laws enacted on the subject. (5) The State legislatures shall have the exclusive power of determining the maximum number of ministers of religious sects according to the needs of the locality. (6) Ministers of religious sect shall not any any public gathering or private meeting criticize the fundamental laws of the country, the authorities in particular, or the government in general; they shall have no vote, either directly or indirectly, nor shall they be allowed to assemble for political purposes. (7) Before consecrating new temples of worship to public use permission must be obtained from the Department of the Interior. (8) The caretaker of each place of worship, together with ten other citizens of the place shall promptly advise the authorities of the minister appointed or of any change of ministers. (9) Under no conditions shall studies carried on in ecclesiastical institutions be ratified or be granted any other dispensation or privilege which shall have for its purpose the ratification of the said studies in official institutions. (10) Periodical religious publications shall not comment on any political affairs of the nation, nor publish any information regarding the act of the authorities of the country or of private individuals in public life. (11) Every kind of political association whose name shall bear any word or any indication relating to any religious belief is forbidden. (12) No minister of any religious sect may inherit on his own behalf or by means of a trustee any real property occupied by any association for religious or charitable purposes. (13) Any real and personal property pertaining to the clergy or to religious institutions shall be governed in conformity to article 27 of this constitution. (Article 27, clause 2 reads: The religious associations known as churches irrespective of creed shall in no case have legal capacity to acquire, own, or administer real property or loans made on such property. All such real property shall vest in the nation and any one shall have the right to denounce property so held. Presumptive proof shall be sufficient to declare the denunciation well founded. Places of public worship are the property of the nation as represented by the Federal government which shall determine which of them may continue to be devoted to their present purposes. Episcopal residences, rectories, seminaries, orphan asylums, collegiate establishments of religious associations and convents or any other buildings built or designed for the administration, propaganda, or teaching of the tenets of any religious sect, shall forthwith vest as of full right directly in the nation to be used exclusively for the public services of the Federation or of the States within their respective jurisdiction. All places of public worship which shall be late erected shall be the property of the nation.) (14) No trial by jury shall ever be granted for the infraction of any of the preceding provisions. Back of the refusal of the United States to recognize the present government of Mexico is the discriminating Clause 5 of Article 27 which reads as follows: "Only Mexicans by birth or naturalization have the right to acquire ownership in lands, waters and their appurtenances, or to obtain concessions to develop mines or waters in Mexico. The nation may grant the same right to foreigners, provided they agree to be Mexicans and not invoke the protection of their governments under penalty of forfeiture. Within a zone of 100 kilometers from the frontiers and 50 kilometers from the coast, no foreigner shall acquire direct ownership of lands and waters. The United States refused to consider this as annulling its obligation to protect its citizens.

Mexico, ARCHDIOCESE OF (MEXICANENSIS; cf. C. E., X—269c), a metropolitan see of Mexico, comprising the city and state of the same name. It is filled by Most Rev. José Mora y del Rio, born in Pajacuarán, Mexico, 1854, studied at Zamora and the South American College in Rome, ordained in 1879, served as director of a number of Mexican colleges and secretary to the archbishop, appointed first bishop of Tehuantepec 19 January, 1893, transferred to Tulancingo 12 September, 1901, again transferred to Leon 15 September, 1907, and promoted to Mexico 2 December, 1908. He was named an assistant at the pontifical throne 6 October, 1910, and by a decree of the consistory, the following November he was made president of the Mexican episcopate. He is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Maximino Ruiz, whose titular see is Derbe. An important event has taken place in Mexico in the restoration of the Apostolic Delegation which since the beginning of the more violent political troubles has been in the hands of the apostolic delegates at Washington. Mgr. Filipe was appointed titular Archbishop of Sardica and named delegate, 22 July, 1921. Another important development in the archdiocese has been the organization of a Confederation of Catholic Associations, on the lines of the National Catholic Welfare Council of the United States; the official organ of this association is "The Bond of Union." On 19 March, 1919, the archbishop, separated from his flock, and exiled from his country, celebrated the silver jubilee of his episcopate, with a few intimate friends, at the mother-house of the Sons of the Sacred Heart, at San Antonio, Texas. According to 1920 statistics the archdiocese counts a Catholic population of 1,839,250; 620 secular and 218 regular clergy, 230 parishes and 1000 churches and chapels.

Michigan.—The total land area of the State of Michigan is 57,980 square miles. In 1920 the population was 3,663,412, an increase of 30.5 per cent over that of 1910 (2,810,173). The average number of inhabitants to the square mile was 63.8, as against 48.9 in 1910. Of the population 61 per cent was urban.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—The agricultural products for the year 1920 included 64,350,000 bushels of corn, 20,234,000 bushels of wheat, 36,875,000 bushels of oats. The value of wool was $26,243,000. The state had 2,224,000 sheep, 640,000 horses, 1,648,000 neat cattle, and 1,450,000 swine. In 1918 the fish catch in the Great Lakes was worth $1,430,322. The manufacturing statistics of Michigan are as follows: establishments, 8285; capital, $2,337,003,000; persons engaged in manufacture, 547,925; value of products, $3,447,984,000. Michigan manufactures about 75 per cent of the entire output of motor vehicles in this country. The value of the output of the mines was $199,264,604 for the year 1918. In 1919 there were in the state 8982 miles of railway and 947 miles of electric railway; during the year, 50,089,000 net tons with 68,235,542 short tons of freight passed through the St. Mary's Canal, situated at Sault Ste Marie.

EDUCATION.—There are 23,051 teachers in the public schools and 683,373 pupils; the total appropriation from all sources in the last fiscal year was $32,141,150. All children are compelled by law to attend some school at least five months in the year, unless shown to be properly taught at home.

The state laws governing public and private schools are as follows: The superintendent of public instruction has supervision of all the private, denominational and parochial schools of the State. The sanitary conditions of such schools, the courses of study therein, and the qualifications of the teachers thereof must be of the same standard as provided by the general school laws of the State. No person can teach in any of the regular or elementary grades in any private, denominational, or parochial school without a certificate qualifying him or her to teach in like grades of the public schools of the State. No money can be appropriated or drawn from the treasury for the benefit of any religious sect or society, theological or religious seminary, nor can property belonging to the State be appropriated for any such purpose. Incorporated academies or other literary institutions must annually report to the State Superintendent property, income, enrollment, course of studies, textbooks, etc. In 1920 great bitterness arose over a proposed amendment to the State Constitution, designed to compel all children below eighth grade to attend the public schools. It was defeated by a 2 to 1 vote. The proposal was bitterly fought by the private school interests and those religious denominations who maintain schools of their own, as well as by many who oppose religious strife. Although the State attorney-general declared the amendment unconstitutional, the supreme court decided that it should be submitted to the people.

The University of Michigan in 1919 had 555 instructors, and 8857 enrolled students, the State Agricultural College had 153 instructors and 1753 students, and is supported by interest on endowment fund, one-fiftieth of a mill tax and appropriations from the United States Treasury and State Legislature, students' fees, and receipts for produce. The College of Mines had 27 instructors and 140 students. The four normal schools in the state employ 266 instructors and have an average of 340 pupils. The School for the Blind has 18 instructors and about 165 pupils; the Employment Institute, 8 instructors and 90 pupils, the State Public School, 8 teachers, 9 cottage managers, and about 632 inmates. A State Training School for Women was established in 1917.

RELIGION.—The Federal Religious Census of 1916, published in 1918, gives the following statistics: Catholics, 1,171,381; Methodist Episcopalians, 287,931; Episcopalians, 40,726; Baptists, 170,452; Presbyterians, 114,857; Disciples of Christ, 116,639; Lutherans, 187,746; Jews, 33,377; Congregationalists, 57,926.

RECENT LEGISLATIVE CHANGES.—These include a new State Constitution, adopted 3 November, 1908. It has been amended several times to give the people the initiative and referendum on legislative matters and constitutional amendments, and authority to recall elective officers, except judges. In 1912 the Presidential Primary Bill was passed, as well as an Employer's Liability Bill. On 1 May, 1918, state-wide prohibition went into effect by means of an amendment to the State Constitution. In 1919 the Legislature permitted religious societies to receive gifts, although the real estate received must be sold if unused for ten years; prohibited sex discrimination in payment of wages, and provided for the primary election of township officials. The following were created in that year: State Police, Public Utilities Commission, State Athletic Board of Control, Board of Examiners of Architects, Surveyors, and Engineers, an Industrial Commission, and a Commission to investigate the disputed boundary between Wisconsin and Michigan. Both Houses, without a single dissenting vote, ratified the Federal Woman Suffrage Act on 10 June, 1919, and the Federal Amendment on 2 January, 1919. In that year also, boxing was prohibited on Sunday, and on Saturday if continued into Sunday.

HISTORY.—On 22 December, 1917, five Germans were convicted and sentenced in the United States District Court at Detroit, on indictments for inaugurating in Michigan military enterprises against Canada while the United States was still at peace with Germany. The leader was connected with attempts to blow up the Welland Canal and other structures of military importance. In 1918 the trial of United States Senator Newberry for exceeding the expenditure limit in securing his nomination and election roused a great deal of interest. It culminated in his conviction and sentence to two years in Leavenworth Penitentiary. The case was appealed. On 12 January, 1921, the Senate voted 46 to 41 to seat him but expressed their disapproval of his election expenditures.

During the European War Michigan sent into the United States Army 135,465 soldiers, or 3.61 per cent of the force. The Michigan members of the national guard formed a part of the 32d Division at MacArthur, Texas, and those of the national army joined the 85th Division at Custer, Michigan. The summary of casualties of the Michigan members of the American Expeditionary Force was as follows: deceased, 124 officers, 2627 men; prisoners, 6 officers, 84 men; wounded, 251 officers, 7277 men.

MICHOCAN (OR MECHOACAN), ARCHDIOCESE OF (MICHOCANENSIS; cf. C. E., X—282c), in Mexico, is a metropolitan, with residence at Morelia. The Most Rev. Leopold Ruiz Flores, b. 13 November, 1865, studied in Mexico, later at the South American College, Rome, doctor of theology, philosophy, and canon law in 1887, ordained 17 March, 1888, appointed 1 October, 1900, consecrated 27 December following, promoted as Archbishop of Linares, 14 September, 1907, transferred to Michoacan at the consistory of 27 November, 1911, to succeed Most Rev. Antinogenes Silva (b. 26 August, 1848; d. 26 February, 1911). In 1914 Mgr. Ruiz y Flores went into exile disguised as a drover. The Revolutionists set a price upon his head, but in 1919 he safely returned to his see.

Statistics of the Archdiocese for 1922 give: 63 parishes, 400 churches, 57 succursal parishes, 5 chaplaincies, 246 secular and 91 regular clergy, 1 seminary with 299 seminarians, 1 home, 2 asylums, 2 hospitals. No priests are admitted in public institutions; none of the schools or institutions receive Government grants. Associations organized among the laity are: the Knights of Columbus, the Association of the Fathers of Families, the Catholic Workers, the Catholic Association of Mexican Youth, the Society of Catholic Workmen. Two weeklies are published. The Catholic population is estimated at 900,000, of Spanish and Indian descent.

Events of importance since 1914 are: the persecution against the Church, confiscation of churches, colleges, schools; religious instruction prohibited in private schools and the clergy forbidden to direct educational institutions; 30 priests exiled, the exile of the priests of Morelia being prevented because of the protest of the people en masse; the 2 most ancient churches of Morelia, built in 1541, were demolished, the stones being employed to macadamize the streets. The Socialists penetrated the cathedral and broke with their fists the statue of Our Lady of Guadalupe; the Catholic Association of Mexican Youth was severely persecuted, of whom about ten were imprisoned each day. On 20 June, 1920, the Archdiocese of Michoacan ceded a large portion of its territory for the formation of the Diocese of Tacambaro, with Rt. Rev. Leopoldo Lara as its first bishop.

Middle Ages.—MEANING OF NAME.—By the "Middle Ages" there is now commonly understood the period intervening between antiquity and modern times, or between the Fall of the Roman Empire of the West in 476 and the capture of Constantinople by the Turks in 1453. Thus the Middle Ages cover the period of about one thousand years between the Greco-Roman civilization and the wider diffusion of classical learning at the time of the Renaissance. The very appellation Middle Ages seems to imply that they are an intermediary period between two civilizations, a break in the course of civilization, a time of darkness separating the light of the Greco-Roman world from the light of the modern world. A brief examination into the origin of the term and a summary statement of the nature and the achievements of the Middle Ages will dispel this colossal error. Our authority in this treatment will be Godfrey Kurth, the eminent Belgian historian.

ORIGIN OF THE TERM.—Originally, the term "Middle Age" was used philologically. In studying the development of the Latin tongue from its origin down to their own time, the philologists had noted its several epochs and had given each epoch a name. The first epoch was that of the classical Latin, which witnessed the birth of the masterpieces of Roman literature. It extended from the beginning of the Roman State down to the reign of Constantine the Great (312-337). The second epoch was that of the barbarian Latin, when the Latin language was inherited and disfigured by the invading Germanic tribes. It lasted down to the reign of Charlemagne (742-814). The third period of Latinity began at the death of Charlemagne and witnessed the birth of the Italian, Spanish, French, and the other neo-Latin tongues. The three periods of Latinity were called respectively the High, the Middle, and the Low Age. Later the Humanists extended the limits first assigned to the "Middle Age" of Latinity. They began to look upon their own time as a fourth and new age of Latinity. They loved to think that they had restored the Latin tongue to its pristine purity, and they saw in the period beginning with the sixteenth century a new period of Latinity. Thenceforth they united the second and third periods, both of which had marked the decline of the Latin tongue, and called them the middle period. Thus they extended the Middle Age of the Latin language to a period stretching from the decline of the Roman Empire under Constantine the Great to the Renaissance. Thus the Middle Age of Latinity became synonymous with declining Latinity. It was used in this sense by the Humanists, also by the French historian and philologist Ducange (1610-1688) when he gave to his celebrated dictionary the title of "Glossarium Mediæ et Infimæ Latinitatis."

The historians borrowed the term "Middle Age" from the philologists, and transferred it to the domain of historiography. They adopted both the name and period which it covered, and designated that historical and political period as the Middle Ages, and from the standpoint of civilization marked as blank the period which the philologists had marked blank from the standpoint of Latinity. The unfortunate exchange of terms brought about the exchange of viewpoints and confusion of ideas resulted from the confusion of words.

The term "Middle Ages" was used in this, its present sense, as early as 1639, by Rausin of Liège in his "Leodium" (p. 103). Christopher Keller followed in the footsteps of Rausin in "Historia mediæ ævi a temporibus Constantini Magni ad Constantinopolim a Turcis captam deducta," published in Jena, 1688. Loescher introduced the word into a German work published in the year 1725. Since then the expression has been in constant use in pedagogical works, and gradually found its way into literary productions. But not before the second half of the eighteenth century does the term appear in literary works, and the great writers of that epoch in France as well as in Germany use it seldom and with hesitancy. The French Academy, the final authority in matters pertaining to the French language, did not admit the term into the official repertoire of the language until the publication of the sixth edition of its dictionary, in 1835. It is not unlikely, as Kurth predicts, that future lexicographers will discard the term "Middle Ages."

NATURE AND ACHIEVEMENTS.—Not only was the introduction of the philological term "Middle Ages" into historiography unwarranted, but the implication that it is an appropriate name for an intermediary period is historically false. Far from being intermediary between the ancient and modern civilizations, the Middle Ages are the beginning of modern civilization, which began when the pagan civilization of Rome collapsed. On the ruins of pagan civilization new societies were built which were Christian in principle. These societies still stand on their original foundation, Christian morality. They were begun during the centuries of the Middle Ages and continued to flourish during subsequent centuries. We are the heirs of the Middle Ages, not, as some would have it, the heirs of Greece and Rome. Whatever of institutions and ideas is lasting in modern society has its roots deep in the fertile soil of the first Christian centuries.

The achievements of the Middle Ages are known to students of history. The Middle Ages gradually put an end to ancient slavery and called all men to freedom. Under the inspiration of the Church of the Middle Ages governments and individuals emancipated their slaves, and the laws of Christian rulers encouraged and favored the suppression of slavery. To loosen link by link the chain of slavery was the work of centuries, which finally brought about the complete and universal emancipation of the slave. The Middle Ages rent the imperial unity of the world and substituted the modern nationalities. The Middle Ages created the modern languages and thereby gradually eliminated the Latin. These are the languages which we speak to-day and which hold unprecedented eminence in the world of thought. The Middle Ages accepted the Christian Faith with love, and defended it vigorously and constantly, with word, pen, and sword. The Middle Ages made the papacy the most respected institution of the world, and it was the papacy that saved civilization "by defending, in the name of religion, the natural rights against the usurpations of the State, of the rulers, and even against the people itself. It was the papacy that knew how to conciliate the weak with the powerful by recommending everywhere and always justice, peace, respect for duty, and assumed obligations; and it was in this way that the papacy laid the cornerstone of international law, by standing forth as a bulwark against the pretensions and passions of brutal force" (Guizot, "L'Eglise et la Société," 1861).

The Middle Ages enforced the distinction between the temporal and the spiritual, the great principle which flows from the Gospel and which in the past has renovated and to-day upholds the political and social spirit of the civilized world. The Middle Ages founded the constitutional monarchy and representative government, both unknown to antiquity, but which are indispensable conditions for the political existence of modern nations. Under the shelter of these public liberties, which were guaranteed by covenant between prince and subject, the Middle Ages gave impetus to all forms of association, from the municipal corporation down to the labor union, and bequeathed to us models to which, in spite of the storms of revolution, humanity unceasingly turns for imitation. The art of the Middle Ages has become our art. The name Gothic, which at first was applied to the architecture of the Middle Ages as a term of reproach, is now bestowed on our art as a title of glory, and to-day we draw inspiration from the monuments of the Middle Ages. The poets of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries gloried in their ignorance of the national poetry of the Middle Ages; we love it, we admire it, we have given it our undying affection.

In art and poetry we shall not have surpassed the Middle Ages until we shall have created a more beautiful cathedral than that of Reims, painted a more inspiring canvas than the Van Eycks' Adoration of the Lamb, and written a poem more powerful than Dante's "Divina Commedia."

All that we have—our religion and our political ideas, our nationality and our language, our æsthetics and our social economy—all these connect us with the Middle Ages and separate us from antiquity. We are the heirs of the Middle Ages; we continue their work. The Middle Ages are the period of our younger years. They do not represent the ideal perfection of society, they had defects peculiar to childhood. Without desiring a return to the conditions then prevailing, we prize the Middle Ages as the time of our vigorous youth, a youth freely and proudly developed in the light and sunshine of the Gospel. When we pride ourselves on the present status of our civilization we honor the vigorous red blood of our ancestors. From its birth Christian society has marched on its checkered course towards the realization of its sublime ideal. The centuries of the Middle Ages began the work, the modern centuries followed, and our age, heir of both, continues the task and will hand down the work unfinished to future centuries.

Middlesbrough, DIOCESE OF (MEDIORBURGENSIS; cf. C. E., X—286a), comprises the North and East Ridings of York County, England, and the city of York north of the Ouse. The see is suffragan of Liverpool and is at present filled by Rt. Rev. Richard Lacy, born in Navan, England, in 1841, ordained in 1867 and appointed 12 September, 1879. He is the first bishop of the diocese, and was named an assistant at the pontifical throne 20 December, 1917. The religious orders of men established in the diocese include: Benedictines, Canons Regular of the Lateran, Hospitallers of St. John of God, Jesuits, Marists, and Brothers of the Christian Schools; women: Sisters of the Assumption, Dominicans, Canonesses Regular of St. Augustine, Faithful Companions of Jesus, Ladies of Mary, Poor Clares, Poor Sisters of Nazareth, Serietes, Sisters of Charity, Sisters of Charity of St.

Paul, Sisters of Mercy, Sisters of the Presentation, Sisters of Charity of Notre Dame, and Sisters of Misericorde. The latest statistics (1922) credit the diocese with 77 secular and 43 regular clergy, 25 convents, 73 churches, 33 private chapels having Sunday Mass, 43 elementary schools receiving Government grants and 2 without grants, with 11,676 pupils, 11 other schools teaching 407 boys, 2 hospitals and 5 residential institutions for poor children. The Catholic population is estimated at 46,920.

Milan, ARCHDIOCESE OF (MEDIOLANENSIS; cf. C. E., X—298d), in Lombardy, Northern Italy. The city of Milan, situated on the Olona river, is Italy's industrial center and, next to Naples, the largest city, with a population of 663,000 in 1915. The diocese is the largest in Italy and the most important. The distinguished and universally beloved Cardinal Archbishop Andrea Ferrari (q. v.) died 2 February, 1921, and on 13 June, 1921, Mgr. Achille Ratti, titular Archbishop of Adana, was created cardinal priest and named Archbishop of Milan; on 6 February, 1922, he was elected Pope, taking the name of Pius XI. The Holy Father lost no time in providing his city of Milan with a pastor, Mgr. Eugenio Tosi, of the Oblates of St. Charles, born in Busto Arsizio, diocese of Milan, 6 May, 1863, elected bishop of Squillace 5 April, 1911, transferred to Andria 22 March, 1917, and to Milan in March, 1922.

During the war 481 priests of the archdiocese were in the army, 110 as chaplains, 29 as assistant chaplains, 10 as officers, and 331 as soldiers; of these 9 died, 7 were wounded, 9 made prisoners, and 14 decorated for valor; 300 seminarians served in the army, 18 were killed, 5 were wounded and 27 were taken prisoner. Ten churches were requisitioned by the military authorities, 24 diocesan institutions were used as hospitals, 29 congregations of Sisters served as nurses, committees for needs of war were formed in each parish, organizations were formed to assist refugees, institutions were opened for war orphans, committees of assistance for prisoners and also to locate prisoners were organized, besides the committee of religious assistance for soldiers. At the end of the war the commander-in-chief solemnly praised the work of the clergy of the diocese and the archbishop was decorated.

Two recent institutions inaugurated in 1921 and both founded by Cardinal Ferrari are the Catholic University of the Sacred Heart and the "Casa del Popolo" called L'Opera Cardinale Ferrari. The first, the only one of its sort in Italy, is limited to the study of philosophy and social sciences and is located in an ancient palace, has 52 professors, about 100 students, with a great hall, laboratories, rich library, offices, chapel, etc. The second, started by a gift of the diocese to the cardinal at his episcopal jubilee, follows the activities of the Knights of Columbus, providing all safe forms of social activities for the workers, artisans, students and clerks gathered together in the great metropolis which is the moral capital of Italy. Still in the course of formation on a vast site, at the present time (January, 1922) there has been started a technical school, school for secretarial course, for preparation of elementary teachers, technical school for daughters of workers, school of popular music, economical restaurant for students, workers, and clerks, a free employment bureau, a school for the unemployed, free course in popular culture, a boarding place for university students, and a dopo-scuela for students from high schools. Many other activities are to be started and the complete Casa will include a theatre, large dormitory, baths, moving pictures, field for sports, etc.

The new Catholic press includes a political daily, 7 weeklies, 10 business papers and 16 cultural ones, with 12 editorial houses and 8 religious libraries: The diocese contains nearly 3,000,000 Catholics (2,967,876 in 1919), 795 parishes (54 in city), 2162 secular priests, 92 regular priests, 141 churches in the city; 1724 outside, total 1865; 18 orders of men with 35 houses, 50 congregations of women, 103 houses in city, 397 in the diocese; 155 lay brothers, 5 seminaries, 750 seminarians; 16 colleges for men, 28 for women; 1 university; 1 mission work; 29 refugees, 10 hospitals, 61 day nurseries; 1 organization among the clergy and 49 for the laity.

Mileto, DIOCESE OF (MILETENSIS; cf. C. E., X-303b), in the province of Catanzaro, Southern Italy, directly dependent on the Holy See. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Morabito, born in Reggio-Calabria in 1858, appointed titular Bishop of Dioclea 15 June, 1898, and transferred 15 December following. On 14 February, 1919 Rt. Rev. Paolo Albera, Bishop of Bova, was named apostolic administrator of the diocese. It embraces a Catholic population of 220,000, 126 parishes, 27 vicariates, 300 secular and 8 regular clergy, 120 seminarians, 10 Brothers, 35 Sisters and 300 churches and chapels.

Milwaukee, ARCHDIOCESE OF (MILWAUCHIENSIS; cf. C. E., X-319a), in the State of Wisconsin, U. S. A., covers an area of 9321 sq. miles with a Catholic population of about 274,329. The see is filled by Most Rev. Sebastian Gebhard Messmer, D.D., D.C.L., b. 20 August, 1847, at Goldach, ordained 28 July, 1871, appointed Bishop of Green Bay 14 December, 1891, consecrated 27 March, 1892, transferred and raised to the archiepiscopal dignity 10 December, 1903, proclaimed 14 November, 1904, succeeding Mgr. Frederick Xavier Katzner (b. 11 February, 1844; d. 20 July, 1903); made assistant at the pontifical throne 16 November, 1906.

According to 1922 census there are: 233 parishes, 70 missions, 338 secular and 102 regular clergy, 6 monasteries for men, 11 convents for women, 3 clerical seminaries with 524 clerical students, 1 university with 274 professors and 4300 students, 1 college for men with 100 boys, 1 high school with 260 boys and girls, 7 academies with 1080 girls, 165 parochial schools with 45,000 pupils, 1 industrial school for girls with 95 pupils, 5 homes for the aged, 4 for girls, 1 for working men, 7 asylums for orphans and dependent children with 680 inmates, 14 hospitals, 1 institute for deaf-mutes with 85 pupils, 1 institute for the feeble-minded with 190 pupils, 1 day nursery. Most of the public institutions admit the ministry of priests. None of the Catholic institutions or schools are supported by state or government aid. Three societies are organized among the clergy: Eucharistic League, Purgatorial Society, St. Michael's Priest Fund for Indigent Priests; among the laity: Holy Name Society, St. Vincent de Paul Society, League of Catholic Women, Missionary Association of Catholic Women, Association of Catholic Hospitals. Four Catholic weeklies are published: "Catholic Herald," "Catholic Citizen," "Columbia," "Excelsior"; three Catholic monthlies: "Hospital Progress," "The Ligorian," "Mater Dolorosa." Catholic nationalities represented in the archdiocese are: 169 English-speaking parishes, 89 German, 21 Polish, 5 Lithuanian, 5 Italian, 4 Slovak, 3 Slovene, 1 each for French, Croatian, Syrian, and negroes. Since 1910 the following religious orders have come into the diocese: Redemptorist Fathers, at Oconomowoc; Palatini Fathers, at Wauwatosa; Dominican Fathers, at Madison; 3 houses of Carmelite Sisters of the Sacred Heart.

Archbishop Messmer celebrated his golden jubilee 27 July, 1921.

During the World War the diocese contributed 13 chaplains to the army and 13,000 soldiers.

Minguella y Arnedo, TORIBIO, Bishop of Sigüenza and historian, was born at Ego de Cornago, Logroño, Spain, on 16 April, 1836; d. at Monteaudo on 1 August, 1920. After completing his secondary studies with distinction at Tarragona, he joined the Discalced Augustinians at Monteaudo and after being ordained was sent to the Philippine Islands in 1858. He labored at Las Pinaas, Selang, Imus, Rosam, and Cavite Viejo and was secretary general and chronicler of the Philippine province of his order. He was sent later to Madrid as commissary procurator and was nominated rector of San Mullán and elected a corresponding member of the Royal Academy of History. In 1894 he was made Bishop of Porto Rico, where he displayed extraordinary pastoral zeal; three years later he was transferred to the See of Sigüenza, from which after an episcopate of twenty years he resigned in 1916, at the age of eighty-one, and was appointed titular Bishop of Basilopolis. Mgr. Minguella is recognized as one of the greatest scholars in Spain in his day. Among his linguistic published works may be mentioned his Spanish-Tagal Grammar (Manila, 1878), and "Metodo practico para que los ninos y ninas de las provincias tagalas aprendan a hablar espanol" (Manila, 1886), a work crowned by the Government and published at its expense; "Unidad de la especie humana probada por la filologia" (Madrid); an extensive treatise on Filipino palaeography, the fruit of long and varied research, is as yet unprinted. His chief historical contributions are "San Mullán de la Cogulla" (Madrid, 1883); "Conquista espiritual de Mindanao por los agostinos recoletos" (Valladolid, 1885); "Cronologia de Roma P. fray Gabino Sánchez Cortés" (Madrid, 1894); "Historia del P. Ezequiel Moreno, obispo de Pasto" (Madrid, 1904), and "Historia de la diocesis de Sigüenza et de sus obispos" (3 vols. Madrid, 1910-13), a masterly work crowned by the Academy of History.

Minnesota.—The total land area of Minnesota is 84,682 square miles. In 1920 the population was 2,387,125, an increase of 15 per cent over that of 1910 (2,075,708). Of this 55 per cent was rural. The average number of inhabitants to the square mile was 29.5. The largest cities are: Minneapolis, 380,582; St. Paul, 234,585; Duluth, 98,917; Winona, 19,143; Stillwater, 12,435.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—According to the census of 1919 there were in the State 6225 manufacturing establishments, in which were employed 115,600 wage earners. The capital invested amounted to $690,384,000, and the total value of products was $1,218,130,000. In the same year Minnesota had 178,478 farms, with an acreage of 51,749,120. The value of the crops was $506,020,665, the principal crops being maize (118,125,000 bushels), wheat (29,116,000 bushels), oats (126,488,000 bushels), barley (25,000,000 bushels). The wool clip amounted to 3,594,000 pounds of wool. The national forest area is 1,044,233 acres. In 1917 Minnesota had 9161 miles of railway, besides 732 miles of electric railway. St. Paul is a famous railway center through which ten railroads pass. The Great Northern Railway Company of St. Paul has a line of steamers which sail between Puget Sound and China, Japan, and the Philippines, the railway of the company carrying vast loads of merchandise from St. Paul to the port of shipment at very low freight rates. About 44,000,000 tons of iron ore were mined and shipped from Minnesota in 1917.

EDUCATION.—The laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: No public moneys or property shall be appropriated or used for the support of schools wherein the distinctive doctrines of any particular Christian or other religion are promulgated or taught. To satisfy the requirements of compulsory attendance a school must be one in which all the common branches are taught in the English language. A foreign language may be taught for a period not to exceed one hour in each day. By a decision of the Attorney General Bible reading is excluded from the public schools. State support is from the income on the permanent school fund and one half the income from the state swamp land fund, from revenue derived from a one mill tax and from biennial appropriations by the Legislature. The appropriated funds are distributed from a special State aid and the income from trust funds and the State tax, exceeding $150,000, is distributed to the districts according to the number of pupils enrolled in the public schools for forty days or more. Local support consists of a tax on the property of the district, including a one mill tax required by law to be levied in each district. There are six public normal schools. In 1920 the 9136 public elementary schools of the State had 16,896 teachers and 439,537 pupils; 240 public high schools with 2244 teachers and 64,060 pupils. The total expenditure on education in the same year was $38,358,555. In 1920 the State University had 5560 students and 800 professors; Hamline University, 30 instructors and 418 students; St. John's University at Collegeville, 51 instructors and 420 students. Among the most recently established State institutions are: the Willmar State Asylum, opened in 1912 as a hospital for inebriates, and in 1917 as an asylum for the insane; the State Reformatory for Women, at Shakopee, opened in 1920; a new Home School for Girls, formerly at Red Wing (1907), now at Sauk Center (1911); Hospital for Crippled and Deformed Children near St. Paul (1910); Minnesota Sanitarium at Leech Lake (1908).

RELIGIOUS.—The United States Religious Census for 1916, published in 1918, gives the following statistics: Catholics, 415,664; Lutherans, 264,649; Methodist Episcopalians, 59,576; Presbyterians, 32,494; Congregationalists, 22,987; Episcopalians, 22,635; German Evangelical Synod, 10,048. See also ST. PAUL, ARCHDIOCESE OF; DULUTH, DIOCESE OF; WINONA, DIOCESE OF; ST. CLOUD, DIOCESE OF; CROOKSTON, DIOCESE OF.

LEGISLATIVE CHANGES.—Minnesota's recent legislation has been most progressive. In 1911 a primary election law for candidates in State public office was passed. In 1913 the United States Supreme Court unanimously upheld the right of the State to regulate railroad rates within its borders. In the same year the congressional and legislative districts were re-apportioned; a workmen's compensation law was passed; a Minimum Wage Commission appointed to regulate the wages of women and children; the Presidential Primaries Bill was passed and the non-partisan primary was extended to all members of the Legislature, requiring them to appeal to the electors on their ability to do the work required of them, instead of making their work a political issue. A Mothers' Pension was also provided for. In 1914 the International Harvester Company was declared to be a trust, and its dissolution ordered by the United States District Court. The administration of all State institutions is now under a Central Board of Control. The Federal Prohibition Act was ratified on 17 January, 1919; the Federal Suffrage Act on 8 September, 1919.

SHARE IN THE WAR.—Minnesota's contribution to the World War was 99,116 soldiers or 2.64 per cent of the United States Army. The Minnesota soldiers of the national guard formed a part of the 34th Division at Camp Cody, New Mexico, and those of the national army part of the 88th Division at Fort Dodge, Iowa. The summary of casualties among the Minnesota members of the American Expeditionary Force was as follows: deceased, 50 officers, 2088 men; prisoners, 10 officers, 91 men; wounded, 105 officers, 4979 men.

Minor Orders (cf. C. E., X-332).—Vicars Apostolic, prefects Apostolic, and abbots or prelates nullius, even if they have not received episcopal consecration, are authorized by law, but only during their term of office and within their own territory, to confer first tonsure and minor orders on their own secular subjects and on others exhibiting the requisite dimissorial letters; a regular abbot has the same power in regard to those subject to him by profession, provided he is a priest and has legitimately received the abbatial blessing; his power, however, is similarly limited unless he has received episcopal consecration, all privileges to the contrary being now revoked.

Minorca, DIOCESE OF (MINORICENSIS; cf. C. E., X-332a), suffragan of Valencia, comprises the island of Minorca, the second largest of the Balearic Islands, which belong to Spain. The see is filled by Rt. Rev. John Torrens y Rivas, born in Iviza 1844, ordained in 1868, served as a pastor, professor of Latin at the University of Madrid, vice rector of the Spanish College in Rome and chancellor of Iviza, made a dean and vicar capitular in 1898, prothonotary apostolic in 1900 and chaplain to His Majesty, appointed bishop 9 June, 1902. This diocese extends over an area of 273 square miles, making it the smallest of the Spanish dioceses. It embraces a Catholic population of 40,000, 80 Protestants, 17 parishes, 111 priests, 38 churches, 8 oratories, and 7 convents with 20 religious and 77 Sisters.

Minsk, DIOCESE OF (MINSKENSIS; cf. C. E., X-333d), in Western Russia, erected in 1798, was suppressed by the Russian Government in 1869, and only re-established by a Decree of 1917. The diocese is dedicated to St. Michael the Archangel and embraces a Catholic population of 288,980, 9 deaneries, 66 filial parishes and 84 secular priests. The first bishop since the re-establishment is Rt. Rev. Sigismund Losinski, born in the diocese in 1870, made chancellor of Mahileff and professor at the seminary and appointed 2 November, 1917. In December, 1920, the Russian papers circulated a false report that Bishop Losinski, held as a hostage by the Bolsheviks, had died of typhus at Smolensk. As a result of the intervention of the Holy See, however, the bishop was liberated in 1921 and returned to Warsaw on 14 July.

Miridite, ABBEY OF (MIRIDITARUM, cf. C. E. X-352c.), situated in the diocese of Alessio, at Oroschi, in the province of Scutari, Albania. It is an abbey nullius, directly subject to the Holy See. The present abbé is Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Gionalli, appointed titular Bishop of Callinicus 21 November, 1921. In the territory under his jurisdiction are: 25,000 Catholics, 25 churches and 8 chapels; 13 native priests of whom 11 are secular and 2 Friars Minor.

Misericorde, CONGREGATION OF THE SISTERS OF.—

At present the congregation numbers: professed Sisters, 250; novices, 25; postulants, 18. Branch houses have been established throughout Canada and the United States. At the mother-house in Montreal there are 81 nuns; with this is associated an orphan asylum with 7 Sisters and 525 children; also a hospital giving accommodation to 175 patients, with 7 nuns and 30 attendants; patients treated during the year 2837. At Sault-au-Recollet the nuns conduct an orphan asylum with accommodations for 150 children, attendants 25, nuns 15. The hospital at Ottawa, founded in 1879, was destroyed by fire in 1900. The new building, completed in 1904, accommodates 100 patients, nuns 14, nurses 12. A new addition, called the Annex, was added in 1920, with accommodation for 35 patients. A hospital was opened at Winnipeg in 1898 to commemorate the golden jubilee of the order. Patients treated during the year of 1920 2640, nuns 19, nurses 30. In the same year a hospital was opened at Edmonton, Alta.: nuns 14, nurses 20, patients treated during the year 1901. In 1904 a branch house was founded at St. Norbert, Man., for children, and accommodates 200 little ones. In the United States the nuns have a large hospital in New York City: nuns 28, nurses 30, patients treated during the year 3896. In Green Bay, Wis., a hospital was established in 1900: nuns 22, nurses 30, patients treated during the year 1698. At Oak Park, a suburb of Chicago, a beautiful hospital was opened in 1905: nuns 20, nurses 25, patients treated during the year 2740. In 1912 a hospital was opened at Pana, Ill., in the coal regions: nuns 9, nurses 12, patients treated during the year 652. The establishment at Milwaukee has accommodation for 35 patients; nuns 10, nurses 5. In connection with the institution is a nursery with 50 babies. In Toronto a hospital was opened for mothers and babies (1917), accommodating 35 mothers and 50 babies. Perpetual vows are now taken by the religious three years after first vows are made, these first vows having been renewed annually.

Misocco and Calanca, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (MESANCINAE ET CALANCAE; cf. C. E., X-354c.), in the Canton of Grisons, Switzerland, with official residence at Cama-Loggia. This territory is administered by a vice-prefect apostolic, Rev. Emile de Seravalle, a member of the Capuchin Order, to whom the prefecture is entrusted. The population, numbering 4250, is almost entirely Catholic. The prefecture comprises 9 residences, 8 parishes, 10 secular priests, under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Chur, 12 regular clergy, 22 churches or chapels, and 24 schools with 346 children.

Mission, CONGREGATION OF THE (cf. C. E., X-357).
GENERAL ADMINISTRATION.—During the twenty-six years of the generalship of Fr. Fiat (1878-1914), the number of Lazarists and of Sisters of Charity increased almost twofold. In China alone, to give one remarkable instance, the number of Lazarist vicariates increased from four in 1878 to ten in 1914. The chief events of general interest which took place in the congregation during Fr. Fiat's term of office were the beatification of John Gabriel Perboyre and Francis Regis Clet, the former martyred in China in 1840, the latter in 1820, and the introduction of the cause of Louise de Marillac, co-foundress of the Sisters of Charity, and that of the Sisters of Arras put to death during the French Revolution. These servants of God were solemnly beatified by Benedict XV in 1920. Several other causes actually before the Court of Rome, notably those of Justin de Jacobis, Vicar Apostolic in Abyssinia, Catherine Labouré, to whom the Miraculous Medal was revealed; John le Vacher, and many others, were zealously promoted by him. The General Assembly of 1914 accepted Fr. Fiat's resignation, he having reached the age of eighty-two. Born in Auvergne 29 August, 1832, he made his theological studies in the Seminary of St. Flour and his novitiate at Paris, was ordained priest and sent to the grand seminary of Montpellier, where he labored for ten years, was recalled to Paris and named sub-director of novices, and later assistant superior of the mother-house, and was elected superior general in 1878 in succession to Fr. Boré, deceased.

Fr. Fiat's successor was Fr. Emile Villette, procurator general of the congregation, elected superior general 31 July, 1914. Frs. Alfred Louwyck, Francis Verdier, Philip Meugniot, and Augustine Veneziani were elected assistant superiors. Emile Villette was born at Somain in the Diocese of Cambrai in 1855, entered the Congregation of the Mission in 1873, after ordination was sent as professor to the grand seminary of Oran, Algiers, in 1886 was named superior of the seminary of Solesmes, and in 1898 superior of the grand seminary of Cambrai, and in 1903 was appointed procurator general of the congregation. His generalship fell within the troubled period of the World War. For the congregation this was a fratricidal war. Members were found in both camps, and many on both sides met death on the battlefields of Europe. The strain of the conflict told upon the health of the superior, who died 7 November, 1916. Owing to the war it was practically impossible to summon a general assembly at this time to elect a successor to Fr. Villette, so according to the constitutions the government of the congregation was assumed by a vicar general, and Fr. Alfred Louwyck, the assistant superior, became vicar. Fr. Louwyck was born near St. Omer 24 January, 1851, entered the congregation in 1876, was master of novices and director of students at the mother-house, and did excellent work on the constitutions and rules of the congregation. He died 17 February, 1918, and was succeeded as vicar general by Fr. Francis Verdier, who had been elected second assistant in 1914. The possibility of convoking a general assembly remaining indefinite, the Holy See granted to the new vicar general the full powers of a superior general, so that the congregation should not suffer for lack of adequate authority. The armistice putting an end to hostilities, Fr. Verdier summoned a general assembly for 27 September, 1919. The deputies to the assembly of nearly 100 chose Fr. Verdier superior general, and Frs. Emile Cazot, Louis Planson, Patrick McHale, and Augustine Veneziani, assistants. Fr. Verdier was born 1 March, 1856, at Lunel, Diocese of Montpellier, and was received into the Congregation of the Mission in 1874; after his ordination he taught in the grand seminary of Nice, received the doctorate of theology in Rome in 1887, and was superior of the grand seminary of Montpellier from 1895 to 1903, when the seminaries in France were closed by the Government, and he was sent as superior to the seminary of Noto, Italy, remaining there for ten years; elected superior general by an almost unanimous assembly. The congregation has accepted 80 new houses within the last ten years. A few of these, however, are revivals of institutions suppressed during various European revolutions. The new foundations are chiefly in countries outside of Europe, and the restorations in France, Germany, and Poland. Recently deceased notable members of the congregation are the former assistants, Frs. Allou, Meout, and Forrestier.

The canonical status of the Congregation of the Mission conforms to Book II, title XVII, De Religiosis.

EUROPE.—In Europe the Congregation of the Mission suffered serious losses during the great war. Many priests, students, novices, and Brothers either fell on the battlefield or died of wounds contracted during military service. The dismemberment of the Austro-Hungarian Empire brought on a national crisis which had both civil and religious effects. In fact, it became expedient to divide the Austrian province of the congregation according to racial groupings into Austrian, Hungarian, and Yugoslav. The restored nationality of Poland had a corresponding effect upon the religious and ecclesiastical organization of the nation. In particular the Priests of the Mission, who had been established in Warsaw by St. Vincent himself about the middle of the seventeenth century, were, after long absence, recalled to that city by the present archbishop. The Church of the Holy Cross, founded in Warsaw in 1651, and twenty-two seminaries were under the direction of the Priests of the Mission, when Russia endeavored to quench the spirit of Polish nationality and extinguish Catholicity in the country in 1864. Passports to return to Warsaw and take possession of Holy Cross Church were granted to the Polish Lazarists by the German Government in 1918. The Missionaries have thus resumed the work first undertaken by St. Vincent de Paul in 1651. Young priests who are taking graduate courses in theology in the University of Warsaw are under the direction of the Lazarists, one of whom is professor of Sacred Scripture and another director of the diocesan seminary. The parish in Vilna has also been restored to the congregation. The Province of Holland was constituted in 1920. It embraces also the missions of Bolivia in South America and the Vicariate of Eastern Chi-li in China.

AFRICA.—The Province of Algiers, to which is attached Abyssinia, has been revived and the seminaries of Constantine and Oran are under the direction of the Priests of the Mission. John Baptist Coulbeaux, who died at the mother-house in Paris in 1921, had spent the greater part of his missionary life in Abyssinia, where, during his apostolic labors, he became proficient in the language of the country, and at the time of his death was preparing for publication a dictionary of the Amhara tongue.

ASIA.—China.—The Lazarists now have eleven vicariates in China. By Apostolic Brief of 27 April, 1912, the Vicariate of Maritime Chi-li, with residence at Tien-tsin, was created by division of the Vicariate of Northern Chi-li. Fr. Paul Dumond, C. M., was named its first Vicar Apostolic, and was consecrated Bishop of Curubis 30 June, 1912. The vicariate is territorially the smallest in China, but numerically one of the largest. In 1920 the Holy See created a new vicariate in Southern Kiang-si and entrusted it to the Eastern Province of the United States. Bishop Dumond, formerly of Tien-tsin, is at present apostolic administrator. In the autumn of 1921 the first American Lazarists to undertake mission work in the Celestial Empire reached Kan-chow, the seat of the new vicariate. The first superior is Fr. John O'Shea, and his companions are Frs. Daniel McGillicuddy, Leo Cahill, Francis Meade, Thomas Crossley, with four students, Messrs. Stauble, Colbert, McLaughlin, and Erbe. As soon as the Americans are sufficiently acquainted with the language and customs of the country, one of them will be chosen vicar apostolic. In 1918 Bishop Jarlin of Peking invited the Irish Province to take charge of St. Joseph's Church, Peking. Fr. Patrick O'Gorman volunteered for that mission, and on his arrival in the capital at once set about opening a school for natives and for Europeans. That school is now flourishing.

PERSIA.—The Province of Persia barely exists. Constant political changes, Mohammedan fanaticism, and fury render the existence of Catholic missions in Persia extremely difficult. When in 1918 the Russians, who had held the Turks and Kurds in check, abandoned Urmiah, these last were determined to return and exterminate the Christians. On two different occasions they were repulsed by the Assyrian Christians, but at length forcing their way by superior numbers they succeeded in capturing Urmiah, where they ruthlessly massacred Archbishop Sontag, Delegate Apostolic and Provincial of the Lazarist Province of Persia. Frs. Dinkha, L'Hotellier, and Miraziz met with a like fate. Archbishop James Sontag was born at Dinsheim, Diocese of Strasburg, in 1869. He made his early studies at Prime Combe, and was received into the congregation in 1887. Ordained priest in 1895 he was sent first to Urmiah and afterwards to Teheran. After the death of Archbishop Lesné, Fr. Sontag was made Apostolic Delegate and Archbishop of Ispahan, and was consecrated in the chapel of the mother-house of the Lazarists in Paris in 1910 by Archbishop Amette. He was decorated by the Shah of Persia in 1917, and received the croix de guerre in the same year. At the cost of his life he remained with his afflicted flock when threatened by the Turks. The present superior of the Lazarist mission is Aristide Chatelet, appointed in 1919. Fr. Paul Bedjan, C. M., the distinguished Orientalist, who died at Cologne 9 June, 1920, was born at Koorova, Persia, in 1840. He was of Chaldean origin and modest parentage. His early studies gave promise of his future success in mastering Syriac and Neo-Aramaic. With indefatigable energy Fr. Bedjan edited some forty volumes upon every variety of ecclesiastical science, and his work has been universally esteemed by Oriental scholars and by missionaries in Persia.

INDIA.—In 1920 the Province of Madrid, at the request of Propaganda, sent four priests to Surada, district of Ganjan, Diocese of Vizagapatam, India, that district to be made a vicariate within a few years.

AMERICA.—In 1913 Rt. Rev. Wm. Rojas, C. M., Bishop of Panama, requested the Visitor of the Eastern Province of the United States to send some American priests to attend to the spiritual needs of the Catholic employees of the United States Government in the Zone. Fr. Thomas McDonald volunteered for that mission. Within a few years he built a church at Balboa and chapels at stations along the Canal. Fr. Peter Burns, his assistant, has been equally active at Christobal and Colon. The missions of Bocas del Toro and Almirante also have for some years been served by Lazarists. At present seven priests are engaged in the Panama mission. In Central America a new province was formed in 1914 with headquarters at Guatemala City. In Colombia a novitiate of the province of that name was established at Bogota. In Chile the Archbishop of Valparaiso entrusted to the French Lazarists the suburb of Playa Ancha of that city. The territory of Arauca in Colombia was erected into a prefecture apostolic in 1916. Fr. Emile Larquère is first prefect apostolic. In the same republic the district of Tierra-dentro, Diocese of Popayan, is entrusted to the Congregation of the Mission. In 1921 Fr. August Blessing, Vice-Visitor of Costa Rica, was named Vicar Apostolic of Port Limon, recently created a vicariate. The new Kenrick Seminary and the preparatory school of the diocese of St. Louis are recent foundations in the Western Province of the United States, and St. Joseph's College, Princeton, N. J., in the Eastern Province. During the Mexican revolution most of the houses of the congregation in that republic were closed and property confiscated. By degrees the province is being slowly reconstituted.

STATISTICS.—The present number of houses of the Congregation of the Mission is 348, of which 85 are seminaries, and the remaining parish houses or mission houses. There are 33 provinces, of which 17 are in Europe, 4 in Asia, 2 in Africa, 5 in North America, and 1 in the East Indies. The present number of members is about 3000. Owing to the great war vocations in France, Germany, Austria, and Italy have dwindled considerably. In Poland, Spain, Ireland, and the United States the number of vocations has rather increased than diminished. In the Latin American provinces there is great dearth of vocations to the religious state. Statistics of number and class of seculars cared for are not available except for foreign missions and parishes. In the Northern Province of China, which comprises five vicariates, there are 466,683 Catholics in a total population of about 21,000,000. There were in 1921: 20,564 catechumens, 10,484 pagan adults baptized, 8245 children of Christian parents, and 36,022 children of pagans. In the Southern Province there are six vicariates with a Catholic population of 139,742, an increase of 62,547 in ten years. China is the most promising mission field in charge of the congregation. Whilst French Lazarists are still in the majority in the Chinese missions, other provinces of the congregation are imitating the apostolic zeal of those pioneers who for more than a century have borne the burden of the day and the heats. American, Irish, and Italian provinces have already begun to help towards the conversion of the Celestial Empire to the One Faith of Christ.

PATRICK McHALE.

Missionaries of the Consolata.—(TURIN).—Canon Giuseppe Allamano, rector of the Sanctuary and Convent of the Consolata in Turin realized the need of an Institute to train foreign missionaries in that region, so in 1890 he composed a rule planned principally for missionaries destined to evangelize Africa. In 1900 his idea was approved and in June, 1901, he opened the Institute in Turin and two missionary priests were sent to Tusso, in the Vicariate Apostolic of Zanzibar (Eastern Africa), arriving there in June, 1902. Here the work was started among uncivilized natives of the Kenya district, and in spite of difficulty of language and other hardships, the king was baptized and in three years 12 stations were established. The Sisters of Blessed Cottolengo came to aid them. In 1905 this province of Kenya was erected into an independent Mission and in 1909 into a vicariate apostolic with Mgr. Filippo Perlo (one of the first two missionaries) as vicar, with residence at Limourou. To day over 20 stations are established in the vicariate and, besides, 4 orphanages, 1 college for sons of native chiefs, 2 colleges for catechists, 1 college (scholastic-catechetical) to develop native teachers, recognized by English Government, 2 seminaries (upper and lower) with 60 native students, 1 monastery with a number of young native women who aspire to become auxiliary Sisters, 1 printing establishment where a monthly periodical and school and religious books are printed, 1 large industrial school where houses and movable churches are built to be carried to the stations, and a vast farm which provides food supplies for all the stations. There are 60 priests in the vicariate and each station has a school.

In view of the success of this first mission, the Prefecture of Kaffa in southern Abyssinia was erected in 1913 and entrusted to the missionaries of the Consolata. Missionaries had been banished from this territory in 1904 and were forbidden to enter, so it was 1917 before the Fathers entered as civilians and established five stations. Their work is still hampered and clandestine. The vicar apostolic is Mgr. Gaudentius Barlassina, with residence at Kaffa. In the past year the Missionaries of the Consolata have been invited to another field in Iringa, which is part of the Vicariate apostolic of Dar-es-salam, former German East Africa, now British territory, and entrusted to the German Benedictines.

The mother-house of the institute, which in the beginning could scarcely shelter 40 persons, has now been transferred to a new and commodious building, with a capacity for 250 persons, divided into four distinct parts namely: collegio for students, seminary, novitiate, and independent house for missionary Sisters. This last institute was established twelve years after the founding of the other institute. During the war all the clerics in the seminary were called to the army but a relatively numerous personnel was maintained at the mission stations.

Missionary Church Association. See NEW THOUGHT.

Missionary Society of St. Paul the Apostle.—Since 1911 new foundations have been made as follows: In New York City the Good Shepherd parish and Newman Hall at Columbia University; in Toronto, Canada, St. Peter's parish and Newman Hall at the University of Toronto; in Minneapolis, Minn., St. Lawrence parish; in Portland, Oregon, St. Philip Neri's parish; and in Rome, Italy, a residence and house of studies. At present the number of priests is 75, and the number of Paulist students in preparation for the priesthood is 50.

In 1919, on the death of Very Rev. John J. Hughes, Very Rev. Thomas F. Burke succeeded him as superior general. Among the recently deceased are: Fr. George M. Searle, a former superior general; Fr. Michael P. Smith, a noted missionary; Fr. Gilbert Simmons, for many years associated with the work of the Catholic World; Fr. Charles J. Powers, one of the consultors; and Fr. Hugh Swift, of the Tennessee foundation.

Mississippi.—The area of the State of Mississippi is 46,865 square miles. In 1920 its population was 1,789,384, of which 853,992 were whites and 935,184 negroes, with 1105 Indians and 364 Chinese. There were 4968 males and 4968 female foreign-born; total, 8019. The number of males of voting age was 441,331; of females, 434,775. Of these 215,098 males and 206,561 females were white; 225,700 males and 227,963 females of negro blood. Of the illiterate males of voting age 9801 were native whites, 489 were foreign-born whites, 81,671 were negroes; of the illiterate females 8063 were natives, 493 were foreign-born, and 81,210 were negroes. Illiteracy in the total population amounts to 17.2 per cent, a remarkable decrease since the census of 1900 (32 per cent). Illiteracy of the native white population is 3.6 per cent; of foreign born whites 13.3 per cent; of negroes 29.3 per cent. Of the population 13.4 per cent was urban, 86.6 was rural. The largest cities are Meridian (23,399), Jackson (22,817), Vicksburg (18,072).

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—Mississippi is pre-eminently an agricultural state, but there is an increase in manufacturing. The number of establishments in 1919 was 2455; the number of persons engaged 64,452; the capital invested $154,117,337; salaries and wages paid $59,182,535; value of products $197,746,987. The number of farms in the State in 1920 was 272,101, and the value of all farm property was $904,751,855. Cotton is the principal crop, the value of the cotton yield in 1919 being $183,845,184, a great increase over that of 1909, which was valued at $83,148,805. Other important crops are corn, oats, and sugar. The value of the sugar crop for 1919 was $3,923,140; in 1909, $1,506,887. In 1919 the bonded debt of the State was $3,443,254. According to the Council of Foreign Bondholders, the State has a defaulted debt of $7,000,000. The assessed value of real and personal property is $649,644,340. Although there are mineral deposits in Mississippi, such as limestone, coal, and gypsum, there is but little mining. The railway mileage of the State in 1919 was 4480. Lumbering is an important industry, the present value of the lumber in the State being not less than $350,000,000.

EDUCATION.—Education is not compulsory in Mississippi. The number of children enrolled in 1918 was 540,756, and the average attendance was 345,952. The average attendance in 1913 was 301,922, showing an increase in 1918 of 44,030. There are 7266 schools in the school districts, and of these 3377 are for negro children. Counting the colored private schools it is estimated that there are about 4500 colored teachers with 150,000 colored pupils. The school expenditure in 1917-18 was as follows: for teachers' salaries $13,498,882; for grand total current expenses $4,263,954; the statistics, outlays, and capital acquisition are not available. There are 6 universities and colleges, and 1 public normal school. The Mississippi Normal College was opened in 1912.

The laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: No public funds shall be appropriated toward the support of any sectarian school. The flag shall be displayed within or without every school building. In 1912 the Legislature abolished all Greek-letter fraternities and sororities in the State colleges or schools, this being the first legislation of the kind. The matter was brought before the United States Supreme Court, which decided (1 June, 1915) that the Greek-letter fraternity men could not attend any of the state schools of Mississippi, thus upholding the law passed in 1912. Bible reading is neither permitted nor excluded in the public schools of Mississippi.

RELIGION.—The Catholic population of the State in 1920 amounted to 30,792, including 2675 colored and 344 Indian Catholics. According to the religious census of 1916 other religious denominations numbered: Baptists 441,293; Methodist Episcopal, South, 114,469; Methodist Episcopalians 45,483; colored Methodist Episcopal 33,070; African Methodist Episcopal 26,133; Presbyterian 19,758; African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church 7202; all others 43,410. For Catholic educational and religious statistics see NATCHEZ, DIOCESE OF.

ADMINISTRATION.—There are now six judges of the State supreme court, who serve eight years, seventeen Circuit Court judges, and ten chancellors. An amendment to the State constitution in 1914 provides for the election of district judges and chancellors in the popular election, and also for the election of supreme court judges. There are State hospitals at Natchez, Vicksburg, and Jackson. The State owns 28,750 acres of cotton and farm lands, upon which the entire prison population of about 1300 prisoners is worked. The annual cash income to the State from the labor of the prisoners is not less than $200,000. Among the holidays of the State are 19 January (Robert E. Lee's birthday), Thanksgiving Day, and Labor Day.

RECENT LEGISLATION.—In 1912 tipping was prohibited and child labor regulated. The new bank law of 1914 provided for an inspection system and a tax on banks to provide a fund for paying depositors of insolvent banks. In the same year the initiative and referendum was adopted. In 1916 a State board of law examiners was created, women were admitted to the practice of law, and public hangings were prohibited. The law requiring registration of all voters four months prior to the election barred out women enfranchised by the Federal Amendment of November, 1920. In 1919 a highway commission composed of eight men was created. The Federal Suffrage Amendment was defeated on 21 January, 1920. Mississippi, however, was the first State to ratify the Federal Prohibition Act (8 January, 1918).

HISTORY.—During the European War Mississippi's contribution was 54,295 soldiers, or 1.44 per cent of the United States Army. The Mississippi members of the National Guard joined the 39th Division at Camp Beauregard, Louisiana, and those of the National Army: the 87th Division at Camp Pike, Arkansas. The summary of casualties among the Mississippi members of the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 18 officers, 886 men; prisoners, 23 officers, 542 men; wounded, 53 officers, 1320 men.

MISSOURI (cf. C. E., X-398a).—The area of the State is 69,420 square miles. According to the census of 1920 its population is 3,404,055, which shows an increase of 110,720 during the period 1910-20, or of 3.4 per cent, a smaller increase than that of the preceding decade, when it was 186,670, or 6 per cent. The largest cities are St. Louis, with a population of 772,897, Kansas City (324,410), St. Joseph (77,939), Springfield (39,631), Joplin (29,855). The urban population is 1,586,963; the rural population 1,817,152, making the urban population 46 per cent.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—In 1917 Missouri ranked as the chief lead-producing State of the Union. The returns from the smelters show that the State mined enough lead ore to produce 234,156 tons of primary lead. The total valuation of the lead produced in 1917 was $40,274,832; of zinc, $27,115,272; of iron ore, $134,906; of lime, cement, brick, $12,202,000. The quantity of cobalt and nickel sulphides varies considerably in the different workings. In 1918 the coal produced in the State was worth $17,126,498. The products of the forests of Missouri included (1918) over 272,000,000 feet of lumber, the greatest production being in oak lumber (112,897,000 feet), yellow pine lumber (31,118,000 feet); cypress lumber (26,981,000 feet), and gum lumber (24,981,000 feet). The value of the output of farm crops alone for the year 1919 was $566,650,000. Of the total crop valuation $214,466,000 consisted of Indian corn, in the production of which Missouri was the first State in the Union. The greater portion of the crop is consumed by live stock within the State.

The surplus in live stock for the year beginning January, 1920, consisting of cattle, horses, hogs, mules, and sheep, was 9,909,000 head, valued at $378,840,000. Missouri is constantly gaining as a wool-producing State, $3,807,000 worth of wool being sold in 1920. The surplus of poultry and eggs for the year 1919 was about $36,500,000. The statistics in 1904 show an estimated total value from the dairies of $4,900,000, while the statistics of 1919 give a total value of $125,351,000. The cotton crop of 1919 brought $11,051,000. The number of farms in 1919 was 263,124, showing a decrease of 14,120, or of 5 per cent since 1910. Missouri has prosperous manufacturing industries, the more important of which depend on agriculture and forestry. In 1919 there were 8593 establishments with a capital of $939,691,255, employing 245,826 persons, and an output valued at $1,599,313,923. There are 8230 miles of railroads and 113 miles of electric railway. A municipal free bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis for the accommodation of railroads, electric roads, wagons, and pedestrians was recently completed.

RELIGION.—According to the United States religious census of 1916 the total population of church members in Missouri was 1,370,551, and the principal religious denominations were as follows: Catholics 445,352; Baptists 268,468; Congregationalists 10,479; Disciples or Christians 145,403; German Evangelicals 37,374; Lutherans 45,313; Methodists 228,135; Presbyterians 17,435; Episcopalians 14,309; Reformed bodies 1204; United Brethren bodies, 4286; Churches of Christ 15,160; Latter Day Saints 9947; Jewish congregations 8347. Thus 32.5 per cent of the total number of church-going people in the State are Catholics, the Baptists having the next highest percentage (18.4), and the Methodists being third (16.7). The selling of any wares or merchandise is forbidden on Sunday, and one cannot recover for Sunday work. Athletics are allowed. For Catholic educational and religious statistics see St. LOUIS, ARCHDIOCESE OF; St. LOUIS, UNIVERSITY OF; KANSAS CITY, DIOCESE OF; St. JOSEPH, DIOCESE OF.

EDUCATION.—The State is divided into 9807 school districts. The number of teachers in the elementary schools in 1920 was 21,126, pupils 672,483, high school teachers 2800, pupils 62,438. Attendance for more than three-fourths of the school term is compulsory for children between eight and fourteen years of age. The school expenditure in 1917 was $28,048,051, and the school fund in 1918 amounted to $14,390,306. There are eleven colleges in the State, besides sixteen junior colleges. A Department of Education has been recently established in the State University, which had, in 1919, 3536 students and 128 professors, 53 instructors, and 64 assistants. The School of Administration was opened in 1914. The State laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: No public money shall be used to help support any school controlled by any religious sect or denomination. Lots and buildings used exclusively for religious worship, for schools, or for religious or charitable purposes may be exempt from taxation. Bible reading in the public schools is neither permitted nor excluded.

RECENT LEGISLATION.—In the past twenty years only two amendments to the constitution have been adopted, despite the fact that it required only a majority vote to adopt amendments. In 1919 nine were voted for. The good roads bond issue amendments, providing for bond issues of $60,000,000, and the so-called constitution amendment were most important. The latter changed the method of calling a constitutional convention and made the convention bi-partisan. One was of prime importance from Kansas City's standpoint, for it gave that city home rule in charter-making power and increased the limit of indebtedness to an extent that will permit necessary public improvements, and, if desired, the purchase of utilities. Two referendum measures referred the Prohibition Act of Missouri and the Workmen's Compensation Act, both passed by the 1919 legislature. The Prohibition Act passed, but the other was defeated. Missouri has its Children's Code Commission, appointed by the governor. In 1919 it introduced its revised code of fifty-one bills and succeeded in having twenty-five adopted, some of which merely harmonized existing law, while others introduced new standards. The use of school property for recreational purposes was permitted, the school board furnishing free light, heat, and care-taking. Agricultural education is provided for. Capital punishment was abolished in 1917. The juvenile court now takes care of committing children to other than public institutions, placing them as far as possible with an association controlled by persons of the same religious faith as the parents of the child. The Smith-Hughes Act, providing for vocational education, was accepted by the State in 1917 and elaborate arrangements have been made relative to its administration. An act was passed in 1919 exempting from the inheritance tax all property, benefit, or income passing to any hospital, religious, or educational or scientific institutions to be used for such purposes. Recent legislation permits gifts for religious purposes. A state prison board of three members was established by the Legislature in 1917. This board appoints two chaplains for the penitentiary. The Federal Suffrage Amendment was ratified on 3 July, 1919; the Federal Prohibition Act on 16 January, 1919.

WAR HISTORY.—The total number of Missourians who served in the war against Germany was 128,000 in the army, 6910 in the navy, and 3400 in the marine corps. The Missouri members of the national guard were mobilized at the State Rifle Range at Nevada, on 5 August, under command of Brigadier General Harvey C. Clark, and on 28 September entrained with the 35th Division at Camp Doniphan, Oklahoma. Arriving in France in May, 1918, they were attached to the American contingent in the St. Mihiel salient, forming a part of the reserve. Transferred to the Argonne they participated in the fiercest fighting of the battle. They went into action on 26 September, 1918, and on October, after six days of fighting, had captured every objective from Vouquois Hill to Exermont. The drafted men formed a part of the 89th Division under General Leonard Wood at Camp Funston, and also made a fine record in the battles of St. Mihiel and Argonne. Another Missouri unit which acquitted itself with much credit was the 12th Engineers, composed largely of railroad men from St. Louis. The casualties of Missouri men in the American Expeditionary Force were as follows: deceased, 106 officers, 2456 men; prisoners, 10 officers, 101 men; wounded, 298 officers, 7414 men.

Mobile, DIOCESE OF (MOBILIENSIS), in Alabama. This diocese took a conspicuous part in the civic celebration of the bi-centenary of the foundation of the City of Mobile, 26 February, 1911. In the presence of His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop Blenk, of New Orleans, and all the bishops of the archdiocese, a pontifical Mass was sung in the historic cathedral by Bishop John W.

Shaw, a native of Mobile, and at that time Bishop of San Antonio, but since raised to the dignity of Archbishop of New Orleans. In the afternoon there was a great demonstration in honor of the anniversary, a parade of Catholic laymen taking place, which in numbers had never before been equaled in this city. The celebration was directed by the present bishop, Rt. Rev. Patrick Allen, who was consecrated by Cardinal Gibbons on 16 May, 1897. In his address the cardinal spoke a word of praise for the splendid work Bishop Allen had accomplished, and for the spiritual and temporal benefits which he felt would be gained for the diocese by his marked interest in this event.

During the same year the Rev. C. T. O'Calloghan, D. D., who had been vicar general of the diocese during four administrations, died on 5 October. On 7 February, 1915, Rev. Henry O'Grady, Dean of North Alabama and for several years missionary to the non-Catholics of the Diocese of Mobile, died in Birmingham, and in 1918 Rev. Wm. Demony, one time secretary to the Papal Delegate, Mgr. Bonzano, an author of considerable promise, died on 8 December. On August 11, 1921, the diocese was shocked by the murder of one of its priests, Rev. James E. Coyle, by a Protestant minister. Father Coyle was Dean of North Alabama, and a model priest, zealous in the performance of his duty, and a noted writer, with some poems also to his credit. Upon trial the murderer was dismissed without punishment.

During the World War the diocese of Mobile responded generously to the needs of the country, with a full quota of priests serving as chaplains and numbers of young men in the service; 42 of these gave up their lives, either in action or through sickness.

The Diocese of Mobile comprises a Catholic population of 46,512, of whom 5266 are colored. It includes 63 parishes, 48 missions, 1 monastery for men, 1 convent for men, 71 secular priests and 72 regulars, 9 Brothers of the Sacred Heart, 19 Benedictine and 5 Jesuit Brothers, 1 seminary with 26 seminarians, 1 high school with 5 teachers and an attendance of 146 boys, 8 academies, and 1 industrial school. A number of the priests devote themselves to various missionary works, and a home is maintained for the evangelization of the colored people as well as three orphan asylums and seven hospitals; all public institutions permit priests to minister in them. The Clergy Relief Society is organized, as well as the Knights of Columbus, the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and the Holy Name Society; a Catholic monthly is published by St. Paul's Church in Birmingham.

Modena, ARCHDIOCESE OF (MUTINENSIS; cf. C. E., X—13a), in Emilia, Northern Italy, was united perpetually in 1821 with the Abbey of Nonantola, a former Benedictine monastery and prelatrice nullius. The present bishop is Mgr. Natale Bruni, born in Nociviglia, diocese of Piacenza, 25 December, 1856, elected 17 December, 1900, to succeed Mgr. Borgognoni, deceased. During the War the clergy opened a casa del soldato in the archepiscopal palace and the seminary was used as a military hospital. According to 1919 statistics, there are in the diocese 220,400 Catholics, 179 parishes, 455 secular and 50 regular priests, 60 seminarians, 20 lay brothers, 244 Sisters, 450 churches or chapels.

Modernism (cf. C. E., X—421).—In reply to a query whether the regulations contained in the motu proprio "Sacrorum Antistitum" and the encyclical "Pascendi" of Pius X were revoked by the Code, the Holy Office replied on 22 March, 1918, that these anti-modernistic precautions were still in force and were to continue so until the Holy See decreed otherwise.

Modigliana, DIOCESE OF (MUTILENSIS; cf. C. E., X—421a), in the province of Florence, Northern Italy, suffragan of Florence. The see is filled by Rt. Rev. Ruggero Bovelli, born in Pantalla, Italy, 1875, served as vicar general of Todi and was appointed 5 August, 1915, to succeed Rt. Rev. Luigi Capotosti, transferred to the titular see of Thera 22 January, 1915. The Catholic population of this diocese is recorded by 1920 statistics as 40,000; the diocese comprises 83 parishes, 146 secular and 16 regular clergy, 40 seminarians, 7 Brothers, 99 Sisters and 114 churches or chapels.

Modjeska, HELENA, actress, b. at Cracow, Poland, on 12 October, 1840; d. at Bay City, California, on 8 April, 1909; daughter of Michael Opid, a high-school teacher and talented musician. She studied at St. John's Convent, Cracow, and at an early age gave proof of her histrionic talent. On leaving school she made an enthusiastic study of the Polish patriotic writers, especially of the great poets Mickiewicz, Slowacki, and Zaleski, and also of Shakespeare, by whom she was fascinated. In 1857 she married Gustave Sinnmayer Modrzejewski, a theatrical impresario. A few years later she decided to follow the stage and joined a travelling company. In 1865 she came under the guidance of Jasinski, a noted stage director in Warsaw, and achieved a decided success at Cracow in Schiller's "Don Carlos." A little later her husband died, and on 12 September, 1868, she married Count Karol Bozenta Chlapowski. The following month she appeared in the Imperial Theatre, Warsaw, and, playing "Adrienne Lecouvreur," scored a great triumph, establishing her record as Poland's premiere actress. A few weeks later she had signed a life contract to play at the Warsaw Theatre. Her success, however, raised a hurricane of professional jealousy, and in 1876 she emigrated to California, which was thenceforward her home. She made her first American appearance at San Francisco in 1877, when for the convenience of Americans she modified her name to Modjeska. Her success as Adrienne was immediate. She repeated her triumphs through America in Shakespearean and lighter roles, and then captured England and Ireland, in the latter country, she being a patriot from a sister oppressed nation, was dogged by British secret service agents. Madame Modjeska was most successful probably in the rôles of Lady Macbeth, Mary Stuart, and Beatrice.

Mohileff, ARCHDIOCESE OF (MOHILOVIENSIS; cf. C. E., X—428d), in Russia, with episcopal residence at Petrograd. Most Rev. Vincent Kluczynski promoted to this see 7 April, 1910, retired and was transferred to the titular see of Philippopolis 22 September, 1914. He was succeeded by Most Rev. Edward de Ropp, born in the archdiocese in 1851, ordained in 1886, appointed Bishop of Tiraspol 9 June, 1902, transferred to Vilna 9 November, 1903, exiled by the Imperial Russian Government from 1907 until 1917, and promoted 25 July of that year. He was taken prisoner by the Bolsheviks, but liberated, through the intervention of the Pope and permitted to go to Rome in 1920. The archdiocese has the privilege of three suffragan bishops, residing at Mohileff, Polotsk and Livonia, but at present there is only one, Most Rev. John Felix Cieplak, titular Archbishop of Acheida, who resides at Mohileff. Mohileff is the primatial see of Russia and the metropolitan for all the bishoprics of the Latin Rite, and is the largest archdiocese in the world, comprising three quarters of European Russia and all of Asiatic Russia. It embraces a Catholic population of 747,709, and according to 1920 statistics comprises 171 parishes, 56 filial parishes, 324 secular and 4 regular clergy.

Molfetta, Terlizzi and Giovinazzo, DIOCESE OF (MELPICHENSIS, TERLITIENSIS AND JURENACENSIS; cf. C. E., X—434a), in the province of Bari, Southern Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. These sees are filled by Rt. Rev. Pascale Gioia, appointed 30 September, 1921, to succeed Rt. Rev. Giovanni Jacono, transferred to Caltanissetto 18 March, 1921; the dioceses, although united, each preserves its own rights. According to 1920 statistics Molfetta has 4 parishes, 70 secular and 9 regular clergy, 150 seminarians, 7 Brothers, 10 Sisters and 15 churches or chapels; it comprises the city and commune of Molfetta, a territory of some 50,000 inhabitants. Terlizzi counts 2 parishes, 40 secular and 2 regular priests, 16 churches or chapels and a population of 24,100. Giovinazzo comprises 2 parishes, 37 secular and 6 regular clergy, 34 churches or chapels; 6 Brothers, 24 Sisters and 12,150 inhabitants.

Monaco, principality and diocese, situated on the Mediterranean Sea, covers an area of eight square miles and comprises the towns of Monaco, La Condamine, and Monte Carlo, with a total population (1913 census) of 22,956.

The present ruler, Prince Albert III, was an absolute ruler until 1911, when on 7 January a constitution was promulgated which provides for a National Council elected by universal suffrage and vote by ballot. The Government is carried out under the authority of the Prince, by a Ministry assisted by a Council of State. The legislative power is exercised by the Prince and the National Council, which consists of 21 members elected every four years. The territory of the principality is divided into three communes administered by municipal bodies, in the election of which women are entitled to take part. It has its own coinage (it issues only 100 franc pieces), which is current since 1876 in all the states of the Latin union, and also issues its own postage stamps and has its own flag.

In 1887, by the Apostolic letter of His Holiness Leo XIII, the principality was erected into a diocese directly subject to the Holy See and Mgr. Bonaventure Theuret was appointed its first bishop. He died 11 November, 1901, and the see was vacant, administered by the vicar capitular, Mgr. Guyotte, until 1903 when Rt. Rev. Jean-Charles Arnal du Curel was appointed second bishop of the see. Bishop Curel died 5 June, 1915, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Victor-Augustin Vié, born at Ecrennes 1849, preconized Bishop of Monaco 8 May, 1916, died 10 June, 1918. After Bishop Vié's death the see was again vacant, administered by the vicars capitular, Leon Pauthier (1918-20) and Lazare Perruchot (1920). On 16 December, 1920, the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Georges-Prudent-Marie Bruley des Varennes, was appointed bishop and took possession of the see 25 January, 1921.

By a decision of the Congregation of the Consistory 6 May, 1921, the Archdiocese of Aix was constituted the court of appeal for the Diocese of Monaco, which, though still remaining directly under the Holy See, has been reattached, for its provincial councils, to the metropolitan province of Aix.

The religious orders established in the diocese are: men, Carmelites, Friars Minor, Jesuits, Clerks Regular of the Mother of God, Fathers of the Holy Ghost and Christian Brothers; women, Sisters of the Infant Jesus, Sisters of Bon Secours, Daughters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, Dominican Sisters, Sisters of the Holy Rosary, and Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament. The Christian Brothers have charge of 3 communal schools: 1 at Monaco with 307 students, 1 at La Condamine with 402 students, and 1 at Monte Carlo with 480 students; the Sisters of the Infant Jesus also conduct a communal school in each town, and in addition to these they have 1 boarding school with 145 pupils and 3 day schools at Monaco with 145 pupils, 1 at La Condamine with 100 pupils, and 1 at Monte Carlo with 114 pupils. The charitable institutions comprise 3 infant asylums with a total number of 220 children, 1 orphanage and industrial school under the Daughters of Charity, 1 orphanage, industrial school and school under the Dominicans, and 1 nursery and dispensary under the Daughters of Charity. Various archconfraternities are organized in the diocese, of Penitents, of Our Lady of Assistance, of Christian Mothers, of the Holy Rosary and Third Order of St. Francis.

Among the prominent clergy deceased in recent years are: Mgr. J. B. Guyotte, vicar capitular (d. 1915); Mgr. J. Baud (d. 1917); Mgr. Pierre Mercier (d. 1918); Rev. Demetrius Giannecchini (d. 1919), and Mgr. Léon Pauthier (d. 1920).

Mondónedo, DIOCESE OF (MINFONIENSIS; cf. C. E., X—477a), suffragan of Compostela, Spain. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Juan José Solís y Fernández, consecrated 1907. The diocese has an area of 1622 square miles, 603 parishes divided into 27 arch presbyterates, 403 priests, 410 churches, 512 chapels or sanctuaries, 27 convents, 57 members of religious orders of men, and 213 Sisters. The Catholic population is 275,000.

Mondovì, DIOCESE OF (MONTIS REGALIS IN PEDEMONTE; cf. C. E., X—478a), suffragan of Turin, Italy. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Giovanni Battista Ressa, elected 1897. The Catholic population of the diocese is 170,400. There are 150 parishes, 490 secular priests, 145 seminarians, 12 Brothers, 135 Sisters, 20 regular priests and 1760 churches and chapels.

Mongolia, CENTRAL, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (MONGOLIAE CENTRALIS; cf. C. E., X—482b), in China, with residence at Si-wan-tse, contains a Catholic population of 46,867 and is entrusted to the Congregation of the Immaculate Heart of Mary (Scheutveld). The vicar apostolic, Rt. Rev. Jerome Van Aertsele, b. at Hoogstraten, Belgium 1 November, 1845, titular Bishop of Zarai, has filled this see since 1898. The vicariate numbers (1921) 52 districts, 52 missions with resident priests, 297 stations, 181 churches and chapels, 40 European priests of the Congregation of Scheutveld, 24 native priests (secular) 4 convents for women, 1 seminary with 57 seminarians, 1 college for boys with 90 pupils, 1 for girls with 40 pupils, 28 Franciscan Missionaries of Mary, 267 teachers and catechists (men), 162 (women), 11,135 catechumens, 136 schools for boys, 99 schools for girls, 11 refuges with 541 inmates, 10 orphan asylums with 1495 girls.

On 15 November, 1914, Rt. Rev. Edward Ter Laak was consecrated as coadjutor.

Mongolia, EASTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (MONGOLIAE ORIENTALIS; cf. C. E., X—479b), erected 21 December, 1883, by Leo XIII, who divided Mongolia into three vicariates apostolic, Eastern, Central, Southwestern. The vicariate is entrusted to the Belgian Missionaries of the Congregation of Scheutveld, and embraces the province of Jehol, part of the province of Chi-li lying without the Great Wall, and part of the province of Mukden commonly called Pien. It is bounded on the south by that part of the province of Chi-li beyond the Great Wall; on the west by the vicariate of Central Mongolia; and on the north and east by Manchuria. The climate is severe and dry, especially in the north; in the southern part the heat of the summer and the cold of the winter are intense. Epidemics are frequent, especially typhoid, scarlet fever, influenza, bubonic plague and pneumonia. Many of the newly arrived missionaries succumb to typhoid. The vicariate is divided into 3 districts and subdivided into 25 residences (churches with resident missionaries), whence the priests administer to 151 Catholic centers (single congregations composed of 30 or more members), and to 1581 affiliated localities (with less than 30 Catholics in a single congregation). The total population approximates 5,000,000; the total Catholic population (July, 1921) is 35,031 Chinese. The secular priests are Chinese and number 15; the regular priests (Congregation of Scheutveld) number 38, and are assisted by 1 lay brother. There are 70 churches and chapels, 1 convent for Chinese Brothers of the Sacred Heart, 1 convent for Chinese women living in community, 1 seminary with 29 seminarians, 2 colleges for boys with 138 students, 2 normal schools for girls with 51 pupils, 55 elementary schools for boys with 1360 pupils and 66 for girls with 1641 pupils, 76 catechetical centers with 2627 catechumens, 1 home for men with 32 inmates, and 1 for women with 18 inmates, 14 orphanages with 676 children, 81 orphans in the care of nurses, and 20 in the care of Catholic families. The number of orphans adopted yearly is 127. The sect of Nai-li-ti on 17 November, 1891, martyred Fr. Petro Sin and 60 neophytes and burnt the churches at Pakow and Sanshekiate. In 1900 the Boxers laid waste the entire vicariate with fire and sword. Fr. Joseph Segers, at the age of thirty-two, at the command of the sub-prefect of Lwanpinghsien, was buried alive for the Faith; his cause has been introduced at Rome.

The following are the more recent events of note: 1908, founding of 2 new residences, in Chan-wan-tzen and Kong-ye-fu; 1909, founding of the college for boys in Hata; 1910, founding of a new residence in Ta-ing-tzen in Barin; 1911, epidemic of pneumonia; proclamation of Mongolian independence; 1912, rebellion of the soldiers in Chao-yang-fu; the destruction by fire of the college for boys at Sung-shu-tsoei-tze; battle between Mongolians and Chinese with the latter the victors; 1913, rebellion of the soldiers in Jehol; victory of the Mongolians over the Chinese; Chinese soldiers despoil the church, residences and settlement of Ta-ing-tzen in Barin, and after dispossessing the missionaries and more than 1000 Catholics force them to seek refuge among the churches of the south; 1914, building of the church in Kongil-fou; 1916, founding of a home for aged women in Sung-shu-tsoei-tze; erection of three new residences in Choei-zen-chan, Fang-chenn, and Fong-ning-hein; 1918, famine in Chao-yang-bien; building of the church of Taing-tzen in Barin; 1918-19, death of eight missionaries; 1920, deaths of four missionaries; 1920-21, great famine in Chao-yang-bien.

Since the year 1908 death has claimed from the vicariate eighteen missionary priests, sixteen Europeans, and two Chinese, among whom were the following: Wilhelm Meyer (1838-1909), labored among the missions of the vicariate for forty-three years, delegate of Eastern Mongolia to the general congregation of his order in Europe; Albert Botty (1875-1919), called from the vicariate to become superior general of his order and being forced to resign through sickness returned to the missions as professor of theology in the seminary; John Vyt de Willegen (1866-1911), for nineteen years among the missions of the northern district, of which he was finally elected superior; Ernest G. van Obberge (1875-1919), director of the southwestern district, whose labors of twenty-one years in the vicariate resulted in many converts; Patrick Tchong (1841-1919), a zealous missionary for forty-three years; Marcus Tchao (1869-1920), dedicated to the work of the missions for twenty-one years, rector of the residence of Liukiatze, cruelly put to death by the pagans. Among the laity recently deceased is Joseph Tchong-tchenn-tong, catechist in Chao-yang-bien, whose zeal converted many and whose counsel was sought by both the lowly and prominent, elected president of the council of the civil prefecture, appointed mandarin by the Manchurian government.

Mongolia, SOUTHWESTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (MONGOLIAE OCCIDUO-MERIDIONALIS; cf. C. E., X—482b), in China, with residence at Eul-ches-king-ti, is entrusted to the Congregation of the Immaculate Heart of Mary (Scheutveld). This mission has an approximate population of 2,000,000, of whom 32,072 are Christians, and 16,004 catechumens. Having been modified again 12 December, 1914, it now comprises the territory in the ring formed by the Yellow River and the Great Wall. The vicar apostolic, Rt. Rev. Ludovic Van Dyck, b. 21 January, 1862, ordained 30 May, 1885, was appointed 12 August 1915, titular Bishop of Abbir and Vicar Apostolic of Southwestern Mongolia, consecrated 22 January, 1916. The 1921 statistics credit the vicariate with 187 Christian communities, 33 residences, 154 churches and chapels, 42 European and 6 native priests, 72 native nuns, occupied in the hospitals and schools, 165 instructors and catechists (men), and 126 women instructors, 1 seminary with 2 seminarians, 4 students of philosophy and 42 Latinists, 3 colleges with 120 students, 1 normal school for girls with 21 students, 37 primary schools for boys with 1122 pupils.

Events of special importance include: from 1911-12 the war occasioned on the declaration of the Republic, the massacre of the missionaries and the Christians by the Ko-lao-hoei sect in 1912; the great famine from 1915-1916; the influenza epidemic from 1917-1918, which caused great ravages.

Monopoli, DIOCESE OF (MONOPOLITANA; cf. C. E., X—497a), in Italy, dependent directly on the Holy See. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Agostino Migliore, consecrated titular Bishop of Domitopolis in 1918 and transferred to Monopoli in 1920. The Catholic population of the diocese is 62,503. There are 8 parishes, 137 secular priests, 10 seminarians, and 29 churches and chapels.

Monreale, ARCHDIOCESE OF (MONTIS REGALIS; cf. C. E., X—508a), metropolitan see in the Province of Palermo, Sicily. The present archbishop is Rt. Rev. Antonio Augusto Intreccialaghi, O. C. C., b. 1852, consecrated Bishop of Caltanissetta in 1907, promoted titular Archbishop of Sardica, and coadjutor of the Archbishop of Monreale in 1914, succeeded to the see in 1919 upon the death of Bishop Lancia di Brolo. The Catholic population of the archdiocese is 228,600. There are 30 parishes, 332 secular priests, 66 regular priests, 120 seminarians, 29 Brothers, 94 Sisters, and 218 churches and chapels.

Mont-Laurier, DIOCESE OF.—Erected 26 April, 1913, by separation from the Diocese of Ottawa. The first bishop, François Xavier Brunet, born at St-André d'Argenteuil 27 November, 1868, ordained 1893, elected bishop of Mont-Laurier 6 August, 1913, died in Montreal 7 January, 1922, and was buried in his cathedral at Mont-Laurier 11 January following. Rev. J. E. Limoges, curé of St. Jovite, is administrateur Sede Vacante. The Catholic population is 38,969; the secular priests number 53 and regular priests 13. There are 42 parishes and 42 churches with resident priests, 10 missions with churches, 3 monasteries for men and 7 for women, 1 convent for men and 7 for women, 1 seminary with 13 seminarians and classical college attached with 140 pupils, 217 parochial schools, 1 high school, 7 academies, 1 training school, 1 asylum. The Society of Saint Joseph exists among the clergy. For the laity there are the following associations: Ladies of St. Anne, Union of St. Joseph, French-Canadian Artisans, Catholic Foresters, League of the Sacred Heart. The Government contributes to the support of Catholic institutions.

The Catholic population of the diocese is 39,150. There are 34 parishes, 74 secular priests, 3 regular priests, 10 seminarians, and 85 churches and chapels.

Montalto, DIOCESE OF (MONTIS ALTI; cf. C. E., X—516a), suffragan of Fermo, Italy. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Luigi Ferri, consecrated 1911. The Catholic population of the diocese is 33,500. There are 33 parishes, 75 secular priests, 3 regular priests, 18 seminarians, and 97 churches and chapels.

Montana.—The area of the State of Montana is 146,997 square miles. The population in 1920 was 548,889, an increase of 46 per cent over that of 376,653 in 1910. Of this 31.3 per cent was urban; 64.5 per cent was rural. There were 605,289 native whites (440,640 of native parentage, 101,910 of foreign parentage, 62,919 of mixed parentage), and 93,620 foreign born. The Indians number 10,956, the Chinese 872, and the Japanese 1074. The percentage of illiteracy was 2.3 for the whole State. The largest cities are Butte 41,611; Great Falls 24,121; Billings 15,100; Helena 12,037; Missoula 12,668.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—There are 57,677 farms in the State, with an acreage of 35,070,656. In 1919 Montana raised 7,799,647 bushels of wheat on 1,698,531 acres; 2,583,908 bushels of oats on 191,096 acres; 346,972 bushels of barley on 75,979 acres; 73,824 tons of sugar beets on 8600 acres. The number of farms irrigated was 10,807, or 18.7 per cent, the capital invested being $52,143,363. In 1917 copper to the value of $74,928,283 was produced, silver to the value of $10,817,589, and gold to the value of $3,517,253. The number of cattle in the State is in excess of 200,000; the annual production of wool is about 17,000,000 pounds. Manufacturing is on the increase, for in 1919 there were 1290 establishments, as against 939 in 1914. The number of persons engaged were 20,692; the capital invested $137,476,277; value of products $166,664,518. The principal products were flour and gristmill products, and lumber and timber products; important industries are car and general repair shop construction, and meat packing. The bonded debt of the State in 1921 was $2,852,588; the assessed valuation of real property $1,271,722,246; of personal property $396,301,869. There were in 1918

4913 miles of main line of railway, 205 miles of double track main line, and 1594 miles of branches, etc.

EDUCATION.—The State laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: No public money shall be used in support of any school controlled in whole or part by any sect. Such property as may be used exclusively for educational purposes may be exempt from taxation. Teaching certificates are issued only to citizens or declarants. Any accredited high school may establish normal training courses. In 1920 the 3619 public elementary schools had 5305 teachers and 111,721 enrolled pupils. In the 178 public high schools there were 910 teachers and 14,517 pupils. The school expenditure was $12,904,270. The average monthly salary paid to male teachers in 1917 was $104, and to female teachers $70. The College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts at Bozeman, the School of Mines at Butte, the Normal School at Dillon, and the State University at Missoula (founded in 1895) constitute the University of Montana. In 1919 the State university had 1134 students and 65 instructors, and an income from the State of $280,000, the sum of $60,000 being appropriated for new buildings. According to the Russell Sage Foundation Report (1920) Montana stands first among all the States in percentage of school population attending school, in average number of days, attendance by each child of school age, and in expenditure per pupil for purposes other than teachers' salaries.

RELIGION.—According to the United States census of 1916 there were in the State: Catholics 78,113; Methodist Episcopalians 13,872; Presbyterians 6792; Episcopians 4607; Baptists, North Convention, 4073; Lutherans 9129; Servian Orthodox 2700; Congregationalists 3841; Disciples of Christ 3719; Latter Day Saints 1460; all other denominations 9259. For Catholic religious and educational statistics see HELENA, DIOCESE OF, and GREAT FALLS, DIOCESE OF.

RECENT LEGISLATION.—In 1911 a white slave law was passed, juvenile courts established, and a tuberculosis sanatorium provided for. In 1913 a corrupt practice law went into effect, and in 1917 an eight-hour day law for women was passed. In that year attorneys were required to pay a license fee. Changes were made in the mode of elections, in the taxation laws, and in the mining laws. The Prohibition Act was ratified on 19 February, 1918, and the Federal Suffrage Act on 30 July, 1919.

HISTORY.—As a result of the election in 1916 the distinction came to Montana of being the first State to send a woman to Congress, Miss Jeannette Rankin, of Missoula, being chosen. In 1917 Frank Little, organizer and agitator for the Industrial Workers of the World, came to the State to organize a strike in the mines. The State authorities were about to prosecute him when he was lynched at Butte.

During the European War Montana contributed 36,293 soldiers, or 97 per cent of the United States Army. The State members of the national guard joined the 41st Division at Fremont, California, and those of the national army the 91st Division at Camp Lewis, Washington. The summary of casualties among the Montana members of the expeditionary force was as follows: deceased, 13 officers, 921 men; prisoners, 2 officers, 37 men; wounded, 43 officers, 2426 men.

Montauban, DIOCESE OF (MONTIS ALRANI; cf. C. E., X-524c), Tarn-et-Garonne (France) is suffragan of Toulouse, comprises a Catholic population of 160,000 French and a few hundred Spaniards. The bishop, Rt. Rev. Pierre Marty, b. 31 October, Monte Oliveto Maggiore, ABBEY NULLIUS OF (S. MARIAE MONTIS OLIVETI MAJORIS; cf. C. E., XI-245a), in the province of Siena, Italy, dependent directly on the Holy See. The abbey was the birthplace of the Olivetans, and was founded in 1313 by St. Bernard Tolomeo. The Piccolomini family increased the resources of the abbey, the abbey church being one of the most remarkable in Italy. The abbey was declared exempt from the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Piacenza and erected as an abbey nullius by Clement XIII, 18 Jan., 1765, confirmed as such by Leo XIII in 1899. The present abbot nullius is Dom Mauro Parodi, b. 1856, became abbot 10 Sept., 1917.

Monte Vergine, ABBEY NULLIUS OF (MONTIS VIRGINIS; cf. C. E., X-538d), a Benedictine abbey of the Cassinese Congregation of Primitive Observance, situated in the province of Avellino, Italy. The present abbot nullius is Dom Ramiro Marcone, b. 1882, professed 1898, ordained 1906, became abbot in 1918. The abbey nullius comprises 7 parishes with 9000 souls and 27 secular priests. There are 16 clerics in the seminary. Dependent on the abbey are 3 convents of Sisters. In the Benedictine abbey there are 9 priests, 9 clerics, 3 novices and 8 lay brothers.

Monteagudo, ANNA DE LOS ANGELES, saintly Dominican religious, b. at Arequipa, Peru, in 1602; d. there on 10 January, 1686; daughter of Sebastiano and Francisca (de León) Monteagudo. She was educated in the Dominican convent of St. Catherine of Siena, Arequipa, and later, after overcoming the objections of her parents, she entered the same order, where she reproduced the life of virtue of her sainted countrywoman, Rose of Lima. In 1648 she was appointed mistress of novices, and after a life of virtue she died in the odor of sanctity in her eighty-fourth year. The cause of her canonization was introduced at Rome on 13 June, 1917.

Montefeltro, DIOCESE OF (FERETRANA; cf. C. E., X-528d), in the province of Urbino, Italy, suffragan of Urbino. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Raffaele Santi, b. 1863, elected 1912. The Catholic population of the diocese is 60,350. There are 121 parishes, 173 secular priests, 30 regular priests, 20 seminarians, 24 brothers, 96 Sisters, and 260 churches and chapels.

Montefiascone, DIOCESE OF (MONTIS FALISCICI; cf. C. E., X-529a), in the province of Viterbo, Italy, dependent directly on the Holy See. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Giovanni Rosi, b. 1872, elected 1910. The Catholic population of the diocese is 30,000. There are 17 parishes, 69 secular priests, 16 regular priests, 50 seminarians, 12 Brothers, 80 Sisters, and 77 churches and chapels.

Montepulciano, DIOCESE OF (MONTIS POLITIANI), in the Province of Siena, in Tuscany. The diocese is directly subject to the Holy See. Its bishop, Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Batignani, born in the diocese of Siena in 1856, who came to this see 28 November, 1898, died 9 November, 1921. The population of the diocese numbers about 16,000. There are 18 parishes, 26 churches, 1 monastery (Capuchin), 1 convent for men, 30 secular and 6 regular priests, 3 Brothers, 12 Sisters, 1 diocesan college with 35 students, a conservatory for women with 5 teachers and 20 students, 1 normal school with 8 teachers and 40 students, an elementary school with 18 teachers, 1 asylum, and 1 hospital. During the World War the diocese contributed its quota of priests and men to the army, while the laity and clergy at home took an active part in Red Cross and other war work.

Monterey and Los Angeles, DIOCESE OF (MONTEREYENSIS ET ANGELORUM), comprises the lower part of the State of California. Right Rev. Thomas James Conaty, who filled this see from 27 March, 1903, died at Coronado, Cal., 18 September, 1915, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. John J. Cantwell. Bishop Cantwell was born at Clonmel, Tipperary, Ireland, in 1874, made his studies at the college of St. Patrick at Thurles, was ordained 1899, became vicar general of San Francisco and was appointed Bishop of Monterey and Los Angeles 21 September, 1917. During the World War this diocese sent four chaplains overseas, three others took charge of local encampments, and a good proportion of the men of the diocese went into the service, while the activities of those at home received the commendation of State officials.

The Catholic population has kept pace with the general growth of Southern California, and has increased from 60,000 in 1910 to 190,000 in 1921. New parish schools, Catholic high schools for girls and religious communities have been established in the diocese. The religious communities found here at present are: men, Benedictines, Franiscans, Vincentians, Jesuits, Redemptorists, and Christian Brothers; women, Sisters of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, Sisters of Mercy, of the Good Shepherd, of the Visitation, Little Sisters of the Poor, Missionary Sisters of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, Daughters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, Sisters of St. Joseph of Carondelet, Presentation Sisters, Sisters of St. Dominic, of the Holy Cross, of the Blessed Sacrament, of the Precious Blood, of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary, and Sisters of Notre Dame.

By 1921 statistics there are 164 parishes, 284 churches, 120 missions, 60 mission stations, 8 convents for men, 12 for women, 225 secular and 90 regular priests, 160 Sisters, 1 Franciscan seminary with 54 seminarians, besides 80 diocesan seminarians in other seminaries, 1 college for men with 11 teachers and 420 students, 1 college for women with 18 teachers and 280 students, 10 high schools with 45 teachers and 650 girls, 16 academies with 50 teachers, 40 elementary schools with 110 teachers and 15,000 pupils, 1 industrial school with 6 teachers and 114 students. The charitable institutions include 3 homes for the aged, 8 orphanages, 7 hospitals, 1 settlement house, and 4 day nurseries in Los Angeles. The orphanages receive some aid from the State, and the Sherman Indian School, county hospitals, and the soldiers' home permit the priests to minister in them. The Eucharistic League is established among the clergy, and the Holy Name, National Catholic Welfare Council, and other societies among the laity. A diocesan paper, "The Tidings," is published.

Montesclaros, DIOCESE OF (MONTESCLARENSIS; cf. C. E., XVI—36a), suffragan of Diamantina, Brazil. The first and present bishop is Rt. Rev. João Antonio Pimenta.

Montevideo, ARCHDIOCESE OF (MONTISVIDEI cf. C. E., X—539b), in Uruguay. This see was vacant from 26 September, 1908, when Most Rev. Marín Soler died, until the appointment of the present incumbent 3 July, 1919. Archbishop Soler was the third bishop and first archbishop of this see, and also governed the dioceses of Salto and Melo which are united to the archdiocese. The appointment of a new archbishop was delayed by political troubles and during the vacancy Rt. Rev. Richard Issa, titular Bishop of Anemurium, was appointed administrator. The see is now filled by Most Rev. Juan Francisco Aragone, who was born in Carmelo, Uruguay, in 1883 and served as visitor of the diocese of Salto until his appointment. By a Consistorial decree of 17 June, 1921, a metropolitan chapter was erected here. According to 1920 statistics this territory includes a Catholic population of 964,577, of whom 273,655 are Catholics in the province of Montevideo; it comprises 46 parishes, 7 filial parishes, 122 priests and about 500 churches and chapels.

Montpellier, DIOCESE OF (MONTIS PESSULANT; cf. C. E., X—545a), suffragan of Avignon, France. The diocese has had 76 bishops, the last bishop being Cardinal de Cabrières (q. v.) who died 21 Dec., 1921. At present the see is vacant. The Catholic population of the diocese is 480,484, of whom 80,230 are in the city of Montpellier. There are 43 first class parishes, 103 succursal parishes, and 27 vicarages formerly supported by the state.

Montreal, ARCHDIOCESE OF, metropolitan see of the ecclesiastical Province of Montreal, has as suffragans the five dioceses of Montreal, Saint-Hyacinthe, Sherbrook, Valleyfield, and Joliette, and comprises a Catholic population of 633,538, consisting largely of French Canadians, but with a considerable number of Irish as well as Italians, Poles, Lithuanians, Germans, Ruthenians, Syrians, Armenians, and Rumanians. The diocese of Montreal at the present time (1922) is under the direction of Mgr. Paul Bruchési, consecrated in 1897, assisted by an auxiliary bishop, Rt. Rev. Georges Gauthier. Bishop Gauthier is the successor of Mgr. Racicot, auxiliary bishop, and one time vicar rector of Laval University, d. 14 September, 1915. In 1918 Mgr. Martin, archdeacon of the diocese, died 10 July, and in 1919 the diocese lost two prominent clergymen by the deaths of Mgr. Emile Roy, vicar general (d. 7 April) and the Abbé Troie, superior of Saint Sulpice (d. 15 March).

During recent years this diocese has been the scene of a series of events which demonstrate its steady growth. In 1911 the foundation was laid for the College of St. Jean, and in 1917 the Franciscan Missionaries of Mary arrived in the diocese, followed in 1920 by the Capuchin Fathers. On 29 April, 1919, the cathedral of Montreal became a basilica, and by a Rescript of Benedict XV, on 8 May of the same year, Laval University was made the University of Montreal. During the World War 50,000 men from this territory went into the Canadian Army, and at least one-third of these were Catholic. The diocese gave seven military chaplains, and hundreds of its men were killed at the front while great numbers of others came home wounded.

The present statistics of the diocese show 170 parishes, 170 churches, 13 missions, 4 monasteries for men and 5 for women, 1 abbey for men, 548 secular priests and 362 regulars, 1738 Brothers and 6845 religious women. Under these different communities of women there are 9 mother-houses and 254 other institutions. The educational institutions under the direction of the Church are: 1 theological seminary with 297 students, 1 philosophical seminary with 160 students; the University of Montreal, which, in addition to the various university courses, has connected with it 1 high school with 148 students and 7 religious professors and 2 normal schools, one with 101 boy students and 10 teachers, the other with 249 girl students and 29 teachers. Independent of the university there are 12 professional schools, 424 elementary schools with 25,163 students, 74 model schools with 26,734 students, 70 academies with 31,975 students, 19 independent schools which receive financial aid from the Government, with 2732 students, and 44 which do not receive aid, with 6021 students.

In all there are 2391 religious teachers and 996 lay teachers. The charitable institutions include 55 asylums, 10 hospitals, 26 refuges, and 2 day nurseries, while a great number of the public institutions allow the priests of the diocese to minister in them. Among the clergy a society is organized for the study of social work, as well as associations for the Foreign Missionaries Seminary and the Union of Saint-Jean, an insurance association. Among the laity there are a number of societies formed in each parish, the principal ones being the Association of St. John the Baptist, the Catholic Association for Canadian Youth, and the Society of St. Vincent de Paul. The Catholic press in this diocese is very active, all the papers published in French being Catholic, and the Anglo-Protestant papers being usually in sympathy with the Church. The "Semaine Religieuse," edited by the archbishop, is the official organ of the diocese and has a circulation of many thousands.

Mormons (cf. C. E., X—570c).—I. CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.—According to the United States reports for 1906 and 1916 this organization showed considerable growth in every particular in the United States during the decade. In 1916 it reported 403,388 members (as compared with 205,796 in 1906), 905 church edifices, and contributions of $1,192,980 for missions and benevolences. The total number of ministers was 4790. Foreign missionary work is carried on in Australia, Great Britain, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Scandinavian countries, Switzerland, Mexico, Japan, India, the Society Islands, Africa, Samoa, and many islands of the Pacific. Missionary work in Germany, Austria, and Turkey, including Palestine, was discontinued during the war. In 1916 the church reported in the foreign fields 1183 missionaries, 4679 native helpers, and 75,450 communicants. The president of the Mormon church (1921) is Heber J. Grant.

II. REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.—The death of Joseph Smith, in 1844, was followed by the development of several factions among the Latter Day Saints. According to many it was one of these factions and not the original body which, under the leadership of Brigham Young, settled in Salt Lake City. According to this view the original body was scattered throughout the Mississippi valley. Some of these scattered members and a few congregations that had preserved their identity effected a partial reorganization in Wisconsin in 1853, which was afterwards completed under the name "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." This organization claims to be the true and lawful continuation of and successor to the original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The chief point of doctrinal difference was the repudiation of the revelation of plural marriage. In 1860 they were joined by Joseph Smith, the son of the prophet. He was presiding officer until his death in 1914, when he was succeeded by his son. The headquarters of this church are now at Lamoni, Iowa, although the largest branch is at Independence, Mo.

The two bodies reported, in 1921, 1740 churches, 9790 ministers, and 494,388 members in the United States.

Morocco, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF; (cf. C. E., X—574b).—Morocco is the country which forms the northwest corner of Africa, formerly an independent sultanate but now occupied by Spanish and French troops. The country is today in an unsettled condition and there has been considerable fighting with the Moors in the Spanish zone, which lies on the Mediterranean; the French have a protectorate over a large part of the country and a small section in the extreme northwest which includes Tangier (Tanger), the most important port, is a neutral zone. The mission in Morocco (Marreucos) dates from the thirteenth century. In 1219 St. Francis of Assisi sent five of his order to evangelize the Moors. The five Franciscans were martyred in the city of Morocco (Marrakich) in 1220. For reasons completely foreign to the Franciscan order the mission suffered a short period of decadence but was restored in the year 1630 by the martyr St. Juan de Prado, from Andalusia. In 1677 the Franciscans were expelled by the Sultan Muley Ismael, but they returned in 1688 to take up their work. From that date the Mission continued to flourish until the secularization of the religious orders in Spain, when the Mission was almost extinguished, only two missionaries being left in Morocco. In 1859 the Mission was restored and a college was established in Cuenca for missionaries to the Holy Land and Morocco. This college was transferred in 1862 to Santiago de Compostella, where it exists today. With this aid the Mission experienced more favorable years, the prefecture apostolic was restored, and continued until 1908, when it was raised to a vicariate. Father Francisco Maria Cervera, O. F. M., who had been prefect since 1896 was made vicar and titular bishop of Fessee, with residence at Tangier.

The vicariate contains 22 quasi-parishes; 30 churches; 15 chapels and oratories; 42 stations; 1 convent with 13 religious; 69 regular priests (Franciscans); 100 secular priests (chaplains); 36 lay brothers; 158 Sisters; 9 schools for boys, 19 teachers, 1500 pupils; 8 schools for girls, 17 teachers, 1400 pupils; 4 schools for small children, 5 teachers, 200 pupils; 2 Franciscan Colleges for secondary education, 1 Marist, 1 Marianist; schools for catechists with 1186 pupils; 1 higher school in Tangier where the missionaries give a course in law, 3 hospitals. There are numerous schools sustained by the different Governments, some of which the missionaries visit and explain Christian doctrine to the students. There are numerous institutions for both sexes, ten of which are religious, the others are charitable and under the vigilance of the missionaries. There are numerous daily papers which have a Catholic character but are independent of the Mission. The Mission possesses a printing establishment, where many works of importance are printed and edited. The missionaries have also an official meteorological observatory.

The indigenous element of the country is composed of five distinct races, Moors, Arabs, Berbers, and negroes, who profess the religion of Mohammed, and the Jews. There are besides numerous foreigners of different European and American nationality. The area is about 496,990 square miles and the population is estimated at 10,000,000, which include 300,000 Hebrews, 100,120 Catholics, and the rest, excepting a few Protestants, are Mohammedans.

Among the recent missionaries of especial note who have died is Father José Tuchundi, prefect apostolic from 1877-96, an excellent religious, a worthy superior, diplomat and Arabist. He took part in numerous diplomatic errands, the most important of which was when he carried Sultan Muley Hassan's felicitations to Pope Leo XIII at his sacerdotal jubilee in 1888. He wrote many works concerning the Arabs, facilitating to the Spanish the study of their language. His funeral was attended by the consular and diplomatic services of the different nations and an immense crowd of Christians, Moors and Jews, who venerated him as a scholar and saint.

The French part of Morocco has been separated and entrusted to the French Franciscans, whose superior, Father Marie-Lucien Dane, is vicar general of that district for Mgr. Cervera.

Mossul (cf. C. E., X—598d), in Asia Minor, the seat of a Chaldean archdiocese, a Syrian diocese, and an Apostolic mission. The Chaldean patriarch, resident in Mossul, is His Excellency Emmanuel Joseph Thomas, b. 1852, ordained 1879, elected Bishop of Scerth 1890, promoted to the Chaldean patriarchate of Babylon 1900. In the Chaldean archdiocese there are 31,900 Catholics, 46 secular priests, 39 regular priests, 27 churches and chapels, 17 schools, and 2 stations. The Syrian bishop is Rt. Rev. Gregory Peter Habra, b. 1856, elected 1901, succeeding Bishop Bermi, deceased. In the Syrian diocese there are 7100 Catholics, 50 priests, 20 religious, 2 convents, 20 churches, 10 schools for boys and 5 schools for girls. The Apostolic mission is confided to the Dominicans. The superior, Dom Berre, O.P., appointed 1907, was transferred in 1921 to the Latin Diocese of Bagdad. A new superior has not yet been appointed. Under the Latin Rite there are about 53,000 Catholics, administered to by 23 Dominican priests.

Mostar and Markana-Trebinje, DIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., X—590c), in Herzegovina, Yugoslavia, formerly, with Bosnia, part of Austria-Hungary. The diocese of Mostar, suffragan of Serajevo, has also the title of Duvno, a former see, and the perpetual administration of the united sees of Markana and Trebinje. Rt. Rev. Louis Stephen Misic, O.F.M., b. at Gradiska, in this diocese, 10 November, 1859, was elected 29 April, 1912, and consecrated in Rome 18 June to succeed Mgr. Butonjic deceased. Mgr. Paschal Bueonjic, O.F.M., Bishop of Mostar, who had labored for many years in the diocese, and Father Didaens Buntic, a scholar who had done a great deal for the orphans and poor boys of the diocese, have died since 1910.

The population is Croatian and for Bosnia-Herzegovina the religious allegiance is 827,061 Greek Schismatics, 583,233 Mohammedans and 437,778 Catholics. The Catholic population of the city of Mostar is 4079 from a total of 16,313, that of the diocese 149,000. There are 62 parishes, 32 churches, 2 missions, 3 Franciscan monasteries, 5 convents for women, 15 secular and 88 regular priests, 1 seminary, 2 colleges for boys and 2 for girls, 4 normal schools with 460 students, 2 industrial schools, 1 hospital, 1 day nursery, 1 political (twice a week) and 2 religious papers, a sacerdotal association, the Third Order of St. Francis and Marian Congregation for the laity. The Government pays 10 dollar a year for each pupil in the Catholic schools of the diocese. Nine new parishes, 9 parish churches and 5 orphanages have been erected since 1910.

Mota proprio (cf. C. E., X—602).—If a rescript in reply to a petition contains the clause mota proprio, it is valid, even when the petition did not tell the whole truth, but it is invalid if there was only one final cause advanced and it was false; however, even under such circumstances a dispensation from a minor matrimonial impediment is valid. A rescript granted mota proprio to a person who by canon law is disqualified from obtaining the favor in question, or if it is contrary to a legitimate local custom, private statute, or acquired right is ineffective, unless it expressly contains a derogating clause.

Moulins, DIOCESE OF (MOLINENSIS; cf. C. E., X—603d), in the department of Allier, France, suffragan of Sens. Rt. Rev. Emile-Louis Lobbedey, appointed to his see 5 August, 1906, was transferred to Arras 5 May, 1911, and his successor was appointed in the person of Rt. Rev. Jean-Baptiste Penon. Born in Simiane, France, in 1850, he was ordained in 1873, served as a professor at the lower seminary of Aix and the Catholic College, pastor, vicar general under Archbishop Gouthé-Soulard, and made an honorary canon and vicar capitular, denied the office of vicar general by the Government, named pastor-dean of St. Rémy of Provence in 1904, of St. Madeleine of Aix in 1906, and appointed bishop 8 May, 1911. The diocese comprises a Catholic population of 406,291, 31 parishes, 281 succursal parishes and 55 vicariates formerly supported by the state, (1920 statistics).

Mount St. Vincent, COLLEGE OF, was established in 1910 at the mother-house of the Sisters of Charity, at Mount St. Vincent under the direction of these Sisters. The institution was founded for the higher education of Catholic young women, and has a faculty of 19 professors and 8 associate professors with a member of the community as dean, and classified as follows: clergy 7, religious 8, lay 12. There are in all eight college buildings, including well equipped laboratories, gymnasium, library, museum, and art studios. The Most Rev. Patrick J. Hayes, D.D., Archbishop of New York, is president of the college. In 1921 the college registered 175 students, of whom 25 were graduated.

Mozambique, PRELATURE NULLIUS OF (MOZAMBICENSIS; cf. C. E., X—610d), in the Portuguese colonies of South Africa, directly dependent on the Holy See. The present Prelate Nullius is Rt. Rev. Joachim Pitinho, of the Friars Minor, to whom this territory is entrusted, appointed titular Bishop of Augusta 16 December, 1920. The statistics of 1920 credit the territory with 177,060 Catholics, 6 secular and 6 regular clergy, and 10 parishes.

Muenster, ABBEY NULLIUS OF, in Saskatchewan (Canada). This abbey was erected in 1892 under the name of Cluny, in Illinois, was transferred to Canada in 1903 under the name of St. Peter, and made an abbey 15 August, 1911. On 6 May, 1921, the Sacred Congregation of the Consistory dismembered the Diocese of Prince Albert and the "Colony of St. Peter," comprising fifteen townships with the parishes of Muenster, Humboldt, Annaheim, Dead Moose Lake, Fulda St. Benedikt, Leofeld, Bruno, Engelfeld and Watson, was formed into an abbey nullius and entrusted to the Abbot of the Benedictine Monastery of St. Peter, near Muenster.

The present administrator is Abbot-Ordinary Michael Ott, O.S.B., b. 18 March, 1870, professed 24 June, 1889, ordained 29 June, 1904, appointed abbot 23 July, 1919, made abbot nullius in May, 1921, proclaimed at the Sacred Congregation of the Consistory, 13 June following.

According to (1922) statistics there are: 12 parishes, 24 churches, 15 missions, 2 stations, 1 monastery for men, 1 abbey for men, 5 convents for women, 3 secular and 17 regular clergy, 5 lay Brothers, 54 nuns, 1 seminary, 1 college for men with 60 boys, 3 academies with 125 girls, 69 elementary schools with 85 teachers and 2500 pupils, 1 hospital (St. Elizabeth's Hospital). Associations organized among the laity: Knights of Columbus, Foresters, Volkverein. The Catholic periodicals published are: St. Peter's Bote, German Catholic Weekly, published by the O. S. B. of St. Peter's Abbey. The Catholic population numbers about 10,000 Germans, chiefly settlers from the United States.

Mulholland, ROSA. See GILBERT, LADY.

Mulry, THOMAS MAURICE, American banker and philanthropist, b. 1855, New York City, d. there in 1916. He was second son among fourteen children. Four of his brothers became priests in the Society of Jesus and a sister joined the Sisters of Charity. He was educated at St. Joseph's parochial school and De La Salle Academy. He became a contractor at the beginning of his business career, and in his maturer years he became an influential figure in banking, real estate, life insurance, religious and official circles. In 1906 he was elected President of the Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank, New York, one of the largest banks of its kind in the world, and held this position until his death. He is perhaps most widely known for his work as an ardent worker in the St. Vincent De Paul Society, New York City, of which he became President, and of his general activities in charitable work of all kinds. He was a member of the Charity Organization Society of New York, of the State Board of Charities, of the Board of Managers and its president for many years, of the Manhattan State Hospital for the Insane; one of the founders and president of the Fourth State Conference (1903) of the New York State Conference of Charities and Correction, etc. He wrote a number of papers upon charitable matters, characterized by soundness of judgment, practicality, wide sympathy and a trenchant and lucid style.

Mun, ADRIEN-ALBERT MARIE, COMTE DE, French statesman and orator, b. at Lumigny, Seine-et-Marne, on 23 February, 1841; d. at Bordeaux, on 6 October, 1914. The future modern crusader of the Church in France was the great-grandson of Helvetius, the materialist philosopher whose writings did so much injury to religion, but his mother was the saintly Eugénie de la Feronnays, sister of Mme. Augustus Craven. He graduated from Saint-Cyr, served in the cavalry in Algeria and was decorated for bravery in the Franco-German War, in which he was captured. While imprisoned at Aachen with his fellow-officer, René de la Tour du Pin, he heard with deep interest of Bishop von Ketteler's social work. After his release he was adjutant to the military governor of Paris during the Commune. Reflecting on the horrors he was witnessing, he blamed these fundamentally on the neglect by the rich and the educated of the social duties imposed on them by the Christian Law. His Catholic patriotic soul was stirred; henceforth his life and talents were devoted to two objects: to save France from being undermined by the anti-militarists and anti-clericals and to strengthen it to resist future aggression; and the social regeneration of France and the betterment of the workers by activities and legislation based on Christian principles. In 1872 with La Tour du Pin and Eugène Meignan, he founded at Belleville the first of the famous Cercles Catholiques d'ouvriers (Catholic workingmen's clubs), in which the workers could meet for social enjoyment and also participate in lectures and conferences on social and religious topics, the programme and principles of which were set forth in their review, "L'Association catholique." Under the influence of de Mun and Léon Harmel, the Council of studies of the Cercles catholiques gradually advanced beyond the Le Play and Périn conservative schools of Catholic sociology, emphasizing the necessity of social legislation, approaching the programme of the German, Austrian and Swiss Catholics. They were subjected to a very vigorous attack by the Périn school aided by Mgr. Freppel for some years, but finally the de Mun-Council of Studies program was approved by the International Congress of Catholic sociologists at Liège in 1890.

To give himself up to this work de Mun resigned from the army in 1875 and was elected from Pontivy (Morbihan) in 1876 as deputy to the French Chamber, where he was to reveal his intense patriotism and his great oratorical gifts for so many years. He has the glory of initiating beneficial legislation for the working-class, even before the Swiss Government invited the nations to confer on this matter. He is found advocating legislation to bring about the joint association of labor and capital as early as 1872; the Sunday day of rest, old age pensions and sickness insurance in 1886; the eight-hour day, prohibition of child labor, the forbidding of woman labor in certain unhealthy and dangerous work in 1889. How conformable his social programme was with the principles of Christian morality and justice is apparent from the fact that so many of his proposals find expression in the programme of reform laid down by Pope Leo XIII in his Encyclical "Rerum Novarum" (cf. Moon, op. cit. infra, 163-65). He unhesitatingly accepted the Encyclical of Leo XIII in 1892, directing Catholics to accept the Republic as a fait accompli, this act cost him his seat at Pontivy, but he was soon returned to the Chamber from Morlaix (Finistère). In 1897 he was elected to the French Academy. In 1901 he became vice-president of the new Popular Liberal Party, which the religious intolerance of Waldeck-Rousseau's Government had forced the Social Catholic deputies to found in order to safeguard democratic political liberty and carry out their plan of Christian social legislation. He continued to warn the Socialists and the pacifists, who were the mainstay of the anti-clerical politicians, that while they could find time to attack religion and destroy the Catholic schools they were not only neglecting the opportunity of aiding the workmen but by their unpatriotic policies were rapidly bringing about the collapse of France. Filled with patriotism, he declared to them that Agadir, Algéciras, Tangiers and Casablanca proved that war with Germany was inevitable, and that they were neglecting preparations. It was only shortly before the cataclysm, however, that the government listened to his warnings. When old age rendered public speaking more difficult for him, de Mun redoubled his efforts with his pen. When the war began his daily articles in the Écho de Paris nerved his countrymen, and his cheery messages to the soldiers in the midst of the initial disasters, inspired them with the thought that they had still God and Joan of Arc with them; and with the Marne victory, he announced to them that their final triumph was assured. He died four weeks later just after penning his last daily message of hope. Among Comte de Mun's published works are: "Discours et écrits divers" (7 vols.); "Ma vocation sociale"; and "Combats d'hier et d'aujourd'hui"; "Contre la séparation"; "La loi des suspects"; "Les congrégations religieuses devant la Chambre."

Munich, UNIVERSITY OF.—The number of matriculated students at the University of Munich during the Winter term 1920-21 was 8395, of whom 897 were women. To these may be added 1030 non-matriculated auditors (hörer) and 230 non-matriculated women auditors (hörerinnen). The total number of students was 9565.

Munich-Freising, ARCHDIOCESE OF (MONACENSIS ET FRISINGENSIS; cf. C. E., X-631a), in Bavaria. His Eminence Franz Cardinal Bettinger, who filled this see 1909-17, was chiefly responsible for the present organization of the diocese. Under his direction the Kirchengemeinde-Ordnung was formed to collect funds for the establishment of new parishes and the building of new churches. He gave particular attention to the care of Catholic youth, with which object he encouraged Dr. Michael Buchberger in the foundation (1910) of the Katholischer Jugendfuerser orge-Verein and took a firm stand against the enemies of the Church in the press by the spreading of Catholic writings and the foundation of the Catholic Press Organization of Bavaria, the growth of which was largely due to the efforts of Dr. Lewis Müller of Munich.

During the World War the spiritual welfare of the Bavarian troops was directed from the diocese of Munich and all orders came from the archbishop, who acted as field bishop of the army.

There were 83 division clergymen in the service and 154 chaplains; from the archdiocese of Munich-Freising alone there were 33 chaplains in the field, 80 in hospitals at home and 30 more in other kinds of service. Over 200 seminarians from the archdiocese served and of these 101 were killed.

Cardinal Bettinger did much for the religious needs of the Catholic soldiers in the line and in 1917, with the approval of King Ludwig III, he dedicated Bavaria to the Blessed Virgin Mary. He died suddenly on 12 April, 1917, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Most Rev. Michael Faulhaber. Archbishop Faulhaber was born at Klosterheidenfeld 1869, ordained 1892, professor of theology in the University of Munich, appointed Bishop of Speyer 1911, and promoted to the Archdiocese of Munich 24 July, 1917. He was nominated cardinal 7 March, 1921. Rt. Rev. John Neudecker, titular Bishop of Helenopolis, was appointed auxiliary to the archbishop in 1911 and in 1921 Rt. Rev. Aloysius Harthl, titular Bishop of Germanica, was also made an auxiliary.

The various religious orders established in this diocese are: men, Benedictines with 4 abbeys and 2 colleges, 90 Fathers, 25 scholastics and 139 Brothers; Franciscans with 5 convents, 58 Fathers, 35 scholastics and 51 lay brothers; Capuchins with 5 convents, 57 Fathers, 11 novices and 44 lay brothers; Carmelite Friars with 8 Fathers, 2 novices and 4 lay brothers; Minorities with 3 Fathers and 3 lay brothers; Redemptorists with 28 Fathers, 31 scholastics and 20 lay brothers; Augustinians with 3 Fathers and 6 lay brothers; Missionaries of the Sacred Heart with 3 Fathers and 6 lay brothers; Salvatorians with 3 Fathers and 6 lay brothers; Jesuits with 32 Fathers and 18 lay brothers; Salesians with 3 Fathers and 1 lay brother; Marist Brothers with 7 Brothers and 30 scholastics; Mission Seminary of the Pallottines with 3 Fathers, and the Brothers of Mercy with 38 friars and 13 oblates; women, Benedictines, Servites, Brigittines, Carmelites, Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, English Ladies of the Institute of Mary, Dominicans, Franciscans, Sisters of St. Joseph, of St. Crescentia, of the Good Shepherd, Poor School Sisters, Ursulines, Sisters of the Most Holy Redeemer, of the Holy Cross, of St. Paul, and Sisters of St. Elizabeth.

The archdiocese is divided into 36 deaneries, 3 town commissariats, 442 parishes, 205 benefices and 113 districts with their own clergy. By 1921 statistics there is a Catholic population of 1,193,150 and a total number of 1666 priests; 438 pastors, 205 invested beneficiaries, 749 other secular priests and 274 regulars. There are 113 mission churches, 30 monasteries for men, 3 convents for men and 312 for women, 4 abbeys for men and 1 for women, 363 lay brothers and 4698 nuns. A lower seminary in Scheyern has 176 students and one in Freising has 200 students and in addition to these there are the archiepiscopal seminary in Freising with 138 students, the Georgianum with 100 students, of which only 18 belong to this diocese, 1 seminarian from this diocese at the German College at Rome, and 7 at the Canisianum at Innsbruck.

A Catholic Union for parents has been established by Cardinal Faulhaber and there are numerous other unions for the clergy, for teachers, students, young men and women, working men and women, and servants, as well as the St. Vincent de Paul Society and St. Elizabeth's Guild.

Munkacs, DIOCESE OF (MUNSHASIENSIS RUTHENORUM; cf. C. E., X—634b), in the Republic of Czechoslovakia, of Greek-Ruthenian Rite is suffragan of Esztergom, with residence at Ungvar, and comprises a Catholic population of 440,000 Russian-Ruthenian speaking Greek-Ruthenian Catholics and 20,000 Hungarian speaking Catholics. The see is filled (1922) by Rt. Rev. Antonin Papp, b. 17 November, 1867, ordained in 1893, chancellor, later vicar general of Munkacs, prothonotary apostolic 3 January, 1905, appointed titular bishop of Lyrba and coadjutor, 29 April, 1912, consecrated 15 October, proclaimed 2 December following to succeed Mgr. Julius Firczak, b. 22 August, 1836; d. 2 June, 1912; founder of the Actio Ruthenica, for the faithful of his diocese.

According to 1922 statistics the diocese numbers 321 parishes, 683 filial parishes, 680 churches, 400 secular and 12 regular priests, 5 monasteries for men, 15 lay brothers, 1 lower seminary, 5 colleges for men, 2 boarding schools for girls, 450 normal schools with 490 teachers and 35,000 students. The Government pays all the teachers' salaries. The associations organized among the clergy are the Eucharistic League and the Society for the Conversion of Schismatics; among the laity: Sodality of the Holy Rosary and that for the Adoration of the Sacred Heart of Jesus. Four periodicals are published.

Important members of the clergy recently deceased were Michael Balogh, formerly vicar in Maramaros-Sihob, who made great efforts for the promotion of culture in his vicariate and died in 1916. Dr. Alexander Mikita, canon, professor of theology and founder of a Catholic periodical, d. in 1910. Joannes Turjay, canon, a great benefactor, d. in 1914. Colomanus-Georgius Zeatkovich, historian, author of several dissertations on the history of the diocese of Munkacs, d. in 1920. Andrea Dudits, pastor and former member of the House of Deputies in Budapest, d. in 1921; among the laity: Ignatius Roskovics, an artist, who restored the domestic chapel of the lower seminary in Uzhorod. Events of importance include the reform of the Order of St. Basil the Great, establishment of the Order of Nuns of St. Basil the Great (Basilissae), convocation of the diocesan synod, and the institution of retreats for the clergy of the diocese.

During the World War five priests died fighting for their country, and the clerics in the military hospitals deserve great credit and praise for their work for the widows and orphans of the diocese.

Münster, DIOCESE OF (MONASTERIENSIS), in the Prussian Province of Westphalia, suffragan of Cologne. From 1891 to 1911 the diocese passed through a period of great prosperity under the wise care of Bishop Hermann Dingelstadt (b. 1835; d. 1911). Attracted by the flourishing industries throughout the diocese, the number of Catholics increased from 875,000 to 1,520,000. Bishop Dingelstadt established 53 new parishes and erected and enlarged 130 churches. Prompted by great zeal for the care of souls, he increased the devotion to the Blessed Sacrament by introducing perpetual adoration. The sodalities, especially the Society of Christian Mothers, received a new impetus; a diocesan synod was held at which diocesan statutes were enacted. His successor, Rt. Rev. Felix von Hartmann (b. at Münster 15 December, 1831), who as spiritual councillor for eleven years and vicar general for six merited for himself the respect and esteem of all who knew him, was to hold the office for only a short period of time. He was elected Bishop of Münster 6 June, 1911, and administered the diocese until 29 October, 1912, when he was named Archbishop of Cologne by the cathedral chapter of Cologne.

The present administrator, Rt. Rev. Johannes Poggenburg, b. at Ostbevern, 12 May, 1862; elected 7 May, 1913, consecrated 16 October, 1913, had been pastor in the manufacturing centers, diocesan president of the young men's societies, president of the preparatory seminary, Collegium Ludgerianum, and vicar general, and was well fitted to undertake the exacting duties of bishop of this extensive diocese, in which there are 444 parishes, 444 churches, and 47 succursal churches. In 1921 the Catholics numbered 1,695,147; other denominations 837,196. Of the 1404 secular priests 1121 are engaged in parochial work and 155 in teaching. There are 166 regulars and 350 lay brothers, 19 monasteries and 1 abbey for men, 7 convents of contemplative orders with 325 Sisters and 6 mother-houses of various orders of nuns. Of these two orders having 190 houses are engaged in caring for the sick, three teaching orders have 150 houses, 1 convent for the education of the nuns for foreign missions. These orders have 52 houses in other German dioceses, and 162 outside of Germany. Twelve orders, whose mother-houses are not situated in the diocese of Münster, have 61 houses in this diocese engaged in the care of the sick and in educational work.

The diocesan seminary is at Münster. The University of Münster is a state institution and has thirteen professors in the theological faculty. Among the state-aided secondary schools there are: 1 diocesan gymnasium with 10 clerical professors, 15 gymnasia, 35 municipal gymnasia, 51 secondary schools of various kinds for boys, either public or private, 68 secondary schools for girls, either public or private, 6 Catholic normal schools, 135 public and private continuation schools, industrial, commercial, and agricultural. The common elementary schools are denominational municipal schools under the supervision of the Government. Religious instruction for the most part is given by priests. There are 4 diocesan shelters (3 for boys, 1 for girls), 1 institution for epileptic women and girls, 17 hospitals which belong to parishes or political organizations, and 33 homes for visiting nurses scattered throughout the diocese. The following religious societies exist in the diocese: 180 young men's societies under the direction of priests, 300 Marian sodalities for young men, 90 journeymen's unions (Gesellenvereine), 40 merchants' associations, 109 men's associations, 12 working girls' unions, 12 servant girls' associations, 325 congregations of Catholic young men, and there are Christian mothers' societies in all parishes.

During the war 50 priests volunteered as nurses. Later they were appointed war chaplains and worked with great zeal and self-sacrifice. The members of the various charitable organizations (Elizabeth Verein, St. Vincent de Paul Society, Christian Mothers and the Knights of Malta) unselfishly gave their services to relieve the misery and distress of the war. Beside the nuns of the nursing orders, countless young women offered their services as voluntary nurses. The bells and chimes of numerous churches were requisitioned by the Government during the war.

Muro-Lucano, DIOCESE OF (MURANENSIS; cf. C. E., X—646b), in the province of Petenza, Northern Italy, suffragan of Conza. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Scarlata, born in the diocese of Caltanissetta in 1859, served as pastor of Villalba, named a prelate of the Holy See 10 November, 1910, and appointed bishop 27 November, 1911, succeeding Cardinal Ascalesi, transferred to Santa Agata dei Goti, 19 June, 1911. According to 1920 statistics this diocese embraces a Catholic population of 40,180, 11 parishes, 85 secular priests, 48 seminarians and 72 churches or chapels.

Murphy, JOHN BENJAMIN, b. near Appleton, Wisconsin, 21 December, 1857; d. at Mackinac Island, Michigan, 11 August, 1916, distinguished surgeon and teacher of medicine; son of Michael and Ann (Grimes) Murphy. He graduated from the public high school of Appleton, taught school for a year, and then took up the study of medicine at Rush Medical College, Chicago, where he obtained his degree in 1879. He served as an intern in Cook County Hospital, and then for two years was a partner of Dr. Edward Lee, one of the attending surgeons in the hospital. He used the first money obtained in his practice to go to study in the European hospitals, especially in Vienna, where he worked under Billroth, Albert, Fenger, and others. The spirit of investigation was rife in Europe. Within a few years Koch had introduced cultures of bacteria, Laveran described the parasite of malaria, Woelfler was introducing gastro-enterostomy, and Hahn had done the first nephropexy, while Murphy's own teacher Billroth was revolutionizing the surgery of the stomach.

Murphy came back to America inspired to go on with original work. In his early thirties he invented the anastomosis button which made the hitherto very difficult surgery of the intestines not only possible, but even easy. It came to be known by his name throughout the world and at once called attention to his opening career. Though no longer used it literally changed the whole aspect of intestinal surgery. After this his studies in the possibilities of surgery of the gall tract opened up new fields for investigation and achievement, and he did excellent pioneer work and stimulated others to follow him. He next took up the problem of repairing injured blood vessels or bringing them together in such a way as to leave them patulous and without necessarily shutting off the circulation to a part. Then following an Italian suggestion of some years before Murphy took up the problem of setting tuberculous lungs at rest by injections of nitrogen into the pleural cavity. This method had not attracted attention in America until Murphy emphasized its possibilities, but it has since been employed continuously in many parts of the country for selected cases, and is considered a life-saving procedure. Still looking for further fields of surgical development he took up the study of joint diseases, with great benefit to many cripples. These cases had to be studied individually and could not be grouped or generalized, but Murphy showed the possibilities of affording great relief and making life ever so much more livable for these poor cripples.

It is as a teacher almost more than a surgical operator that Doctor Murphy deeply influenced the surgery of our day not only in America, but also in Europe. His first teaching position was that of instructor in surgery in Rush Medical College in 1884. He next filled the position of professor of surgery in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1892. For two years he was professor of surgery and co-head of the department in Rush Medical College. For the next fourteen years, with the exception of the two years (1905-1907 at Rush), he was head of the Department of Surgery at Northwestern University Medical School. For more than thirty years he had been attending and then consulting surgeon at Alexian Brothers' Hospital, and was consulting surgeon for St. Joseph's Hospital, Columbus Hospital, and the Hospital for Crippled Children. He was for many years the attending surgeon and chief of staff at Mercy Hospital, where most of his important surgical work was done.

Doctor Murphy's reputation as a surgeon of the greatest skill whose technique and methods of operating were enabling him to accomplish results secured by no one else soon spread, and literally physicians from all over the country crowded to his operating room in Chicago to see him work. They could be quite sure that they would see some surgery done in a new way that would be adopted by others before long. His work was thoughtful, suggestive, and eminently valuable for practical men. As he operated on his patients—they were never cases to him—he talked freely to the group of physicians and students who followed him. No wonder that these graduate students felt that they would like to follow Doctor Murphy's lessons when they could not be present in person, and so after a time arrangements were made to have his talks taken down and printed for distribution, under the title of the "Doctor Murphy Clinics." These soon had a wide circulation and were in demand from the surgeons not only of this country, but of Europe and from the medical libraries all over the world.

Honors soon came to Doctor Murphy from many different quarters. In 1902 the University of Notre Dame awarded him the Lætare Medal; in 1905 he was given the degree of LL.D. by the State University of Illinois; the University of Sheffield, England, conferred the degree of D.Sc. in 1908; and St. Ignatius College that of M.A. He was a life member of the Deutsche Gesellschaft für Chirurgie, an honorary member of the Société chirurgicale de Paris, an honorary fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and a charter member of the American College of Surgeons. He was president of the American Association of Railway Surgeons, the Chicago Medical Society, the American Medical Association, and the Clinical Congress of Surgeons of North America. Pope Benedict XV crowned Doctor Murphy's life work by making him Knight Commander of the Order of St. Gregory in 1916.

Probably the best idea of Doctor Murphy's greatness as a surgeon will be secured from the oration in surgery delivered before the American College of Surgeons at Montreal on 11 October, 1920, by Sir Berkeley Moynihan, the leading English surgeon of our time. He said of him: "Murphy was beyond question the greatest clinical teacher of his day. . . . It is easy now to see how great a figure he was in the world of surgery of his day. When all his work is reviewed, when not only its range, but the wonderful sincerity and the permanent and piercing accuracy of so large a part of it are considered; when we remember his unequalled gifts as teacher, his power of lucid exposition and of persuasive or coercive argument, his devotion for many years at least to experimental research, it is no exaggeration, I think, to say of him that he was the greatest surgeon of his time." His great American colleague and friend, Dr. William J. Mayo of Rochester, Minn., in delivering the second John B. Murphy Oration in Surgery before the American College of Surgeons (1921) said: "The Great War brought to a close a period of scientific surgery, of which Dr. John B. Murphy was the most brilliant exponent. Murphy was a voluminous writer and greatly enriched surgical literature. By these printed pages posterity will know him, but to those of us who have been inspired by his magnetic personality and who have, with rapt interest, followed his clinical teachings, visible evidences of the printed page are but the ghost hovering over the grave of the greatest surgeon of the last generation."

Mush, DIOCESE OF (MUSCENSIS ARMENORUM; cf. C. E., X-647d), a see of the Armenian Rite in Upper Armenia, at present vacant. It comprises a total population of 160,000, of whom 95,300 are Christians and 65,000 of this number, Armenian Catholics. These are served by 7 secular and 2 regular priests, 7 churches or chapels, 5 stations and 5 schools with 300 pupils. The last bishop, Rt. Rev. Jacques Tapouzian, was put to death by the Turks during their massacre of Armenians from June to August, 1915, and his body was cut to pieces. He was born in Baghgiagik, Turkey, in 1855, ordained in 1879, served as vicar general and was appointed bishop 27 August, 1911.

Mykonos, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See NAXOS AND TINOS.

Mysore, DIOCESE OF (MYSURIENSIS, cf. C. E., X-661d), in India, suffragan of Pondicherry, with residence at Bangalore, is entrusted to the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris. The Catholic population is composed of 1571 Europeans, 5925 Anglo-Indians, and 49,093 Indians. The recent bishop, Rt. Rev. Hippolyte Teissier, b. 8 November, 1853, appointed 22 August, 1916, consecrated at Bangalore 24 January, 1917, died 28 January, 1922. The see at present is vacant. The diocesan statistics for 1922 are: 31 parishes; 128 churches; 2 missions; 51 stations; 63 secular priests; 2 convents for men and 8 for women; 8 lay brothers; 322 Sisters; 1 seminary (native) with 53 seminarians; 2 colleges for men with 52 teachers and 1174 pupils; 1 college for women with 20 teachers and 300 pupils; 2 high schools with 18 teachers and an attendance of 322 girls; 3 secondary schools with 32 teachers and 609 students, 2 training schools with 7 teachers and 65 students, 60 elementary schools with 100 teachers and 4222 pupils, 3 industrial schools with 12 teachers and 150 pupils; 1 home for the aged with 125 inmates, 10 orphanages with 646 boys and girls; 2 hospitals; 3 dispensaries; 4 refuges for women with about 300 inmates; 5 Christian settlements or villages; 4 nurseries. Religious communities of women in charge of educational and charitable institutions are the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, Sisters of St. Joseph of Tarbes, Sisters Catechists of Mary Immaculate, and Little Sisters of the Poor. About one-fourth of the schools are aided by the government; all the others are supported by the mission. One society is organized among the clergy: the Indian Clergy Fund. Among the laity are the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, St. Anne's Temperance Society, Cooperative Societies and Benefit Fund, libraries, clubs, St. Anthony's Society in aid of the Poor Whites. One Catholic periodical is published, the "Angel of the Good Shepherd." The Civil and Military Hospitals and Military Schools admit the ministry of priests. Noteworthy of clergymen deceased since 1910 were Rt. Rev. Augustin François Baslé, d. 13 Sep., 1915, and Rt. Rev. Eugene-Louis Kleiner, d. 1915. The headquarters of the Apostolic Delegation for India, Burma, and the Strait Settlements has been established at Bangalore. During the World War 10 priests were mobilized, several receiving decorations for their bravery, and 369 former students of the college joined the colors of whom 27 were killed. Many of the Catholic Indians served in France, Egypt, and Mesopotamia.

N

Nabik, DIOCESE OF (NABIKENSIS SYRORUM), in Syria, was erected by a decree in 1921 for the Syrian Rite, and is suffragan of Damascus. The bishop has not yet been appointed.

Nagasaki, DIOCESE OF (NAGASAKIENSIS, cf. C. E. X—667c), on the south-eastern shore of the Island of Kiushiu, Japan, is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Jean-Claude Combaz, who succeeded to the see upon the death of Mgr. Cousin, d. 20 September, 1911, after forty-five years of fruitful work in the Japanese episcopacy. Bishop Combaz, who is a member of the Foreign Missions of Paris, was born at Saint-Béron in the diocese of Chambéry 8 December, 1856, and studied at the seminary of Pont-de-Beauvoisin, entering the Foreign Missions in 1877. In 1880 he was sent to the Japanese Mission and became a professor in the Seminary of Nagasaki. He was elected Bishop of Nagasaki 3 June, 1912, and consecrated the following 8 September.

In 1912 the mission mourned the death of Mgr. Bonne, director of the Seminary of Nagasaki for thirty years and afterwards Archbishop of Tokio, and within the last few years the mission has lost fifteen of its missionaries and four Japanese priests. During the World War its ranks were still further depleted by the mobilization of eleven missionaries, one of whom was killed at Champagne, one received the médaille militaire as well as the croix de guerre, and four others received croix de guerre and many other citations.

According to the 1920 census of the diocese there is a Catholic population of 57,499 as against 47,104 in 1910. The personnel of the mission is: 1 bishop, 22 missionaries, 29 diocesan priests, 440 native catechists entrusted with the instruction of the Christian communities, 18 native catechists entrusted with the instruction of infidels, 20 itinerant baptizers (female). The mission auxiliaries engaged in works of charity and education are: 38 Brothers of Mary, 11 of them foreigners, including 2 priests and 27 Japanese; 27 Sisters of the Holy Child Jesus (Chaufailles), of whom 15 are Japanese; 36 Franciscan Sisters (Missionaries of Mary), of whom 17 are Japanese; 19 Sisters of St. Paul of Chartres, of whom 13 are Japanese; and 12 communities of native women with 227 members. The establishments include 48 mission stations with residences; 38 sub-stations; 165 Christian communities; 77 blessed churches and chapels; 54 unblessed oratories and chapels; 1 seminary with 31 students; 2 schools for female catechists; 1 apostolic school with 57 pupils (7 novices; 50 Brothers of Mary); 1 college with 600 pupils; 2 high schools (boarding) with 257 students; 2 primary schools with 178 pupils, 2 professional schools with 62 pupils; 2 kindergartens with 323 children; 13 orphanages with 281 children, 12 asylums with 942 inmates; 1 farm with 30 employees; 5 work houses with 134 workers; 1 leper asylum with 56 patients; 9 dispensaries which have cared for 27,333 patients in the year, besides nursing done in the homes, and 1 home for the aged. The Brothers of Mary have the direction of the apostolic school and the college, and the other institutions are under the care of the Sisters of the Holy Child Jesus, Franciscan Missionaries of Mary or the Sisters of St. Paul of Chartres. The administrative statistics for the year ending 15 August, 1921, are: baptisms of adults 407 (116 in articulo mortis, 4 Protestants); infants 2596 (402 in articulo mortis); annual confessions 34,479; Paschal communions 33,489; Holy Viaticums 619; extreme unctions 712; marriages 524; known deaths 1032; increase 1160.

Associations are formed among the clergy for saving the children of the diocese from the hands of pagan instructors whenever possible. There is no Catholic periodical published in the mission, but a great number of religious books have been printed.

Nagl, FRANZ XAVER, Cardinal, Prince Archbishop of Vienna, b. there on 26 November, 1855; d. there on 4 February, 1913, after wearing the scarlet robes for two years. He made his academic studies at Krems and Seitenstettin, was trained in theology at Sankt Pölten and ordained on 14 July, 1878. He continued his studies in his native land and in Rome, returning to Austria as professor of exegesis. In 1855 he was imperial and court chaplain and spiritual director of the Augustinum at Vienna and from there returned to Rome as rector of the Austrian ambassadorial church, S. Maria dell' Anima Teutonorum, of which he wrote a history on the occasion of its fifth centenary. In 1902 he was made Bishop of Trieste-Capo d'Istria, where he had the difficult task of managing two conflicting races, the Italians and Slovenians. After seven years of this hardship he was promoted to the coadjutorship of Vienna, with the right of succession to Cardinal Gruscha, the incumbent of the see. In 1911 Cardinal Gruscha died and Bishop Nagl succeeded to the dignity of archbishop and cardinal.

Nagpur, DIOCESE OF (NAGPLORENSIS; cf. C. E. X—669a), in India, suffragan of Madras. The see is filled by Rt. Rev. François Etienne Coppel, O. S. F. S., b. at Gets 5 January, 1867, ordained 6 July, 1890, vicar at Devizes and Malmesbury in England, arrived at India 2 July, 1892, superior of St. Francis de Sales College at Nagpur, appointed 22 June, 1907, consecrated 15 September, 1907, proclaimed 19 December following, to succeed Mgr. Etienne Marie Bonaventure, b. 26 April, 1851; d. 12 March, 1907. The diocese has (1922) a total population of 15,000,000 of whom 19,000 are Catholics, 7 churches, 33 chapels, 16 head-stations, 37 priests and 4 Brothers of the Missionaries of St. Francis de Sales, 6 Franciscan missionary Brothers, 50 Sisters of St. Joseph, 22 Daughters of the Cross, 1 seminary, 5 high schools with 1395 pupils, 5 intermediate schools with 625 pupils, 1 industrial school with 80 pupils, 5 primary schools with 815 pupils, there are about 100 schools connected with the missions to the pagans, 1 conference of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, 1 poor house with 100 inmates, 8 charitable dispensaries, 11 orphanages for boys and girls connected with the schools.

Nagy-Várád (ORADEA MARE-GROSSWARDEIN), DIOCESE OF (MAGNO-VARADINENSIS; cf. C. E. VII—40a)

—This diocese which contains dioceses of both the Latin and Greek Rumanian rites, lay in the old kingdom of Hungary, but since the division of Hungary, subsequent to the treaty of St. Germain, nearly half the diocese lies in territory ceded by Hungary to Rumania. Statistics of 1920 give the diocese 158,329 Latin Catholics, 164,495 Greek-Rumanian Catholics, 203,966 Schismatics, 103,835 Lutherans, 527,710 Calvinists, 911 Unitarians, 53,292 Jews and 1,289 of other religions.

Latin Rite.—The Latin diocese with cathedral chapter at Nagy-Varad is a suffragan of Kalocsa (Hungary). The bishop is Count Nicholas Széchenyi, born at Sopron, Diocese of Győr, 6 January, 1868, elected Bishop of Győr 1911, to succeed Mgr. Szmrecsanyi, who died in 1908. Since the installation of Bishop Széchenyi many churches and schools have been erected at the cost of 10 million crowns. The sick and wounded soldiers during the war were cared for by the clergy and for many months nine wounded officers were nursed and fed in the episcopal residence. Soldiers on the march were fed and entertained, and the sick nursed, over 25 million crowns being advanced for this purpose by the bishop, chapter, and diocesan foundations.

The diocese counts (1922) 79 parishes, 87 churches, 4 monasteries for men and 1 for women, 2 convents for men and 10 for women, 137 secular and 45 regular priests, 159,000 Catholics, 1 seminary with 16 seminarians, 3 high schools with 24 teachers and 250 students, 90 normal schools with 124 teachers and 5,780 pupils, 2 industrial schools with 6 teachers and 70 pupils, 4 homes for the aged poor, 3 orphanages, 1 hospital, 5 day nurseries and 2 diocesan periodicals.

Greek-Rumanian Rite.—The diocese of the Greek-Rumanian Rite is suffragan to Fogaras in Transylvania (Rumania). The see is at present vacant, as the last bishop, Demetrius Radu, born at Tompohaza, Diocese of Fogaras 16 October, 1862, elevated to Lugos 3 December, 1896, transferred to Nagy-Varad 25 June, 1903, assistant at Papal throne 5 December, 1903, and senator, was killed by a bomb in the Rumanian senate at Bukarest 9 December, 1920. The episcopal seat is at Oradea Mare (Nagy-Varad). There are (1922) 164,495 Catholics, 199 secular priests, 179 churches, and 24 convents of men and women, having in all 307 members.

Namaqualand, GREAT, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (MAGNI NAMAQUALAND; cf. C. E., X—268b), in South Africa, comprises an area of 119,970 square miles, formerly belonging to Germany, and since the World War assigned to Great Britain. The prefecture was erected 7 July, 1909, by separation from the Vicariate Apostolic of Orange River, as Germany was unwilling to negotiate with Mgr. Simon, Vicar Apostolic of Orange River, because he resided at Pella on English territory. New limits were assigned to the prefecture, 2 June, 1913. It is entrusted to the Oblates of St. Francis de Sales of Troyes, and the present prefect apostolic is Rt. Rev. Stanislas Krolikowski, appointed 1910. There are in the Prefecture Apostolic 5 mission stations with a church and resident priest, four with a Sisters convent as well. There are over 50 secondary stations which are visited several times every year. There are 8 priests (O. F. S.), 2 clerics, 2 lay brothers (O. S. F. S.), 10 sisters (O. S. F. S.), 8 native catechists, 1 seminary, 5 schools for native children and 4 orphanages.

Names of Jesus and Mary, SISTERS OF THE HOLY (cf. C. E., X-678c).—Since 1911 38 new establishments have been founded, 28 in Canada and 10 in the United States. This expansion has necessitated the formation of four further provinces, raising the number to eleven. Mother Martin of the Ascension, after two terms of ten years, was superseded by Mother Marie de Bon Secours (1916), re-elected by the Fifteenth General Chapter of the Congregation (October 6-16, 1921), as Superior General. The provincial headquarters, located in Portland, Ore., were transferred in 1911, with the provincial novitiate, to Marylhurst, Oswego, Ore., the provincial house, New York, was removed from Schenectady to Albany in 1912. A College of the Holy Names in Oakland, Cal., chartered 1918, began work as junior college 1915, full college 1918. In the Diocese of Valleyfield, Que., a normal school controlled by the R. C. Board of Education, Quebec, was confided to the Sisters of the Holy Names in 1911, by Rt. Rev. J. M. Emard; it supplies teachers for rural and other schools. Among notable members recently deceased are: Mother M. Stanislas (Virginia Duhamel), ex-Superior General, whose connection with the administration from the outset (1853-1912) helped to shape the spirit of the Institute, Mother M. Thais (Thais Lacoste), Mother M. Lawrence (Pamela Lafontaine), and Sister Thomas Aquinas (Annie Fagan), all three widely known as educators in Canada and the United States during nearly half a century. The Congregation numbers (1921): professed sisters, 1920; novices, 104; postulants, 114; establishments, 168; pupils (June, 1921), 40,743; colleges, 2; normal schools, 4; residential, select, and parochial schools, 162.

Namur, DIOCESE OF (NAMURCENSIS; cf. C. E. X—679a), contains the provinces of Namur and Luxembourg in Belgium, and is a suffragan of Malines. The German army advanced on Namur 19 August, 1914, and on 23 August the forts around the city fell into the enemies' hands. Later the entire diocese was occupied by hostile troops.

Rt. Rev. Thomas-Louis Heylen, O. Præm., born at Casterle, 5 February, 1856, entered the Premonstratenseans 1875, ordained 11 June, 1881, elected abbot of Tongerlo 1 June, 1887, and was appointed Bishop of Namur 23 October 1899, president of the permanent committee of the Eucharistic Congress (1901), assistant at the Papal throne and Roman Count (1910), and officer of the Order of the Crown of the Congo. Bishop Heylen defended his people and faith fearlessly in personal and written protests to the German authorities throughout the occupation of Namur (August, 1914–November, 1918), he maintained the rights of patriotism in his churches and applied himself to relieving pain and suffering among the deported French and the population of the occupied French territories adjacent to his diocese, as well as his own people. For his many works for God and country, the bishop has been made a Grand Officer of the Order of Leopold by the King of the Belgians (18 July, 1919); cited in the Order of the Army by the French Republic and awarded the croix de guerre with palm (5 January, 1921); on 17 January, 1922, he was made an honorary commander of the civil division of the Order of the British Empire; also named honorary canon of Reims in August, 1920, by Cardinal Luçon, and the citizens of Namur bestowed on their bishop the title of "Defender of the City."

One hundred and sixteen priests and seminarians were mobilized, 27 of whom were chaplains and 89 ambulance men or hospital attendants; 9 died in battle and 17 were wounded. Among the priests who remained in the occupied territory 17 were massacred by the German army in August, 1914, and 91 devoted themselves especially to sustain confidence and patriotism or took an active part in the service of espionage. Among the distinctions attained were 111 citations in orders of allied armies or the country, 6 chevaliers of the Order of Leopold, 3 with palms; 8 chevaliers of the Order of the Crown, 3 with palms; 19 chevaliers of the Order of Leopold II, 8 with palms; 36 Belgian croix de guerre; 5 military medals of 2d class; 47 medals of the Yser; 19 croix civiques of the 1st class, 8 of the 2d class, 1 of the 3d class; 5 medals of King Albert; 1 chevalier of the Legion of Honor (French); 2 French croix de guerre; 4 medals of la reconnaissance française; 4 British war medals; 1 Italian croix de guerre; 1 medal of St. George, 2d class and 1 of 4th class (Russian); 110 commemorative medals and 116 Victory medals.

In the diocese there are 583,722 Catholics, in 36 deaneries with 726 parishes and 911 churches, 6 abbeys for men and 7 for women, 37 convents for men and 63 for women, 1,316 secular and 557 regular priests, 345 lay brothers, 3,113 religious women (a great number of communities of French religious refugees in Belgium have re-entered their own country).

The diocesan seminary at Namur has 103 seminarians, while at the preparatory seminaries at Bastogne and Floreffe are 416 students. The seminary at Floreffe was damaged during the war by the German troops who occupied it but the havoc has been repaired and the old abbey now shelters 18 priests professors and 184 students. There are 17 colleges and establishments for ancient and modern classical studies for boys, among which the best known are the Jesuit college at Florennes, which has 20 professors and 150 students, the College Notre Dame at Bellevue-Dinant and the College St. Joseph at Virton. Other schools include a secondary school for girls, attached to the University of Louvain, with 10 professors and 65 students; 7 middle schools for boys with 1,866 students; 27 for girls with 3,660 students; normal schools, 2 for boys with 30 professors and 250 students, 4 for girls with 68 professors and 440 students; 3 professional and industrial schools with 471 students; 424 free primary schools with 27,678 pupils, many of which are subsidized by state or local government.

There are 5 houses for retreats; 2 asylums for the insane, 4 for the aged and 1 for the deaf and dumb; 3 hospitals and 8 refuges. The ministry of priest is allowed in all State institutions. Eleven religious journals are published and the work of the Bonne Presse is organized in many parishes. There are three organizations among the clergy and many and varied associations among the laity.

Nancy and Toul, DIOCESE OF (NANCEIENSIS ET TULLENSIS; cf. C. E., X—680b), comprises the Department of Meurthe-et-Moselle, France, and is a suffragan of Besançon. Rt. Rev. Charles-François Turinaz who came to the see in 1882 d. 19 October, 1918. He was born at Chambéry in 1838, made his clerical studies at the French seminary, Rome, was ordained in 1862, elected Bishop of Tarentaise 1873, transferred 30 March, 1882; in 1913 he was made titular bishop of Antioch in Pisidia, while retaining the title of Nancy. During his episcopate he brought all the activities of his diocese to a magnificent state of development and during the war was known as "the old lion of the frontier." He was succeeded in 1918 by Rt. Rev. Charles-Joseph-Eugène Ruch, b. at Nancy in 1873, ordained in 1897, vicar general in 1907, made coadjutor of Nancy and titular bishop of Gerasa in 1913. He was a military chaplain throughout the war and by a Decree of the Consistory (1917) was named inspector in ordinary of mobilized priests. He was transferred to Strasburg in 1919 and succeeded (5 February, 1920), by the present bishop, Rt. Rev. Hippolyte de la Celle, b. at Beaune, diocese of Moulins, 1863, ordained 1886, honorary vicar general at Moulins in 1910. The statistics of 1920 credit Nancy with a population of 503,810 inhabitants, 486 parish churches or chapels, an upper and lower seminary, 756 priests, 3 ecclesiastical colleges, 21 convents, 5 of which are mother houses, 18 hospitals. The work accomplished by the bishops, priests, and nuns of Nancy during the years of the war is described in the "Livre d'Or" (published 1920). Six societies are carried on among the laity, apart from the usual parochial associations, and among the clergy there is an association of Prayer for Deceased Priests.

Nantes, DIOCESE OF (NANCEIENSIS; cf. C. E., X—681c), comprises the entire Department of Loire-Inférieure, France, and is a suffragan of Tours. Bishop Rouard, who governed the diocese from 1896, died 10 Feb., 1914, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Eugène-Louis-Marie Le Fer de La Motte, b. at St. Servan, Diocese of Rennes, 1867, ordained 1891, elected in May, 1914, and enthroned in August before his consecration (15 November), because of the war. The diocese has (1922) 262 parishes with churches, 1 abbey for men, 886 secular priests, 7 monasteries for women, 3 convents for men, 30 for women, 2 seminarians with 334 seminarians, 4 colleges for boys with 86 teachers, and 1074 students, 1 training school with 5 teachers and 50 pupils, 379 elementary schools with 40,366 pupils. Missionary work is being carried on by the diocesan Missionaries of the Immaculate Conception. The population was given as 666,748 in 1916. The Apostolic Union is organized among the clergy and there is a diocesan branch of La Jeunesse Française. The Catholic periodicals in circulation in the diocese are "L'Echo de la Loire" (daily), "La Semaine religieuse," "L'Echo de Primboeuf," "L'Ami de la Verité" (weekly). Three hundred and eighty-five priests were mobilized during the war and 155 seminarians. Of these 36 priests and 34 seminarians died, 5 were decorated with the Legion of Honor and 98 priests and 36 seminarians received the croix de guerre.

Naples, ARCHDIOCESE OF (NEOPOLITANSIS; cf. C. E., X—686d), in Southern Italy, is under the administration of His Eminence Cardinal Giuseppe Prisco, b. in Naples 8 September, 1836, professor of philosophy at the seminary and chancellor of the archdiocese created cardinal deacon of St. Casarius in Palatio, 30 November, 1896, passed to the order of cardinal-priests after his appointment as Archbishop of Naples, 24 March, 1898, took the title of San Sisto, consecrated by Pope Leo XIII, 29 May, 1898, succeeding Mgr. Sarnelli di Giorani, deceased. Cardinal Prisco was made vicar of the Pope for the sanctuary of Our Lady of Pompeii at Valle Pompei. Statistics for 1920 credit the archdiocese with a Catholic population of 600,000, 106 parishes, 1875 secular and 800 regular priests, 150 seminarians, 150 Brothers, 2000 Sisters, 1105 churches or chapels. On 18 January, 1916, the name of the sanctuary of Our Lady of Sorrows, commonly known as al Fiumicello, was declared pontifical. The church of St. Anthony the Abbot was restored to the Constantinian Order 13 December, 1916.

Napo, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (NAPENSIS; cf. C. E., XVI—84d), in Ecuador. The vicariate is entrusted to the Jesuits, and Very Rev. André Perez, S.J., is superior of the mission. The administrator apostolic is Rt. Rev. Emile Cecco, a Josephite, appointed in 1921. The vicariate comprises the provinces of Archidona and Avila, with a Catholic population of 9000 divided into 18 centers, with 9 churches.

Nardò, DIOCESE OF (NERITONENSIS, cf. C. E., X—703d), in the province of Lecce, Southern Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. It is governed by Rt. Rev. Nicola Giannattasio, b. 17 January, 1871, appointed Bishop of Nardo, 30 November, 1906, proclaimed 29 April, 1909, to succeed Bishop Giuseppe Ricciardi, b. 10 June, 1839, d. 18 June, 1908. On 7 December, 1916, Bishop Giannattasio refused promotion to the Archdiocese of Otranto. The Catholic population of the diocese is 80,373. There are 16 parishes, 77 churches or chapels, 133 secular and 8 regular clergy, 53 seminarians, 10 Brothers, and 24 Sisters. Our Lady of the Assumption is the patron of the cathedral chapter.

Narni and Terni, UNITED DIOCESES OF (NARNIENSIS ET INTERAMENSIS; cf. C. E., X—704a), in the province of Perugia, Central Italy. The present administrator is Rt. Rev. Cesare Boccoleri, b. 1875 in Rapollo, elected at the Consistory of 13 June, 1921, consecrated at Rapollo 29 June, enthroned at Terni 11 December, and at Narni 18 December following, to succeed Mgr. Francesco Moretti, promoted to the titular see of Laodicea of Theodoriade. Narni has a Catholic population of 32,600, 41 parishes, 46 secular and 9 regular clergy, 73 churches and chapels. Terni has a population of 34,000, 16 parishes, 26 secular priests, 39 nuns, 54 churches and chapels.

Nashville, DIOCESE OF (NASHVILLENSIS; cf. C. E., X—704d), has made great progress since 1910 in the erection of schools, rectories, institutions and churches. The new Cathedral of the Incarnation at Nashville stands as a monument to the energy of the present bishop, Rt. Rev. Thomas Sebastian Byrne, D.D. In 1916 a great fire which destroyed the eastern section of the city, wiped out St. Columba's parish and the Home for the Aged Poor under the Little Sisters of the Poor. However, through the untiring work of the bishop, a new church, school and rectory soon replaced the old parish buildings, and a fire-proof building was erected on new property for the Little Sisters, at a cost of $200,000, of which $50,000 was subscribed through a campaign conducted entirely by non-Catholics. In 1917 a thoroughly equipped hospital building was erected adjoining and forming a part of St. Thomas' Hospital, which is now considered one of the foremost hospitals of the South. In 1920 St. Mary's Home for Incurables was opened under the Sisters of St. Francis, and there have been numerous other additions throughout the diocese.

The opening of the mission field in East Tennessee was a most important step in its progress. The first mission center was established in Johnson City and is now in charge of the Dominican Fathers. It provides missionaries for the contiguous counties, and chapels have been erected in all important towns. A second center was opened at Harriman, and a third at Cleveland, both in charge of the diocesan priests. From these centers priests work throughout the mountain districts of Tennessee ministering to the scattered Catholics and meeting with notable success in the conversion of non-Catholics.

During the World War priests and people responded generously and ten of the total number of men of this section who gave up their lives were Catholics. The Catholic population of the diocese numbers 23,015, of whom 4500 are Italians, 150 Syrians and the rest American negroes or whites. The 1921 statistics show 30 parishes; 58 churches; 28 missions; 129 stations; 42 secular priests and 16 religious; 21 teaching Brothers; 328 Sisters. The educational institutions include: 1 college for men with 19 teachers and an attendance of 320; 12 high schools with 52 teachers and an attendance of 481; 5 academies for girls with 729 students; 2 training schools for nurses with an attendance of 125; 32 elementary schools with 122 teachers and an attendance of 5126; 2 industrial schools with an attendance of 150. Missionary work is carried on through the East Tennessee missions and the Society for the Propagation of the Faith. The charitable institutions include: homes for the aged poor under the Little Sisters, and for incurables under the Franciscan Sisters; 2 asylums; 2 hospitals; 1 House of the Good Shepherd and a free medical clinic. The Eucharistic League is established among the clergy and the Holy Name Society, Knights of Columbus, Ancient Order of Hibernians and Young Men's and Young Ladies' Institutes are established among the laity. A Catholic periodical called the "Columbian," is published at Nashville and the "Catholic Journal of New South" at Memphis.

Natal, DIOCESE OF (NATALENSIS; cf. C. E., XVI—36b), in the State of Rio-Grande do Norte, was erected 11 November, 1909, by the dismemberment of the Diocese of Parahyba, of which it is suffragan. The boundaries are, on the North and East the Atlantic Ocean, on the South the State of Parahyba and on the West and Northwest the State of Cera, covering an area of about 21,936 sq. miles. It is governed by Rt. Rev. Antonio Dos Santos Cabral, b. 8 October, 1884, studied at the seminary of Bahia, ordained 1 November, 1906, vicar then rector of Propria, chancellor of the cathedral 4 August, 1912, private chamberlain 15 October, 1914, appointed 1 September, 1917, proclaimed 10 March, 1919, succeeding Mgr. Joachim-Antonio de Almeida, transferred to the titular see of Lares. It contains a Catholic population of 500,000, (80,000 natives) and 28 parishes.

Natal, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF; (cf. C. E., X—707d), in South Africa. This vicariate underwent a complete transformation in the course of 1921, a portion of its territory being cut off by a decree of 27 July, and erected into the vicariate of Mariannhill (q. v.), and another portion by a decree of 27 August being separated to form the prefecture of Zululand (q. v.). As a result of this division the total population of Natal has been reduced to 1,100,000 and the number of Catholics to 12,000 (Europeans 6500, Asiatics 1500, Natives 4000). There are at the present time 23 parishes and churches and 15 stations, 36 priests, 350 nuns, 11 teaching Brothers and 3 lay brothers. The religious orders represented at present are the Oblates of Mary Immaculate, Dominicans, Servites, Marist Brothers, Sisters of the Holy Family, Augustinian Sisters, Sisters of Nazareth, Franciscan Sisters, Dominican Sisters of Newcastle and Dominican Sisters of Oakford. The institutions include 1 convent for men, 16 for women, 1 college for boys with 10 teachers and 310 students, 7 for girls with 82 teachers and 1900 pupils, 12 elementary schools, with 98 teachers and 2500 pupils, boys and girls, 4 asylums and 4 hospitals. Ten of the schools and hospitals receive government assistance. A needle-work guild, the St. Vincent de Paul Society, and the Ladies of Charity are organized among the laity. Ten priests, all of them Oblates of Mary Immaculate, were mobilized during the late war, and five of them received different decorations. Rev. Fr. de Louet received the British War Cross, Fr. Kerautret, the British military medal, Fr. Maingot, the Médaille des Epidémies, and the French croix de guerre, Fr. Garrigon the médaille militaire, the French croix de guerre, the Queen's Medal, and the British War Cross, Fr. Vialard, the French croix de guerre. Two years and a half ago, at a meeting held in Durban on the occasion of Bishop Delalle's jubilee celebration, the idea of the foundation of a Catholic newspaper for South Africa was expressed by Fr. Sormany, O. M. I., and highly approved by the bishops and clergy assembled. Fr. J. O'Donnell, O.M.I., visited the Transvaal and the Cape Colony in connection with the scheme and twelve months later the "Southern Cross" was an accomplished fact.

Natchez, DIOCESE OF (NATCHESIENSIS, cf. C. E., X—704d), in the State of Mississippi, is under the administration of the Rt. Rev. John E. Gunn, who succeeded to this see upon the death of Bishop Heslin on 22 February, 1911. Bishop Heslin had filled the see of Natchez for twenty-two years and during that time he had given special attention to the development of parochial education and established a parish school in nearly every parish of the diocese which had a resident priest, besides directing the building of a number of the largest churches in the diocese.

Bishop Gunn is the sixth Bishop of Natchez and was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1863, and educated in Ireland and Rome. He was ordained for the Society of Mary in Rome in 1890 and was professor of Theology, Washington, D. C., from 1892-98. He was pastor of Atlanta from 1898 until his consecration, 29 August, 1911. During his administration he has made the mission schools and chapels his special work and up to the present time (1921) has added 45 chapels and increased the number of children in Catholic schools from 5000 to 7000. He was instrumental in securing a government-built school for the Choctaw Indians and in getting the Belgian Missionary Fathers to take charge of the Mississippi Indians, and under his guidance the Fathers of the Divine Word opened a preparatory seminary at Bay St. Louis for the training of colored boys for the priesthood. Bishop Gunn is known as the bishop of poor churches and especially of the colored, the Indians and the abandoned white Catholics of Mississippi.

In addition to Bishop Heslin the diocese has lost several well known clergymen in recent years; Dr. Oliver of Jackson, Father Mallin of Vicksburg, Mgr. Wise of Yazoo, Fathers Althoff and Ketels of the Coast, and in 1921 the Rt. Rev. Patrick C. Hayden, vicar general of the diocese.

The various religious orders established in the diocese are: men, Fathers of the Mission, Divine Word Fathers, Josephites, Belgian Missionaries and Brothers of the Sacred Heart, who conduct high schools and colleges in four important centers; women: Sisters of Charity of Nazareth, Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, Sisters of Perpetual Adoration, Sisters of St. Joseph, of Mercy, of Notre Dame and the Holy Ghost Sisters of Techny and of San Antonio. The total Catholic population is 30,477 of whom 344 are Indians, 2600 negroes, and over 27,000 whites. There are 51 priests, 143 churches, 41 of which have resident priests, 42 Brothers of the Sacred Heart, 238 Sisters and 6352 children in parish schools. There are 3 colleges for boys and 6 for girls and 2 orphanages, 1 for boys and 1 for girls.

Natchitoches, DIOCESE OF. See ALEXANDRIA, DIOCESE OF (LOUISIANA).

National Catholic Welfare Council, organized on 24 September, 1919, at the Catholic University of America, Washington, D. C., by the American Hierarchy. The Welfare Council is the successor of the emergency organization, the National Catholic War Council, created by the American Hierarchy at the time of America's entrance into the World War. A general convention of the Catholics of the United States was held in Washington on 11-12 August, 1917, to establish the National Catholic War Council. Its objects were to promote the spiritual and material welfare of the United States' troops at home and abroad and to study, co-ordinate, unify and put into operation all Catholic activities incidental to the war. The magnificent record of Catholics during the War and reconstruction period, and the helpful service which they rendered, both to the country and to the Church, in the great variety of activities handled by the emergency war organization, impressed upon the members of the Hierarchy the necessity of continuing in times of peace many of the useful activities of the war period, and at their annual meeting in Washington in September, 1919, the Hierarchy determined to perpetuate the work of the War Council in a permanent organization to be known as the National Catholic Welfare Council.

In order that the work of the Welfare Council might be organized, co-ordinated and administered in the most effective manner, the Hierarchy appointed an administrative committee of seven of its members to manage the affairs of the Welfare Council. The administrative committee was established in five departments: a Department of Education, a Department of Social Action, a Department of Laws and Legislation, a Department of Lay Organizations and a Department of Press and Publicity.

The Most Rev. Edward J. Hanna, Archbishop of San Francisco was appointed Chairman of the Administrative Committee, and the following episcopal chairmen of the various departments were elected to assist him: His Eminence Dennis Cardinal Dougherty, Archbishop of Philadelphia, Chairman of the Department of Laws and Legislation; Most Rev. Austin Dowling, Archbishop of St. Paul, Chairman of the Department of Education; Rt. Rev. Peter J. Muldoon, Bishop of Rockford, Chairman of the Department of Social Action; Rt. Rev. William T. Russell, Bishop of Charleston, Chairman of the Department of Press and Publicity, and Rt. Rev. Joseph Schrembs, Bishop of Cleveland, Chairman of the Department of Lay Organization. Later, when Cardinal Dougherty resigned from the Committee, Rt. Rev. Edmund F. Gibbons, Bishop of Albany, was elected Chairman of the Department of Laws and Legislation, and Rt. Rev. Louis S. Walsh, Bishop of Portland, was elected to membership on the Committee. While some of the Departments were able to launch certain activities immediately, the whole work of the Welfare Council was not fully organized and functioning until the early part of 1921.

The Executive Department has the supervision of the work of the Welfare Council as a whole, the co-ordination of all its departments and the ultimate responsibility as to its development, as well as its general policy and action. This Department keeps in personal touch with the officials of the Government. It is a medium of communication, of information and of action between the officials and departments of the Government on all matters that affect Catholic interests and Catholic rights. It is a medium of information to legislators, national or state, and to others who wish to inform themselves as to the Catholic attitude on matters of Catholic or public interest.

The Department of Education is under the Chairmanship of Most Rev. Austin Dowling, and the Rev. James H. Ryan, D.D., Ph.D., is its executive secretary. The chief purposes of the Department are: a clearing-house of information concerning Catholic education and Catholic educational agencies, for Catholic educators and students, and for the general public; an advisory agency to assist Catholic education systems and institutions in their development; a connecting Agency between Catholic education activities and Government education agencies; an active organization to safeguard the interests of Catholic education.

The Department of Press, Publicity and Literature, among its other activities, has taken over the news service from the Catholic Press Association, which supplied twenty-three weekly newspapers. Today three dailies and eighty-four weeklies receive the N. C. W. C. service, which is made up of (1) a printed news sheet of eight columns, full newspaper style; (2) a supplementary compilation of news features, consisting of from twenty-five to thirty-five full foolscap sheets printed by a mimeograph machine; (3) a Washington news-letter; (4) a Monthly Editorial Sheet, containing editorials on vital topics of the day, special articles by distinguished writers, book reviews and other magazine features. In connection with the Press Department a complete exchange and clipping bureau is maintained. One of the important developments of the news service has been its adoption for teaching purposes in colleges and schools.

The Department of Social Action was organized in December, 1919. Rt. Rev. Peter J. Muldoon, D.D., is its Chairman. There is a general committee of twenty-eight priests and laymen, and an executive committee in immediate charge of the department. The Department of Social Action deals with the industrial relations, civic education, social welfare, and rural life. Rev. John A. Ryan, D.D., is Director of the section dealing with industrial relations; Mr. John A. Lapp, LL.D., is Director of Civic Education and Social Welfare, and Rev. Edwin V. O'Hara, Ph.D., is Director of the Rural Life Bureau of the department. The purpose of the department is to get the best information on all of these subjects, distribute the information and serve as a direct help to the rest of the Welfare Council and to the Men's and Women's Council in particular in all matters coming under its province. A weekly news service on industrial and rural questions is being conducted for the Catholic papers and a few secular papers. The department also conducts a lecture course on economic and social topics for Catholic seminaries and colleges and Catholic clubs in secular universities.

The Department of Laws and Legislation was organized in December, 1920, its purpose being to safeguard Catholic interests in both State and Nation. The Department keeps in close touch with the activities of Congress and the legislatures of the several States, and is ever on the alert to detect those measures adversely affecting Catholic interests and morality and to obtain information as to the source of such matters.

The Department of Lay Organizations, having two co-ordinate departments—one the National Council of Catholic Men and the other the National Council of Catholic Women—has for its purpose the unification of the Catholic lay forces throughout the country. The Rt. Rev. Joseph Schrembs directs the organization and activities of these two Councils. Admiral William S. Benson is President of the National Council of Catholic Men. It conducts a Catholic Bureau of Immigration and a Catholic Service School for Men. At the head of the National Council of Catholic Women is Mrs. Michael Gavin. Its object is to accomplish for Catholic women what the National Council of Catholic Men seeks to do for the men. The hope of these two Councils is to reach the vast majority of Catholics not affiliated with any Catholic society.

They are trying to infuse into them some of its courage, optimism and spirit, and above all to teach them the advantage of organized effort and unity in thought and action outside the Church as well as in it. The scattered forces of the Catholic body of America are gradually being united in this way into a compact organization which will soon be able to make Catholic Faith, principles and ideals command the influence and prestige in our social and civic life which their soundness and stability warrant. In Canada, in South America, in England, Ireland and other countries of Europe the work of the Welfare Council is attracting much attention and many of its programs are being studied most carefully, and some of them are being put into operation by the Catholics of the countries named. This is particularly true of the National Catholic Welfare Council's Press service, which is being carefully studied by foreign Catholic journalists.

Navigators' Islands (or SAMOA), VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (ARCHIPELAGI NAVIGATORUM; cf. C. E., XIII—421a), in Polynesia, is entrusted to the Society of Mary and governed by Rt. Rev. Joseph Darnand, a Marist, titular Bishop of Polemonium, b. 31 December, 1879, professed 20 December, 1903, ordained 16 July, 1905, appointed Vicar Apostolic of Navigators' Islands, 4 August, 1919, and consecrated 16 May, 1920. He resides at Apia, on the Island of Upola (Samoa). The vicariate comprises the western islands of Samoa (q. v.) formerly belonging to Germany, and since the Treaty of Versailles governed by New Zealand. It numbers a total population of 38,000, of whom 6675 are Catholics, and 183 catechumens, 15 districts, 92 stations, 22 regular priests, 4 native priests, 15 Little Brothers of Mary, 28 Sisters, 101 catechists, 4 schools of Brothers, 6 of Sisters with 2000 pupils, 82 primary schools, 25 churches and a few chapels, 1 professional school.

Naxos and Tinos, ARCHDIOCESE OF (NAXIENSIS ET TINENSIS), is one of the three dioceses of the Latin rite in the Cyclades Islands, Greek Archipelago, and has as suffragans Syra and Thera (Santorin). By a Brief of 3 June, 1919, the sees of Tinos and Mykonos were united to the archdiocese of Naxos under the title of Naxos and Tinos. The silk industry, once flourishing on these islands, has since disappeared, Naxos and Tinos being now given chiefly to cattle raising, Syra is a manufacturing place for wool and cotton, and Thera is famous for its strong wine which is its principal source of revenue.

The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Mathew Vido, b. in the diocese of Tinos 1847, prelate of the Holy See, appointed Bishop of Tinos and Mykonos 9 March, 1915, was promoted to the Archdiocese of Naxos and Tinos 3 July, 1919, to succeed Archbishop Brindisi, transferred to Corfu after filling the see of Naxos from 1909.

There are only about 150 Catholics in Naxos and these live in the old town. In Tinos, however, there are about 4000 Catholics who fully live up to the requirements of their faith and cling to many picturesque and ancient Catholic customs. They are all peasants and live by themselves in 25 small villages, each of which has its own church and curates; the pastors are usually changed every two years. On each of these islands a flourishing academy is conducted by the Ursuline Nuns and these institutions are famous throughout the Levant. At Naxos there is a commercial school for boys conducted by the Oblate Fathers of St.

Francis de Sales (of Troyes); the Jesuits have had a residence and church at Tinos since the seventeenth century; the Friars Minor have 2 stations, with one Father each, on the same island and the Capuchin Fathers have a station at Naxos with 1 priest.

Nazareth, DIOCESE OF (NAZARENSIS IN BRASILIA) in Brazil is suffragan of Olinda. It was erected by a decree of 2 August, 1918, but was not published until 1 October, 1921. The territory of this new diocese is taken from the northeast portion of that of Olinda. The first bishop, Rt. Rev. Richard Ramos Da Costa Viella, h. at Olinda 3 April, 1887, rector of Gravada, appointed at the Consistory 3 July, 1919, Bishop of Nazareth. The parish church of Our Lady of Nazareth became the cathedral with twenty-two parishes in the diocese. The new diocese has two students at the South American College, Rome.

Nebraska (cf. C. E. X-729c).—The area of the State of Nebraska is 7520 square miles. In 1920 the population was 1,296,372, an increase of 8.7 since 1910. Of this, 31.3 per cent was urban; 68.7 per cent was rural. The density is 16.9 persons to the square mile. Of the native whites, (1,129,567), 757,064 were of native parentage, 231,948 were of foreign parentage, 140,555 mixed; the foreign-born whites were 149,652. There were 13,242 negroes and 2888 Indians, and 804 Japanese. The percentage of illiteracy was 1.4, a slight decrease since 1910 (1.9). The largest cities are Omaha (191,601), Lincoln (54,948), Grand Island (13,960), Hastings (11,647).

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—As an agricultural State Nebraska ranks high, containing about 124,000 farms in 1920. Of these, 3021 were irrigated. The North Platte and its tributaries supplied water to nearly 85 per cent of the land irrigated in 1919. The following table shows the agricultural wealth of Nebraska in 1919:

Corn.....	184,186,000 bushels	$224,707,000

The fourteenth census of manufactures in Nebraska reveals (1919), 2,884 establishments, 49,076 persons engaged, and a capital of $245,256,684. The value of the products was $596,042,498, an increase of 169 per cent since 1913. The chief of these industries is meat packing and slaughtering, carried on especially at South Omaha. The Nebraska potash industry is the largest in the United States, the estimated production being about 15,000 tons in 1918. In 1919 there were 8,434 miles of railway in the State (total valuation $1,625,594,300), besides 253 miles of electric railway track. The State has no debt. In 1919 the assessed valuation of real and personal property (under a law requiring the assessed value to be 20 per cent of the actual value) amounted to $568,456,926, of which $212,697,098 was personal and $355,759,828 was real.

EDUCATION.—School attendance is compulsory for children from 7 to 15 years of age for not less than 12 weeks in the school term. In 1918 the 726 graded schools and 7216 district schools had 13,248 teachers and 300,011 enrolled pupils. In 1919 there were 534 public high schools with 2194 teachers and 36,299 pupils. There are 4 state normal schools with 118 teachers and 3804 students, and 2 private normal schools. The expenditure in 1919 was $16,690,000. In 1918 $7,457,000 were expended for salaries among 12,758 teachers. The laws governing State private and parochial schools are as follows (compulsory education act): Grades, qualifications of teachers, promotion of pupils, courses of study in private schools must be substantially the same as in public schools. The teachers must be certificated. History and Civil Government must be taught and patriotic exercises held. County superintendents of county or city superintendents of city where any private denominational or parochial school is located shall inspect such school and report to the proper officers any evidence of failure to observe any provisions of this Act. No person, individually or as a teacher, shall, in any private, denominational, parochial or public school, teach any subject to any person in any other language but the English language. Languages other than the English language may be taught as languages only when a pupil shall have successfully passed the eighth grade. A foreign language may be used to teach religion on Sunday. After September, 1919, all teachers in private, parochial, or denominational schools are forbidden to teach without a certificate; all must be full citizens of the United States, and they must attend institutes at least once a week. Teachers in private schools must keep attendance records. The wearing of any religious garb while teaching in a public school is a misdemeanor. The State shall not accept any grant, conveyance or bequest of money, lands, or other property to be used for sectarian purposes. All normal schools must be incorporated under the laws of Nebraska, with at least $50,000 invested or available for school use, and not less than five teachers on full time, giving instruction as required by the State. They must pass the personal inspection of the State board of examiners or of the State superintendent of public instruction, and must have the same entrance requirements as the State normal schools. Of the original grant of 3,000,000 acres of land made by the Federal Government for permanent endowment of schools, 1,661,405 acres are now held by the State, further sale, with minor exceptions, being forbidden. The value of the endowment is $2,800,000. Among recently founded State institutions are the hospital for tuberculosis (opened in 1912), and the State public school, created in 1909.

RELIGION.—The U. S. religious census of 1916 gives the following statistics for the State: Catholics 135,537; Methodists 81,879; Lutherans 66,906; Presbyterians 26,233; Disciples (Christians) 24,140; Baptists 19,643; Congregationalists 19,423; Episcopalians 7,931 (communicants); all other Protestants, 81,879. For further religious and educational statistics, see OMAHA, DIOCESE OF; LINCOLN, DIOCESE OF; GRAND ISLAND, DIOCESE OF.

RECENT LEGISLATION.—The most recent laws of the State provide for a State board of health, a conservation and public welfare commission, the initiative and referendum, biennial elections, the district election of university regents and minor judges of the supreme court, the sale of public school lands only by auction, if any should pass from the State, the establishment of a court to determine labor and price controversies, equal suffrage, the placing of the normal schools under a single board, the increase of the length of the term of the school superintendent from two years to four. The process of amending the constitution is facilitated, for instead of a majority, only thirty-five per cent of the votes cast are needed to adopt an amendment. The "Code" Act of 1919 consolidated the several boards and commissions under the governor with secretaries forming his cabinet, with the purpose of unifying the administration of the State's business, doing away with duplications and overlapping jurisdiction. The legislature of 1919 reproduced the Sabbath-breaking legislation of New England, but exempts families who are emigrating, watermen, ferry-men, keepers of toll bridges, railways running necessary trains. Public dancing on Sundays is permitted in cities of the metropolitan class, having a public welfare board with authority to regulate such dancing. In 1916 there were 1675 divorces and 12,786 marriages. The Constitutional Convention in 1919 voted 41 amendments to the constitution, and referred them to the people in the next election. The Federal Suffrage Amendment was ratified on 31 July, 1919; the Prohibition Act on 16 January, 1919.

HISTORY.—Nebraska's recent history is mainly a legislative history. In 1919 race riots, however, broke out in the city of Omaha. The mob surrounded the court house and set fire to the interior of the building in order to force the sheriff to turn over a negro prisoner held in the county jail which was over the roof. While the sheriff was removing the prisoners, the negro was secured by the mob, hung, shot, and cremated. Mayor Smith was captured by the mob, and narrowly escaped being hung, his rescue being effected by a group of citizens. During the European War Nebraska's contribution was 47,805 soldiers or 1.27 per cent. of the United States Army. The members of the national guard formed a part of the 34th Division at Camp Cody, New Mexico, and those of the national army joined the 89th Division at Funston, Kansas. The summary of casualties of the Nebraska members of the American Expeditionary Force was as follows: deceased, 25 officers, 830 men; prisoners, 20 men; wounded, 36 officers and 2130 men.

Ecclesiastical History.—In 1912 the western part of the Diocese of Omaha was erected into the Diocese of Kearney, this name being later changed to Grand Island.

Nepi and Sutri, DIOCESE OF (NEPESINENSIS ET SUTRINENSIS, cf. C. E., X—750b), united sees of the province of Rome, are under the direction of Mgr. Olivares who was appointed to the diocese upon the death of Mgr. Doebbing, 14 March, 1916. Mgr. Luigi Olivares was born at Corbetta in the diocese of Milan in 1873. He received his degree of Doctor of Theology and became pastor of Santa Maria Liberatrice at Testaccio in Rome. He was appointed Bishop of Nepi and Sutri 15 July, 1916, and consecrated at Rome 29 October, of the same year. During the World War the clergy and laity of this diocese took an active part in assisting the families of the soldiers and war prisoners. According to present (1921) statistics there are in the diocese, 30 parishes, 95 churches, 3 monasteries for women, 13 convents for men, 16 for women, 61 secular priests, 36 regulars, 23 Brothers, 148 Sisters, 2 seminaries with 23 seminarians. Among the charitable institutions are 14 asylums in charge of Sisters and 4 hospitals in charge of either Sisters or Brothers. Sisters teach in eight of the government schools. The total Catholic population of the diocese is approximately 49,000; 6 Catholic societies are organized among the laity.

Netto, JOSEPH SEBASTIAN, cardinal, b. in 1841, at Lagos, Portugal; d. in 1920 near Seville, Spain, Cardinal-priest of the Church and occupant of the Patriarchal See of his native land. He was a simple parish priest in 1873; a Franciscan friar in 1875; Bishop of Angola and Congo in Africa in 1879;

Patriarch of Lisbon in 1883, and cardinal in 1884, receiving the hat in 1886. In 1907, he resigned his office as patriarch to become once more an humble friar in a convent of his Order, and when the Revolution of 1910 broke he was banished from his native land by the fanatical mob. He found a refuge in Spain near Seville until his death.

Nevada (cf. C. E., X—775b).—The area of the State of Nevada is 110,690 square miles. The population in 1920 was 77,407, a decrease of 4468 or of 5.5 per cent since 1910; in the decade 1900–1910 the population increased from 42,335 to 81,875, or 93.4 per cent. Reno, with a population of 12,016, was the largest city. Of the population 19.7 per cent is urban; 80.3 per cent is rural. There are 46,240 males and 31,167 females. The whites number 70,699, of whom 2603 are foreign-born. There are also 4907 Indians, 754 Japanese, 689 Chinese and 346 negroes. The illiteracy of the population of ten years of age and over is 5.9 per cent, a decrease of .89 per cent since 1910.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—Farming is on the increase for since 1910 the number of farms has increased 17.6 per cent. At present there are 3163, with an area of 2,357,163 acres, worth $99,779,666. The agricultural products of Nevada for 1919 were valued thus: wheat $1,067,550; oats $86,252; barley $259,379; potatoes $1,099,228; hay $10,948,159. In that year the entire number of sheep in the state was 880,580, and the wool clip amounted to 5,554,342 pounds. The Federal Irrigation project embraces 160,000 acres in the State. The development of Nevada is hindered by lack of transportation facilities. In 1918 the value of the entire mineral production of the State was $51,080,169; the gold was worth $6,619,937; the silver $10,000,599, both totalling $16,620,536. The area of the national forests in the State is 4,971,335 acres. The census of manufactures in 1919 showed a decrease of 7.8 since 1914 in the number of establishments. There are altogether 166, with 3563 persons engaged, earning salaries and wages totalling $14,905,687. The capital invested was $16,834,561 and the value of the products $22,874,311. The principal industries were: car and general shop construction and repairs by steam railway companies, flour mill and grist-mill products, dairying, printing and publishing. The railway mileage in 1919 was 2843, of which 2281 was first track. In 1920 the State debt was $165,000; the assessed value of property being $214,000,000.

EDUCATION.—The State laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: It shall be unlawful for any board of school trustees, regents or board of education, or for any teacher or other person teaching in the public or private schools to cause to be taught or to teach any subject or subjects, other than foreign languages, in the public or private schools in any language but English. No public funds of any kind shall be used for sectarian purposes. The property of corporations formed for charitable, religious, or educational purposes may be exempt from taxation. Education is compulsory between the ages of eight and sixteen. There were (1920) in Nevada 22,604 persons under 21 years of age, 65 of whom were negroes and 164 Mongolians. Of these, 12,936 attend the public schools and 372 private schools. The total number of schools in the State is 390, with 717 teachers. The educational expenditure was $1,318,396. The State University at Reno with an attendance of 295 and a faculty of 35 in 1919 was given $122,818 by the legislature of Nebraska. Of this $24,420 were for repairs. The annual expenditure is about $300,000. In accordance with recognised interpretation of school law, Bible reading is not practised in the public schools.

RELIGION.—According to the United States Census of Religious Denominations (1916), there were in the State 8742 Catholics or 54.1 per cent. of all church members; 1207 Episcopalians or 7.5 per cent.; 3429 Latter Day Saints or 21.2 per cent.; 777 Methodists or 4.8 per cent.; 501 Presbyterians or 3.1 per cent.; 356 Baptists or 2.2 per cent. For further educational and religious statistics see SALT LAKE, DIOCESE OF; SACRAMENTO, DIOCESE OF.

RECENT LEGISLATION.—The laws passed by the Legislature in the last decade provide for a State Bureau of Industry, Agriculture, and Irrigation, workmen's compensation, a juvenile court, industrial insurance, an eight-hour requirement for workingwomen, non-partisan ballots in the election of the judiciary, an inheritance tax, and the employment of convict labor on roads. Woman Suffrage was adopted in 1914. The 1913 divorce law, requiring a residence of one year in the State, was changed in 1915 so as to exact only a six months' residence in the State before filing the complaint.

RECENT HISTORY.—During the European War Nevada contributed 5105 soldiers, or .14 per cent. of the United States Army. The national guard joined the 41st Division at Camp Fremont, California. In 1917 Nevada was the only State to furnish her draft quota for entrainment without cost to the Government. The summary of casualties among Nevada men of the American Expeditionary Forces is as follows: deceased, 5 officers, 66 men; prisoners, 1 officer and 2 men; wounded, 6 officers and 170 men.

Nevers, DIOCESE OF (NIVERNENSIS).—In 1910 Mgr. Pierre Chatelus was consecrated Bishop of Nevers to succeed Mgr. Ganche, promoted to the Archdiocese of Besançon. He was born at St. Tomain-le-Puy, diocese of Lyons, 27 November, 1854; was ordained in 1878; was rector of the basilica Foruof vière in 1893, and pastor of the Church of St. Francis de Sales in Lyons when he was appointed to the see of Nevers.

In 1922 the diocese numbered 309 parishes, 313 secular and 5 regular priests, 15 secularized brothers 300 sisters, 1 convent of men and 24 of women, 2 seminaries with eleven professors and 22 seminarians in the higher seminary and 32 in the preparatory seminary, 3 colleges for boys with 36 professors and 530 students, 6 academies for girls with 33 teachers and 450 pupils, 88 elementary schools with 200 teachers and 5800 pupils, 1 home for the aged, 1 insane asylum, and 1 day-nursery.

Priests are permitted to visit the prisons and one lycée. Amongst the clergy there is the Association of St. Augustine to care for aged and infirm priests and the League for Religious Defense to support the rights of the clergy before civil tribunals and to defend their reputation when attacked by the press. Amongst the laity there are many professional, commercial, charitable and social associations. There is a Catholic newspaper, La Croix du Nivernais, published fortnightly.

The seminarians and priests of the diocese mobilized during the World War fulfilled their duty nobly. Many of them won the Croix de Guerre, two the Médaille Militaire, two the Croix de la Légion d'Honneur. The diocese lost fifteen seminarians and five priests. The event of greatest importance in Nevers since 1910 was the apostolic process of beatification and canonization of Bernadette Soubirous, whose body reposes there in the Mother-house of the Sisters of Charity and Christian Instruction.

New Antwerp, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (NOVÆ ANTWERPIÆ), Belgian Congo, was erected by a decree of 3 April, 1919, by dismemberment of the former vicariate of Belgian Congo, of which it kept the northern portion. It is entrusted to the Congregation of the Immaculate Heart of Mary of Scheut. The vicar Apostolic is Rt. Rev. Egidius de Boeck, C. C. I. M., titular Bishop of Asotus, b. in the Diocese of Malines, 13 November, 1875, ordained 1 July, 1900, nominated Vicar Apostolic of New Antwerp, 4 January, 1921, consecrated 8 May, 1921. He resides at New Antwerp. This vicariate, comprising territory from the Tumba Lake to the district of Ubangi and of Lower Wellé, contains a Catholic population (1922 census) of about 60,000, with 19 mission stations, of which 8 belong to the congregation of Scheut, 5 to the Trappists, 6 to the English Fathers, and 1 seminary for the training of native priests.

New Caledonia, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (NOVÆ CALEDONIÆ; cf. C. E., X—781c), comprises the French colony and Island of New Caledonia, in Oceania, with its dependencies, the Isle of Pines, Belep, and Loyalty Islands. The population consists of 11,596 free French and 2310 of convict origin, 27,100 natives and 5224 foreigners of different nationalities. For twenty-five years (since 1897) the French government has ceased to send convicts to this colony, so that in a few years there will be none of this origin. The vicariate is entrusted to the Marist Fathers. Rt. Rev. Claude-Marie Chanrion, S.M., titular Bishop of Chariopolis, b. in the Diocese of Lyon, 6 October, 1865, was appointed pro-vicar apostolic in July, 1906, and vicar apostolic of New Caledonia, 25 March, 1906. He resides at Noumea. There are in the vicariate: 31 parishes with missions, 102 churches or chapels, 41 regular priests, 35 Brothers, 2 seminarians in Australia, 1 home of the Little Sisters of the Poor with 11 Sisters and 70 inmates. There are about 1400 pupils in the European public schools, and about 500 pupils in the free schools. The native Catholics who attend the schools of their mission number about 500. Public hospitals admit the ministry of priests. The Conference of St. Vincent de Paul and the Ladies of Charity are associations of the laity. One periodical, "L'Echo de France Catholique," is published here. The agricultural products of the colony are coffee, maize, sugar, copra (about 2500 tons), and others. All the mining companies are French, with the exception of one Anglo-American.

New Guinea, BRITISH, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF; (cf. C. E., X—784d); Papua, Oceania. Mgr. Navarro, who resigned in 1908, was succeeded by the present Vicar Apostolic, Rt. Rev. Alain Guynot de Boismenu, titular bishop of Gabala. About 200 of the Catholic population of 8435 are Australians, the remainder being Papuans. The unhealthy climate, the uncivilized conditions of the country, the childish and primitive character of the natives and the Erastian policy of the Australian Government are among the causes which impede religious expansion. At the present time there are 12 parishes, 37 churches, 27 missions, 1 convent for men, 1 for European and 1 for native Sisters, 1 seminary in Europe, 43 elementary schools, 53 teachers, 2206 pupils, 9 orphanages and asylums. There are five societies established among the laity.

New Guinea, DUTCH, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF; (cf. C. E., X—784d), consisting of the Dutch islands between 125° 30' and 141° east L., W., Halmaheira, Ternate, Tidore, Ceram, Ambon, Banda, Kei, Aroe, Tenimbar, and Dutch New Guinea. The mission to the Kei Islands was at first attended by Father Kusters, S.J., and his companions (1888-1903). It was separated from the vicariate of Batavia, 22 December, 1902, the Catholic population being then about 2000. As the prefecture of Dutch New Guinea it was entrusted to the Dutch province of the Missionaries of the Sacred Heart (M. S. H. Tilburg). The first prefect apostolic was Rev. M. Meyens, 1903-15; the second Rev. H. Nollen, 1915-21. In 1920 the prefecture was erected into a vicariate and Rt. Rev. Johann Aerts became the first vicar with the titular see of Apollonia. He arrived in July, 1921, and makes his residence at Langgoer-Total, Kei Islands. The mission now (1922) contains 5 districts with 26 priests and 20 brothers of the Congregation of the Missionaries of the Sacred Heart, 8 Sisters of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart, 90 native catechists, 14,967 Catholics, 2513 catechumens, 76 churches, 17 stations with 60 sub-stations, 71 schools with 2891 pupils and 3 boarding schools (2 for boys, 1 for girls), with 139 pupils. There is 1 industrial school with 12 pupils. Forty schools receive Government aid. Four sodalities of the Blessed Virgin are established among the young people.

New Hampshire (cf. C. E. X-758a)—The area of the State of New Hampshire is 9,341 square miles, and the population in 1920 was 443,083, an increase of 2.9 per cent since 1910. Of this 63.1 per cent was urban; 36.9 per cent was rural. The average number of inhabitants per square mile was 49.1. The whites numbered 442,331, of whom 351,098 were native-born, and 91,233 were foreign born. Of the native-born, 225,512 were of native parentage; 81,039, of foreign parentage; 44,547 mixed. The negroes numbered 9,621. Of the population, ten years or over, there were 15,788 illiterates or 4.4 per cent. The largest cities are: Manchester (78,384), Nashua (28,379), Concord (22,167), Keene (11,210), Laconia (10,879), Portsmouth (13,659).

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—According to the census of manufactures for 1919, the value of manufactured products was $405,739,000; of materials, $238,641,000; capital invested, $328,438,000. There were 89,999 persons engaged in manufacturing and 1497 establishments. The chief manufactures are boot, and shoes, leather goods, paper, lumber, woollens and machinery. There is less interest in mining at present, the number of mines and quarries in the state being 33, as against 53 in 1910. The value of mineral products in 1918 was $1,568,195. Although the number of farms (20,523 in 1920), showed a decrease of 24.1 per cent, the value of farm property in 1920 was $118,656,115, which is a gain over that of 1910 ($103,704,196). The farming area of the State is 2,603,806 acres. The dairy products have doubled in value since 1909, the value in 1919 being $10,224,888. The principal crops of the State are corn ($844,793), oats ($485,367), hay ($13,616,378), vegetables ($5,228,489), fruits ($2,605,103). There are 1203 miles of railway, of which the Boston & Maine controls 1020. The State debt in 1920 was $3,040,524, assessed value of real property $412,591,376; of personal property, $90,815,543.

RELIGION.—According to the United States Census of Religious Denominations (1916), the largest denominations were: Catholics 136,020; Congregationalists 20,084; Methodists 13,574; Baptists 15,027; Free Baptists 2308; Unitarians 8890; Universalists 1611. For further religious and educational statistics see MANCHESTER, DIOCESE OF.

EDUCATION.—The law directs that every child from 8 to 14 years of age shall have at least 36 weeks of schooling. If he has not completed the elementary grades, the school age is extended to 16. All those between the ages of 16 and 21 who cannot speak or write English must attend part time school. The State Board of Education consists of the Governor, ex officio, and five persons, appointed one annually by the Governor and Council. Besides, there are a Commissioner, appointed by the Board, and four Deputy Commissioners. In 1920, there were 64,205 enrolled pupils and 2648 teachers (220 men) in the public elementary schools; in the 86 public high schools there were 673 (170 men) teachers and 13,055 pupils. In cities of 2500 and over, 1114 children attend kindergartens. The Laconia School for the feeble-minded has 282 pupils. A new normal school was founded in Keene, in 1909. There are evening schools in 8 cities with a total attendance of 1509, 916 of whom are male. The expenditure for education in 1920 was $3,960,075. The two normal schools have 31 teachers and 286 students, but the supply of teachers is still inadequate. The 23 private schools in the State had in 1917-18 altogether 2672 students. Of the 659 students in the New Hampshire College of Agriculture, 61 women were in the home-economic course, one woman and 119 men were in the agricultural course and 187 men in the engineering course. This college had 62 instructors (1919). In the same year, Dartmouth had 88 professors in the collegiate departments, and 1673 students, 29 professors and 65 students in the professional departments. St. Anselm's (collegiate and academic) had 25 professors and 294 students, besides 278 in the high school. Bible reading in the public schools is neither permitted nor excluded.

The laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: No money raised by taxation shall ever be granted or applied for the use of the schools or institutions of any religious sect or denomination. In the instruction of children in all schools including private schools, in reading, writing, spelling, arithmetic, grammar, geography, physiology, history, civil government, music and drawing, the English language shall be used exclusively, both for purposes of instruction therein and for purposes of general administration. The exclusive use of English for purposes of instruction and administration is not intended to prohibit the conduct of devotional exercises in private schools in languages other than English. A foreign language may be taught in elementary schools, provided the course of study or its equivalent is such as outlined by the State Board of Education in the common English branches. To satisfy the compulsory education law, "Attendance at a private school approved by the State Board shall be regarded as attendance at the public schools." The resolution of the State Board of Education has been as follows: Resolved that the approval of the Board shall not be given to any private school which does not comply with the following requirements:

- (1). Provide instruction and other educational opportunities as nearly as may be reasonably possible to those given in the public schools in the same city or town.
- (2). Be maintained for 36 weeks in each year, at least five hours a day, and five days a week in a sanitary building.
- (3). Be equipped with reasonably suitable furniture, books, maps, and other necessary appliances.
- (4). Make reports required of public schools of the same grade on forms provided by the Board.
- (5). Teach substantially the same subjects as those prescribed by the Board for the public schools of similar grade.
- (6). Use the English language as the basic language of instruction and administration as prescribed by law.
- (7). Be carried on in such a manner as effectively to prepare the pupils for the exercise of the rights and discharge the duties of American citizenship and from the teaching of the prescribed studies produce educational results equivalent to those produced by the teaching of the same studies in the public schools. If any private school fails to comply with the above mentioned requirements, it is the legal duty of the Board to revoke its approval of this school.

RECENT LEGISLATION AND HISTORY.—There has been some activity on the part of the State and Federal Governments to preserve the natural beauties of New Hampshire by extensive purchases of forest lands and mountain peaks. In 1911, Crawford Notch was purchased by the State. In 1916, the United States Government purchased under the Weeks Forestry Act a tract of 550 acres in the White Mountains, to be added to lands already acquired and set apart for reservation purposes. This purchase gave the Government control of practically all the peaks of the Presidential Range. There have been changes in the State administration in the creation of the following: State Tax Commission (1911), Bureau of Labor (1911), Board of Conciliation and Arbitration (1913), Department of Agriculture and Highway Commission (1915), Child Welfare Department (1918). The Employers' Liability Act was passed in 1911; mothers' pensions provided, women's labor limited, and registration of foreign corporations required in 1913. The judiciary was authorized in 1919 to order an allowance by the husband to his wife during the pendency of a suit for divorce, and the governor was allowed to issue marriage licenses to ministers to marry persons within the State. The Federal Prohibition Act was ratified on 15 January, 1919, and the Suffrage Act, 10 September, 1919. An inheritance tax went into effect in 1918. During the European War, New Hampshire sent into the United States army, 14,374 soldiers, or .38 per cent of the enrolment. The members of the national guard joined the 26th Division and those of the national army the 76th Division, both at Camp Devens. The summary of casualties of the New Hampshire members of the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 19 officers, 339 men; prisoners, 2 officers, 17 men; wounded, 30 officers, 1128 men.

New Jersey (cf. C. E., X-790a).—The total area of the State of New Jersey is 8224 square miles of which 710 are water. The population in 1920 was 3,155,900, an increase of 24.4 per cent. since 1910. The density is 420 persons a square mile. Of the population, 78.8 per cent. is urban, 21.3 per cent. rural. Of the whites 628,402 were foreign born, and 1,752,736 were native; and of the latter, 705,784 were of native parentage, 705,784 foreign parentage, 209,328 mixed. Of the population of ten years and over 127,661 were illiterate (5.1 per cent.) The largest cities are: Trenton 119,289; Newark 414,524; Jersey City 298,103; Camden 116,309; Paterson 135,875.

ECONOMIC STATUS.—During the war the accessibility of New Jersey to foreign ports increased the industrial productivity of the State. Shipbuilding was started on a large scale on the flat-lands of the coast, and great industrial plants were built. The manufacturing census of 1919 revealed 11,062 establishments, with 603,889 persons engaged earning for their services $773,001,000. The capital invested was $2,835,441,000, and the value of the products $3,677,165,000. New Jersey has valuable fisheries, the shell-fish for 1919 being valued at $6,700,000. Of the mineral production of the State, the clay and clay products led, with a value of $21,837,396, the chief output being sanitary ware. In the production of zinc ore the State ranked second of the States in the Union. The following are the most important mineral products of the State and their value: iron ore $1,945,651; trap rock $1,475,358; limestone $674,397; sand and gravel $2,462,864.

The agricultural census (1920) gives 29,702 farms in the State, a decrease of 11.3 per cent. since 1909. The farm area is 2,282,585 acres, the value of farm property $311,847,948, an increase of 22.4 per cent. since 1909. The chief crops are cereals $87,464,445; vegetables $40,669,147; fruits and nuts $11,809,078. The railroad mileage of the State is 2461, the length of electric railway 1593 miles; of canals 175 miles. There is no State debt.

EDUCATION.—Education is compulsory and free for all between the ages of 7 and 15. A child of 14-16 years of age who has an employment certificate and yet is temporarily unemployed must attend school at least 20 hours a week; if employed, he must attend for 6 hours a week for 36 weeks a year. All educational institutions and public libraries are tax exempt. In 1919 educational corporations and charitable organization were authorized to make changes in their acts or certificate of incorporation and their organizations. In 1916 the State took over the Burlington Colony for the Feeble-minded, which is now known as the State Colony for Feeble-minded Males. In 1918 the State charitable, penal, and reformatory institutions were centralized under the Department of Institutions and Agencies. School authorities are forbidden to inquire into the religious faith of teachers seeking appointment. Bible reading in the public schools is obligatory. The laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: "The common branches shall be taught in English to all children of compulsory school age. Private schools shall annually make such reports to the Commissioner of Education as he may require. Such financial reports shall not be made public by the Commissioner. The common branches of elementary education must be taught by competent teachers to all children of compulsory age. Private schools must be in session for all days and hours of public schools." According to the New Jersey State Report for 1919, there are now 2163 public schools with a seating capacity of 570,061. The total value of the school property is estimated at $83,580,432. There are 18,007 teachers, of whom 2233 are men and 15,774 are women. These receive an average yearly salary of $1083.27. For the school year, the current expenses of the schools amounted to $25,451,014; the cost of permanent improvements was $2,772,218. the special appropriation amounted to $4,030,593, a total of $32,253,825. In 1920 the expenditure was $30,854,795. In the seventy public high schools there were 2365 teachers and 53,710 pupils. The three normal schools at Trenton, Montclair, and Newark (established in 1912), have 105 teachers and 2015 students.

RELIGION.—According to the latest United States Census of Religious Denominations (1916), the Catholics numbered 790,764, or 59.1 per cent.; Methodist Episcopalians 131,211 or 9.8; Presbyterians 102,290 or 7.6 per cent.; Protestant Episcopalians 67,996 or 5.1 per cent.; Jews 15,720 or 1.2 per cent.; for further religious and educational statistics see NEWARK, DIOCESE OF; TRENTON, DIOCESE OF.

RECENT HISTORY AND LEGISLATION.—In 1911 was enacted the Geran Bill, extending the application of the direct primary, providing for the blanket Massachusetts ballot, and for the prevention of fraud. Acts were also passed to prohibit indecent publications; to make it a misdemeanor to bribe a representative of a labor organization; to provide for the challenging of jurors in civil and criminal cases, to create a Board of Utility Commissioners, to establish a Commission of Old Age Insurance and Pensions, to provide for employers' liability and workmen's compensation. In 1914 a direct inheritance tax was passed. The Bill giving cities under commission government greater latitude in the administration of local affairs was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court on 22 May, 1914. In 1916 a state Department of Agriculture and a Workmen's Compensation Aid Bureau were created, in 1918 the Department of Charities and Corrections, the Interstate Bridge and Tunnel Commission, a Board of Fisheries, and a Boxing Commission. In 1920 the legislature passed over the governor's veto a measure authorizing a bond issue of $28,000,000, for New Jersey's share in the building of the Delaware River Bridge between Camden and Philadelphia, and the Hudson River vehicular tunnel between Jersey City and New York City. A bonus was granted to all veterans of the Great War. The County Park Boards are authorized to permit Sunday ball and other games, if no admission fee is charged.

HISTORY.—During the European War New Jersey furnished to the United States Army 105,207 men (2.80 per cent.); the members of the national guard joined the 28th Division at Camp McClellan, Alabama; those of the national army, the 78th Division at Camp Dix. The summary of casualties of the New Jersey members of the American expeditionary force is as follows: deceased, 117 officers, 2244 men; prisoners, 20 officers, 65 men; wounded, 219 officers, 7401 men.

New Mexico (cf. C. E., XI—1a), formerly a territory of the United States, now a State, admitted to the Union on 6 January, 1912, with an area of 122,634 square miles. The population in 1920 was 360,350 of which 18 per cent. was urban and 82.0 rural. The average number of inhabitants to the square mile is 2.9 as against 2.7 in 1910. The largest cities are Albuquerque (15,157), Santa Fé (7033), and Las Vegas (4304). The composition of the population is as follows: whites, 334,673 (native 305,596, foreign-born, 29,077); negro 5773; Indian 19,512; Chinese 171; Japanese 251. In 1910 the illiterate members of the population over 10 years of age numbered 48,697 or 20.2 per cent.; in 1920, 41,637, or 15.6, a decrease of 4.66 per cent.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—Although the census of 1920 reveals a decrease of 16.3 per cent. in the number of farms since 1910 (1920, 29,844), the farm land area shows an increase of 116.6 per cent. (1910, 11,270,021 acres; 1920, 24,409,633 acres). The chief crops are corn, wheat, oats, and kafir and milo. The output of hay and forage totalled 693,807 tons, worth $12,852,751 in 1919. Grazing is an important industry, for in 1920 there were 1,300,000 cattle, valued at $63,101,300. Sheep-raising is still on the decline, 8,300,804 pounds of wool being produced in 1919 as against 16,994,017 in 1909, although the value of the wool increased from $3,131,971 in 1909 to $3,542,922 in 1919. The farms reported a total of 1,640,475 sheep.

In 1916 the Elephant Butte Dam was completed after five years of labor. It is the work of the United States Reclamation Service and forms the largest storage reservoir in the world, feeding an irrigation system which covers 185,000 acres of land in New Mexico, Texas, and Mexico. The dam extends across the canyons of the Rio Grande. In 1919 the legislature provided for the leasing of State lands for mineral purposes and for the retaining of the permanent ownership of all oil lands with one-eighth royalty. New Mexico has valuable mineral resources, the most important being coal (4,023,239 tons valued at $10,787,082 in 1918), and copper (98,264,562 tons valued at $24,271,347). The entire mineral production was worth $40,631,024 in 1918. The summary for manufactures for 1919 gives 387 establishments, 6646 persons engaged in manufacturing, earning in salaries and wages a total of $7,655,803. The capital invested was $15,226,253 and the value of the products $17,856,602. The principal industries, ranked by the value of the products, are cars and general shop construction and repairs by steam railroad companies, lumber and timber products, and flour and grist-mill products. There are about 3000 miles of railway in the State. The bonded indebtedness in 1920 was $4,291,500; the assessed value of real and personal property in 1919, $371,559,631. There are 113 banks (44 national and 69 others) in the State, with an aggregate capital of $56,966,000.

EDUCATION.—New Mexico has a State board of education and a county board of education for each county. Elementary education is free and compulsory between the ages of six and sixteen for seven months in the school year. About 8,500,000 acres of public lands have been set aside for the common schools, the sales of land and rentals furnishing the necessary funds. School taxes are likewise levied in each county, district and municipality. In 1917 provision was made for part payment of transportation expenses for normal students from distant parts of the State. The State maintains the University of New Mexico at Albuquerque, the College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts near Las Cruces in the Mesilla Valley, the New Mexico Normal University at Silver City, the School of Mines at Socorro, the Military Institute at Roswell, the Spanish and American School at El Rito, the Institute for the Deaf and the Institute for the Blind at Alamogordo. In 1920 there were 1430 public elementary schools in the State, with 81,399 enrolled pupils and 2752 teachers, and 71 public high schools with 257 teachers and 3870 pupils. The private schools number 38 and there are 26 Indian schools with 2291 pupils and 141 teachers, maintained by the Federal Government. Religious instruction in public schools is prohibited by law, but boards of directors may open school-houses for the use of religious societies, etc., at times outside school hours. Bible reading is neither permitted nor excluded. The Sisters' charitable institutions (hospitals, etc.) are State-aided, the appropriation for the purpose in 1919 being $12,000. In 1917-18 the university received for its income $133,169, and had (1919) a teaching force of 92 professors and 406 students. The College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts with 95 teachers and 285 students, received both Federal and State aid, aggregating $298,122 in 1917-18. The combined valuation of the State's educational institutions is about $2,000,000; while the annual expenditures aggregate $1,300,000. The laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: No funds appropriated or levied for educational purposes shall be used for the support of any sectarian, denominational or private schools (XII.3). All church property, all property used for educational or charitable purposes, not used for private or corporate profit, shall be exempt from taxation. To comply with compulsory education regulations, courses of study must be approved by the school board. Private schools shall report to the county superintendent with regard to enrolment, number of teachers, and branches taught.

RELIGION.—According to the United States Census of Religious Bodies (1916), the Catholics were more than 84 per cent. of the church membership of the State, which was 209,809, distributed as follows: Catholics 177,727; Methodists 11,767; Presbyterians 4245; Baptists 6721; Disciples of Christ 2284; Protestant Episcopalians 1718; other sects 5862. For further religious and educational statistics see SANTA FÉ, ARCHDIOCESE OF; TUCSON, DIOCESE OF.

RECENT HISTORY.—New Mexico is the forty-seventh State to be admitted to the Union. On 16 June, 1910, the Senate passed the Bill granting statehood to New Mexico, providing, however, that the proposed State should hold no legislative sessions before 12 January, 1912, also stipulating that the State set aside 100,000 acres for a penitentiary. After many efforts an enabling act was approved 20 June, 1910, which provided for a Constitutional Convention to meet at Santa Fé on 3 October, 1910. The constitution was ratified on 21 January, 1911, and on the same day the President signed the bill for the admission of New Mexico on the condition that it amend the article providing a method for the amendment of its constitution. This amendment was submitted to the people, approved, and on 5 January, 1912, President Taft issued a proclamation, making effective New Mexico's admission as a State. The laws passed by the succeeding legislatures have provided for the following: workmen's compensation, income taxes, commission form of government for cities of 10,000 or more, a State mounted police, night schools for illiterates, an annual franchise tax on corporations, a permanent budget system, a child welfare board, and a department of health. The suffrage amendment to the Federal constitution was ratified on 19 February, 1920; the prohibition amendment on 20 January, 1919. New Mexico's contribution to the European War was 12,439 soldiers or .33 per cent. of the United States Army. The national guard members joined the 40th Division at Fort Kearney, California; those of the national army, the 92nd Division at Camp Funston, Kansas. The summary of casualties of the New Mexican members of the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 10 officers, 218 men; prisoners, 8 men; wounded, 20 officers, 604 men.

New Norcia (cf. C. E., XI—5b), a Benedictine abbey nullius in Western Australia. Since the report of this mission published in 1910 the New Norcia Mission has made considerable progress. As a native or aboriginal mission little change has taken place, but as regards the white population of the Mission, we notice this progress more particularly in the all important matter of education and in the higher appreciation of the fine arts, music, painting, etc. Indeed, people of every class and denomination are often attracted to the Mission to listen to the music, or to see the many excellent paintings to be met with in the monastery, church and colleges, many of which are from the brush of local Benedictine artists and in the opinion of many compare favorably with the works of the old masters.

In the first edition of the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA, there was not much to say on the subject of education at New Norcia. St. Gertrude's Ladies' College was not long enough in action to forecast its success, and St. Ildephonsus Boys' College was only in embryo. The building of this college was regarded generally as a foolhardy idea, and even when it was built men of position and experience, gazing on its magnificent dimensions, were inclined to be skeptical of their future usefulness. These, however, were false prophets, although it was hard for the casual observer to see how these colleges, so far removed from civilization in the wilds of the Australian bush, could be a success. Abbot Torres, however, with a keener perspective into the future than most men, persevered with his work, furnishing and equipping his college in an up-to-date fashion, until St. Ildephonsus was ready to receive students. The expense of building, etc., of these two colleges was an enormous drain on the New Norcia Mission, for all this had to be delved out of the Mission lands by the Benedictine monks, without a penny of outside help from any quarter.

When the college was ready Bishop Torres, who had set his heart on securing the Marist Brothers as teachers, went to Italy for this purpose and returned successful. He soon after opened his new college with an ideal staff of Marist Brothers. The official opening ceremony took place 22 February, 1913;

His Excellency, Sir Gerald Strickland did the honors on the occasion, in the midst of brilliant surroundings. Sir John Forrest, Commonwealth Treasurer, State ministers of the Crown, and many leading citizens from the capital, motored eighty-two miles to New Norcia to emphasize their appreciation of Bishop Torres' efforts to bring the benefits of a sound Christian secondary education within the reach of all.

The college started with a roll call of fifty boys, and became popular from the start. The first year ended with a roll of 117. Boys rushed in from every quarter and soon made a name for themselves and their college at the public examinations and continue to do so year after year. St. Gertrude's Young Ladies' College of New Norcia, and St. Ildephonsus Boys' College are amongst the most popular and successful secondary schools in Australia, and do an enormous amount of good. Bishop Torres had new his monastery, his diocese, and his two aborigine missions, New Norcia and Disdale River, well equipped with priests, churches, convents, and schools. During his fourteen years as superior, abbot ordinarius and Bishop of New Norcia, His Lordship accomplished more than most men can boast of in a lifetime. The secret of Bishop Torres' success may be attributed to his possession of a keen and penetrating intellect, his great determination and his superhuman energy. He worked perhaps indiscreetly hard, rarely taking five hours rest out of twenty-four. He was his own draftsman, his own architect, his own supervisor of works. He directed everyone and everything within his monastery and his diocese, and did so to the complete satisfaction of all. He died 15 October, 1914, at the age of fifty-three, widely and deeply mourned, and Very Rev. Father Bas, O. S. B., prior, continued to be superior during the interregnum.

Rt. Rev. Anselm Catalan, O. S. B., Abbot Visitor of the Spanish Province of the Benedictines, was sent from Manila to preside at the election of Bishop Torres' successor, and to his own surprise was elected to succeed, 26 March, 1915. In a few days after, the newly elected abbot set out for Rome to have the election confirmed by Propaganda, the Congregation of the Council, etc. The confirmation of an abbatial election ordinarily belongs to the abbot general, but in the case of New Norcia the abbot is both abbot and ordinarius, and as such the confirmation comes within the jurisdiction of Propaganda. The election being canonically confirmed, Abbot Catalan returned to his monastery and diocese in Australia, and was installed in his cathedral after High Mass on the following Sunday in the presence of an unusually large congregation, and amidst great congratulations and rejoicings. During his seven years administration as abbot ordinarius Abbot Catalan retained his hold on the affections of his monks and people.

The term of his office so far is not marked by any great improvements in or around the monastery, His Lordship's attention having been engaged in other directions, viz. in improving the mission properties outside the orbit of the monastery, and stabilising the mission finance after the heavy drain of Bishop Torres' regime, a very necessary work indeed, and already showing good results. The only source of revenue the Benedictines of New Norcia have is the product of the soil, and the spending power of the mission for legitimate undertakings is in exact proportion to the returns from the land. The Benedictines never trade on borrowed money.

After a period of hostility on the part of the natives, during which the missionaries were sometimes in danger of their lives, they have succeeded in winning the friendship of the savages. Some hundreds of these nomads flock around the Mission and willingly, even cheerfully, help the Fathers in any work that turns up, clearing the land, planting, gardening, etc.

They also take well to Christian teaching, and give the missionaries promise of turning out good Catholics. Great indeed is the transformation of these hitherto unfortunate people. Great also is the work of the Benedictine Fathers in leading them out of the darkness and shadow of death into the true light of Christian civilization, at the risk of their own lives.

The present status of the Mission is as follows: parishes 4; abbey 1, abbey nullius of New Norcia, Western Australia; churches 10, missions 2, New Norcia and Driedale River missions; monasteries 2; convents, 5 of nuns, and 1 of men (Marist Brothers); priests, regular 19; secular 3; monastic students 20; lay brothers 26; college of men 1, conducted by Marist Brothers, 10 Brothers teaching; ladies' colleges 2, with 18 nuns teaching; high schools 3, with 28 teachers, nuns 27. There are one boys' high school with 160 boarders; 2 girls' high schools with 190 in attendance; 2 orphanages, 1 for native boys and 1 for native girls, conducted by one Benedictine Brothers and 5 Benedictine Nuns respectively. None of the Mission schools or charitable institutions receive any Government subsidy, except a very paltry sum in aid of the native orphanages. All the rest, buildings, food, clothing, and general upkeep, is entirely dependent on the charity of the Benedictine community. The Catholic population is 2700; the children attending Catholic schools number 400.

New Orleans, ARCHDIOCESE OF (NOVÆ AURELÆ; cf. C. E., XI—5d), in Louisiana. On 4 January, 1918, thirteen civil parishes in the southwestern part of Louisiana were detached from the Archdiocese of New Orleans and erected into the diocese of Lafayette (q. v.). In 1915 the old St. Louis cathedral was condemned by the civil authorities and closed to public worship. Through the generosity of a non-Catholic gentleman who desired to remain unknown, the ancient edifice was repaired and restored to public worship, the first services within the restored edifice being the installation of the Most Rev. John William Shaw. He succeeded the Most Rev. James H. Blenk, who died 20 April, 1917. Archbishop Shaw was b. at Mobile, 16 December, 1863, ordained 20 May, 1888, elected titular bishop of Castabala 7 February, 1910, consecrated 14 April following and made coadjutor bishop of San Antonio, published 27 November, 1911, having already on 11 March, 1911, succeeded the late Bishop John A. Forest. Xavier University for the education of colored youth was opened in 1916, and the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament of Cornwells, Pa., were called to the archdiocese to assume charge. The buildings were purchased through the generosity of Mother Katherine Drexel. The chapel-car, "St. Paul," for the use of the metropolitan see was blessed at Easter, 1915, and immediately entered upon its missionary labors in the archdiocese and the suffragan sees. In 1921 a drive was inaugurated whereby it was hoped to raise the sum of $1,000,000 for the erection of a major seminary for the archdiocese. The drive opened on 8 January and closed on 20 January. It was under the personal direction of the Archbishop and the active chairmanship of the Very Rev. A. J. Bruening, the chancellor of the archdiocese. The drive closed with its purpose realized. Ground has been purchased in New Orleans for the seminary site and it is hoped to have the seminary building ready for occupancy by October, 1922. In February, 1922, a diocesan synod, the first held since the administration of Archbishop Janssens (1888-1897), was held by the Most Rev. Archbishop Shaw. The Hotel-Dieu, an exclusively Catholic hospital in charge of the Sisters of Charity, was enlarged at a cost of $200,000 and a department for incurables established through the gift of $50,000 from Mr. J. Burguières, a Catholic layman. Many new parishes have been erected since the accession of Archbishop Shaw, among them three for colored people and an old mortuary chapel of Spanish colonial days was remodeled for the use of Spanish-speaking Catholics and made a mission of the St. Louis cathedral.

The following religious orders have been admitted to the diocese 1911: The Oblate Fathers of Mary Immaculate, Brothers of Mary, Christian Brothers, Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament, Fathers of the Holy Ghost, Sisters Servants of Mary, Sisters of Mary of the Presentation. During the War, Loyola University suspended many of its courses and the university building and grounds were placed at the disposal of the United States Government. The Loyola Hospital Unit was organized by the medical staff of Loyola University and financed entirely by a non-Catholic lady at an outlay of $100,000, and was placed at the disposal of the Government for service in the camps of Italy. The nursing department was in charge of the Sisters of Charity. Thirty Sisters of Charity and 100 trained nurses under the direction of the head nurse, a Sister of Charity from the province of New Orleans, sailed for Italy and rendered excellent service in field and camp. Catholic men and women served faithfully on the Red Cross committees and on every committee for the raising of funds by the Government the Archbishop and clergy were faithful workers.

Among the deceased since 1911 are: Rev. Daniel Mullane, Provincial of the St. Louis province of the Redemptorists and rector of St. Alphonsus, New Orleans. Rev. A. Otis, S.J., died at Loyola University of which he had been president for six years; he erected the church of the Holy Name of Jesus on the university campus and was recognized as one of the leading educators and missionaries of the far South. Very Rev. Thomas Lorente, O.P., a native of Spain and for many years professor at St. Thomas' College, Manila. During the administration of Archbishop Chapelle as Apostolic Delegate Extraordinary to the Philippine Islands after the Spanish-American War, Father Lorente acted as his auditor and secretary. Returning with Archbishop Chapelle to New Orleans in 1904, Father Lorente became his secretary for a few months until the Dominicans were admitted to the diocese and Father Lorente was made the pastor of St. Anthony's Church. Later he founded the new parish of St. Anthony in New Orleans and the Dominican Seminary for Foreign Missions at Pontchatoula, to which he gave the name of Rosaryville. Father Lorente was subsequently appointed vice-provincial for the Spanish Dominicans in America and died suddenly in August, 1915. Edward Douglass White (q. v.), chief Justice of the United States died in July 1921; also Hon. Frank McGloin (q. v.), K.S.G., in September of the same year; and his son-in-law Hon. James J. McLoughlin, K.S.G., who had been prominent in State and city affairs and active in all church work in New Orleans.

The Catholic population of the archdiocese is estimated at 440,000 and is cosmopolitan in character. It comprises descendants of the original French and Spanish settlers, descendants of Irish and German immigrants, negroes (natives and descendants of San Domingo refugees, 1793), Italians, Belgians, Dutch, Hungarians, Slavs, Syrians and late Spanish immigrants from Mexico and South America. According to the statistics of 1922 the archdiocese contained 119 parishes, 83 missions, 202 churches, 2 monasteries for men, 3 for women, 1 abbey for men, 10 convents for men, 26 for women, 122 secular priests, 151 regulars, 56 lay brothers, 397 nuns, 1091 sisters, 2 seminaries and 99 seminarians. Educational institutions in the archdiocese are: 1 university, 150 professors, 900 students; 4 colleges for men, 71 teachers, 1118 students; 1 college for women, 9 teachers, 30 students; 7 high schools for boys, 68 teachers, 1291 students; 11 high schools and academies for boys, 125 teachers, 1615 students; 1 normal school, 3 teachers, 11 students; 89 elementary (parochial) schools, 506 teachers, 25,000 pupils; 1 high school for colored students (Xavier University); 2 industrial schools, white and colored (the white school has 8 teachers, 44 students; the colored, 9 teachers, 89 students); the Catholic Women's Club also conducts classes in industrial work. There is a summer school connected with Loyola University with 30 teachers and 700 students. The missionary workers of the archdiocese are the St. Vincent de Paul Society and St. Margaret's Daughters among the Poor. The following charitable institutions have been established in the archdiocese: 5 homes, among which is 1 for the aged colored poor conducted by the Sisters of the Holy Family; 9 asylums (1010 orphans); 3 hospitals; 1 refuge; 1 settlement house; 1 day nursery; 1 infant asylum (150 infants); 1 institute for deaf mutes (100 inmates). Fifteen of the institutions admit the ministry of priests. Eight institutions receive aid from the City of New Orleans. The Catholic Women's Club has been organized since 1911 and six new circles were added to St. Margaret's Daughters. The Catholic periodicals published in the Archdiocese are the "Morning Star" and the "Vineyard of the East."

New Pomerania, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (NOVÆ POMERANIÆ; cf. C. E., XI—17c) in Oceania, is entrusted to the Missionaries of the Sacred Heart of Issoudin. Rt. Rev. Louis Couppé, M.S.H., titular Bishop of Leros, b. 26 August, 1850, consecrated vicar Apostolic of New Pomerania, 9 October, 1890, still (1922) governs the vicariate. He resides at Hebertshöhe (New Britain). According to 1920 statistics there are 38 missionary priests, 48 Brothers, 30 Sisters of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart, 31 principal stations, 130 substations, 26 churches or chapels, 116 schools with 4096 pupils, 13 orphanages, a Catholic population of 20,419, and 82 catechists.

New Thought may be defined as a philosophico-religious, pantheistic, pragmatist system of life which seeks by deifying man to free him from sickness, error, and all other evils.

DOCTRINE.—Criticism.—New Thought is not an organized church; it is not, so its leaders claim, a fixed system of thought, philosophy or religion; it has no fixed creed or dogma. There is, however, a loosely united central organization of teachers and leaders, which is known as the International New Thought Alliance, from the publications of which, in conjunction with various works issued by New Thought leaders, a summary of their teachings may be gleaned. According to the Constitution and By-Laws of the Alliance, the purpose is: "To teach the Infinitude of the Supreme One; the Divinity of Man and his Infinite Possibilities through the creative power of constructive thinking; and, obedience to the voice of the Indwelling Presence, which is our source of Inspiration, Power, Health, and Prosperity." Its motto is "Propaganda and Fellowship." The general character of the teaching is apparent from the following statements issued by the Washington headquarters for use in Sunday service. "This organization has for its prime object the teaching of the Christianity of Christ, and not the Christianity of any sect; the doctrine of Jesus of Nazareth, without theological dogma. We believe that Jesus meant just what He said, and that everything that He taught is not only true, but practical and practicable in daily life. Whenever He is said to have healed, we believe and teach that His cures were effected, not by miracle, or by violation of, or exception to, the laws of his Heavenly Father, but in compliance with the laws of the Father. We, therefore, believe and teach that, when the doctrine of Jesus and the Laws of God are studied and followed in daily life, health, happiness, abundance, and healing of the sick 'follow them that believe.'"

Statement of Being.—"There is One Presence, One Intelligence, One Substance, One Life, the Good Omnipotent.

"God is the name of the Everywhere Present Principle, in whom I live, move, and have my being.

"In all, and through all, and above all, God Almighty.

"Thy name is Spirit. I know Thee as the One All-Seeing Mind.

"Thou art always with me as indwelling Wisdom and Love.

"Thy law is now the Standard of my life, and I am at peace.

"I in Thee, and Thou in me."

The Lord's Prayer.—In present tense: "Our Father who art in Heaven, Hallowed is Thy name. Thy kingdom is come; Thy will is done on earth as it is in Heaven. Thou givest us each day our daily bread. Thou forgivest us our debts as we forgive our debtors. Thou leadest us not into temptation; but dost deliver us from all evil. For Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory, forever and ever.—Amen."

The foregoing may be considered as the official tenets of the Alliance. Their full meaning is made apparent by a study of New Thought books. Thus a creed is impossible for followers of New Thought because "the term itself conveys the idea of a growing or developing thought. When New Thought is molded and formed into a system it ceases to be 'New' Thought. Truth is not susceptible of monopoly or being made into a system. . . . It is the divine right of each individual to believe what he pleases." This is to all intents and purposes the Modernist doctrine of evolution of dogma, holding that truth is changeable, as opposed to the Catholic doctrine that dogma is immutable, that truth is unchangeable. Yet New Thought does teach various "dogmas." Pantheism is the fundamental error, for this system teaches the "Divinity of Man," and that "man is a microcosm of God." Of our Lord it is said, "He laid down his life for men—an expression that has no reference to his death." The Atonement of Christ is rejected on the plea that, because God is omnipotent there is no need for intermediaries or for a vicarious atonement. Naturally, too, the doctrine of original sin is rejected, for according to the New Thought thesis of evolution man's "only fall was upward." Hence also "all forms of orthodoxy implying emphasis on man's sinfulness, and a future punishment" are rejected. New Thought essentially claims to offer a means of healing both sin and sickness and other evils through a "rediscovery" of the method which Jesus employed, which it claims not to have been miraculous at all but within the reach of all "who fully realize their oneness with God." This fundamental idea is common to both New Thought and Christian Science (q. v.), for they are both developments from the teachings of Phineas Quimby. New Thought, however, unlike Christian Science, proclaims the will and faith (assurance, confidence, not theological faith) as factors in its healing methods, faith being described as "a spiritual force that has accomplished wonders. . . . To believe that we are well or that we are going to become so, excites a spiritual force within us that goes far towards making us so. . . . In the . . . healer it is a positive mental force, in the patient a receptive mental state." Underlying this New Thought doctrine of faith there is, of course, the psychological truth of the power of suggestion. It is in lowering the works of Jesus to practically this level that New Thought errs. New Thought employs in practice various methods: (1) The tactual, e.g. placing the hand on the head of the patient; this the exponents claim causes contact of mind with mind and the transmission of healthy emotional states to the mind of the patient. This they claim to be the explanation of many of the cures performed by Christ. (2) The visual, not in common use; it is claimed to be derived from the Scriptural account of the healing of the lame man by St. Peter and St. John (Acts, iii). (3) The silent which is practised when in tactual contact with the patient or when he is at a distance; a telepathic mental message being delivered to the mind of the latter. This theory enables New Thought practitioners to carry on their trade without coming in contact with their patients, and in some New Thought magazines advertisements of such practitioners appear. (4) The verbal method consists in the patient audibly repeating formulas denying the existence of fear, sickness, and affirming motives of trust, confidence, power, oneness with God. These four methods may be designated by the general title of "health-affirmation method." (5) There is another quite different species that can be designated the harmony-with-disease method in which the patient "vibrates" with the disease, and through non-resistance is supposed to recover his health. (6) An extension of the healing treatment is found in the prosperity treatment which, on the ground that failures in business and life generally, are due to the same causes as sickness, namely fears, beliefs and the like, seeks by "affirmation" to destroy poverty.

While New Thought is not an organized church, yet it bases the teachings outlined above on a philosophy of life which it heralds as an "advance on the older ethical and religious systems;" which preaches "the universality of religion" (by this it seems to mean simply individualism) and receives among its followers members of any religious denomination. Starting with the idea that God is an immanent, indwelling spirit (as actually applied this is pantheistic, and must not be confused with the Catholic teaching that God is everywhere and that He dwells in each soul) New Thought holds that therefore evil is merely a negative quantity, the absence of good, that "sin and moral evil are largely an ignorant selfishness" and, "it would proclaim to man his freedom from the necessity of belief in disease, poverty, and all evil as a part of God's plan." In brief, the true and eternal nature of man is good; he is not hampered by moral inability, by natural sinfulness; he is god-like and spiritual being is potentially within him; "the spirit of man is sinless, diseaseless, deathless, sharing the very nature of God and destined to immortal glory." The important point to remember in evaluating these enunciations is that New Thought holds that this sharing in the nature of God takes place here and now; it is considered as the natural state of man; the supernatural is denied; man's heaven is as much on earth as elsewhere. Hence, prayer, grace, the sacraments, find no place in this system; the "Affirmations of Being" are declared to be the true form of prayer and this they claim will finally supersede the older forms of worship. Hence it may be seen that the hope and intention of New Thought is to establish itself as the universal religion, despite the absence of any such apparent present purpose. In point of fact not a few New Thought churches have been organized in which Sunday services are held wherein "the silence" and "healing" are a part of the program. while, as in Christian Science, Wednesday "experience" meetings are also conducted. That New Thought does perform some cures is not to be denied; nervous diseases and similar disorders, it is known from the laws of psychology, will yield to mental treatment and this in general is the explanation of their cures, although New Thought leaders hold that their system is "spiritual" rather than mental. The immoral tendency of New Thought (fortunately New Thoughtists do not always follow their doctrines to their natural conclusions) is evident from its perversion of the teaching on sin, from its rejection of the supernatural, of the Atonement of Christ, of the doctrine of future punishment, and from the absence of supernatural means enabling man to struggle against temptation and overcome the promptings of his lower nature.

HISTORY.—The New Thought movement can be traced back to Phineas Parkhurst Quimby (1802-1866), a native of New Hampshire, at one time a pupil of Charles Poyen, a French mesmerist, who visited the United States in 1836. Beginning in 1840 to practise mesmerism, Quimby began to "heal" by putting a "subject," one Lucius Burkmar, into the mesmeric state, Burkmar then diagnosing the patient's disease and prescribing the remedy. Claiming to have been himself cured of kidney trouble (by Burkmar placing his hands on Quimby and "reuniting" to one kidney a diseased piece three inches long which had become almost entirely separated), Quimby came to the conclusion that the cure had really been a mental process on his own part, that disease is "a deranged state of mind," that it, its power over life and its curability "are all embraced in belief, and that the curative "principle" consists in producing changes in the belief of the patient. He then gave up mesmerism and set himself to reduce his "discovery" to a "science," asserting that it was more than mental suggestion and claiming a "spiritual" foundation for his work. Holding that "one spirit may operate directly on another spirit, and that the basis of this spiritual activity is the Divine in us," he claimed to have "rediscovered the method of healing by which Jesus wrought, not his 'miracles,' but his highly intelligible works of healing." About 1860 Quimby began to formulate his ideas in writing, thus bringing into being the "Quimby manuscripts," about which so much controversy has raged in connection with Christian Science. After Quimby's death, Julius A. Dresser, one of his patients, resenting Mrs. Eddy's claims (see CHRISTIAN SCIENCE) took up the practice of mental healing, following Quimby's system. Another of Quimby's pupils, Rev. Warren Felt Evans, of the New Church (Swedenborgian), did likewise, publishing in 1869 "The Mental Cure," "Mental Medicine" in 1872, "Soul and Body" in 1875, and "The Divine Law of Cure" in 1881, the last named being especially instrumental in giving impetus and direction to the New Thought movement. By 1882 and 1883 the movement had so many "practitioners" and followers in Boston that it was known as the "mind-cure" or the "Boston craze." In 1886 the first society or "church" was founded by J. W. Winkley, a Unitarian minister, under the title of the "Church of the Divine Unity." "Metaphysical Clubs" were founded in many places; and in Massachusetts, Connecticut, and New York societies were organized under the name, "Light, Love, Truth." The movement spread also to the West, being known as "Practical Christianity" in Kansas City (two of whose branches were called "The Society of Silent Unity," and the "Unity School of Christianity"), and "Divine Science" in Denver and San Francisco.

Until 1890 the general name of the movement was "mental science"; after that date the term "New Thought" came into vogue, being first officially applied to a magazine founded in 1894. The first "New Thought" society with a regular organization, after the new name had come into general use, was the "Church of the Higher Life," founded in Boston in 1894 by Mrs. Van-Anderson, and still existing in 1919, though without a leader. The Greenacre Conferences, also founded in 1894, at Eliot, Maine, became later a summer center for New Thought gatherings. Afterwards this organization was opened to Swamis with their Vedantic philosophy from India, and Miss Farmer, the founder, finally became a devotee of Bahaism. In 1895 the Metaphysical Club was founded in Boston, and this society, through its active propaganda, was the first which made a determined effort to spread its views and try to gain a general following, and from it in a sense grew the more general organization which later sprang up. The first national convention was held in 1894; the first to be held under the name of New Thought was in Boston in 1899. This Boston convention organized "The International Metaphysical League" (in passing we may note that included in the "purpose" of this league, was "to teach the universal Fatherhood and Motherhood" [!] of God), which met in 1900, electing officers from the United States, England, Australia and New Zealand. Apparently this organization was not very successful; in 1903 an "International New Thought Convention" was held in Chicago, which met annually until 1906, when a reorganization was effected. In 1908 the name was changed to "The National New Thought Alliance," and this in turn became in 1914 "The International New Thought Alliance," the first international convention being held in London in that year, there being present representatives of the American body, of the "Higher Thought Centre" of Great Britain and of the "Ligue Internationale de la Nouvelle Pensée," and "La Société Unitive" of France. The first international congress was held at San Francisco in 1915, the Panama-Pacific Exposition dedicating to it one day known as New Thought Day. The international headquarters are now in Washington, D. C. Outside of the United States the movement has (as of the year 1919) organizations or representatives in the Hawaiian Islands, England, Scotland, Ireland, Australia, New Zealand, France, Chile, and Brazil. It is impossible to give any accurate statistics since its followers are also in many cases members of various sects. Probably it has its greatest strength in the central and western states of the United States. It is claimed that the Unity Society of Kansas City, Missouri, has a membership of 50,000 scattered throughout the country. The leaders of the movement claim that it has influenced "millions." On the basis of the number of magazines (they are quite numerous) devoted to the propagation of New Thought ideas an estimate that there are possibly 200,000 devotees in the world may be hazarded, but the number of full members (those not affiliated with any other church) can hardly be as high as 100,000 in the United States, and not much above that figure in the world.

OTHER HEALING ASSOCIATIONS.—Besides the two leading organizations, Christian Science and New Thought, in which "divine healing" plays a prominent part there are many others in which this doctrine finds a place. Some of these are organized churches (a few are found even among the so-called "evangelicals"), while others are more specifically healing associations. Although, with possibly one or two exceptions, they are not genetically connected with New Thought they may be briefly summarized here:

(1) The Emmanuel Movement arose in the Protestant Episcopal Church about 1906, originating in Emmanuel Church, Boston. Practice here was confined to treatment of functional nervous disorders, and usually in connection with the aid of regular physicians. The movement spread to many Protestant Episcopal churches in the United States and to some Anglican churches in Great Britain. The usual method employed is the laying on of hands and anointing. This practice was taken up as a protection against Christian Science, utilizing, as the leaders stated, the truth underlying the latter, namely the influence of moral over physical states. Some other Protestant organizations have inaugurated a similar movement; moreover, especially in its earlier history, New Thought numbered among its adherents not a few Protestant ministers who at the same time retained their denominational affiliation.

(2) The Assemblies of God, General Council, organized in Arkansas and Missouri in 1914, accept some orthodox doctrines. They hold the coming of Jesus and the beginning of the millenium as imminent, and profess to have the gift of divine healing. They reported in 1921 about 118 organizations, 937 ministers, and 6703 members.

(3) The Christian Catholic Church in Zion, known formerly as the Christian Catholic Apostolic Church in Zion (the Dowieites), was founded by John Alexander Dowie who, claiming to have been miraculously cured, organized a healing association in Australia, in 1888. Having come to Chicago in 1890, he changed the name of his "Divine Healing Association" to that listed above; in 1896. In 1900 he founded a town, Zion City, Illinois, where he established headquarters. Though he proclaimed himself "Elijah the Restorer of All Things" in 1901, and "First Apostle" in 1903, he was ousted by his followers in 1906, and Wilbur G. Voliva, the present leader, succeeded him. This sect condemned all Christian denominations in general, but particularly was Christian Science excoriated by Dowie, who also considered doctors as inspired by the devil. Dowie claimed, about 1905, to have thousands of followers all over the world. The government statistics for 1906 reported for this church, 17 organizations (in 10 states), 17 church edifices or halls, 35 ministers and 5865 members, of whom 40 per cent were males and 60 per cent females. Since then the association has not made public its statistics; the population of Zion City, which since 1911 is governed by a mayor and council (quasi-ecclesiastical, however), was 4789 in 1910 and 5580 in 1920.

(4) The Church of the Universal Messianic Message is an outgrowth of the Christian Yoga Society which was founded at Spokane, Wash., in 1911, by A. K. Moomdar after a study of oriental religions. This church purposes to "bring about unity with Omnipresent God on the part of its members, in imitation of the Great Master, Jesus Christ; to heal the sick by an appeal to God for an interposition of divine power," and to teach the great mystery of life. It accepts no creed and recognizes no sacrament, nor ministerial office. In 1921 there were 5 organizations and 266 members.

(5) The Apostolic Faith Movement originated in 1900, not as a denomination strictly so-called, but rather as a loose union of free-lance evangelists. The chief doctrine and practice is that of healing, the leaders visiting and praying for the sick while those at a distance are treated by correspondence, and by sending them objects such as handkerchiefs that have been "blessed" for that purpose. Their headquarters are at Los Angeles, Cal., Portland, Ore., and Minneapolis. In 1921 they had 24 churches, 26 ministers and 2196 members. They carry on foreign missionary work in many countries.

(6) The Church Transcendent, known also as the "Transcendental Way," founded at Warren, Ohio, in 1915, holds as one of its principles that mind transcends matter and is the conqueror over evil. It aims at a universal religion transcending "all the partial, racial and national religions." In 1921 it had 3 churches, 2 ministers, 91 members.

(7) The Missionary Church Association, founded at Berne, Ind., in 1898, accepts many of the orthodox teachings of Christianity. It believes in the healing of the body in answer to the prayer of faith. In 1921 it had 25 organizations, 59 ministers, 1554 members.

(8) An organization very similar to the preceding is the International Apostolic Holiness Church, founded at Cincinnati in 1897. In 1921 it reported 325 churches, 640 ministers, 11,000 members.

(9) The Mennonite Brethren in Christ in common with some other branches (see MENNONITES), hold the doctrine of divine healing of the sick by the "laying on of hands, and anointing with oil, and praying over them."

(10) The Pentecostal Holiness Church, organized at Anderson, S. C., in 1898, accepts in general the doctrines of Methodism. It believes also in divine healing but does not condemn the practice of medicine as essentially civil. In 1921 it reported 192 churches 282 ministers, 5353 members.

(11) The Progressive Spiritual Church is a very radical Spiritualist organization holding that Jesus was merely a medium and his resurrection a materialization. As to healing it holds that divine metaphysics guide the mind of the medium on earth and that only in this way can the cause of disease be detected and overcome. In 1921 it reported 11 churches 20 ministers, 5831 members.

(12) There are also a few independent Reformed Christian Science churches. (See CHRISTIAN SCIENCE; also in the original edition, EXTREME UNCTION; LOURDES; MIRACLES; PRAYER; PSYCHOTHERAPY.)

New York (cf. C. E. XI-19c)—The area of the State of New York is 49,204 square miles. The population in 1920 was 10,385,227, a gain of 14 per cent since 1910. Of this, 82.7% was urban; 17.3 was rural. In 130 years the population of the state has increased 36 times. The average number of inhabitants per square mile was 217.9, as against 191.2 in 1910, and 152.5 in 1900. There were 59 cities, of which 6 have over 100,000 inhabitants and 16 have from 25,000 to 100,000 inhabitants. The proportion of the population of New York living in places of 2500 or more increased from 72.9 per cent in 1900, to 78.8 per cent in 1910, and to 82.7 per cent in 1920. The six largest cities are New York, with a population of 5,620,048; Buffalo 506,775; Syracuse 171,717; Albany 113,344; Yonkers 100,176; Utica 94,156. About two million and a half live outside the New York City limits. There are within the State 7 Indian reservations, inhabited by 4458 Indians.

ECONOMIC STATUS.—In 1919 New York had 49,374 manufacturing establishments employing 1,229,900 people as wage earners. The capital invested was $6,033,852,000; the cost of materials, $4,947,991,000; the value of the products, $8,875,007,000.

COMMERCE.—In 1920 New York was the first shipping port in the world, surpassing even the ports of London and Liverpool. Its imports were of the value of approximately $1,251,790,373; and its exports, $2,616,850,680. The tonnage movement of foreign trade for the year ending 30 June, 1920, was entered, 15,049,744; cleared, 14,275,255.

AGRICULTURE.—In 1920 there were in the State 193,195 farms of a total area of 20,632,803 acres, of which 13,158,781 acres were improved land. The value of the farms was $1,908,483,201; of live stock, $313,554,695. Though the number of farms showed a decrease of 10.4 per cent since 1910, the crop value revealed an increase of 119 per cent, being $417,046,864 in 1920. The principal crops were: cereals, $82,524,839; hay $169,494,524; vegetables $104,070,460; the wool clip was 3,350,824 pounds, valued at $1,976,986. The dairy industry is still important as the receipts from the sale of dairy products in 1920 were $174,155,050. The fruit crop in the same year was worth $34,891,361.

MINING.—The mines of the State in 1918 yielded products valued at $54,997,036; the quarries produced building stone valued at $5,208,752. The salt springs produced in the same year 15,218,071 barrels of salt worth $2,176,472, while the petroleum wells yielded $3,307,814 worth of crude petroleum. New York is still the wealthiest State in the United States, the aggregate value of all the property within the State in the year 1919 (latest estimate) being $12,758,021,954, of which $12,322,150,324 represented real property and improvements. The personal property was worth $435,871,630. The property in New York City alone was worth $1,225,065,569. The revenue of the State government was $86,433,925 (1918-19). The city of New York received the enormous revenue of $905,733,841. The bonded debt of the State in 1919 was $236,744,660. The State income is derived mainly from taxes on assessable property, fees from foreign corporations, licenses, taxes on certain public franchises and trusts and banks. New York has a personal income tax modelled on the Federal law. Personal property yielding an income is exempt from the property tax. The State Tax Commission administers all the tax statutes in the State.

TRANSPORTATION.—There are 8,534 miles of railway track and 6,039 miles of electric railway. The canals cover 638 miles, of which 361 miles belong to the Erie Canal. The State Barge Canal has just been completed at a cost of $150,000,000. It is 12 feet deep and has a capacity of 20,000,000 tons. In 1919 goods carried free on these State canals were valued at $35,000,000. The port of New York has a total water-front of 578.4 miles.

EDUCATION.—School attendance is compulsory for all children between seven and sixteen years of age. A recent amendment to the educational law makes instruction in physical training or kindred subjects compulsory for all over 8 years of age, and military training for all between 16 and 19 at least three hours a week between September and June 15. Attendance in part-time schools is required of children 14-17 years of age, who are not high school graduates, and who are not regularly attending school. Every minor between 16 and 21 years of age who does not possess the ability to speak, read, and write the English language as required for the completion of the fifth grade of the public or private schools shall attend some day, evening or private school. Bible reading in the public schools is neither permitted nor excluded. The laws governing private or parochial schools are as follows: The Regents of the University of the State of New York shall prescribe courses in citizenship and patriotism to be maintained and followed in all schools of the State. Similar courses shall be prescribed in private schools. The Commissioner of Education shall be responsible for the enforcement of this Act and shall cause to be inspected and supervised the instruction to be given in such subjects. The instruction required shall be: At a public school in which at least the six common school branches of reading, spelling, writing, arithmetic, the English language, and geography are taught in English; elsewhere than a public school, in the same subjects, taught in English by a competent teacher. No public money shall be used for the support of any educational institution of any religious denomination (IX4). Subjects taught in private schools must be substantially equivalent to those taught in public schools. Courses in patriotism and citizenship shall be prescribed in all public and private schools. The school term of private schools must be equal in length to that of public schools.

In 1918 there were 2,421,283 children of school age (5-18), 11,898 public schools with 1,672,311 pupils, 52,858 teachers, 964 public high schools and academies with 197,119 pupils and 8375 teachers. In the 10 normal public normal schools there were 348 teachers and 7020 students. Moreover, the State has 133 vocational schools. The total expenditure on education in 1919 was $126,050,044; the city of New York with 1862 pupils and 46,020 teachers spent $45,765,043 in 1919. The 136 universities, professional and technical schools had 5634 teachers and 52,043 students. The New York City College has an enrolment of 14,473; West Point 701. The public statistics of the United States Bureau of Education (1920, Bulletin No. 3) show that 117 private schools and academies (not parochial schools) were conducted under the auspices of the Catholic Church in New York in 1918. In 1920 there were 300,000 in the Catholic schools. The United States Education Bureau (1920) reported that in 1918, 10,674 were registered in the Catholic secondary schools alone. The Catholic Directory estimates the number of people under Catholic care, including the orphans and other inmates of charitable institutions, as 350,198. The New York State Public Library has 506,000 volumes; the New York City Public Library has 2,306,471 books and 320,464 pamphlets, in all 2,626,935 volumes.

RELIGION.—According to the latest United States Census of Religious Denominations, the members of all denominations numbered 4,315,404, divided as follows: Catholics, 2,745,552; Methodist Episcopalians, 328,250; Protestant Episcopalians, 227,685; Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, 222,888; Baptists Northern Convention, 182,443; Jewish Congregations 112,924; Lutheran General Council 73,582; Reformed Church in America 66,773; Congregational Churches 65,021; all other denominations, 289,287. There were 8,780 church edifices, 867 halls, and 5319 parsonages (valued at $28,782,609). The total value of church property was $293,210,904, and the debt $36,201.46. The Sunday schools, 8616 in number, were attended by 1,296,956 scholars. The present law of New York limits the income of the religious and charitable corporations of the State to $1,000,000; and the value of their property to $10,000,000. The Catholics formed 63.6 per cent. of the total of the religious communicants, but only 44.6 claimed any membership whatever. There were 281

Catholics for every 1000 of the population, a gain of 7.3 per cent. over the censuses of 1890: 24 Protestant Episcopalians for each 1000. For further statistics see NEW YORK, ARCHDIOCESE OF and its suffragans in the State.

MARRIAGE.—A marriage license must be obtained from the clerk of the town or city where a woman resides or, if she is a non-resident, where the marriage is solemnized. Both parties must appear before the issuer of the license. A city clerk of a city of over 1,000,000 inhabitants may solemnize a marriage upon a license issued by himself. To take or harbor any girl under eighteen years of age for the purpose of marriage without the consent of her parents or guardian constitutes abduction. An action to annul her marriage may be brought by a woman where she was under eighteen years of age at the time of the marriage and the consent of her parents or guardian was not had and the marriage was not consummated and not ratified by mutual consent after she attained the age of eighteen. After a divorce is granted, re-marriage is forbidden to the guilty party during the life of the spouse, unless, after three years have elapsed, proof is made of his or her uniform good conduct, when the defendant may be permitted by the court to marry again.

SUNDAY LAWS.—The New York laws permit barbers to work on Sundays only before one o'clock and only in the city of New York and the village of Saratoga Springs. Local authorities, either on their own initiative or upon the result of a local referendum, are authorized to license Sunday baseball and other sports. The question of Sunday theatres is left to the community.

MILITIA.—Under the provisions of the Military Law of the State a new active organization was created in 1917 to take the place of the National Guard, which was then in Federal service. It is part of the active militia of the State, is partly subject to Federal control, and receives rifles and ammunition from the Federal Government.

RECENT HISTORY.—In 1911 laws were passed, re-apportioning Congressional districts of the State, providing for a direct State tax and direct primary voting, and regulating child labor. In 1913 Governor William Sulzer was impeached and removed from office for misapplication of party funds. He was succeeded by Martin Glynn, a Catholic, through whom State conventions were abolished and a short ballot law and workmen's compensation Act were adopted. Vocational and industrial education and medical inspection in schools were provided for by law; vital statistics were put under the State Department of Health. A new Education Bill (1916) made provision for town boards of education and for a school board in every city of the State, making their powers uniform. The former clause was repealed in the 1918 session. A constitutional convention was held in 1915, but the revised constitution was overwhelmingly defeated in the November election. A Child Welfare Board has been set up in each county and mothers' pensions allowed. The constitution was amended in 1918 to require that all voters after 1 January, 1920, read and write English. An income tax in the same year was placed on all, even non-residents, who had their source of income in New York State. The constitutionality of the law was referred to the Supreme Court. State scholarships for all veterans of the late war have been established. A bridge to be known as the Great Western Highway, is to be built across the Mohawk River at Schenectady.

A Department of State Police was established in the 1918 session of the legislature. The 1920 session will be memorable for the expulsion of the Socialist members of the Assembly, who were charged with belonging to a party disloyal to the Government and with having been elected on a platform hostile to the interest of the State and country. The Socialist party amended their constitution in 1920 and two of the expelled members were re-admitted. A bonus was voted to all military and naval veterans of the late war, the bond issue not to exceed $45,000,000. The housing situation in New York city became so acute that innumerable rent laws were passed as means of relief. The Federal Prohibition Act was ratified on 29 January, 1919, and the Suffrage Amendment on 16 June, 1919. The enforcement of the Prohibition Act is outlined in the Mullane-Gage Law of 1921. The prevailing liquor tax law is repealed, as well as the city local option law and the duty of enforcement was transferred from the excise department (abolished) to the State attorney-general. The term intoxicating liquor is construed to mean liquor containing more than one-half of one per cent alcohol. Sacramental wines and medical liquors are excepted.

During the European War New York contributed the greatest number of soldiers to the United States Army (9.79 per cent). Most of the New York members of the national guard joined the 27th Division at Camp Wadsworth, South Carolina; those of the national army, the 77th Division at Camp Upton, New York, or the 78th Division at Camp Dix, New Jersey. Flying regiments were quartered at Mineola, Long Island. The summary of casualties among New York men is as follows: deceased, 476 officers, 8720 men; prisoners, 42 officers, 835 men; wounded, 1203 officers, 28,946 men.

New York, ARCHDIOCESE OF (NEO EBORACENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—20b), comprises 4717 square miles of the State of New York, and the Bahama Islands, an area of 4466 sq. miles. On 15 September, 1902, Rt. Rev. John M. Farley, who had been Titular Bishop of Zeugma and auxiliary of Archbishop Corrigan since 21 Dec., 1895, was promoted to the archiepiscopal see. On 25 April, 1904, Rev. Thomas F. Cusack was made auxiliary of the archbishop, and Titular Bishop of Themiscyra, until he was promoted (5 July, 1915) to the see of Albany. Archbishop Farley was created Cardinal Priest on 27 November, 1911, and died 17 September, 1918. His auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Patrick J. Hayes, succeeded him 10 March, 1919. Born in New York 20 November, 1867, he made his studies at Manhattan College, the seminary of Troy and the Catholic University, was ordained 8 September, 1892, and served as curate of St. Gabriel's and secretary to Cardinal Farley, was made chancellor of the archdiocese in 1903, named a prelate of the Holy See 15 October, 1907, and appointed titular Bishop of Tagasta and auxiliary to the archbishop 3 July, 1914. On 29 November, 1917, he was named ordinary of all Catholics mobilized in the army and navy, and in February, 1920, Chaplain in Chief of the American army, and navy, and decorated by France Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. The same year he was decorated with the Order of the Crown of Italy, in recognition of the services he rendered Italy during the War. In 1921 an auxiliary Bishop was appointed in the person of Rt. Rev. John J. Dunn, consecrated titular Bishop of Camuliana 28 October, 1921. Born in New York in 1870, Bishop Dunn was ordained in 1896, and named a private chamberlain in 1914. He was placed in charge of the Society of the Propagation of the Faith in New York, in 1904, and served in this capacity until his appointment as bishop. Rt. Rev. John J. Collins, S. J., retired Vicar Apostolic of Jamaica, and titular Bishop of Antiphello, also resides in the archdiocese, at Fordham University.

The Catholic population of the archdiocese numbers

1,473,291, an increase of 148,291 since 1919. The latest statistics (1922) credit it with 313 parish churches, 82 missions with churches, 204 chapels, 31 mission stations, 728 secular and 413 regular clergy, 1 theological seminary with 219 students, 1 preparatory seminary with 350 students, 1 university, 31 colleges and academies for boys with 8995 students, 4 colleges for girls with 817 pupils, 46 academies for girls with 7896 pupils, 119 parochial schools for boys with 39,477 pupils, 119 parochial schools for girls with 43,153 pupils within the city, and 69 parochial schools outside of the city with 8256 boys and 8704 girls, making a total of 99,590 children in parochial schools. The various institutions include 8 administration offices, 14 protective agency offices, 19 child-caring institutions, 32 day nurseries and settlements, 5 homes for the aged, 20 homes and residences for women, 3 correctional homes for women, 29 hospitals, sanitariums and convalescent homes, and 9 immigrant homes. A total of 175,538 young people are under Catholic care. To co-ordinate all these vast activities a Bureau of Catholic Charities was established in the Terminal Building, near the Grand Central Station. It has a staff of seven priests directing the clerical and visiting work of a great number of lay employees. It has also local offices in Richmond, Dutchess, Orange, Sullivan and Westchester Counties, the purpose of this centralization being to prevent overlapping and duplication of work, thus achieving the double end of economy and efficiency. An appeal of the archbishop to finance this great enterprise brought a ready response of over two million dollars, though the average contribution from each person was not much over three dollars payable at the convenience of the donor. A very valuable aid in the work of preaching was obtained by two volumes of splendid dogmatic and moral instructions, distributed to the clergy by the archbishop, which insured uniformity of instructions throughout the archdiocese. It is the work of Fathers Charles J. Callan and John M. McHugh of the Order of Preachers. The Knights of Columbus are continuing their activities in the New York Archdiocese with ever increasing ardor. They have established scholarships in the colleges of Manhattan and Fordham, and besides providing generally for their own sick or needy members, furnish recreation of various kinds to thousands of orphans, irrespective of creed, race, or color, and distribute baskets to the poor for a bountiful Christmas dinner. Their greatest effort has recently been launched in a great building campaign for the erection of an immense central headquarters, and on 17 April, 1922, $1,100,000 in pledges and $400,000 in cash had been received for this purpose. This structure is to be used first for the requirements of the club for welfare work of various kinds, for archdiocesan meetings, a center for free employment and hospitalization work, educational course, a social secretarial center with gymnasium and swimming pools, and a great auditorium for public gatherings and civic and social events. Of the 140 evening schools established by the Knights after demobilization, there are four schools in New York giving sixty courses in more than forty subjects. Apart from the Knights of Columbus, the Catholic writers and stage folk have been formed into guilds, the Most Reverend Archbishop frequently attending their meetings.

Newark, DIOCESE OF (NOVARCENSIS; cf. C. E., X—779d), in New Jersey. According to the statistics of 1922 the diocese contains 206 churches, 37 missions, with churches, 6 stations, 114 chapels, 1 Abbey (Benedictine) for men with 50 priests, 23 clerics, 3 novices, 17 lay brothers, 15 scholastics, 1 monastery for women (Dominican), 1687 Sisters, 362 secular priests, 221 regulars, 1 diocesan seminary with 52 seminarians, 4 seminaries for religious orders, 161 students. Five diocesan students are at Rome and two at Louvain. The educational institutions in the diocese are: 6 colleges and academies for boys (1195 pupils), 1 college for women, 15 academies for girls (1900 pupils), 137 parochial schools (70,588 pupils), 1 industrial school (200 inmates); total young people under Catholic care 67,412. The following charitable institutions exist in the diocese: 4 homes for the aged, 1 institute for the blind, 1 home for incurables, 1 nursery and babies' hospital, 3 homes for working girls, 1 for orphans, 1 for boys. Since 1911 the Capuchins have been established in the diocese. In 1922 the Catholic population numbered 598,143. The present incumbent is the Rt. Rev. John J. O'Connor, who has administered the diocese since 1901.

Newport, DIOCESE OF. See CARDIFF.

Ngan-Hwei, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF; (cf. C. E., VIII—634d), in China, erected by papal brief of 8 August, 1921, comprising the province of Ngan-hwei, heretofore part of the former Vicariate Apostolic of Kiang-nan. The vicariate is under the care of the Jesuits of the provinces of Castile, Leon, and Turin and is accordingly divided into three distinct parts, conforming to the three intendencies which Ngan-hwei comprises, each having at its head a regular superior in the capacity of vicarius delegatus. The vicar apostolic has not yet been appointed. For the year 1920-21, there were in Ngan-hwei: 464 Christian communities, 73,912 Catholics, 53,531 catechumens. The records show 1794 baptisms of adults, 4964 baptisms of children, 1028 confirmations, 39,576 annual confessions, 39,386 annual communions, 187,399 confessions of devotions, 338,777 communions of devotion, 578 who received extreme unction, 712 marriages, 115 schools for boys and 3223 Catholic and 1386 pagan pupils, 65 schools for girls with 2047 Catholic and 623 pagan pupils, 217 men teachers and 124 women teachers. For further statistics see KIANG-SU.

Niagara University, founded in 1856 by the Rev. John J. Lynch, C. M., afterwards first Archbishop of Toronto, and directed by the Priests of the Congregation of the Mission, has had a steady and rapid growth since its inauguration. The erection of another building became necessary in 1906, and since then the Convent of the Little Sisters of the Holy Family has been added. The University comprises the College and the High School departments; the total registration for 1921 was 3000. In 1920 the University conferred the following degrees: B.A. 6; Ph.B. 11; M.A. 3; LL.D. 6.

Nicaragua, DIOCESE OF. See GRANADA; LEÓN; MANAGUA.

Nicastro, DIOCESE OF (NEOCASTRENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—47b), in the province of Catanzaro, Southern Italy, is suffragan of Reggio, Rt. Rev. Eugenio Giambro, b. in the Diocese of Caltanissetta, 12 October, 1866, penitentiary chancellor and rector of the Nicastro Seminary, appointed Bishop of Sarsina 10 February, 1911, proclaimed 30 November following, transferred to Nicastro 22 May, 1916, to succeed Mgr. Regine, promoted to the rank of Apostolic Administrator of Nicastro from 16 March, 1920, to 11 September, 1921. According to 1920 statistics there are 53 parishes, 9 vicariates, 130 secular and 5 regular priests, 20 seminarians, 71 churches or chapels, and a Catholic population of 110,100 souls.

Nice, DIOCESE OF (NICIENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—48b), comprises the department of Alpes-

Maritimes, France. It is suffragan of Aix. The bishop, who also bears the title of Count of Drap, is Rt. Rev. Henri-Louis Chapon, b. at St. Briec 14 March, 1845, appointed 25 June, 1896, consecrated at Orléans 29 September following to succeed Mgr. Balain, was given the personal privilege of the pallium in 1916, and was promoted as assistant to the pontifical throne 6 August, 1921. There are in the diocese 172 parishes, of which 33 are curacies and 139 succursal parishes, 397 secular priests, 1 upper and 1 lower seminary, and 3 ecclesiastical institutions. The total Catholic population is 356,338 of whom 142,940 are in Nice. On 11 June, 1913, the relics of the ancient bishops Sts. Véran and Lambert were discovered and canonically recognized.

Nicolet, DIOCESE OF (NICOLETANA, cf. C. E., XI—69a) in the Province of Quebec, Canada, suffragan of Quebec. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. Joseph Simon Herman Brunault, is the second bishop of this diocese and has filled the see since 1904. Since 1911 the diocese has lost two of its most prominent clergy by the deaths of Mgr. Douville, P.A., Vicar General of the diocese, and Mgr. Susor, P.D., also Vicar General, and in addition to these one priest of the diocese, Captain R. Crochetière, serving as chaplain during the war, was killed in action 2 April, 1918, and buried in the cemetery of Bailleulmont, France.

The present (1921) statistics show 69 parishes 69 churches, 1 mission with mission station at Odonak, 1 monastery for women, 6 convents for women, 164 secular priests, 130 brothers, 560 sisters, 1 seminary with 30 seminarians, 3 colleges for men with 130 professors and 900 students, 5 academies with 35 teachers and 1100 students (boys), 1 normal school with 10 teachers and 98 students, 611 elementary schools with 670 teachers and 2400 pupils, 4 hospitals and 2 orphan asylums. All the public institutions permit the priests of the diocese to minister in them and the Catholic schools are aided by the Government. The total Catholic population comprises approximately 89,000 French Canadians, 1000 Irish, and 400 Italians.

Nicopolis, DIOCESE OF (NICOPOLITANA, cf. C. E., XI—70d), in Bulgaria, not the ancient Nicopolis which has become a titular Latin see, on the site of which stands the present village of Nicup, near Tirnow, where extensive ruins mark the place of the cathedral, but a modern city built about 629 by the Emperor Heraclius. Rt. Rev. Henri Douloet, who had been bishop since 1895, resigned 13 March, 1913, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Leonard von Baumbach (b. 1856), who had been coadjutor since 1910. Bishop von Baumbach died at Rome in 1915 and was succeeded by the present bishop, Damian John Theelen, a Passionist, b. at Beesel, Holland, 4 April, 1877, ordained 23 Sept., 1899, appointed to the see of Nicopolis 21 May, 1915, and consecrated at Rome on 15 August following. Like his predecessors he resides at Rustchuk. The Catholic population of the diocese consists of 14,000 Bulgarians, with about 1000 foreigners, Poles, Croats and Belgians. There are 17 parishes, 20 churches, 18 mission stations, 4 secular and 21 regular priests, 3 lay brothers, 3 monasteries for men and 4 for women with 42 Sisters. There is a diocesan seminary with 9 seminarians. At present there are 7 elementary schools with 40 teachers and 1180 pupils. Since 1911, the Benedictine Sisters from the Abbey of St. Ottilien in Bavaria have maintained two schools in the diocese, one at Endje near Schoumle and the other at Bardau near Belvelatine. A French Congregation of Dominican Sisters has recently opened a school at Sistova. A day nursery cares for 110 children.

That part of the diocese situated along the River Danube was the scene of war activities, especially from August to November, 1916.

Nicotera and Tropea, DIOCESE OF (NICOTERENSIS ET TROPIENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—72a), in the province of Catanzaro, Southern Italy, suffragan of Reggio di Calabria. Bishop Giuseppe Leo, transferred to the Diocese of Trani and Barletto in February, 1920, was replaced by Rt. Rev. Felice Cribellati, who was appointed in May, 1921, consecrated at Rome 29 June, and enthroned 11 September following. Nicotera has 12 parishes, 20 churches or chapels; 45 secular priests, and a Catholic population of 15,841. Tropea has 60 parishes, 110 churches or chapels, 160 secular and 5 regular priests, 36 seminarians, and a Catholic population of 62,115.

Nichteroy, DIOCESE OF. See PETROPOLIS.

Nigeria, a British Protectorate; cf. C. E., XI—73d (the colony of Lagos is technically outside the Protectorate), situated on the west coast of Africa. Politically Nigeria is one, the political divisions known as northern and southern Nigeria exist no longer, their amalgamation having taken place in May, 1912. The area of Nigeria is approximately 336,000 square miles. Lagos, with a population somewhere about 80,000 is the capital. Kano has lost much of its former splendor. At present it suffers considerably from a great slump in trade. Its famous walls are now broken in many parts. It would be most correct to assign to them a height of 15 or 17 feet. Its population varies with the seasons. During the ground-nut season thousands of strangers crowd into the native, as distinct from the European, quarters. Normally the population may reach 40,000. The Emirs of Sokoto, Katsena and Kano enjoy a certain amount of independence as native potentates but their jurisdiction is in all important matters subordinated to the British Administration.

It is no longer true to state that "powerful English Protestant missions have unsuccessfully endeavored to gain a foothold." The Protestant sects as a whole counted in 1919 some 78,937 (baptized) Christians. In reply to a query for their statistics just a year ago the Church Missionary Society gave 213 places of worship (including what they call chapel-schools), and 124 schools strictly so called. Catholic Nigeria now counts three vicariates: Benin, Western Nigeria and Lower Nigeria, with residences at Lagos, Asaba and Onitsha respectively. The chief posts of Western Nigeria are Lokoja, Asaba, Igbuzo, Ogwashi, Isesele, Olona, Ubiaja, Ukoni, Warri, Agenebode and Aragba. The fourth ecclesiastical division of Nigeria is the Prefecture Apostolic of Eastern Nigeria. The Society of African Missions has charge of this prefecture together with the Vicariates of the Bight of Benin and Western Nigeria. This last-named vicariate was erected in 1918. The population consisting mostly of Nigratan tribes is between 8,000,000 and 10,000,000, of whom 8366 are Catholics, the others being Mohammedans and Arabs. There are 11 quasi-parishes, 116 churches, 105 stations, 21 secular priests, 1 convent of Sisters, 1 seminary with 6 seminarians, 57 elementary schools, 200 teachers, 3247 pupils, 3 homes for the poor and destitute, 3 orphanages, 12 institutions for charitable works. Two leper hospitals admit the ministry of priests. The Angelic Society and that of the Holy Family are established among the laity. The present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Thomas Broderick, who succeeded Rt. Rev. Carlo Lappa (d. 1917), as prefect apostolic of Western Nigeria. He was born in Kerry, Ireland, 1882, ordained in 1906, and appointed titular Bishop of Pednelissus 24 August, 1918. Bishop Lappa was a native of Milan and a distinguished natural scientist and astronomer.

He compiled a valuable dictionary in the Ibo language. His auxiliary, Rev. Martin Friedrich, a native of Alsace (1872) who had been a missionary in Nigeria from 1897 died in 1917.

NIGERIA, EASTERN, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF, has been since 1911, under the care of Mgr. Oswald Waller, of the African Missions of Lyons. No statistics are furnished.

NIGERIA, LOWER (cf. C. E., XI—73d), VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF, with residence at Onitsha, is still under the administration of Rt. Rev. Joseph Ignatius Shanahan, C. S. Sp., who became prefect apostolic in 1905, vicar and titular bishop of Abila in 1920, when the territory was erected into a vicariate. The population (10,000,000), is extremely dense, but the catechists have been so remarkably organized that they are able to reach thousands of catechumens: The British Government has given every encouragement to the development of these missions, even to contributing to the support of the schools. In 1920 there were 19 missionary priests (Fathers of the Holy Ghost) employed here, and 10 brothers, with 9 stations, 280 posts, 355 schools with 22,800 pupils, 6 chapels and 7 orphanages. The schools are of three kinds, government schools, assisted schools and free or unassisted schools; the first two are aided by the government, while the third class are supported by the voluntary contributions of the natives. Until a few years ago the Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny labored in this territory but at present there are no nuns. An Irish lady is in charge of the convent at Calabar, and is shortly to be joined by others. There, as lay missionaries, they will continue the work of the Sisters.

Nîmes, DIOCESE OF (NEMAUSENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—83a), with the sees of Alais (Alisensis) and Uzès (Uticensis) suffragan of Avignon, comprises the civil department of Gard, France. Statistics for 1920 credit it with a total population of 413,458, of whom 302,650 are Catholics, 108,348 Protestants, 450 Jews; 293 parishes, a total of 499 secular priests, 1 upper seminary and 4 ecclesiastical schools. The present (1922) bishop, Rt. Rev. Marcellin-Charles Marty, b. in the Diocese of Rodez, 22 August, 1862, studied at the Catholic Institute of Toulouse, ordained in March, 1890, Vicar of Marsillac, later at the Cathedral of Rodez in July, 1901, rector of Decazeville in 1906, archpriest of the cathedral in 1914, and chancellor in 1916, appointed titular Bishop of Isionda, 14 April, 1919, and coadjutor at Nîmes, consecrated 2 July following to succeed Mgr. Félix Auguste Béguinot, b. 11 July, 1836; d. 3 February, 1921. In 1921 Abbot Bruyère published "Guide de la Cathédrale de Nîmes," a book in which he relates the history of this monument, dating back to the eleventh century.

Nitra (NYITRA, NEUTRA), DIOCESE OF (NITRIENSIS; cf. C. E., X—774d), in Slovakia, suffragan of Eaztergom. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Charles Kmetko, b. at Drskovcie, 12 December, 1875, appointed at the Consistory of 16 December, 1920, consecrated at Nitra 13 February, 1921, succeeding Bishop Batthyani, transferred to the titular see of Cyrra. There are in the diocese: 148 parishes, 96 curacies, 232 secular and 25 regular clergy, 372,930 Catholics, 28,727 non-Catholics, and 16,102 Jews.

Nocera and Gualdo Tadino, DIOCESE OF (NUCERINENSIS ET TADISENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—86d), in the province of Perugia, Umbria, Central Italy, is immediately subject to the Holy See. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Niccolo Cola, b. at Camerino 25 October, 1869, consecrated Bishop of Mares 30 June, 1910, transferred to Nocera 26 August following, proclaimed 27 November, 1911, succeeding Mgr.

Rocco Anselmini, b. 19 September, 1837; d. in August, 1910. There are (1920): 59,731 Catholics, 82 parishes, 110 secular priests, 20 seminarians, 100 churches or chapels. By a decree of the Consistory of 2 January, 1915, the Collegiate Church of San Benedetto at Gualdo Tadino was erected into a cathedral honoris tantum causa and the title of Tadino was united to that of Nocera.

Nocera del Pagani, DIOCESE OF (NUCERINENSIS PAGANORUM; cf. C. E., XI—87a), in the province of Salerno, Southern Italy. It is a suffragan of Salerno. The Catholic population is 70,850. Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Romeo, b. in the Diocese of Reggio di Calabria, 7 April, 1820, ordained in May, 1894, was appointed bishop 12 July, 1913, enthroned 15 February, 1914, published 25 May following, to succeed Bishop Luigi del Forno, b. 24 August, 1842; d. 7 January, 1913. Diocesan statistics (1920) credit it with 18 parishes, 180 secular and 50 regular priests, 12 seminarians, 28 churches or chapels. At Nocera reposes the body of St. Alphonsus of Ligouri.

Nola, DIOCESE OF (NOLANA, cf. C. E., XI—89c), suffragan of Naples, is under the administration of Mgr. Agnello Renzullo, who has filled the see since 1890. He was born in Naples 2 April, 1836, ordained in 1860 and appointed bishop of Iserhia and Venafrò 27 February, 1880, which see he filled until his transfer to Nola. During the World War the priests and laity of the diocese assisted with the bureaux of information and gave shelter to refugees. By present (1921) statistics the diocese comprises 89 parishes, 632 churches, 1 mission, 9 monasteries for men, 2 for women, 219 secular priests and 50 regulars, 20 Brothers, 250 Sisters, 1 seminary with 80 seminarians, 350 university students, 4 colleges for men with 50 professors and 400 students, 1 college for women with 6 professors and 70 students, 2 normal schools with 25 teachers and 150 students, 1 professional school with 8 teachers and 60 students, 70 elementary schools with 350 teachers and 5000 students. The various charitable institutions, 2 homes, 50 asylums and 3 hospitals; these institutions as well as the Catholic schools receive financial aid from the Government. A Federation of clergy and 5 societies among the laity are established in the diocese, and 5 periodicals are published.

Nonantola, PRELATURE NULLIUS OF (NONANTULENSIS; cf. C. E., X—95a), in the province of Modena, Northern Italy, perpetually united to the Archdiocese of Modena (q. v.) since 23 January, 1821. The prelatore numbers (1920) 30 parishes and 35,049 inhabitants served by 69 priests. In 1917 was completed the work of restoration on the abbey church which dates back to the eleventh century.

Norbertine Order. See PREMONSTRATENSIAN CANONS.

Norcia, DIOCESE OF (NORSINENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—101c), in the province of Perugia, Central Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Vincenzo Migliorelli, b. 3 September, 1873, appointed 11 July, 1916, consecrated at Rome 28 October following, to succeed Rt. Rev. Ercolano Marini, promoted to the Archdiocese of Amalfi, 2 June, 1915. According to 1920 statistics there are 100 parishes, 125 secular and 10 regular clergy, 50 seminarians, 8 Brothers, 140 Sisters, 258 churches or chapels.

North Carolina (cf. C. E., XI—108a)—The total area of the State of North Carolina is 52,426 square miles, of which 3686 are water. It is divided into 100 counties and had in 1920 ten Congressional districts with a population of 2,569,123, a gain of 16 per cent since 1910. Of this 19.2 per cent was urban; 80.8 per cent was rural. The average number of inhabitants to the square mile is 52.5. The census of 1920 reveals the composition of the population as follows: whites 1,783,779; negroes 763,407; Indians 11,824. The native whites who total 1,776,680 have 1,765,203 of native parentage; 5737 of foreign parentage; 5740 of mixed parentage. The foreign-born numbered only 7099. The proportion of negroes to whites varies greatly in the different counties. In Warren County, with a total population of 21,593, there were 13,821 negroes. In ten counties, the proportion of negroes varies from 50 to 62.5 per cent. Indian reservations in 1919 covered an area of 98 square miles and had a population of 2235. The largest cities are Charlotte (46,338), Winston-Salem (48,395), Wilmington, (33,372), Asheville (28,504), Raleigh (24,418).

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—Agriculture continues to develop as an industry in the State, for in 1920 the number of farms was 269,763, an increase of 6.3 per cent; the land area was 81,193,600; the value of farm property, $1,250,166,995; of live stock $119,152,672. Of the crops, which totalled $503,229,813, the chief were corn (40,998,317 bushels, worth $79,946,722); wheat (4,744,528 bushels, $11,861,354); peanuts (5,854,689 bushels, $13,465,793); sweet potatoes and yams (7,959,786 bushels, $11,939,707); cotton (858,406 bales, $149,362,644); tobacco (280,163,432 pounds, $151,288,264); sugar-cane (386,285 tons, $28,585,090). In the eastern part of the State the fisheries are very valuable, especially the shad and oyster. Mining is not very extensive, but there is a great variety of minerals, the chief being talc, mica, iron, soapstone, barytes, coal, gold and silver. A great deal of lumber is shipped from the State. About 21,000,000 acres are in forest, the total value being $167,450,000. The Census of Manufactures of 1919 reveals 5999 establishments, with an average of 157,000 wage-earners, producing goods worth $943,808,000; the capital invested $689,144,000; the cost of materials, $526,906,000. The chief seaport is Wilmington, from which, in 1919, were exported goods valued at $33,941,084, chiefly cotton for foreign ports. In 1919 there were 5207 miles of railway (1009 miles of sidings, and 301 miles of electric railway) with 11 companies. The State has 471 banks with a capital of $13,468,000 and 84 national banks with a capital of $9,965,000. In 1919 the State debt amounted to $10,090,104; the assessed value of personal and real property to $1,029,993,778. According to the Council of Foreign Bondholders the State has a defaulted debt of about twelve million dollars, but the State refuses to recognize it, considering it the fraudulent issue of reconstruction days.

CHARITABLE AND EDUCATIONAL STATUS.—The charities of the State are under the State Board of Charities and Public Welfare. Each county, which is the unit, has a superintendent of public welfare and a juvenile court, compulsory in every county. Among the recent additions to the State charitable institutions are the North Carolina Orthopaedic Hospital in Gastonia, chartered in 1914, erected in 1920, and a Confederate Women's Home, established in Fayetteville in 1913. The Department of Education is one of the executive departments of the State government. The Superintendent of Public Instruction is elected by the people for four years. The official reports of the public schools for the years 1917-18 show a total school population of whites 446,270; colored 187,980; school-houses 8535; white teachers 11,730; colored teachers 3511; total average fund $5,677,769. The following are under State control, but receive aid from tuition fees and donations: the State University, situated at Chapel Hill, endowment $270,348; income $382,947; annual State appropriation $235,000; faculty 142; students 1406; North Carolina College for Women (formerly the State Normal and Industrial College) at Greensboro, buildings, 17; annual State appropriation, $165,000; faculty, 92, students, 784; North Carolina State College of Agriculture and Engineering (formerly the North Carolina College of Agricultural and Mechanic Arts), State appropriation, $150,000, Federal appropriation, $33,500; faculty 80, students, 1056. The Caswell Training School for Mental Defectives was founded in 1911 and opened in 1914, and the Stonewall Jackson Manual Training and Industrial School, in 1907. The State laws governing private or parochial schools include the following: The general assembly may exempt from taxation property held for educational, scientific, literary, charitable, or religious purposes (111-5). Bible reading is neither permitted nor excluded in the public schools.

RECENT LEGISLATION AND HISTORY.—In 1915 was passed the measure known as the Anti-Jug Act, forbidding shipment to and receipt by any person of more than one quart of spirituous liquor and five gallons of malt beverage every fifteen days. In 1917 the contract system of leasing prisoners was forbidden and provision made for a State-use system on which the prisoners were put to work to make articles for the State. In the same year the budget system was adopted and the Federal Child Labor Law, prohibiting shipment in interstate commerce of products of child labor was declared unconstitutional by a justice of the Supreme Court; the prison law was revised and modernized. The Federal Prohibition Amendment was ratified on 14 January, 1919. Miscegenetic marriages are forbidden. The laws of 1917 require the return of the marriage license or certificate to the register of deeds within 60 days after the solemnization. In 1921 a law was passed requiring the applicant for a marriage license to file a physician's certificate, stating that he is free from harmful disease, is neither an idiot, imbecile, or of unsound mind. Divorce is granted if the parties have lived separately for five years (not ten, as formerly).

During the European War the State furnished 73,003 soldiers or 1.94 per cent of the United States Army. The North Carolina members of the national guard joined the 30th Division at Camp Sevier, South Carolina and those of the national army, the 81st Division at Jackson, South Carolina. The summary of casualties among the North Carolina members of the American Expeditionary Force gives the following figures: deceased, 63 officers, 1547 men; prisoners, 7 officers, 53 men; wounded, 178 officers, 3955 men.

NORTH CAROLINA, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (CAROLINÆ SEPTENTRIONALIS, cf. C. E., XI—108a), U. S. A.

The Abbot-Ordinary of the abbey nullius of Belmont, which embraces the same territory as the vicariate, is also vicar Apostolic of North Carolina. The present vicar apostolic (1922) Rt. Rev. Leo Haid, titular bishop of Messina, was made an assistant at the pontifical throne 15 July, 1914. The Benedictine and Josephite Fathers are established in this territory, as well as the Sisters of Mercy and Sisters of Christian Education. According to 1921 statistics it comprises a Catholic population of 8254, 24 secular and 21 regular clergy, 23 parishes, 40 missions with churches, 60 mission stations, 5 chapels, 28 Brothers, 107 religious women, 1 seminary with 20 students, 1 college for boys with 100 students, 2 preparatory schools for boys with 69 pupils, 2 colleges for girls with 250 students, 16 parochial schools with 573 white and 396 colored children, 2 orphanages with 125 orphans, 1513 young people under Catholic care and 3 hospitals:

North Dakota (cf. C. E., XI-111d)—The area of the State of North Dakota is 70,837 square miles, of which 712 are water. The population in 1920 was 646,872, an increase of 12.1 per cent. since 1910. Of this, 13.6 per cent. is rural; 86.4, urban. The density is 9.2 persons per square mile. The largest cities are Fargo 21,961; Grand Forks 14,010; Minot 10,476.

ECONOMIC STATUS.—North Dakota ranks high as an agricultural State. In 1920 there were 77,690 farms, with an area of 36,214,751 acres, worth $1,759,742,995. The principal crops were cereals, valued at $301,782,935; other grass and seeds, $215,764,634; hay and forage, $15,583,209; vegetables, $56,583,209; fruit, $13,725,227. About 649,940 acres were devoted to flaxseed and 2,972,082 bushels were harvested. There were about 2,956,000 live stock, worth $153,361,490. Irrigation is on the increase; 340 farms were irrigated in 1920 and the area to be irrigated under the Federal Reclamation Act extends to 57,000 acres. The forests cover about 679,800 acres. There are 132,902 fruit trees and 524 acres of berries. The rise of the dairy industry is remarkable, for the value of milk, cream, and butter-fat sold and of butter and cheese made in 1919 was $19,576,343, an increase of 301 per cent since 1909.

A small amount of manufacturing is carried on in the state. The Federal report of manufactures (1919) gives 894 plants, with 6148 persons engaged, earning $6,835,367, and producing goods valued at $57,373,622. The capital invested is $24,549,838. The principal industries ranked by the value of the products are: flour mill and gristmill products, butter-making, cars and general shop construction and repairs by steam railway companies, printing and publishing newspapers, baking and auto-repairing. Coal is mined extensively in the western part of the State; in 1918 there were 166 mines in operation and 719,733 tons were mined. North Dakota has 5316 miles of railroad. On 1 July, 1919, the bonded debt of the State was $1,230,963; the assessed value of real and personal property $496,978,049.

EDUCATION.—The school fund of North Dakota is still large, ($19,000,000 in 1918); the apportionment in 1918 was $958,322. In 1919 the number of consolidated schools was 477; the number of high school pupils 4420. In all, there were in 1918 about 5300 schools with 168,034 pupils and 7160 teachers. The average salary for teachers is $59 a month. In 1919 the Board of Administration assumed the duties of the Board of Control of Education, and of Regents. The legislative appropriation for the State university in 1918 was $225,400; the number of professors, instructors, and assistants (1918-19) was 86, and the total attendance 1294. There are normal schools at Minot, Mayville, Dickinson and Valley City, and a new school of science at Wahpeton.

The laws governing parochial and private schools are as follows: the legislature shall by a general law exempt from taxation all property exclusively used by schools. To comply with the compulsory education law, private schools must teach branches usually taught in public schools. Private schools, to be lawfully attended by children of compulsory age, must be approved by county superintendents. Incorporated schools must annually make full report of all their property and of all their affairs. Bible reading in the public schools is specifically permitted by law.

RELIGION.—According to the United States Religious Census of 1916, the Episcopal Church has 2445 members, 60 organizations, 156 Sunday School teachers, 1499 scholars, 45 church edifices and 5 halls, 19 rectories, and 22 clergy. The value of the churches, chapels, grounds, and all other property including the rectories, which cost $65,750, is $180,475. There are 52 parishes and missions and 80 preaching stations. Total offering, $41,241.10 for year ending 1, June, 1918. The Methodist Episcopal Church had in the State 221 church buildings, valued at $963,900 and 139 parsonages, valued at $265,615 with a membership of about 14,000. The Presbyterian Church had 6 presbyteries, 67 ministers, 9295 members, and 12,572 Sunday School members. There were in the State 173 church organizations, 177 Sunday Schools, 138 churches, and 81 mansees. The value of the property was reported as $725,550; of the mansees, $163,400. The Lutherans, who are numerous in the Northwest, had 1050 organizations and 758 churches. The Baptists had a membership of 6268, a Sunday School enrolment of 6864, 72 churches valued at $229,290, and 43 parsonages worth $79,900. According to this census the number of Catholics was 95,859, the value of their property was $2,538,205. According to the Catholic Directory the number of Catholics in 1920 was 105,000. For further educational and religious statistics see FARGO, DIOCESE OF; BISMARCK, DIOCESE OF.

LEGISLATION.—According to recent legislation, the issuer of a marriage license must inquire of the applicant on oath relative to the legality of his forthcoming marriage and may examine witnesses on oath if he deems necessary. A copy of the divorce decree, if there is any, must be filed with him. He must require each to file an affidavit, setting forth whether each has been divorced or not. He must also have a physician's certificate, proving that he is neither infected nor feeble-minded, imbecile, epileptic, or addicted to drink. A license must not be granted to one under the influence of liquor, nor for a miscegenetic marriage, nor for one that would contravene the decision of a divorce decree. All servile labor is prohibited on Sundays, except works of necessity and charity, providing, however, that transportation and the operation of bakeries and newspaper plants shall be considered works of necessity. All public selling is prohibited before ten o'clock a.m. except that of fish and meat, and food to be eaten on the premises, drugs, confectionery and papers. Free baseball games are allowed more than 500 feet away from a church edifice.

The Socialistic legislation recently passed in the State has attracted much attention. Back of this was the Non-Partisan League, organized in 1915, originally a movement of wheat-growers to improve the marketing of their product and to secure better banking facilities. The movement grew so rapidly that in 1916 the League, whose membership was limited to farmers, elected its candidate for governor and in 1918 came into control of the Legislature. Its legislative measures contained provisions for establishing a state-owned bank; terminal grain elevators, flour mills, packing plants, public warehouses; for purchasing homes or farms under a building and loan association scheme, and for the State to engage in any business directly or indirectly involving farm products. Seventeen million dollars' worth of bonds were authorized to finance the enterprises, which were to be under the control of the Industrial Commission, composed of the governor, attorney general and commissioner of agriculture and labor. A State compulsory hail insurance bill was also passed, requiring all farmers to insure their crops from hail damage. Opposition to the Non-Partisan League developed in the form of the Independent Voters Association, and the movement is dwindling.

During the European War North Dakota contributed 25,803 men or .69 per cent of the United States Army. The North Dakota members of the national guard belonged to the 34th Division at Camp Cody, New Mexico; those of the national army to the 88th Division at Fort Dodge, Iowa. The summary of casualties of the North Dakota members of the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 13 officers, 687 men; prisoners, 35 men; wounded, 43 officers, 1782 men.

Northampton, DIOCESE OF (NORTANTONIENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—107c), in England, suffragan of Westminster. A consistorial decree of 25 July, 1916, modified its boundaries. The present administrator of the diocese is the Rt. Rev. Dudley Charles Cary-Elwes. He was born in 1868, ordained in 1896, elected 21 November, 1921, succeeding the Rt. Rev. Frederick William Keating, who was promoted. According to the statistics of 1922 the diocese contains: 116 churches and chapels, 24 convents, 80 secular priests, 4 of whom are retired, 22 regular priests (5 Benedictines, 2 Carmelites, 4 Franciscans, 6 Jesuits and 5 Canons Regular), 27 public elementary schools, 22 of which receive Government grants, with 3567 pupils, 1 school for boys (not elementary), 21 for girls, with 1575 pupils, 3 institutions for poor children, orphanages, poor law and reform schools. According to the census of 1911, the Catholics numbered 16,892.

Northern Missions. See GERMANY, NORTHERN MISSIONS OF.

Northern Territory, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF THE; (cf. C. E., XI—115b), in Australia, formerly known as the Diocese of Port Victoria and Palmerston; is bounded on the North by the Indian Ocean, on the South by 25° Latitude, on the Southeast by Queensland, on the West by Western Australia; the Missionaries of the Sacred Heart of Issoudun are in charge of it, with Very Rev. Francis Xavier Gaell, M.S.H., administrator Apostolic since 1910. There are in the prefecture 3 priests, 2 Brothers, and 6 Sisters of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart at Port Darwin, 2 priests, 1 Brother and 3 Sisters in charge of 1 school with 50 pupils on the Island of Bathurst.

Norway, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf., C. E., XVI—84d).—Under the guidance of Mgr. Fallise the mission of Norway increased rapidly. In 1912, he was made assistant to the Pontifical Throne, and in 1921, owing to ill-health, he was obliged to resign his post as vicar. His great influence in Norway has been instrumental in winning almost complete liberty for the Catholics there, and his loss will be keenly felt. By a decree of 1 June, 1913, Spitsberg was included in the Norwegian Mission.

Since 1919, the Dominicans and the Father of the Sacred Heart have worked together with the secular priests; regulars and seculars combined number 24. The total number of nuns engaged in the management of schools, hospitals and caring for the sick in their homes, is about 200. On account of a deplorable emigration to foreign countries, especially to America, the mission can only count some few thousands. In Christiania there are 2 churches and 2 chapels, in Trondhjem 2 churches, in the following places only one: Tromsø, Harstad, Hammerfest, Bergen, Stavanger, Christianssand, Arendal, Porsgrunn, Drammen, Fredrikstad and Fredrickshald. Each station with the exception of Harstad has its own hospital and Catholic school, its religious sodalities for married men and women, and for young men and young girls. A weekly Catholic paper and a monthly one for the young make the missionaries work in spreading the Faith much easier. During the last twenty years the Catholic Church has made great progress on account of the sympathy Catholics meet with, both from the authorities and the people, so that the soil for its future growth is well prepared. In 1921, Mgr. Dieppen, Bishop of Bois-le-Duc, was appointed Apostolic Visitor to the Scandinavian countries by Benedict XV.

Notaries, (cf. C. E., XI—122c).—Diocesan chancellors are notaries in the ecclesiastical judicial system by virtue of their offices. Bishops may appoint additional notaries, who may be laymen or clerics; only a clerical notary may be employed in a clerical criminal suit. These additional notaries may be removed at will by the bishop; they cannot, however, be suspended or removed at will by a vicar capitular without the consent of the chapter. Superiors of exempt religious may appoint one of their subjects as a notary but only for matters affecting their order. It may be noted that before taking up suit in the ecclesiastical courts the judge must appoint a notary, as the proceedings would be invalid unless the papers and records were drawn up or authenticated by a notary; even the judgment must be signed by him. In view of the confidential nature of their work notaries are bound by oath to discharge their office faithfully, and they are bound to observe the strictest secrecy not merely in all criminal suits but in contentious litigation where the interest of a litigant might be impaired by a lack of secrecy.

Noto, DIOCESE OF (NETENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—126b), in the province of Syracuse, Sicily, is suffragan of Syracuse, had (1920) a Catholic population of 209,500, with 20 parishes, 277 secular and 74 regular clergy, 50 seminarians, 32 Brothers, 200 Sisters, 102 churches or chapels. The bishop, Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Vizzini, b. at Villalba, in the Diocese of Caltanissetta, 10 November, 1874, professor of theology at the Roman Seminary, officer of the Congregation of the Consistory in 1911, appointed 19 August, 1913, consecrated at Rome, 14 September following to succeed Mgr. Giovanni Blandini (b. 7 March, 1832; elected 5 July, 1875).

Notre Dame, CONGREGATIONS OF. I. CONGREGATION OF NOTRE DAME DE MONTREAL. (cf. C. E., XI—127a). The Sisters are in charge of colleges, normal schools, boarding schools, academies, parochial or separate schools, commercial schools and domestic science schools. Since the opening of Notre Dame Ladies' College, in 1908, 65 students have received the degree B.A. Seven convents and 13 branch establishments have been founded since 1908. At present (1921) there is a total of 151 foundations, 1921 professed Sisters, and 198 novices. The present general superior is Mother St. Euphrosyne, elected in 1917 to succeed Mother St. Marie-Josephine, who in 1913 succeeded Mother St. Anaclet, elected superior in 1903, died November, 1912.

II. INSTITUTE OF NOTRE-DAME DE NAMUR (cf. C.E. XI-128b). During the war, Namur, the mother-house was cut off from the rest of the institute. The Belgian province suffered much. Large and prosperous establishments with classes for boarders, day-boarders, and poor children were destroyed when Visé and Dinant were burned in August, 1914. The Sisters were expelled from seven other convents. The poor children's classes were maintained everywhere, but few houses were able to accept boarders, because of the difficulty of obtaining provision, and because of the number of soldiers inhabiting the various convents. A bomb falling upon a corner of a building at the Namur convent killed a novice and a postulant. Sisters who had been employed as teachers in the boarding school, having no pupils, used their time in increasing the literature of the institute. A well documented "Life of the Venerable Mère St. Joseph" has been published, as well as a study of the "Blessed Mère Julie as a Teacher," both in French, but now being translated into English. The "Life of Sister Mary of St. Philip" and the "Popular Lives of the Saints," published by the English Sisters, have attracted attention; among the latter that of Blessed Oliver Plunkett has been very favorably received. The English province has its own novitiate at Ashdown Park, Sussex, in conformity with the requirements of the new Code of Canon Law. The provincial superior is Sister Marie des Saints Anges. Rev. Mother Marie Aloyse, the eighth superior general of the institute, died 23 February, 1912, and Rev. Mother Marie Julienne was elected to replace her 28 March, 1912. On 27 November, 1921, the constitutions of the congregation were definitively approved.

In the Eastern Province of the United States, the provincial superior is Sister Frances of the Sacred Heart, who succeeded Sister Agnes Mary (d. 18 May, 1920), successor of Sister Mary Borgia (d. 17 April, 1910). The community of Berkeley Street, Boston, Mass., has been transferred to the Fenway, where a college with State charter, has been opened for young girls. The 104 students are day-scholars, not boarders, as at Trinity. In the California Province the provincial superior is Sister Berchmans Joseph, who succeeded prescribed the new Code. The preceding provincial, Sister Mary Bernardine, died in January, 1913.

At present there are 41 houses in Belgium, 20 in England, and Scotland, 47 in America, and 7 in Africa, making a total of 115 houses. There are 3579 professed Sisters, of whom 1105 are in Belgium, 805 in England, and Scotland, 1618 in America, and 51 in Africa. The rule of the institute has been sent to Rome for any modifications which may be necessary to conform with the new Code of Canon Law.

III. SCHOOL SISTERS OF NOTRE DAME (cf. C. E., XI-130c).—During the past ten years there has been a steady growth in the number of schools under the care of the Sisters. The work of the Baltimore province has been extended to Porto Rico; the first school under the Sisters was opened in Puerto de Tierra, near San Juan, in 1915, and the second was opened in Caguas in 1916. More than thirty Sisters are now in charge of about 1300 children at the two schools. In 1912 a new province was formed from the western part of the Milwaukee province. At that time it comprised Minnesota and northern Iowa but its growth has been quite rapid and at present it has houses in North and South Dakota and Washington. The mother-house is on Good Counsel Hill, Mankato, Minn.; in connection with the mother-house there is a flourishing academy for boarders and day-pupils. Mother Marianne, the commissary general of the order, died in 1917 and was succeeded by Mother Stanislaus Kostka, the present commissary general. The following are the principal changes brought about by the revised code of canon law: The seven year period of the temporary vows has been shortened to three years, and the indefinite period for the office of the local Superiors has been changed to conform with the new code's requirement of three or at most six years. Owing to existing conditions no report can be given of the houses in Europe. The number of foundations in the United States and Canada is 362, thirteen being in Canada. The number of members is 4450. Besides parochial schools, many of which have high schools and commercial classes, the Sisters have two colleges, seven academies, twelve orphanages, one day-nursery, one deaf-mute institute, one Indian school. The work of the Sisters is confined exclusively to school children, including the care of orphans under school age.

IV. SISTERS OF NOTRE DAME (Of Cleveland, Ohio, cf. C.E., XI-131d).—The second mother general, Mother Mary Chrysostom, who in 1872 had succeeded Mother Mary Anna, died in April, 1895. She had safely guided the institute through the stormy days of the Kulturkampf. Sister Mary Cecilie was almost unanimously elected the third mother general. In 1877 she had gone to America as the youngest of a band of 22 Sisters, served as mistress of boarders in Cleveland and Covington, and after her return to Europe in 1889 acted as first assistant to the mother general. During her able administration the rule was definitely approved by Leo XIII in 1900. In 1921 revisions were made in the constitution, conformable to the new Code of Canon Law. The community prayer book also underwent revision. About thirty new foundations owe their existence to her, and since 1920 the order conducts a "Scuola Internazionale," a home for young girls in Turin, Italy, and a foundation in Rome is being contemplated. Owing to the World War the projected erection of a mission in Madras, India, has been deferred indefinitely. In February, 1915, occurred the formal opening of Notre Dame Academy, provincial mother-house and novitiate at Ansel Road and Rockefeller Park, Cleveland, Ohio. In March, 1918, Sister Mary Evarista succeeded Sister Mary Louise as provincial of the American Province. In July, 1921, Mother General Mary Cecilie made her fourth visit to the American Province. In 1910 occurred the death of Sister M. Modesta, sister of the deceased Bishop Toebe of Covington. She had been Superior of the American Province and later, until her death, served as first assistant to the mother general in the mother-house in Germany. During the following years the order lost Sisters M. Bernarda, M. Hildegardis, M. Renilde, M. Josepha, and M. Alfons, all pioneer members.

The government of the congregation is in the hands of a superior general, elected for life by an electoral body. The superior general resides in the mother-house, and has a general council, which consists of at least eight members. Besides the mother general, it comprises her three assistants, the novice mistress, and the other members elected by the council. The provincial superiors are elected by the superior general after approval and vote of the general council. They, too, have a special council, approved by the superior general. The superiors of the affiliated houses are appointed by the superior general at the suggestion of the provincials and with the consent of the general council. There is no distinction between choir and lay Sisters. The work of the order is allotted by superiors who know the capacity and capabilities of each. Candidates must pass a six months time of probation. This period is followed by two years novitiate, after the expiration of which time, the temporary vows for three years are pronounced. At the end of the third year, perpetual profession is made. The education given by the Sisters of Notre Dame comprises the development of the pupils' physical, mental, and moral powers, and a thorough knowledge of their Holy Faith. In America and abroad the congregation makes it a point to obtain State approval. The plan of studies strictly conforms to modern requirements.

The foundations at present number 140. In Germany there are 66 affiliations; in Holland, 10; Italy, 1; and in the United States, 63. The present number of members of the order is 1569 professed Sisters, and 247 novices and postulants. Of these Europe has 964 professed, and 187 novices and postulants; America, 605 professed and 60 novices and postulants. In Germany the Sisters are in charge of 14 lyceums, 10 high schools, 2 normal schools, and 1 college; 10 boarding schools; 7 orphanages; 9 homes for young women; 40 kindergartens, and 7 domestic science schools. In the United States, the Sisters are in charge of 54 parochial schools, 3 academies, 4 orphanages, 10 high schools, 1 home for young women. The total number of children under their charge in America in 1920 was 22,634.

Notre Dame du Lac, UNIVERSITY OF (cf. C. E., XI—132a) had a registration for 1921 of 1490 students distributed as follows: College of Arts and Letters 362; College of Science 115; College of Engineering 344; College of Commerce 468; College of Law 153; special students 19; sub-freshman year 39. The university now possesses a library consisting of 112,247 bound volumes and 39,150 pamphlets and periodicals, and a museum containing art, geological, zoological, botanical and numismatic collections; the botanical collection includes the herbaria of the late Edward Lee Greene. The Rev. James A. Burns, C.S.C., Ph.D., is now president of the university; in addition to the "Ave Maria" other publications of the University are: "The Scholastic" (weekly), "The Midland Naturalist" (monthly); and two student publications, "The Juggler" (monthly); and "The Dome" (annual).

Nottingham, DIOCESE OF (NOTTINGHAMENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—133a), one of the twelve original English dioceses, is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Thomas Dunn, who was born in London, 28 July, 1870, and ordained in 1893, after which he acted as chaplain of the Visitation at Harrow, and was later made chancellor of Westminster in 1902. In 1906 he was made rector of Staines and under three successive Popes he was appointed a Private Chamberlain, in 1895, 1903 and 1914. He was appointed Bishop of Nottingham 3 January, 1916, and consecrated 25 February, succeeding Rt. Rev. Bishop Brindle who had filled this see from 1901 until his transfer to the see of Tescapè in 1915. In 1918 the Xavierian Brothers established their novitiate and house of preliminary studies at Deeping, St. James, Lincolnshire, thus establishing themselves for the first time in the diocese of Nottingham. The Franciscans (Capuchin, O.S.F.C.) also became established in the diocese for the first time the following year, when they transferred their Seraphic College from Cowley, Oxford, to Panton Hall, Wragby Lincolnshire, where it is now known as St. Lawrence's Franciscan College.

The religious orders established here include men, Benedictines, Cistercians, Dominicans, Capuchins, Institute of Charity, Jesuits, Premonstaten-ians and Xaverian Brothers; women, Dominicans, Faithful Companions of Jesus, Franciscan Sisters Minore, Franciscan Tertiaries, Little Company of Mary, Poor Clares, Colletines, Poor Sisters of Nazareth, Sisters of Charity of St. Paul, Sisters of Mercy, Sisters of the Presentation, Sisters of Providence of the Institute of Charity, Sisters of Providence of Ruillé sur Loir, Sisters of St. Dorothy, Sisters of St. Joseph of Peace and Sisters of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary. By the 1921 census the total Catholic population numbers 44,827; the diocese comprises 91 secular and 62 regular clergy, 24 convents, 118 churches and chapels, 49 public elementary schools receiving government grants with a total of 8562 pupils, 3 secondary schools for boys and 10 for girls with a total of 1118 pupils, 1 hospital, 3 residential institutions for poor children and 1 home.

NOVARA, DIOCESE OF (NOVARIENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—134b); the capital of the Province of Novara, Piedmont, Italy, is suffragan of Vercelli. The present incumbent is Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Gamba, born at San Damiano, 1857, appointed Bishop of Biella 1900 and transferred to the see of Novara 13 August, 1906. He was made an assistant at the pontifical throne 10 July, 1917. During the World War the religious institutions were transformed into military hospitals and places of refuge for fugitives. In 1921 the Catholics in this diocese numbered 500,000; there are 377 parishes, 4 monasteries for women, 14 convents for men and 10 for women, 3 seminaries, 200 seminarians, 9 secondary schools for boys and 9 for girls. Among the charitable institutions are 4 hospitals and an asylum attached to almost every parish. All the asylums and hospitals permit the priests to minister in them; all the Catholic schools and institutions are maintained privately. A number of mutual benefit societies are organized, 2 among the clergy and 6 among the laity.

Novice (cf. C. E., XI—144b).—Any Catholic endowed with the requisite moral and physical qualifications and inspired by right motives may, if free from canonical impediments, become a religious. Before his profession by making his vows in an institute or other, he must have passed a certain time in probation as novice, which, moreover, is usually preceded by a postulancy. The canonical obstacles to one's becoming a novice may in some cases render a novitiate null and void while in other cases they might affect not its validity but its lawfulness.

ADMISSION.—An aspirant is admitted to the novitiate ordinarily when he receives the habit, though in certain orders a different regulation may obtain. To be validly admitted he must have completed his fifteenth year (a higher minimum age is required by the constitutions of some institutes). The novitiate must last a year without interruption and be passed in the house of novices; if a longer time is prescribed in any institute, this extension is not required for the validity of profession unless that is expressly laid down in the constitutions. If a novice having been dismissed leaves the house or if he goes out of his own accord with the intention of not returning, or if for any cause he has been outside of the house of novices for more than thirty days, not necessarily successive, he must begin his whole novitiate over again; if he has been absent for more than fifteen but less than thirty days, with permission or has been kept away forcibly while remaining under the superior's obedience, the time of absence must be made up before he can be professed; if, finally, the absence was for less than fifteen days, the superior is free to disregard it. If the members of any institute are divided into two classes, for instance lay-brothers and priests, lay and choir sisters, a novitiate made for one class would not count for the other.

The following classes of persons cannot be admitted validly to the novitiate: (1) those who having been Catholics later joined a non-Catholic sect; (2) those who are still under the minimum age for admission; (3) those who enter under the influence of force, grave fear, or fraud, or those whom a superior has admitted owing to the same influences (this regulation so far as admission to the novitiate is concerned is an innovation); (4) a married person while the bond of marriage lasts—this modifies a former practice, for hitherto if a marriage was unconsummated, one of the parties might enter an order with solemn vows, and the marriage would remain undissolved until he or she had been solemnly professed; so a superior cannot now validly admit a wife whose husband consents to her joining an order; (5) those who are or have been professed in religion; (6) those who are threatened with punishment for the commission of some crime, on account of which they have been or are liable to be accused; (7) a residential or titular bishop, from the time of his nomination by the Holy See; (8) a cleric while bound by a pontifical oath to labor for souls in a certain diocese or in the missions.

The following persons are not to be admitted to the novitiate though their admission would be valid even if forbidden: (1) Clerics in sacred orders who would enter without the knowledge of the ordinary or against his orders when he refuses his permission on the grounds that their departure would result in serious spiritual loss to his flock which could not be avoided otherwise; (2) those who are unable to pay their debts; formerly this was not usually considered an impediment in the case of those who seemed to be permanently insolvent; (3) those who have to render an accounting of their office or who are mixed up in secular business in such a way that lawsuits or other inconveniences to the order are likely to result; (4) children who have to relieve the grave necessities of their fathers, or mothers, or grandparents, and parents so long as their services are needed for the support or education of their children; (5) those who are intended to receive Holy Orders in religion and who are irregular or debarred from the reception of orders by any canonical impediment; (6) Orientals, that is members of the Eastern Churches, unless they have obtained permission of the Sacred Congregation for the Eastern Church.

TESTIMONIAL LETTERS.—The Code of Canon Law effected considerable changes in the matter of testimonials required from aspirants to the novitiate. Before being admitted applicants must produce certificates of baptism and confirmation. Male aspirants must in addition show testimonial letters from their ordinary of their place of origin and of any place in which they have spent more than one morally continuous year after completing their fourteenth year, any privilege contrary to this being now revoked. Those who have been seminarians or postulants or novices in another religious institute, require in addition testimonial letters from the rector of the seminary after consulting the local ordinary, or from one of higher religious superiors. Clerics, however, need besides the ordination papers only testimonial letters from the ordinaries in whose dioceses they have spent more than one morally continuous year, unless they had been postulants or novices in another order, in which case they must secure a letter from a higher superior of that body. When a professed religious passes, with permission of the Holy See, from one order to another, it is sufficient for him or her to present a letter from a higher superior of the institute he is leaving. Superiors in all orders or institutes may require further proofs of the fitness of aspirants, and women, in particular, must not be admitted as novices unless their ability and moral character have been carefully investigated. Those from whom testimonial letters are thus required by law must send them gratuitously under seal to the superior, not to the aspirant, within three months after they have been requested; and letters regarding former seminarians, postulants or novices must be confirmed by oath by the rector or superior sending them. If one who has been asked for letters believes he has a grave reason for not answering, he must make the reason known to the Holy See within the appointed time; so, too, if the superior receives no reply concerning the aspirant, he must notify the Holy See; if the party replies that the aspirant is not sufficiently well known to him, the religious superior must inquire of another reliable person. These letters, which are strictly confidential both as regards the informant and the information given, should refer to the aspirant's birth, morals, disposition, life, reputation, condition and knowledge; they should state if he has incurred any censure, irregularity, or other canonical impediment, and whether or not his family requires his assistance; finally, in case of seminarians or former postulants or novices, whether they left of their own accord or why they were sent away.

HOUSE OF NOVICES.—The permission of the Holy See is required for the erection of a house of novices of a pontifically approved institute; in the case of other institutes the constitutions may be followed. If the institute is divided into provinces there may be only one house of novices in any province unless for a grave cause and in virtue of an apostolic indult. The novitiate should be separated from the part of the house inhabited by the professed so that there should be no communication between them and the novices. Furthermore lay-brother novices must have a place apart for themselves. Novices must wear the habit prescribed by the constitutions of the institute, unless special local conditions render another practice advisable.

TRAINING.—As the object of the novitiate is to test the vocation of aspirants and train them in the school of sanctity, their formation is entrusted to a master of novices (or mistress of novices, in case of nuns), a religious noted for his prudence, charity, piety and fidelity to religious observance, one who is at least thirty-five years of age and who has been professed at least ten years, counting from his first profession; if the order is clerical he must be a priest. For any just reason, for instance, the large number of novices, an assistant to the master may be appointed, who must be at least thirty years old and have been professed five years. Both the master and his assistant must be freed from all other duties so that they can give their entire time to the care and government of the novices. They are to be selected in accordance with the constitutions: if they are to hold office for a definite time they may not be removed before its expiration except on serious just grounds; they may be reappointed on the lapse of their term, if the constitutions do not forbid it. Novices are bound to obey the master of novices and the religious superiors. While the master and the novices are subject to the general discipline of the house, no one may interfere with the master in training and governing the novices, under any pretext, except the superior authorized by the constitutions. The master of novices must make, in accordance with the constitutions, a report about each of the novices for the chapter or higher superior within the year of the novitiate. The year's novitiate is devoted to the formation of the novice by study of the rule and constitutions, by pious meditations and assiduous prayer, by instructions on the vows and Christian virtues, by exercises adapted for the eradication of the roots of evil, the controlling of the motions of the soul, and the acquisition of virtue. Lay novices are to be carefully instructed also in Christian doctrine, for which purpose a special conference is to be given to them at least once a week. During the year of the novitiate novices must not be employed preaching or hearing confessions or in the external charges of the institute (that is works or exercises not immediately intended for spiritual formation and sanctification), neither must they devote themselves to the study of the sciences, arts, or literature; in 1910, the Congregation of Religious prescribed a limited course of studies for novices; this is not obligatory under the Code of Canon Law, but commentators on the Code do not say it is now forbidden. Lay novices may perform the duties of the lay-brothers within the house, but they must hold only subordinate posts and must not be charged with work that would interfere with their duties as novices. Novices enjoy all the privileges and spiritual favors granted to their institute, and if they should die as novices they are entitled to all the suffrages prescribed for professed members.

Any renunciation of or encumbrancing of his property by a novice is null and void, but before his simple profession he must make arrangements for its administration and for the disposition of its use and profits during the time he is simply professed. The novice is free to designate the beneficiary unless the constitutions provide otherwise. The object of this prohibition against alienation or encumbrancing is to safeguard the liberty of the novice or religious in case it should be necessary or advisable for him for any reason to return to secular life. If it should happen that after making his simple vows a religious comes into property the right to the use and profits of which he did not dispose of as a novice, he must dispose of them notwithstanding his vows just as would a novice. Such disposals made after profession may be changed, not indeed at the mere will of the religious, unless the constitutions allow him, but with the permission of his general, or in the case of nuns (moniales), as yet only simply professed, with leave of the local ordinary and of the regular superior if the institute is subject to regulars, provided, however, that the religious does not change the document in such a way that a notable part of the property is given to the institute. Vermeersch considers 20 to 25 per cent a notable part. If the religious leaves the institute, this fact annuls any disposal of property made as above.

Before making his temporary profession in a religious congregation—but not in an order—a novice must dispose of his present and possible future property by will, devising or bequeathing it in whatever way he pleases. As the will does not take effect before the testator dies, it is not open to the same objection as alienation or encumbrancing. After simple profession this will cannot be changed except by leave of the Holy See or in case of urgency of a higher or even of a local superior. If for any reason the will was not made before simple profession, the religious, if professed before the promulgation of the Code, can do what his rule permitted; others, it would seem, would have to obtain permission from the Holy See, which in case of urgency might be presumed.

A novice or postulant must not be charged anything for food or clothing unless this is provided by the constitutions or by express contract; if he leave he may freely take away anything he brought in with him if it has not been used up.

A novice is free to leave the novitiate at any time; on the other hand, he may be sent away for a just cause by the constitutional authorities, without the superior being obliged to give him any reason for his dismissal. If he completes his term of probation however, he must be admitted to profession or sent away; if the superiors should be in doubt as to his fitness, the novitiate may be prolonged, but not beyond six months (the Normæ of 1901 had said three months). In order the more to safeguard the liberty of those who are aspiring to religious life, the superiors of nuns whether exempt or not must inform the local ordinary at least two months before anyone is admitted either to the novitiate or to profession whether temporal or perpetual. The local ordinary or a priest deputed by him is to examine the aspirant at least thirty days before her reception or profession, to see if she is acting of her own free will, from pious motives, and if she understands what she is about to do; if the report is favorable the aspirant may be received or professed as the case may be. Before making the vows of profession, however, every novice must make a spiritual retreat for at least eight whole days, two days less than the Normæ prescribed.

The canonical regulations regarding nuns confessors apply to the case of female novices. In institutes of men there are to be one or more ordinary confessors, according to the number of novices; the master of novices or his assistant may not hear sacramental confessions of any of their novices, unless when in a particular case the novice of his own accord for an urgent reason asks them to do so. The ordinary confessors should live in the house of novices, if the institute is clerical; if, however, it is lay they should come frequently to the novitiate for confessions; in addition extraordinary confessors should be appointed, to whom the novices can go in special cases, and masters of novices are warned not to show any displeasure if a novice exercises this privilege. Finally, at least four times each year the superior must appoint an extraordinary confessor to whom all the novices must go at least to receive a blessing.

Nueva Cáceres, DIOCESE OF (DE CACERES, cf. C. E., XI—148c), is one of the eight suffragan sees of the Archdiocese of Manila, Philippine Islands. It comprises the provinces of Camarines, Camarines Norte, Albay and Sorsogon in the southern part of Luzon, the province of Masbate and the sub-province of Catanduanes thus including a territory of 7386 sq. miles and a population of 837,193 (census of 1918).

As early as 1595 the Church had made so much progress in these parts that Clement VIII created the diocese of Nueva Cáceres taking its name from the town of Nueva Cáceres founded in Camarines Sur in 1579 by Pedro de Chaves in honor of Francisco de Sande, second Governor-General of the Philippine Islands and a native of Cáceres. The first bishop appointed was Fray Pedro Bautista Blázquez, a Franciscan, who was then evangelizing in Japan, having been sent by the Spanish King on an embassy to the Mikado, Taicosama. He never took possession of his see, nor was he consecrated, for with twenty-five others he was martyred at Nagasaki, 5 February, 1597. He and his companions were canonized by Pope Pius IX, 8 June, 1862, and San Pedro Bautista was made the patron of the diocese of Nueva Cáceres. The first bishop to rule the see was Francisco de Ortega.

The present incumbent is Rt. Rev. John Bernard MacGinley, born at Croag, diocese of Raphoe, Ireland, in 1871, and after being ordained and receiving the degree of doctor of theology, he was ordained in the diocese of Philadelphia. He was elected to the see of Nueva Cáceres on 2 April, 1910, consecrated the 2 May following and publicly acknowledged 27 November, 1911.

In 1915 a destructive typhoon which occurred on 23 October wrecked the bishop's house, the seminary and a score of churches, and some 200 people were killed or drowned. During the World War the people of the diocese, encouraged by the word and example of the clergy, subscribed largely to the various liberty loans. In the present year (1921) the Benedictine Missionary Sisters of Tutzing, Bavaria, opened the college of St. Agnes in the town of Albay, on 22 February.

The Catholic population of the diocese is approximately 830,805, of whom about 500 are Chinese, 300 Spaniards, 5 Americans and 830,000 Filipinos. There are 100 parishes, 100 churches, 2 convents for women, 136 secular priests and 18 regular, 1 Brother, 23 Sisters, 1 seminary with 35 seminarians (including preparatorians). The educational institutions include 1 college for men with 10 teachers and 280 students, 2 colleges for women with 23 teachers and 265 students and 98 elementary schools with 204 teachers and 11,250 pupils. The Apostolic Union is organized among the clergy and a Catholic Federation among the laity.

Nueva Pamplona, DIOCESE OF (NEO-PAMPALENSENSIS; cf. C. E.—149b), in Colombia, South America, is a suffragan of Bogotá. It is at present (1922) under the administration of Rt. Rev. Raphael Afanador y Cadena, b. at Barichara, in the Diocese of Socorro, 4 April, 1871, ordained 3 July, 1898, vicar general of Socorro, appointed 5 June, 1916, consecrated 3 September, proclaimed 7 December following to succeed Mgr. Evariste Blanco, b. 25 October, 1855; d. 15 September, 1916. There are in the diocese (1920) 51 parishes, 8 secular and 7 regular priests, 76 churches or chapels, and a Catholic population of 250,480 souls.

Nueva Segovia, DIOCESE OF (NOVÆ SEGOBIÆ, cf. C. E., XI—149c), is one of the eight suffragans of the Archdiocese of Manila in the Philippine Islands. It is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Pierre-Joseph Hurth, C.S.C., born at Nittel in the diocese of Treves on 30 March, 1857, and appointed Bishop of Daoca on 26 June, 1894, transferred to the see of Milopotamus in 1909 and again transferred to Nueva Segovia in 1913. He came to this see as successor to Rt. Rev. James J. Carroll, who had resigned 12 October, 1912, on account of a serious accident which had befallen him on a pastoral visit in Abra.

In 1913 a violent typhoon which visited the northern part of Luzon destroyed or seriously damaged a great number of the churches in the territory north of Vigan. On 27 November, 1914, the whole diocese joyously celebrated the first anniversary of the restoration of the Society of Jesus in recognition of the great service which these Fathers have rendered the church in Nueva Segovia. In addition to their other labors they direct the episcopal college and seminary of the diocese. The same day saw the close of the second synod at which nearly all the priests of the diocese had assisted.

In 1919 the diocese mourned the death of Mr. Enrique Quema, a leader among the men of the province, who had always used his wealth and influence in the cause of the Church. In 1921 the death of Mgr. Antonio Padila, prothonotary ad instar, and Vicar General of the diocese, caused a serious loss: on two different occasions he had acted as administrator of the diocese. The clergy lost another staunch supporter through the death of Miss Filomena Donato, a woman of ability and wealth, who took an active part in all charitable works and a special interest in supporting numerous catechism classes and maintaining a number of schools in the missions of Abra and in poor parishes.

The total population of the diocese of Nueva Segovia is 1,367,700 (by the census of 1919), of which 994,000 are Catholics. In the province of Abra, with a Christian population of 61,000, nearly half belong to the Aglipayan schism, and there are also 10,000 Tinguians, but among these there seems to be a great movement toward the Catholic Church. A number of different tribes live in the mountain provinces, numbering in all about 215,000 and these are even today dangerous savages, but the Belgian Fathers and Fathers of the Divine Word are daily extending their influence farther into these countries. Since 1909, the Fathers of the Divine Word have increased the number of Catholics from less than 10,000 to over 35,000 by reconciling schismatics and partly through conversions.

By present (1921) statistics the diocese counts 87 parishes, besides the two great mission districts of Abra and the mountain provinces, 99 secular and 13 regular priests. A parish often numbers as many as 20,000 or 30,000 souls and generally consists of the chief town of a Municipality and the surrounding villages, the distance from the central church to these villages often being as much as 20 kilometers.

The number of children attending Catholic schools is woefully small, in part due to the moral pressure put upon parents to contribute to the erection and support of public schools and to send their children to them. These people, mostly very poor, having contributed, wish to reap some benefit from the schools and besides this, experience has shown that a pupil from a public school holds a better chance for public employment than one from a Catholic school. Another reason lies in the fact that high schools exist only in the provincial capitals and to these come all the young people in search of higher education, and the Government and the Protestant denominations are able to provide them with excellent living quarters at a very nominal rate, while the Catholic schools are not so able to do this. To offset these difficulties classes in catechism are held each Sunday in every parish church and village of importance, and in many places the priests gather the children in the church after school. In some few public schools, the priests are allowed to teach religion twice a week and religious societies have been established, especially among the students of the high schools.

However, the number of Catholic schools is steadily increasing; good colleges closed during the Revolution and now re-opened, are conducted at Vigan and Dagupan and academies for girls at Vigan and Lingayen. In 1912 there was only one other academy and one parish school in the whole diocese, while at the present time the Belgian Sisters have a well-attended academy at Bagnio and two central high schools in the Mountain Provinces; the Sisters Servants, of the Holy Ghost have a parochial school-academy at Tayum; the academy at Tagudin which in 1912 had 305 pupils now has 670 with 7 branch schools having 874 pupils. Besides these there are 23 schools under the direction of the Belgian Fathers with 2553 pupils, 33 schools under the Fathers of the Divine Word, with 2260 pupils. The total number of children under Catholic instruction is 11,203, taught by 26 Fathers and scholastics, 15 Brothers, 50 Sisters and a corps of Filipino teachers. There are also two trade schools and besides these all kinds of lace-making and fine needlework are taught by the Belgian Sisters and Sisters of St. Paul, their pupils having carried off the highest awards at the San Francisco Exhibition in 1914.

Nuns (cf. C. E., XI—164a).—In canon law the term nuns (moniales) signifies religious with solemn vows or, unless the contrary is evident from the nature of things or from the context, religious belonging to institutes in which the vows according to the constitutions should be solemn but in fact are so no longer in certain places by virtue of an Apostolic indult; the term sisters (sorores), is applied to religious with simple vows. The election of the mother superior of a monastery of nuns properly so-called (moniales) if the monastery is subject to the jurisdiction of the bishop, is to be presided over by the local ordinary or his delegate, without, however, any violation of the law of enclosure. The votes are to be counted by two assistant priests, who must not be ordinary confessors of the monastery. If the nuns are subject to a regular superior he is to preside; however, even in this case the ordinary should be notified beforehand of the day and hour of the election so that he can if he pleases be present with the regular superior or send a representative, in which case he or his representative presides.

In case of the election of a mother general of a congregation the local ordinary of the place where the election is being held is to preside personally or by deputy. Under the Code a mother general or the superioress of a monastery of nuns must be at least forty years old and ten years professed and be of legitimate birth; in the case of other higher superioresses—mother-general, mother-provincial and their vicars—the minimum age is thirty, but ten years profession is also requisite; if the constitutions of an order or congregation provide for more stringent qualifications they are unaffected by the Code. Nothing having been said in the Code about minor superioresses their qualifications are settled by the constitutions. An important change has been made regarding the tenure of office; minor superioresses may now hold office only for three years; they may be re-appointed or re-elected for a second period but not for a third successive term in the same house. The higher superioresses are to hold office temporarily unless the constitutions provide otherwise, but the general law does not fix a definite limit to their term of office. A superioress is bound to promote among her subjects the knowledge and the execution of the decrees of the Holy See affecting religious. Local superioresses must cause to be read publicly, at least once a year, at a stated time, the constitutions of the institute, together with the decrees which the Holy See has ordered to be read in public; they must also see that a suitable instruction in Christian doctrine for lay sisters and domestics, as well as a pious exhortation for the whole community, are given at least twice a month.

The mother general of any pontifically approved institute or order must send the Holy See every five years or oftener, if the constitutions so provide, a report on the condition of her institute or order signed by herself, her council and by the ordinary of the place where she and her council reside. She and each provincial and local superioress (at least of every house with six or more members, technically domus formata), must have her council, consisting of two religious, whose advice or consent must be obtained when it is required by the constitutions or the sacred canons. KINANE, Nuns and Sisters in Irish Ecc. Record, XII (1918), 291 sqq.; Code de juris canonici, can. 492–517.

Nuremberg, one of the principal cities of the Archdiocese of Bamberg, Bavaria. It is divided into 5 parishes, 14 churches, including 6 mission churches, 2 monasteries for men, 2 convents for women with 53 nursing sisters and 69 English Ladies, 44 secular clergy, 13 regular clergy and 8 lay brothers. Two homes and 4 nurseries have been established in the city and 1 Catholic periodical is published there.

Nusco, DIOCESE OF (NUSCANENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—171b), in the province of Avellino, Southern Italy. It is suffragan of Salerno. Rt. Rev. Pasquale Mores, b.

at Lucera 11 January, 1873, chancellor, appointed at the Consistory of 15 December, 1919, succeeded Mgr. Luigi Paulini transferred to the Diocese of Concordia, 10 March, 1919. According to 1920 statistics there are: 19 parishes, 107 secular and 1 regular priests, 15 seminarians, 2 Brothers, 34 Sisters, 118 churches or chapels, and a Catholic population of 40,304.

Nyasaland, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF. See SHIRÉ.

Nyassa, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (NYASSÆ; cf. C. E., XI—172b), in Central Africa, is entrusted to the White Fathers. In 1914 a portion of the vicariate was formed into the Vicariate Apostolic of Bangweilo, thus confining the territory to the Lake of Nyassa, with the dividing line between the Zambezi and the Congo Rivers as its boundary. The vicar Apostolic is Rt. Rev. Mathurin Guillemé, W. F., titular Bishop of Matera, b. at Ste. Matie de Redon in the Diocese of Rennes, France, 3 July, 1859, appointed Vicar Apostolic of Nyassa, 24 February, 1911, consecrated 18 June following. He resides at Bembeke. The vicariate has (1922 statistics) 6 stations with 28 White Fathers, 9 White Sisters, 218 catechists, 10,000 catechumens, 11,557 Catholics; in 828 schools there were 6665 boys and 5409 girls, 17,886 patients cared for in 18 hospitals, 9 churches, 25 chapels and 4 orphanages.

Nygata, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (NE NYGATA), Japan, erected 13 August, 1912, and confided to the Fathers of the Divine Word, comprises all the western coast of the island of Nippon. The first prefect apostolic, appointed in November, 1912, is Mgr. Joseph Reiners, S. V. D., b. at Neuwerk, Holland, 1874, ordained 1898, sent to the Japanese mission in 1909. There are 480 Catholics out of a population of 6,000,000. There are 13 churches and chapels, 10 stations, 19 regular priests, 1 seminary with 8 seminarians, 1 college for girls with 9 teachers and 157 pupils, 1 hospital, 1 orphanage, 1 house of charitable work and 2 homes. There is a school for catechists with 2 students.

Oaxaca (or ANTEQUERA, cf. C. E., XI—180d), ARCHDIOCESE OF, in the southern part of the Republic of Mexico, has as suffragan dioceses Chiapas and Tehuantepec. A new province was formed by Leo XIII in 1906 and the Archdiocese of Yucatan was established at Merida with the bishoprics of Campeche and Tabasco as suffragans, thus taking away three of the suffragan dioceses of Oaxaca.

The present Archbishop, the Rt. Rev. Eulogio G. Gillow, was born at Puebla in 1841, made his studies in England, Belgium and Rome, was ordained in Mexico and then returned to Rome. He was appointed to the see of Oaxaca in 1887, being consecrated on 23 May, and 1891 he was raised to the rank of archbishop. On account of the Revolution the Church in this territory has suffered some changes, but things are gradually becoming readjusted.

In the city of Oaxaca there is a seminary divided into three sections: ordained students, seminarians and preparatory students; one college for young men; 3 select academies for young women; 6 free schools for boys and 4 for girls. Among the charitable institutions under Catholic control are a day nursery, a charity hospital and a home for the poor.

Oblates of Mary Immaculate (cf. C. E., XI—184c), founded 25 January, 1816, approved as a congregation under simple vows 17 February, 1826, and received the brief of approbation by Pope Leo XII, 21 March, 1826. All Oblate houses were directly dependent on the central administration until 1850. The congregation has at present seventeen juniorates situated at Sainte-Foy-lez-Lyon and Strasbourg (France), Santa-Marie-a-Vico (Italy), Saint-Helier (Jersey), Saint-Charles par Fauquemont (Holland), Burlo-bai-Borken (Germany), Krotoszyn (Poland), Urnieta (Spain), Raheny (Ireland), Waereghem (Belgium), in Europe; Buffalo (New York), and San Antonio (Texas), in the United States; Ottawa (Ontario), Saint Boniface (Manitoba), Strathcona (Alberta), in Canada, Colombo and Jaffna, in the Island of Ceylon. The novitiates are twelve in number and are situated at: San Giorgio Canvese and Roviano (Italy), Urnieta (Spain), Thy-le-Château and Nieuwenhove (Belgium), Maria-Engelpoort (Germany), Markowice (Poland), Ardagh (Ireland); Tewksbury (Mass.); Mission (Texas), Ville-la-Salle (Canada); and Colombo (Ceylon). The nine establishments at present occupied as scholasticates are situated at: Rome, Liege, Hünfeld, Stillorgan, Washington, Castroville, Ottawa, Edmonton, and Colombo. Besides the University of Ottawa, among higher institutions of learning directed by the Oblates of Mary Immaculate are St. Joseph's College at Colombo (1100 pupils) and St. Patrick's College at Jaffna (700 pupils), both in Ceylon. As the Oblate scholastics at Ottawa graduate in philosophy and theology at the University of Ottawa, so their Irish confreres at Stillorgan graduate in philosophy at the National University in Dublin. The two seminaries of Colombo and Jaffna, in Ceylon, were amalgamated together (1908) in Colombo for the same purpose of working at the formation of a native clergy who already number about 50. The classical college of Saint Louis, New Westminster, has been given up, while that of Saint Charles, Pietermaritzburg, was lately entrusted to the Marist Brothers. The Oblates are no longer (1919) in charge of the Sacred Heart Basilica in Brussels. They direct Neunkirch, in Alsace, and Maria Engelpoort, in Germany, and a few other famous pilgrimage shrines in honor of the Blessed Virgin. The new Alsace Lorraine province of the Oblates has charge of the ancient sanctuary of Saint Ulrich, while the German province looks after the shrines of Saint Nicholas at Kapellen-Neuss and of Saint Rupert at Bingen.

The following provinces and vice-provinces have lately been created: Alsace-Lorraine (1920), Alberta-Saskatchewan (1921), Italy (1921) and "Lowell" (1921). The two latter are only vice-provinces which will presumably soon be the case for Poland also. Two special missions for the Esquimaux were recently established in Northwestern Canada, at Chesterfield Inlet, in the Keewatin Vicariate, and at Bear Lake, in the Mackenzie Vicariate. The former, in charge of Fr. Arsène Turquetil, was established in 1912, while the latter, founded in 1911, already counts three martyrs—Fr. John-Baptist Rouvière and William Le Roux, massacred in 1913, and Fr. Joseph Frapsance drowned by accident in 1920. In Canada the archiepiscopal See of Saint Boniface from 1853 until 1915, and the episcopal Sees of Saint Albert, now (1912) Archdiocese of Edmonton, and of Prince Albert, now (1921) Prince Albert and Saskatoon, since their foundation (respectively 1871 and 1907) until 1920 have been occupied by Oblates; and so are still the Vicariates of Athabaska and Mackenzie. The new Vicariate of Keewatin was entrusted to the Oblates in 1910, and the Vicariate of Yukon and Prince Rupert is also (1917) administered by an Oblate bishop, with the help of Oblate missionaries. The following Oblates have recently been appointed bishops: Charles Cox, Vicar Apostolic of Transvaal (1914) and Administrator-Apostolic of Kimberley in South Africa (1914); Emile Bunoz, Vicar Apostolic of Yukon and Prince Rupert (1917); Jules Brault, Bishop of Jaffna (1920). Recently deceased Oblate bishops: Matthew Gaughren (1843-1914), Vicar Apostolic of the Orange River Colony (Kimberley), Adelpard-Langevin (1855-1915), Archbishop of Saint Boniface (Manitoba), Henry Joulain (1852-1919), Bishop of Jaffna (Ceylon); Emile Legal (1849-1920), first Archbishop of Edmonton (Alberta); Albert Pascal (1848-1920), first Bishop of Prince Albert (Saskatchewan). Fr. Albert Lacombe, the "Black-robe voyageur," died in 1916. The cause of Fr. Dominic Albini, the Apostle of Corsica, who died at Vico in 1839, has lately been introduced in Rome. The present General Superior of the order is Mgr. Augustine Dentenwill (b. 1857), elected 1908, also Archbishop of Ptolemais.

The periodicals on the work of the congregation have lately greatly increased in number. The following is a complete list: "Missions des O. M. I.," published at Rome for the order only; "La Voce di Maria" (Naples); "Revue Apostolique de Marie Immaculée" (Paris); "Immaculata" (Strasbourg); "Monatsblätter der Oblaten der Unbefleckten Jungfrau Maria" (Hünfeld); "Messager de Marie Immaculée," and "Maria Bode" (Brussels); "Missionary Record of the Oblates of Mary Immaculate" (Dublin); "La Bannière de Marie Immaculée" (Ottawa); "L'Ami du Foyer" (Saint-Boniface); "Mary Immaculate" (San Antonio). Among the principal reviews or magazines of general importance published by the Oblates are: "Regnabit, Revue universelle du Sacré Cœur" (Paris); "La Bonne Nouvelle" (Paris); "Les Annales du Cap" (Cap-de-la-Madeleine); "The Monthly Bulletin" (Vancouver); "Blue and White" (Colombo); and a large number of parochial bulletins, such as those of Lowell, Buffalo, and McCook (United States), of Montreal, Quebec, and Hull (Canada).

The present number of Oblate foundations is as follows: Europe: general administration, 5 (including 2 houses in Poland); Italian vice-province, 4; French southern province, 13; French northern province, 16; Alsace-Lorraine, 3; German province, 17; Belgian province, 5; Anglo-Irish province, 15. America: Canadian province, 15; United States northern province, 9; "Lowell" vice-province, 6; United States southern province, 18; province of Manitoba, 25; province of Alberta-Saskatchewan, 11; vicariate of British Columbia, 10; vicariate of Athabaska, 17; vicariate of Mackenzie, 14; vicariate of Yukon, 6; vicariate of Keewatin, 11. Asia: Archdiocese of Colombo, 55; Diocese of Jaffna, 26 houses or missions. Africa: vicariate of Natal, 21; vicariate of South Africa, 14 (7 in Kimberley and 7 in Transvaal); vicariate of Basutoland, 14 residences (divided into 3 districts). A comparison of the number of members of the congregation in 1907, 1910, and 1921 is given in the following table:

Members	1907	1911	1921
Bishops and priests	1182	1258	1372
Scholastics	250	298	300
Lay Brothers	485	507	341
Total number of Oblates	1917	2063	2073
Novices	134	111	134
Juniors	500	583	873

Oblates of Saint Francis de Sales (cf. C. E., XI—187h), a congregation of priests the establishment of which was originally desired by St. Francis de Sales, and carried out by Raymond Bonal du Rouerque with the assistance of St. Jane Frances de Chantal. This congregation died out at the beginning of the eighteenth century, but was revived two hundred years later by Ven. Mother Marie de Sales Chappuis and Canon Louis Alexander Alphonse Brisson, formerly professor in the seminary and chaplain of the visitation convent at Troyes. In 1869 Fr. Brisson began St. Bernard's College near Troyes, with Fr. Gilbert (d. 1909) and Fr. Kollin. On 14 October, 1873, Bishop Ravinet of Troyes received them and three companions into the novitiate. The laudatory Brief of the new institute was granted by Pius IX, 21 December, 1875. The first decennial approbation was dated 7 December, 1887, and the definitive approbation of the Institute and its constitution was given 8 December, 1897. Fr. Brisson was the first superior general. He was succeeded in 1908 by Fr. Jean Deshaies, who died 16 June, 1921, upon his return from a canonical visitation of Greece, Uruguay, and Brazil. A general chapter was held at Albano, 23 October, 1921, when Fr. Joseph Lebeau was elected superior general. He was born at Saron (Marne) 22 September, 1860, was the first provincial superior, the founder of the Austro-German province, and chaplain of the Visitation convent of Soleure. He chose Fr. Rollin as his assistant general.

The congregation has three provinces: Latin, German, and English. The novitiate for the Latin province is in Giove (Umbria). The German province has its novitiate at Schmieding (Upper Austria). A preparatory school of about forty students has been recently established at Dachsberg (Upper Austria), and a preparatory school of more than sixty students has been established at Overbach. The Oblates are guardians of the tombs of Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his family. Before the revolution of 1897 the Oblates were stationed in Ecuador.

Oceania, CENTRAL, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (OCEANIAE CENTRALIAE).—The total population of this vicariate apostolic (1922) is 30,000 of whom 8800 are Catholics. In 1920 the establishment of quasi-parishes desired by Canon Law was accomplished in Wallis. The first vicar apostolic Mgr. Bataillou was succeeded in 1877 by Mgr. Elloy; in 1879 Mgr. Lamaze became vicar, and at his death (1906) Mgr. Olier, his coadjutor, succeeded him. In 1912 the present incumbent, Mgr. Blanc, was appointed, Mgr. Olier having died in 1911. Born in Toulon in 1872, Mgr. Blanc was ordained in 1895 by special dispensation on account of his age. He left for the missions in Oceania six years later, and was consecrated titular bishop of Dibou 29 June, 1912. He is the author of "Les Iles Wallis" (Paris, 1913) and "L'Heritage d'un Evêque d'Océanie" (Toulon, 1921).

According to statistics for 1921 the vicariate has 3 parishes, 3 missions, 10 stations, 38 churches, 2 secular and 16 regular priests, 53 Sisters, 1 seminary with 18 seminarians, 3 colleges for boys with 10 teachers and 140 pupils, 11 secondary schools for girls with 30 teachers and 185 pupils, 64 elementary schools with 64 teachers and 2540 pupils. Priests are permitted to visit the public hospitals and the prisons. The Association for the Propagation of the Faith is established in the vicariate, and there are many publications in the native languages made by the mission.

Œconomus (cf. C. E., XI-214b).—If a cathedral chapter fails to appoint an œconomus or hursar within eight days after being notified of an episcopal vacancy, the right devolves on the archbishop, or, if it be an archiepiscopal vacancy, on the senior suffragan bishop. The chapter elects the œconomus by a majority vote and may select the vicar capitular to hold both offices; once elected his removal is reserved to the Holy See, but he can resign validly when he pleases, independently of the wish of the chapter. Religious institutes are directed to appoint œconomi to look after the property and revenues of local houses, of provinces, and of the order in general respectively; a superior may not be named a local œconomus, except in case of necessity. If the constitutions are silent about the procedure, the œconomi are to be appointed by one of the higher superiors with the consent of his council. In a like manner, it is prescribed that each seminary should have its œconomus, who must not be rector at the same time, to take charge of household matters.

Ogdensburg, DIOCESE OF (OGDENSBURGENSIS) cf. C. E., XI—222c), comprises 12,036 square miles in the State of New York. The second bishop of this see, Rt. Rev. Henry Gabriels, consecrated 5 May, 1892, died 23 April, 1921, and his auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Joseph Henry Conroy, was appointed to succeed him. Born in this diocese in 1858, Bishop Conroy was ordained in 1881 and later became rector of the cathedral and vicar general of the diocese, which position he filled until his appointment as titular Bishop of Arindela, and auxiliary, 11 March, 1912. The religious orders now established in this diocese include: men, Franciscans (Friars Minor), Augustinians, Oblate Fathers, Missionaries of the Sacred Heart and Brothers of the Christian schools; women: Gray Nuns, Sisters of Mercy, Sisters of St. Joseph, Franciscan Sisters, Ursulines, Sisters of Charity and Daughters of the Holy Ghost. The diocese comprises a Catholic population of 100,600; 140 secular and 20 regular clergy, 101 churches with resident priests, 61 missions with churches, 79 mission stations, 24 chapels; 13 Brothers, 8 seminarians, 13 academies for boys, 12 academies for young ladies, 20 parochial schools with 4873 pupils, 2 orphan asylums caring for 314 orphans; a total of 5382 young people are under Catholic care; 8 hospitals are caring for 5461 patients and 1 home for the aged is established.

Ogliastra, DIOCESE OF (OLEANSTRENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—223d), in Sardinia, suffragan of Cagliari. In 1910 Mgr. Emanuele Virgilio, the present bishop, was appointed to the see of Ogliastra, to succeed Mgr. Paderi deceased. He was born at Venosa in 1868 and was pro-vicar general and archpriest of the cathedral when he was elevated to the episcopate. According to the statistics for 1920 the diocese contains 29 parishes, 46 secular priests, 20 seminarians, 53 churches and chapels, and a Catholic population of 54,500.

Ohio (cf. C. E., XI—225d)—The area of the State is 41,040 square miles. The population in 1920 was 5,759,394, an increase of 20.8% since 1910. Of this, 63% was urban; 36.2% was rural. The average number of inhabitants to the sq. mile was 141.4 as against 117 in 1910. Ohio has 80 cities, the largest being Cleveland, with a population of 796,841. Seven cities have more than 100,000 inhabitants; of these, Akron showed in 1920 the greatest rate of increase, having trebled its population (201%). The principal cities with their populations are as follows: Akron 208,435; Cincinnati 401,247; Columbus 237,031; Toledo 243,164; Dayton 152,559; Youngstown 132,358.

ECONOMIC STATUS.—Although the number of farms in 1919 was 256,695, a decrease of 5.6% since 1909, the value of farming property was $3,095,666,336, an increase of 62.7%; the total area of farms was 23,515,888 acres. The value of live stock was $287,655,118; of all crops, $607,037,562 (an increase of 174.6% since 1909). The chief crops are: corn, of which 149,844,626 bushels were grown in 1919, at a value of $217,274,709; wheat, 58,124,351 bushels, $127,873,474; tobacco, 64,420,472 pounds, $13,528,302; beet sugar, 365,415 tons, $3,836,861. Dairying is on the increase, the value of dairy products in 1919 being $81,148,586.

Ohio ranks fourth of all the States in the Union for mineral products, coal and clay manufactures ranking foremost. The latest (1919) census of mining enterprises (mines, quarries and wells) reveals 2283 productive enterprises compared to 1876 in 1909; 1064 mines and quarries and 35,440 petroleum and natural gas wells. The value of products was $134,518,505. The census of manufactures mentions 16,125 establishments, 978,068 people engaged in manufacture, earning $1,218,366,093, and turning out products worth $5,100,298,728. The capital invested was $3,810,859,879. There are 9160 miles of railway in the State and 3227 miles of electric railway. The lake and river traffic is very large. Ohio has 775 State banks and 370 national banks, with deposits over $3,000,000. The State debt on 1921 was $510,266,465, including the Canal loan, not bearing interest.

RELIGION.—According to the latest United States Census of Religious Denominations, there were 2,291,793 members of all denominations, 843,856 Catholics, 399,045 Methodist Episcopalians; 138,800 Presbyterians; 109,732 Disciples; 77,775 Baptists (Northern Convention); 20,151 Jews; 164,224 Lutherans. For Catholic statistics see CINCINNATI, ARCHDIOCESE OF; CLEVELAND, DIOCESE OF; COLUMBUS, DIOCESE OF.

EDUCATION AND CHARITY.—Education is compulsory for all children between the ages of six and fifteen. There are in the State 11,475 school-houses, 10,707 elementary schools, with 28,224 teachers (3,171 men and 25,053 women), and 880,290 enrolled pupils (450,371 boys and 429,919 girls). The 583 public high schools have 6914 teachers, 132,711 pupils; the normal schools, 1127 students and 77 teachers. The educational expenditure in 1919 was $60,040,295. There are provisions for the establishment of public schools for the deaf, blind, and crippled. Lincoln's Birthday is now considered a school holiday. The Board of Education of a village school district containing a village of 3000 or more may elect to be exempt from the supervision of the county board of education. Bible reading in the public schools is allowed by court decision. In 1912 two normal schools were established, one at Bowling and another at Kent. The laws are governing private and parochial schools as follows: "All private and parochial schools which instruct pupils who have not completed a course of study equivalent to that prescribed for the first seven grades of the elementary schools of Ohio shall be taught in the English language. German shall not be taught below the eighth grade. All teachers in public and private schools must take the oath of allegiance. No religious sect or sects shall have any exclusive right to or control of any part of the school funds of the state (VI-2). Private schools must teach same branches taught in the public schools. The flag must be displayed on or near each public and private school building." To eliminate idleness among boys and girls between the ages of 16 and 18 years the new school law of Ohio (1921) provides that a child more than 16 years old may leave school to go to work if he has completed the work of the seventh grade, has passed a physical examination and can present a written promise of employment. If he meets these requirements he receives an "age and schooling" certificate, but this is not a permanent release from school; it is only a release for the time the child is employed by the one employer. If he changes employers he must secure a new certificate. If the child is to be employed by his parents, the same procedure applies, and if he loses his position, he must return to school. The board of charities consists of seven members, appointed by the governor, who is ex-officio a member and president of the board, has supervision of all the charities of the state.

RECENT HISTORY AND LEGISLATION.—Of great importance in the State's history was the constitutional convention held in Columbus in 1912. Of the 42 amendments submitted to the voters, 34 were adopted and eight defeated. Those which were adopted provide for the initiative and referendum, an eight-hour day on all public work, a limitation of the veto power of the governor, state-wide primaries and civil service, an easier removal of State officials, conservation of natural resources, including legislative control over the methods of mining, change in the judicial system, and the elimination of unnecessary legal delays; regulation of corporations, municipal home rule, and the privilege of cities to choose their own form of government. In 1914 a new site of 1500 acres was chosen for the penitentiary. The coal strike of 1914 and the consequent shut-down of the mines in the State brought great hardship to the miners and caused great loss to the industry. By a decision of the Supreme Court in 1915 Cleveland came into possession of a tract of lake-front land worth several millions which the railways had occupied for half a century. Floods caused great damage in the State in 1915. The Federal Suffrage Amendment was ratified on 16, June 1919; the Prohibition Amendment on 7, Jan. 1919. During the European War Ohio contributed 200,293 men to the United States Army (5.33 per cent). The Ohio members of the National Guard joined the 37th Division at Camp Sheridan, Ohio, and also at Montgomery, Alabama; those of the National Army, the 83d Division at Camp Sherman, Ohio. The drafted men were sent to Camp Chillicothe, Ohio. The summary of Ohio men in the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 123 officers, 3959 men; prisoners, 13 officers, 146 men; wounded, 379 officers, 11,387 men.

Oklahoma (cf. C. E., XI-230d).—The area of the State of Oklahoma is 70,057 square miles. The population in 1920 was 2,028,283, an increase of 22.4 per cent since 1910. The percentage of rural inhabitants was 73.4; urban, 26.6. The average number of persons per square mile is 29.2. The largest cities are Oklahoma City, 91,295; Tulsa, 72,075. Oklahoma now ranks as the twenty-first State in population; in 1900 it was thirtieth.

ECONOMIC STATUS.—As an agricultural state Oklahoma has unlimited possibilities. In 1920 there were 191,988 farms; the area of farm-land was 31,951,934 acres and its value was $1,860,423,544. Among the crops (valued at $549,249,277 in 1919) the chief were wheat (65,761,843 bushels), corn (53,851,093 bushels), cotton (1,006,242 bales). Oklahoma ranks sixth in cotton production, twelfth in corn production, seventh in wheat production and first in the petroleum output. The output of coal, in 1918 was 4,813,447 tons; the number of men employed in this industry being 8551. In the same year the petroleum output was 103,347,070 barrels; the natural gas output 124,317,179 feet. The three large cement mills in the state have a yearly capacity of 1,400,000 barrels. During 1918-19 91.6 miles of railroad were built in the State, making the total mileage 6532. The summary of manufactures in 1919 shows a consistent increase, as compared with that of 1914, except in the number of establishments, proprietors and firm members which show small decreases. In the 2446 establishments, 38,238 persons were engaged in manufacture, earning for their service a total of $47,552,000. The capital invested was $280,847,000 (an increase of 328 per cent since 1914) and the value of the products $402,462,000. The State debt in 1920 was $2,972,900; the assessed value of real and personal property, $1,664,448,745.

EDUCATION.—There are state normal schools at Durant, Weatherford, Edmond, Ada, Alva and Tahlequah, a reformatory for delinquent and incorrigible negro girls at Taft (created in 1917), another reformatory at Granite, an industrial school for girls at Tecumseh, a deaf, blind and orphans' institute at Taft, a school for the blind at Muskogee, Oklahoma College for Women at Chickasha, a State prison at McAlester, a home for white children at Helena, a school for the feeble-minded at Enid, State hospitals at Norman, Vinita, and Supply, a training school for white boys at Paul's Valley, the Confederate Home at Ardmore, the Union Soldiers' Home and University Hospital at Oklahoma City, two schools of mines at Miami and Wilburton, a petroleum experiment station of the United States Bureau of Mines at Bartlesville, and a tubercular sanitarium at Boley.

There are fifteen agricultural schools, each receiving Federal aid. In 1919 the University of Oklahoma had 150 professors and 3653 students. The latest educational statistics for Oklahoma (1920) give 510,139 white pupils, 41,276 negro pupils, 14,181 teachers. In 1916 there were 605 public high schools with 34,932 enrolled pupils and 1954 teachers. In 1918 the normal schools had 125 teachers and 4660 students. The total expenditure in 1918 was $13,803,861. Bible reading in the public schools is specifically permitted by law. The State laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: It shall be unlawful to teach in any other language than English in any public, parochial, denominational or other institution of learning within the State of Oklahoma, unless pupils receiving such instruction shall have completed the eighth grade of a common school curriculum. All teachers in public and private schools must take the oath of allegiance. All property used exclusively for schools and colleges and for religious and charitable purposes shall be exempt from taxation. (X-6). No money (public) shall be used for the support of any religious teacher or any other sectarian institution as such (11-5). The State board of education shall have authority to visit and inspect all institutions of higher learning, both public and private. Education is compulsory for all between the ages of eight and eighteen for two-thirds of the school term, but this does not apply to persons between the ages of sixteen and eighteen who are lawfully employed and have finished the eighth grade or full course of instruction. Part-time schools were provided for in 1919; and county schools in all counties having a population of less than 2000 school pupils. In this same year the negro boys were transferred from the penitentiary to the school at Taft.

RELIGION.—According to the United States Census of Religious Denominations (1916), all denominations in Oklahoma numbered 424,492, divided chiefly as follows: Catholics 47,427 or 11.2%; Baptists, Southern Convention 87,028 or 20.5%; Methodist Episcopalians 60,268 or 14.2%; Baptists, Northern Convention 42,408 or 10%; Disciples of Christ 41,811 or 9.8%; Methodist Episcopalians, 40,148 or 9.5%; Church of Christ 21,700 or 5.1%. For further religious and educational statistics see OKLAHOMA, DIOCESE OF.

RECENT HISTORY AND LEGISLATION.—The clause in the State constitution limiting manhood suffrage by means of an educational test and a grandfather clause was referred to the Supreme Court for decision. The latter was declared unconstitutional in 1915, but the educational test remained, applied, however, to all alike. By the Enabling Act Guthrie was made the capital until 1913, but in the election of 11 June, 1910, the people decided upon the removal of the capital to Oklahoma City. The election was declared invalid by the State Supreme Court on the ground that the title of the ballot did not conform to law. Thereupon the governor called a special session of the Legislature to remove the capital to Oklahoma City. In 1913 the Supreme Court prohibited the introduction of liquor into counties occupied by Indians. In 1915 a Widows' and Orphans' Pension Law was adopted and the pensioning of Confederate soldiers provided for. The Federal Prohibition Act was ratified on 7 January, 1919; the Suffrage Act, 28 February, 1920. In 1920 a woman was elected to the National House of Representatives. During the European War Oklahoma contributed to the United States Army 80,169 men (2.13 per cent of the army). The Oklahoma members of the national guard joined the 36th Division at Camp Bowie, Texas; those of the national army, the 90th Division at Fort Travis, Texas. A national guard camp was established at Fort Sill, Doniphan, Oklahoma. The summary of casualties among the Oklahoma members of the American Expeditionary Forces is as follows: deceased 20 officers, 1457 men; prisoners 80 men; wounded 59 officers, 4742 men.

Oklahoma, DIOCESE OF (OKLAHOMENSIS).—According to statistics for 1921 there are in the diocese of Oklahoma 75 parishes, 166 churches, 91 missions, 122 stations, 3 monasteries for nuns, 1 abbey for men, 1 convent for men, 50 convents for women with 338 religious, 12 seminarians. Educational institutions include 3 colleges for boys with 33 teachers and an attendance of 387; 1 college for women with 12 teachers and an attendance of 68; 3 academies with 34 teachers and an attendance of 315, 5 training schools with 28 teachers and 611 students; 51 elementary schools with 227 teachers and 5651 pupils. There are 1 orphanage, St. Joseph's Oklahoma City, in charge of 6 Sisters of Mercy, with 73 inmates, and 3 hospitals; St. Francis, Oklahoma City, in care of 22 Sisters of St. Francis; St. Mary's Infirmary, McAlester, conducted by 9 Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word; and Ponca City Hospital, Ponca City, in charge of 6 Sisters of St. Joseph. Organizations amongst the clergy include the Eucharistic League, Infirm Priests' Fund, the Association for Three Masses. For the laity there are the Knights of Columbus, Catholic Foresters, the Bohemian Catholic Society. Three Catholic monthlies are published, the "Orphans' Record," the "Indian Sentinel," and the "Little Flower Magazine."

Since 1911 the Cathedral parish, Oklahoma City, has been divided twice, the first time (1911) to form the Sacred Heart parish, and again in 1917, when the parish of Our Lady of Perpetual Help was formed. The Mission of Our Lady of Mount Carmel for Mexicans was founded in metropolis in 1921. In 1916 the Sacred Heart parish in Tulsa was erected, and in 1921 a parish under the same patronage was founded in Muskogee. The Discalced Carmelite Fathers from the province of Valencia, Spain, came to the diocese in 1915, and have charge of the parish of Our Lady of the Holy Rosary, Hartsborne.

During the World War four French Benedictine Fathers of the Sacred Heart Abbey entered the French Army. Three others and three diocesan priests served as chaplains in the American Army. Throughout the diocese effective work was done in the council of defence, in the various bond and Red Cross drives, etc.

Old Catholics (cf. C. E., XI—235b), in the United States. After the development of the Old Catholic movement in Europe there grew up here, in some sections, particularly the Middle West, a certain tendency to sympathize with these schismatics. The leader in this movement was J. R. Vilatte (or Villatte), a Parisian, a Catholic by birth who had come to Canada to study for the priesthood. While yet in the early stages of preparation he apostatized, chiefly owing to the influence of the apostate Chimi-qui, entered a Presbyterian seminary, and became pastor of a Presbyterian congregation in Wisconsin. Later coming under the influence of the apostate Hyacinthe Loyson, he went to Europe and was ordained by the Old Catholic bishop, Herzog, in 1885. Returning to Wisconsin he laid the foundation of the Old Catholic movement among certain communities of Belgians. Among other innovations Mass was said in French, but the Old Catholic doctrine was retained. His first congregation later joined in a body the Episcopal church. Vilatte unsuccessfully attempted a rapprochement with the Episcopalian bishop of Fond du Lac and through the latter's influence, he seeking episcopal consecration at the hands of Herzog, was denied his request. He then turned to the Orient, and was consecrated bishop, according to the Latin Rite, by the schismatical archbishop of Ceylon, Goa, and India, F. X. Julius Alvarez, assisted by two Jacobite Malabar bishops (1891). He now attempted a more pretentious organization in Wisconsin without any great success. He made a solemn recantation of his errors (2 February, 1899) and was outwardly reconciled to the Church, only to relapse within a short time, a decree of excommunication (13 June, 1900) being issued against him and against a priest, Paul Miraglia, whom he had attempted to consecrate bishop. These two now made common cause, and excepting a brief interval about 1906, when Vilatte unsuccessfully attempted to organize the Associations of Worship in France after the separation of Church and State, their work has been chiefly in the Middle West.

Although not ecclesiastically united to the Old Catholic sect of Europe the movement, being doctrinally the same, is generally given this designation. They were first listed in the United States reports in 1916. They then reported three quasi independent branches: the Old Roman Catholic Church, the American Catholic Church, and the Catholic Church of North America, Vilatte being directly in charge of the two first, while the third traced its source to the Jansenists of Utrecht. To these three two others may be added, the Polish National Catholic Church of America, a body made up chiefly of schismatical congregations, generally led away from the Church by recreant priests, and the Lithuanian National Catholic Church which by immigration is an offshoot of the parent body in Europe. Furthermore the original Old Catholic body in Europe seems also to claim organization here; in 1919 their American archbishop, de Berghes de Raches, entered the Church (he had never been a Catholic). He entered the Augustinian novitiate, but died 17 November, 1920.

The three "Old Catholic" bodies in the United States reported in 1916, 21 organizations and 14,200 members. In 1920 the "Old Roman Catholic Church" had disappeared, having merged with the "American Catholic Church" under that title, and under the leadership of Vilatte. The two bodies reported in 1920, 9 churches, 19 ministers, and 34,000 members. The Polish National Catholic Church claimed in the same year 34 churches, 45 ministers, and 28,000 members; the Lithuanian National Catholic Church reported 7 churches, 3 ministers, and 7343 members.

N. A. WEBER.

O'Leary, PETER, leading modern Gaelic writer, b. at Cluaindroichead, County Cork, Ireland, in 1839; d. 21 March, 1920. He entered the diocesan college of Fermoy and from there went on to Maynooth. He became Canon in 1906, after being engaged on parish work for many years. He celebrated his golden jubilee in 1917 and the National University conferred on him the degree of LL.D. two years later. In the revival of the study of Gaelic which was welcomed with so much enthusiasm by the Irish people, Canon O'Leary stands out a conspicuous figure. When after a bitter fight on the part of the English Government to prevent the study of Irish in the schools, the difficulty presented itself of finding books for the young generation to familiarize themselves with the language, Canon O'Leary supplied the want. His first book "Séadna" brought the language at a bound into modern literature with a lightness of touch that has never been surpassed and that elevated it at once into a classic. Such is the opinion of Douglas Hyde. He followed this up by many more which enabled thousands of pupils to prepare for public examinations. He translated the New Testament, the Imitation of Christ, and Aesop's Fables into Irish, and in his "Gúaire", "Caos-deamhan", "Lughaidh MacCon", and "Eisirt" re-told and modernized some of the great stories of ancient Ireland.

Olinda and Recife, ARCHDIOCESE OF (OLINDENSIS ET RECIFENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—242c), in the State of Pernambuco, Brazil. The see is at present (1922) vacant, the former archbishop, Mgr. Leme da Silveira Cintra having been appointed titular archbishop of Pharsalia and coadjutor to the archbishop of Rio de Janeiro, 15 March, 1921. He had been promoted to the see of Olinda in 1916 to succeed Mgr. da Silva Britto, deceased. On 5 December, 1910, the diocese of Olinda was erected into an archdiocese. By a Bull of 26 July, 1918, it was decreed that the church of St. Peter in Recife should be a co-cathedral with Olinda, that the archbishop and the canons could reside there, and that the title of the diocese should henceforth be Olinda and Recife. In 1920 the church of Recife was erected into a minor basilica. According to 1920 statistics there are in the archdiocese 81 parishes, 365 churches and chapels, 88 secular and 22 regular priests, and a total population of 1,030,244, of whom 1,028,541 are Catholics, and 1683 are Protestants.

Oliver Plunket, BLESSED (cf. C. E., XII—169c), beatified 23 May, 1920, by Benedict XV. On 30 June, 1920, a decree of the Sacred Congregation of Rites authorized the translation of the relic of the head of Blessed Oliver Plunket from the Dominican Convent to the Oliver Plunket Memorial Church, St. Peters, Drogheda. His feast is kept 11 July.

Olivetans (cf. C. E., XI—244d).—The sixth centenary of the foundation of the order was celebrated in 1919. At the general chapter held at Monte Oliveto in June, 1920, a new procurator general, Dom Lugano, was elected, and the election confirmed according to the rules formulated by Clement XII in 1733. The abbot general is Dom Mauro Parodi. The monastery of Lendinara, in the Diocese of Adria, was erected into an abbey by brief of 15 Dec., 1920, and Dom Celestino Mari Colombo, prior of the monastery and rector of the famous sanctuary of Notre Dame del Pilastrello, which adjoins it, was named abbot by the Pope himself and received the abbatial blessing from Bishop Rizzi, 21 Dec., 1920. This sanctuary, confided to the Olivetans, was erected into a minor basilica by Pius X, 15 Feb., 1911. In 1912 the Olivetans had 4 abbeys (3 in Italy and 1 in Carniola), 2 priories (in Italy), and 3 residences (2 in Italy and 1 in Istria). There were 124 members, of whom 72 were priests, 24 clerics and novices, and 28 Brothers. The French houses are now dispersed.

Olmütz, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See OLOMOUC.

Olomouc, ARCHDIOCESE OF (OLOMUCENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—247a), in Czechoslovakia. In 1921 Mgr. Antonin Slojan was appointed archbishop of Olomouc to succeed Cardinal de Skrbensky-Hrste, resigned. Born in Moravia, 22 May, 1851, he was ordained in 1876 and for twenty years was curate and pastor in various churches. In 1896 he won his doctorate in theology and the following year was Czech deputy to the Council of the Empire. In 1902 he was deputy to the Diet of Moravia, and was made canon and provost of collegiate chapter of Kromeriz in 1908. He was a delegate to the National Assembly in 1919, and the following year was elected to the Senate of Czechoslovakia. At the same time the pope made him a papal chamberlain. He was consecrated archbishop of Olomouc by Mgr. Micars, 3 April, 1921. Mgr. Wisnar, titular bishop of Calliopolis, is auxiliary of Olomouc. In 1916 there were in the archdiocese 51 deaneries, 664 parishes, 1536 secular and 145 regular priests, 2121 nuns, and 1,860,150 Catholics.

Omaha, DIOCESE OF (OMAHENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—249c) in the State of Nebraska, U. S. A., was divided into two parts by a Decree of the Sacred Consistorial Congregation of 8 March, 1912, and the western part was erected into the Diocese of Kearney. It now comprises an area of 14,051 sq. miles, where formerly its territory extended over 52,996 sq. miles. Rt. Rev. Richard Scannell, D.D., who had filled this see from 1891, died 8 January, 1916, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Most Rev. Jeremiah J. Harty, former Archbishop of Manila, P. I., who was transferred to Omaha with the title of Archbishop-Bishop. Archbishop Harty was born in St. Louis, Mo., 1 November, 1853, and was ordained 28 April, 1878. He labored in his home city as an assistant and then a pastor until 1903, when he was appointed Archbishop of Manila, which see he filled until his transfer to Omaha. He took possession of the see on 28 December, 1916, and his administration has been marked by the establishment of new parishes and parochial schools and the introduction of new religious orders into the diocese. An event of special importance was the establishment of the Chinese Mission Society in Omaha on 14 December, 1918. The mother house of the Society is at Dalgan Park, Galway, Ireland, and their present headquarters in Omaha, St. Columban's Mission House, is devoted to the education of young men for the priesthood in China. "The Far East," a magazine devoted to the conversion of China, is published here. Another Catholic paper, "The True Voice," edited by Rev. P. C. Gannon and having a very extensive circulation, is also published in the diocese. The religious orders now (1922) established here include men: Augustinian Recollects, Basilians, Franciscans, Jesuits, and Redemptorists; women: Sisters of Mercy, Poor Clares, Religious of the Sacred Heart, Sisters of Notre Dame, of St. Dominic, of St. Francis, of the Good Shepherd, Franciscan Sisters of Christian Charity and Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament. The latest statistics credit the diocese with 163 diocesan and 56 regular clergy, 142 parishes, 164 churches and 2 more under construction, 59 chapels, 4 stations, 78 men of religious orders, 844 women of religious orders, 1 university with 1945 students, 32 ecclesiastical students, 7 colleges and academies for girls, with 84 teachers and 701 students, 8 high schools with 30 teachers and 336 students, 90 parochial schools with 11,216 pupils, 1 orphan asylum with 166 orphans, 4 homes for young ladies with 181 residents, 1 House of the Good Shepherd, 1 industrial home for boys, 1 home for the aged, 3 hospitals with 590 beds, 188 hospital nurses, and a total of 15,005 young people under Catholic care. In 1921 the total Catholic population was 83,387.

Ontario, NORTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF. Detached from the Diocese of Haileybury in province of Ontario, Canada, and erected into a prefecture 18 April, 1918, and into a vicariate 27 November, 1920. The majority of the Catholic population of 12,000 are French-Canadian with the rest Indian or Irish. There are 8 secular priests, 9 parishes, 50 missions, 10 elementary schools with 16 teachers and 450 pupils, a boarding school for Indians at Albany with 30 pupils taught by 5 Gray Nuns of Ottawa, a boarding school for boys and girls at Hearst with 50 boarders and 80 day pupils taught by 8 sisters of Our Lady of Perpetual Help. The present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Joseph Halle, elected prefect apostolic in 1919, titular Bishop of Theveste and vicar apostolic in 1920, consecrated Bishop of Petraea, 17 April, 1921, with his residence at Hearst.

Oporto, DIOCESE OF (PORTUGALLENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—260f) in Portugal, Suffragan of Braga. Mgr. Antonio Barbosa-Leao is the present (1922) Bishop of Oporto, having succeeded to the see in 1919 on the death of Mgr. de Souza Barroso (1918). He was born in the diocese 17 October, 1860, was appointed Bishop of Angola and Congo in 1906, transferred to Faro the following year, where he remained until 1919. The latest available statistics (1920) give for the diocese 462 parishes, 480 churches, 1220 priests and 650,000 Catholics.

Oppido Mamertina, DIOCESE OF (OPPIDENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—262a).—in the province of Reggio Calabria, Italy, suffragan of Reggio. Mgr. Antonio Golati, archpriest of Vallenlunga in the diocese of Mileto, was appointed bishop of Oppido Mamertina 15 December, 1919, to succeed Mgr. Scopellitti, who resigned after ruling the see for twenty-one years and was transferred to the titular see of Rhesaena. In 1920 the diocese contained 19 parishes, 4 vicarages, 30 churches or chapels, 41 secular priests, 25 seminarians and a Catholic population of 30,000.

Option, RIGHT OF (cf. C. E., XI—264b).—The right of option which was formerly enjoyed by many chapters and until recently by a few is now abolished, even where it existed in virtue of a special Apostolic indult, and all customs to the contrary are reprobated. This applies not merely to dignities (dignitates) but to all canonries also. Of course where the right of option was based on the original provisions of a foundation it has not been affected by the Code legislation, though it may not be enjoyed by a capitular emeritus. Cardinal-deacons and cardinal-priests but not cardinal-bishops still possess the right of option peculiar to the Sacred College: thus, on 7 March, 1921, Cardinal La Fontaine, Patriarch of Venice, who had the title of Saints Nereus and Achilles, resigned it and took the title of the Twelve Holy Apostles, which had been rendered vacant by the death of Cardinal Netto on 7 December, 1920.

Oradea-Mare, DIOCESE OF. See NAGY-VÁRAD.

Oran, DIOCESE OF (ORANENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—266c), in Algeria, suffragan of Algiers. Rt. Rev. Christophe-Louis Légasse, appointed bishop of this see 6 December, 1915; was transferred to Périgueux 13 August, 1920. His successor was named in the person of Rt. Rev. Léon Durand, born in Oran in 1878, studied at Marseilles, the French Seminary in Rome, and the Academy of Noble Ecclesiastics, was ordained in 1902, served as a professor of theology and canon law in the upper seminary of Marseilles, entered the army as a military chaplain in 1914 and received an honorary citation, and was appointed titular Bishop of Hetalonia 10 January, 1919, transferred to Tricomia 10 March following and named auxiliary at Marseilles, where he served until his transfer to Oran 11 October, 1920. As a result of the efforts of Bishop Légasse the old episcopal palace has been returned to the bishop under an eighteen year lease, beginning 1 July, 1920, at the same price paid by the State, its tenant for the last ten years, to the city of Oran. The garden remains open to the public during the greater part of the day and the city pays for its upkeep in recognition of the advantage thus accorded to the people. The old cathedral of St. Louis, in this diocese, was replaced by that of the Sacred Heart 22 August, 1913, this church having been blessed the preceding February. The chapter still has St. Louis for its patron however. Latest statistics credit the diocese with 273,536 Europeans, and 686,444 Musulmans, 87 first and second class parishes and 135 priests.

Orange River, VICARLATE APOSTOLIC OF (FLUMINIS ORANGENSIS).—According to statistics for 1921 there were in the vicariate of Orange River, South Africa, 12 quasi-parishes, 12 churches or chapels, 30 stations, 12 regular priests, 3 Brothers, 16 Sisters, 6 catechists, 4 convents of nuns, 12 elementary schools with 18 teachers and 700 pupils, 4 orphanages, 3 homes for aged men and a Catholic population of about 5500, English, Dutch and Africans. The residence of the vicar apostolic is at Pella. In 1909 the prefecture apostolic of Grand Namaqualand (q. v.) was detached from the vicariate.

Oratory (cf. C. E., XI—271c).—The Code defines an oratory as a place set aside for Divine worship, though not chiefly and expressly intended for the use of the public generally. It is called a public oratory, if while it is principally intended for a collegiate body or even private individuals, the general public have a canonically approved right of going there at least during Divine services; a semi-public oratory on the other hand is erected for a community or a certain body of the faithful, without the general public having the right to visit it; they are erected by permission of the ordinary. Finally an oratory is termed private or domestic when it has been erected in a private establishment for the exclusive use of a private person or family. The private chapels of cardinals and bishops now enjoy the same privileges as semi-public oratories. Colleges, boarding-schools, military barracks, fortresses, prisons, hospitals, and the like may not have minor chapels in addition to the principal oratory unless the ordinary thinks they are necessary or very useful. Mortuary chapels erected in cemeteries by private individuals or families for their place of burial are considered private oratories; while the ordinary may habitually allow the celebration of several Masses in such a chapel, in other domestic oratories they can allow only one Mass to be said as an incidental occurrence, in an extraordinary case when there is a just and reasonable cause. When an Apostolic indult has been obtained for a domestic oratory, one Mass may be celebrated there daily except on the more solemn feasts, but no other church services may be held; if, however, there is a just and reasonable cause, different from those on account of which the indult was granted, the ordinary may allow Mass to be celebrated there on these feast-days as an incidental occurrence. Domestic oratories cannot be blessed or consecrated like churches; they and semi-public oratories, whether they have received only the common blessing for houses or no blessing at all, must be reserved exclusively for Divine service and must never be used for domestic purposes.

Codez juris canonici, can., 1188—96.

Orders, HOLY (cf. C. E., XI—279a).—Minister.—The ordinary minister of the sacrament of orders is a consecrated bishop; but under certain circumstances the Holy See authorizes by common law or by a special indult a cleric who has not received episcopal consecration to act as an extraordinary minister. The number of legitimate ordinary ministers has been curtailed by the Code; formerly they included the bishops of origin, or benefice, or service, or incardination; today the office is limited to one's own (proprius) bishop or a bishop who has received legitimate dimissorial letters from him. The expression "own bishop" as far as the ordination of seculars is concerned means solely the bishop of the diocese in which the candidate has a domicile together with origin, or a simple domicile without origin; in the latter case the candidate must swear that he intends to remain permanently in the diocese, unless there is question of ordaining a cleric who has already been incardinated in the diocese by first tonsure, or a student who is intended for service in another diocese after legitimate excardination and incardination, or a professed religious. The place of origin is that in which a father has a domicile, or in defect of a domicile, a quasi-domicile, when his child is born, or the place of the mother's domicile or quasi-domicile if the child is illegitimate or posthumous or the place where a founding has been discovered, or the place of birth in the case of the child of rapt. No one may promote to higher orders a candidate who has been ordained by the Pope, without the permission of the Holy See; so also no one may consecrate a bishop without the consent of the sovereign pontiff, and even then he is to have two assistant bishops for the ceremony unless a dispensation has been granted from Rome; finally a Latin bishop may not ordain a person belonging to an Oriental Rite without an apostolic indult.

The number of extraordinary ministers, on the other hand, has been increased. A regular abbot de regimine, even without territory nullius, provided he is a priest and has lawfully received the abbatial blessing, may confer tonsure and minor orders on all his professed subjects. Unless under those conditions, if the abbot is not a bishop, any orders conferred by him would be null and void, as any privilege to the contrary has now been withdrawn. Vicars and prefects apostolic, and abbots and prelates nullius, if consecrated, are ordinary ministers like other bishops; if they have not been consecrated they can, when within their own territory and during their tenure of office, confer tonsure and minor orders on their own subjects and on all who have dismissorial letters from their own superiors; except under these circumstances any orders conferred by them would be invalid. Finally, cardinals who are not bishops may confer tonsure and minor orders on any candidates who present themselves with dismissorial letters from their own superiors.

Subjects.—The requirements of the Code regarding aspirants for Holy Orders mentioned here refer not to the validity but to the liceity of ordinations. It is advisable that aspirants to orders should live in a seminary from a very early age; all must do so at least during their entire theological studies, unless the ordinary conscientiously believes that there is grave cause for dispensing from the obligation in a special case; if thus dispensed the aspirant should be entrusted to the special care of a pious capable priest, but even then his studies must be made in the seminary, not privately. First tonsure and orders are to be conferred only on those who intend to become priests and who give good hope of filling that office worthily. The candidate for orders must have been confirmed. No one, whether secular or religious, may receive first tonsure before beginning his theology; the subdiaconate may not be conferred before the end of the third year's theology, nor the diaconate before commencing the fourth year; the priesthood can be received only after the middle of that year. The intervals between the reception of the different orders must be observed; those between first tonsure and portership and between each of the minor orders is left to the discretion of the bishop; but one must be an acolyte one year before receiving the subdiaconate, and subdeacons and deacons must have exercised their respective orders for three months before being promoted, unless, in the opinion of the bishop, the wants or interests of the church demand shorter intervals; however, all customs to the contrary being reprobated, it is never lawful without special papal permission to confer minor orders with the subdiaconate or two sacred orders on the same day; nor is it allowable to confer first tonsure with a minor order, or all minor orders at the same time.

Seculars must have a canonical title for ordination, either a benefice, patrimony, or pension; and a bishop who, without an Apostolic indult, ordains his subject without a title, must provide for his support if necessary, even if the subject covenanted not to ask for alimentation. When these titles are not available they may be replaced by a title of diocesan service and in territories subject to Propaganda by a title of mission. but in these cases the candidate must swear to devote himself perpetually to the service of the diocese or mission, under the authority of the local ordinary for the time being. In the United States the oath has been modified to allow the cleric to pass to another diocese in the same province. In these two cases the ordinary is bound to appoint the candidate to some benefice or office, or give him an allowance sufficient for his support. For regulars with solemn profession the title is poverty; for religious with perpetual simple vows it is the mensa communis; for other religious it is as in the case of seculars. Secular candidates for ordination and religious who are bound by the same regulations before being ordained must produce: (a) testimony of their last ordination or, if there is question of first tonsure, of their baptism and confirmation; (b) testimony that they have completed the required course of study; (c) testimony of the rector of the seminary or of the priest to whom the aspirant was entrusted while outside the seminary, concerning his moral character; (d) testimonial letters from the ordinary of the place where the candidate has lived for a time during which he might have incurred a canonical impediment; (e) similar letters from a higher religious superior if the candidate is a religious. The time just referred to in (d) is usually three months in the case of soldiers, and six months for others after attaining puberty, but the ordaining bishop may insist on having letters when the time was shorter and even for the period before puberty was reached. If the local ordinary has not sufficient knowledge, either personal or through others, to testify that no canonical impediment was incurred while the candidate was in his territory, or if the candidate has lived in so many dioceses that it would be impossible or very difficult to obtain all the requisite letters, the ordinary must obtain a supplementary oath from the candidate. If after obtaining the letters but before ordination the candidate again remains the requisite time in a diocese he must procure fresh testimony from the local ordinary. A religious superior must testify in his letters not only that his subject is professed and a member of his house, but that he has finished the studies and has the other qualifications required by the canons. Candidates, both secular and religious, are to be carefully examined concerning the order they are about to receive, and those intended for major orders are to be examined in theology; the details of the examination are left to the bishop; but even after the candidate has received the dismissorial letters certifying that his examination was satisfactory, the ordaining bishop has the right to hold another examination and reject the candidate if he finds him unsuited.

The names of the candidates, excepting religious with simple or solemn perpetual vows, must be announced publicly in the candidates' parochial church, but the ordinary may dispense from this for just cause and have the proclamation made in another church or instead of the proclamation have the names posted publicly on the church doors for a few days, one of which must be a day of precept. The proclamation should be made on a day of precept during mass or on another day and at another time when a great number of the faithful are attending church. If within six months the candidate has not been ordained the proclamation must be renewed. The faithful must inform the parish priest or the ordinary if they know of any impediment to the ordination. Those who are about to receive first tonsure or minor orders must make a retreat of three days, those who are to be raised to a major order, six days; if anyone is to receive several major orders within six months, the ordinary may reduce the retreat for the diaconate to three days. If the ordination does not take place within six months the retreat must be repeated; if the delay is less, the matter is left to the ordinary's discretion. Religious must make the retreat in their own house or another at the superior's discretion; seculars are to make it in the seminary or in another pious or religious house designated by the bishop, who must be notified that it was made, by the superior of the house, or if the candidate is a religious by one of this higher superiors.

Ceremonies.—The directions of the ritual are to be followed as heretofore in ordinations; little changes have been made in the Code. All those who are being promoted to a major order must receive Holy Communion at the ordination Mass. If a candidate who has already received any orders in an Oriental Rite is, in virtue of an Apostolic indult, about to receive higher orders in the Latin Rite he must first receive in the latter Rite the orders which he did not receive in the Oriental. Major orders may now be conferred also on any Sunday, or a feast of obligation, when there is a grave cause for doing so and minor orders can be given not merely on Sundays but also on feasts of double rite, in the morning only, without a special indult. All customs contrary to the provisions just mentioned regarding the time of ordination are reprobated. Though ordinarily ordinations take place in the church, to sure and minor orders may be conferred in private oratories and major orders for just cause in an episcopal seminary, or religious oratory. Finally, a record of the ordination must be preserved in the local curial archives, and the local ordinary, or higher superior of the candidate who is a religious and has been ordained with dimissorial letters, must send notice of the ordination of all subdeacons to the rectors of their baptismal churches so that the fact can be recorded in the baptismal register.

Oregon (cf. C. E., XI-288c)—The area of the State of Oregon is 96,669 square miles including 1092 of water surface. The population in 1920 was 783,389, an increase of 16 per cent since 1910; the increase between 1900 and 1910 was 62 per cent. The average number of inhabitants to the square mile was 8.2. About half the population (49.9 per cent) was rural. The largest cities are Portland (258,288), Salem (17,679), Eugene (10,593), Astoria (14,207). The whites numbered 769,146 (666,995 native; 102,151 foreign born), the negroes, 2144, Indians, 4590, Chinese, 39090, Japanese, 4151. Of the native whites, 497,726 were of native parentage, 95,827 of foreign parentage, 73,442 of mixed parentage. The school attendance of all between the ages of 5 and 20 years of age was 152,275 or 70.1 per cent. Among those of ten years and over there were 9317 illiterates, or 1.5 per cent. Most of the foreign-born whites came originally from Canada (13,774), Germany (13,740), Sweden (10,532), Norway (6955), and Russia (6979).

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—Oregon is prosperous as an agricultural State. The number of farms in 1920 (50,206) shows an increase of 10.3 per cent since 1910. The area of farm land is 13,542,318 acres, the value of farm property, $818,559,761; value of all farm crops, $131,884,639; of live stock, $101,779,342. The principal crops were wheat, valued at $41,201,490; oats, $7,939,537; barley, $2,215,065; hay, $41,835,706; fruits and nuts, $20,373,412; dairy products, $17,651,409. Especially rich is the county of Umatilla, whose wheat crop averages about 5,000,000 bushels annually, while the alfalfa lands, comprising about 30,000 acres, yield three crops a year, totalling 4 tons to the acre. Live stock is also an extensive industry; there are in this county about 66,000 sheep, with fleeces averaging about 9 pounds each, and 33,000 cattle. The wool clip was 13,118,479 pounds, valued at $1,544,443. In 1920, 9154 farms with an acreage of 986,162 were irrigated. Plans are being made for the irrigation of about two million acres. At an annual expense of $100,000 the State-operated hatcheries liberate 85,000,000 young salmon every year. The entire industry brings in about $10,000,000 annually.

The mining resources are few, coal to the amount of 28,327 tons being mined in 1918. Manufacturing is slightly on the increase, the number of establishments in 1919 (2707) being 16.7 per cent greater than in 1914. There were 68,004 persons engaged in manufacture and earning for their services a total of $94,986,000. The capital invested was $499,982,000 and the value of the products $366,783,000. For communications, the State has 3214 miles of railways. The Dalles and Celilo Canal completed in 1915 opens the Columbia and Snake Rivers to navigation for a length of 570 miles from the ocean. The Columbia River Highway, one of the finest in the world, was opened in 1916. The State debt in 1920 was $19,869,025; the assessed value of taxable property, as equalized, was $990,435,472. The lumber industry is a large source of revenue for Oregon, the output of sawed lumber for 1918 being 2,700,000,000 feet, valued at $68,000,000. In 1913 a compulsory forest patrol law was enacted requiring the owners of forests to provide adequate protection, or to pay for the protection furnished by the State. The air patrol maintained by the War Department proved a valuable adjunct to the system.

RELIGION.—According to the latest United States Census of Religious Denominations, the membership of all sects was 179,468. The largest were: Catholics 49,728 or 27%; Methodist Episcopalians 27,866 or 15.5%; Presbyterians 16,672 or 9.3%; Baptists, Northern Convention 15,635 or 8.7%; Disciples of Christ 15,399, or 8.6%; Congregationalist 6373 or 3.6%; Protestant Episcopalians 5726 or 3.2%; Jews 1815 or .7%. For further educational and religious statistics, see OREGON CITY, ARCHDIOCESE OF; BAKER CITY, DIOCESE OF.

EDUCATION.—Education is compulsory for children between the ages of 9 and 15. All county school districts having a school population of 2500 or more must maintain schools at least eight months in the year. In 1920 there were 2673 public schools with 7695 teachers and 148,412 enrolled pupils, 220 high schools with 1163 teachers and 24,641 pupils, a public normal school with 30 teachers, and 230 pupils. The total expenditure on education in 1919 was $11,217,385. An irreducible fund of $7,109,689 has been secured by the sale of part of the school lands. The Agricultural College has an instructing staff of 265 and a total attendance of 3623 students; the University of Oregon, 123 instructors and 1868 students. Washington's Birthday (22 February) is a half-holiday in the schools. Bible reading is neither permitted nor excluded. The State laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: It shall be unlawful for any board of school directors, regents, or trustees, or for any teacher or other person teaching in the public or private schools, to cause to be taught or to teach any subject or subjects other than foreign languages in the public or private schools in any language but English. All teachers in public and private schools must take the oath of allegiance. No money shall be drawn from the treasury for the benefit of any religious or theological institution (1-6). Property for educational, literary, scientific, religious or charitable purposes may be exempted from taxation (IX-1). Any teacher in a four-year high school must be a graduate of a standard college or hold a like certificate or State diploma. The State superintendent shall visit all chartered schools and shall secure statistical information relative to the number of students, teachers, value of property, libraries, salaries, courses of study.

RECENT LEGISLATION AND HISTORY.—In 1911 a new law permitted a three-quarters jury verdict in civil cases; white slave traffic was made a felony; a Parole Board, Fish and Game Commission, and State Banking Department were created. In the general election of November, 1912, suffrage was extended to women and every citizen of twenty-one years of age and over, who shall have resided in the State during the six months preceding the election. In the same year, the Supreme Court refused to declare the initiative, referendum and recall Act of 1910 unconstitutional, simply denied jurisdiction, saying that the question was political, not judicial. The law of 1913, providing permanent registration of voters was declared unconstitutional. A Workmen's Compensation Act was passed in 1913. According to the laws of 1915, applicants for a marriage license must file a physician's certificate, made under oath ten days before the ceremony, stating that the male party is fit to marry. Any physician making a false statement on the certificate required shall lose his license. Marriage of a white person with a negro, Chinese, Japanese, or Indian is forbidden. It is a criminal offense to take a girl under sixteen years of age against the will of her parents or guardian, for the purpose of marriage. In 1916 the manufacture and sale of liquor was prohibited, and the importation of intoxicants into the state forbidden. An amendment went into effect, removing from the constitution a clause denying the suffrage to negroes, mulattoes, and Chinese. The Sunday closing laws of the State, which had been on the statute books for many years without an effort being made to enforce them, were repealed in 1916. The Act of Repeal was proposed by initiative petition in July and approved by a majority of votes in the November election. In 1917 a Poor Man's Court was created; provisions were made for the commitment and care of the feeble-minded, insane and criminally inclined persons were provided for; parental schools for discipline and instruction of habitual truants, absentees, and school offenders, and county tuberculosis sanitariums and hospitals were established. In order to stimulate the return of discharged soldiers and sailors to colleges and universities, the Legislature permitted the payment of $25.00 a month during eight months a year for four years to any veteran of the European War. More recent laws allow the widow to take an undivided third of land in lieu of a dower. Immoral pictures, printed or written matter, articles or instruments are forbidden. The Federal Suffrage Act was ratified on 12 January, 1919; the Prohibition Act three days later. During the European War Oregon sent into the United States Army 30,116 men (.8 per cent). The Oregon members of the national army joined the 91st Division at Camp Lewis, Washington. The summary of casualties of the Oregon members of the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 29 officers, 483 men; prisoners, 29 officers, 430 men; wounded, 63 officers, 991 men.

Oregon City, ARCHDIOCESE OF (OREGONOPOLITANENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—293a), comprises 21,389 square miles in the State of Oregon. This see is filled by Most Rev. Alexander Christie, promoted from the see of Vancouver 12 February, 1899. Born in Vermont in 1848, Archbishop Christie made his studies in St. Paul, Minnesota, and was ordained 22 December, 1877, and appointed Bishop of Vancouver, 22 March, 1898. The religious communities now in the archdiocese include: men, Benedictines, Capuchins, Dominicans, Franciscans, Fathers and Brothers of the Congregation of the Holy Cross, Jesuit Fathers, Paulists, Redemptorists, Servites, Society of the Divine Saviour and Brothers of the Christian Schools; women; Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary, Sisters of Charity of Providence, of Mercy, of the Good Shepherd, Sisters Adorers of the Precious Blood, Sisters of the Holy Child Jesus, Sisters of Mary of the Presentation, Benedictine Sisters, and Sisters of St. Francis. The archdiocese comprises 1 mitred abbot, 77 diocesan priests, 76 regular priests, 66 churches with resident priests, 50 missions with churches, about 100 mission stations, 18 chapels, 1 seminary of religious order with 47 students, 3 colleges and academies for boys with 563 students, 13 academies for girls, 46 parochial schools, 7300 pupils in Catholic schools, 3 orphan asylums caring for 406 orphans, 8 hospitals, 1 House of the Good Shepherd, 1 home for the aged, and 1 Catholic young women's home. The Catholic population of the archdiocese is 60,000.

Orense, DIOCESE OF (AURIENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—295b), in Spain, is a suffragan of the Archdiocese of Compostela. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. D. Florencio Cervino Gonzales, was appointed to the see 7 March, 1921, as successor to Rt. Rev. Eustachio Ilundain y Esteban, who filled the see from 14 November, 1904, until his promotion to the Archdiocese of Seville, 16 December, 1920. By 1920 statistics the Catholic population of the diocese numbers 363,000, practically all the inhabitants of this territory. In 1921 there were 682 parishes, 682 churches, 12 monasteries for men with 86 religious, 12 monasteries for women with 180 sisters, 882 secular priests and 147 regulars, 20 Brothers and 1 seminary. The Catholic institutions include 1 normal school, 6 homes, 4 asylums, 3 hospitals, 8 refuges, 2 lay charitable centres and 1 day nursery. There are many societies organized among both clergy and laity, and two Catholic periodicals are published.

Organ, NELLIE, better known as LITTLE NELLIE OF HOLY GOD, b. in Waterford, Ireland, 24 August, 1903; d. there 2 February, 1908. This saintly child was the daughter of humble Catholic parents whose only inheritance was a sterling Irish faith. The youngest of four children, Nellie was not four years old when her mother died and she, with her sister, was placed in the Industrial School of the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, at Sunday's Well in 1907. It was soon discovered that she was suffering from phthisis and curvature of the spine. As her frail little body wasted away her heart and soul opened to the love of God and the illumination of His grace in an extraordinary degree. She had a wonderful intuition concerning the Real Presence, and her progress in religious knowledge and growth in holiness were most remarkable. She lived continuously in the presence of "Holy God," and her hunger to receive Him in Holy Communion was so great that the Bishop of Cork permitted her to make her First Communion, a permission more unusual then, before the promulgation of the decree of Pope Pius X in favor of early communion, than now. During the remaining months of her life her patience in suffering for the love of "Holy God" many extraordinary spiritual facts attested by the Sisters who witnessed them, the hours she spent in "talking to Holy God," and the secrets He revealed to her convinced those who came in contact with her of her unusual sanctity. She was buried in the public cemetery of St. Joseph where her grave became a shrine, at which, it was rumored, many found peace and consolation. A year and a half after her death her body was transferred to the Convent Cemetery at Sunday's Well. At the disinterment her remains were found to be intact, the fingers quite flexible, and her clothing exactly as it was on the day of her death.

EDITH DONOVAN.

Oria (OR URITANA), DIOCESE OF (URITANENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—302a), in the province of Lecce, Southern Italy, Suffragan of Taranto. According to the statistics for 1920 the diocese contains 15 parishes, 122 churches or chapels, 132 secular priests, 20 seminarians, 51 regular priests, 30 Brothers, and 42 Sisters and 120,000 Catholics. Mgr. Antonio di Tommasio has ruled the see since 1903.

Orihuela, DIOCESE OF (ORIOLENSIS OR ALOMENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—315c), comprises most of the civil province of Alicante, in Spain, suffragan of Valencia. Rt. Rev. Raymond Plaza y Blanco, born in the diocese of Cuenca in 1847 and appointed to this see 18 July, 1913, died 8 November, 1921, and no bishop has yet been appointed to succeed him. This diocese also has jurisdiction over two small portions of the territory to the North, rightly belonging to neighboring dioceses. Latest statistics (1920) credit it with 367,603 Catholics, 70 parishes, 314 priests, 94 churches, 145 chapels and about 5 convents with 133 religious and 445 Sisters.

O'Riordan, MICHAEL, Rector of the Irish College, Rome; b. in Co. Limerick, Ireland, in 1857; d. at Rome on 27 August, 1919. He was educated in the Irish College, the Propaganda and the Gregorianum, Rome. After his ordination to the priesthood in 1883 he spent four years in the ministry at Westminster, England, and from there went to a professor's chair at St. Munchin's College, Limerick, and later was attached to the parish of St. Michael in the same city. In 1905 he was called to Rome as Rector of the Irish College and successor to Mgr. Murphy. He was made a Prothonotary Apostolic, consultor of the Sacred Congregation and postulator of the cause of the Irish martyrs. Meantime he had received an honorary degree as doctor of philosophy from Louvain. He published several scholarly works, one of which was an answer to Draper's "Conflict of Science and Religion." "Catholicity and Progress in Ireland" and the "Life of St. Columbanus" were also from his pen, as were many contributions to English, American, Irish and Italian Reviews. He was one of the best esteemed men in Rome for his personal qualities as well as for his historical, archæological and theological learning.

Oristano, ARCHDIOCESE OF (ARBORENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—316c), in Sardinia. Archbishop Tolu, who had filled this see from 1899, died 30 January, 1914, and was succeeded by Most Rev. Ernest Piovela, b. at Milan, 1867, promoted to the see of Oristano 15 April, 1914, transferred to the see of Cagliari, 8 March, 1920. The see is now filled by Most Rev. Giorgio Delrio, b. in Silanus, Italy, 1865, made a chancellor penitentiary, and pro-vicar general, appointed Bishop of Gerace 6 December, 1906, and promoted 16 December, 1920. In 1912 Oristano celebrated the tercentenary of its seminary, founded in 1612. In September, 1921, the first congress of the Third Order of St. Francis was held here, and the same year, in October, the seventh centenary of the Dominican Order was celebrated. During the World War two of the clergy of this diocese, Rev. Angelo Murgia, and Rev. Giovanni Coghe served as military chaplains, the latter being killed in action. All the clergy, from the archbishop down were distinguished by their zeal for the spiritual welfare of the soldiers. The diocese lost a zealous worker by the death of Mgr. Francesco Cherchi, in December, 1913.

By 1921 statistics this diocese counts 74 parishes, 200 churches, 2 monasteries for women, 2 convents for men, 150 secular and 14 regular clergy, 5 Brothers, 70 sisters, 1 seminary, 50 seminarians, 1 physical training school with 8 teachers and 100 students and 8 elementary schools with 12 teachers and 300 pupils. The charitable institutions include 1 home, 5 asylums, and 1 hospital: the asylums receive financial aid from the government. In 1920 the population of this diocese, which is entirely Catholic, was counted at 96,900.

Orléans, DIOCESE OF (AURELIANENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—318c), in the department of Loire, France, suffragan of Paris. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Stanislas-Arthur-Xavier Touchet, born in Soliers in 1848, served as vicar general to his uncle, the Archbishop of Besançon, and as archdeacon of Belfort for six years, and was appointed Bishop 18 May, 1894. On 23 December, 1915, he was honored with the privilege of wearing the pallium, which he received the following day from Cardinal Amette in Paris. On 16 July, 1919, Bishop Touchet celebrated the silver jubilee of his episcopacy. According to 1920 statistics the diocese counts a Catholic population of 364,061 of whom 72,096 are in Orléans proper, 41 parishes, 293 succursal parishes and 23 vicariates formerly supported by the State. During the World War 215 of the clergy of this diocese were mobilized, and of this number, 20 seminarians and 10 priests gave up their lives, 5 were decorated with the légion d'honneur, 5 with the médaille militaire and 70 with the croix de guerre. On 13 September, 1921 a diocesan synod was held for the purpose of revising the statutes of the diocese. The preceding year, by a bull dated 27 October, the Pope conferred the dignity of dean of the chapter on Canon Cornet. The festivities in honor of St. Joan of Arc, 8 May, 1921, were presided over by Cardinal di Belmonte.

Orvieto, DIOCESE OF (URBEVETANENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—331c), in the province of Perugia, central Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Salvatore Fraticchi, born in Rome in 1855, appointed titular Bishop of Memphis and auxiliary to the Bishop of Orvieto 22 June, 1903, succeeding to the see 24 January, 1905. According to 1920 statistics this diocese has a Catholic population of 41,500; 57 parishes, 89 secular and 20 regular clergy, 60 seminarians, 6 Brothers, 98 Sisters, and 124 churches and chapels.

Osaka, DIOCESE OF (OSAKENSIS).—Adherence to old superstitions, agnosticism amongst the intellectual classes, laxity of morals, the desire of material progress and finally national pride inflamed by the various achievements of Japan since the Restoration (1868) are formidable obstacles to the spread of the Faith in this diocese. The present bishop is Mgr. J. B. Kastanier, appointed 6 July, 1918, to succeed Mgr. Chatron, deceased. Born at Lacapelle, diocese of St. Flour, 7 January, 1877, he was ordained 23 September, 1899, and went to Osaka the following month, where he labored for nineteen years before his consecration as bishop. He was mobilized in France at that time, but on his appointment was allowed to return to his diocese.

A decree of 13 August, 1912, took away from the diocese certain territory which now forms part of the Prefecture Apostolic of Nygata. According to the latest statistics (1922) the diocese counts: 19 missionary and 3 native priests, 9 Marianite Brothers, 26 Sisters, 32 catechists, 21 missions, 38 stations, 7 churches, 20 oratories, 1 commercial school for boys with 859 pupils, 2 secondary schools for girls with 656 alumnae, 2 sewing schools with 72 pupils, 2 kindergartens with 262 children, 1 school for European or Eurasian girls with 90 students, 3 orphanages with 80 inmates, and 4532 Catholics. The mission publishes a monthly review, Hokyo Haei no Tomo (The Friend of Catholic Families).

During the World War five missionaries were mobilized, all of whom returned to their work when peace was proclaimed. Two of them won the "Croix de Guerre," and one the "Médaille d'Honneur des Epidémies."

Osimo (AND CINGOLI), DIOCESE OF (RUXIMANENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—338d), in the province of Ascoli, central Italy, directly dependent on the Holy See. Rt. Rev. Giovanni-Battista Scotti, appointed to this see 18 May, 1894, died 5 December, 1918, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Pacifico Fiorani, born in Collestellano, in the diocese of Fabriano, in 1855, served as a professor, then rector of the seminary, made a theological canon of the cathedral, named an honorary chamberlain extra urbem, 20 May, 1893, and again in 1903, appointed rector of the seminary of Magliano-Sabino, and appointed titular Bishop of Carystus 15 April, 1907, and suffragan bishop of Sabina, made auxiliary to the Bishop of Ascoli-Piceno in 1908, and transferred to the see of Civitavecchia 10 March, 1910, which he filled until again transferred to Osimo, 12 May, 1917. Latest statistics available (1920) credit the diocese with 52,300 Catholics of whom 10,165 are in Cingoli; 34 parishes, 150 secular and 29 regular clergy, 20 seminarians, 12 Brothers, 87 Sisters and 89 churches and chapels.

Osma, DIOCESE OF (OXOMENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—339c), in Northern Spain, suffragan of Burgos. The see is at El Burgo de Osma, but Soria, the capital of the province of that name, was the see at one time. This diocese has had a glorious history but now is one of the most humble in Spain. The inhabitants are nearly all farmers and poor and as the district is isolated from the great centers of Spain, religion has not progressed of late years. The present bishop is Mgr. Mateo Mugica y Urrestarazu, born in diocese of Vitoria 21 September, 1870, ordained in 1893, elected 22 February, 1918, to succeed Mgr. Lago y Gonzales, transferred to Tuy. The diocese has (1920) 187,500 inhabitants, all Catholics, 398 parishes, 803 churches, 1 monastery for women, 6 convents for men and 4 for women, 370 secular and 60 regular priests, 100 Sisters, 1 seminary, 109 seminarians, 1 institute (general and technical) with 94 students, 1 college for boys with 200 students, 2 colleges for girls with 200 students, 1 normal school for boys (88 students) and 1 for girls (60 students), 1 industrial school with 14 pupils, 410 elementary schools with 3862 pupils, 2 hospitals in charge of Sisters of Charity, 3 asylums, 2 refuges, 2 day nurseries, 1 weekly paper and various parish publications. The usual associations are organized for clergy and laity. Lately agricultural colonies have been organized in the diocese.

Osnabrück, DIOCESE OF (OSNABRUGENSIS, cf. C. E., XI—341a), in Germany. The present incumbent is the Rt. Rev. William Berning, b. at Lingen, 26 March, 1877, ordained 10 March, 1900, elected 14 July, 1914, published 8 Sept., consecrated 29 September following. On 15 September, 1914, he was appointed Apostolic Vicar of the Northern Missions of Germany and Prefect Apostolic of Schleswig-Holstein. The Caritas-verband (association of charities) was founded 23 May, 1916, and a diocesan synod was held from 6-8 October, 1920. In 1921 the diocese contained 110 parishes, 12 deaneries, 31 independent chapels or stations, 265 secular priests, 30 regulars, 987 sisters. The diocesan seminary is at Osnabrück with 8 seminarians who are being prepared for ordination. The remaining theological students, 70 in number, are studying at the University of Münster in Westphalia. The following orders of men have foundations: Capuchins, Clemenswerth near Sögel (4 priests); Missionaries of the Sacred Heart, Johannesburg in Börgermoor (5); Marists, Meppen (11); Franciscans, Ohrbeck-Holzhausen near Osnabrück (3); Fathers of Sacred Heart at Handrup near Lengerich. The following orders of women have mother-houses in the diocese: Benedictines of the Perpetual Adoration, Osnabrück; Franciscans, Thüne; Ursulines, Haselünne, Haste and Osnabrück; Missionary Sisters of Mary, Meppen. Among the higher educational institutions are the following: Gymnasium Carolinum at Osnabrück, founded by Charlemagne; a gymnasium at Meppen, realschule (6 to 9 years' course, Latin, sciences and modern languages), at Papenburg; lyceum and school for women conducted by the Ursulines at Haste; lyceum of the Sisters of our Lady at Meppen; lyceum of the Ursulines at Haselünne and Papenburg. The following associations exist among the priests: Association for Catholic catechists, Pactum Marianum; Unio cleri pro missionibus; Unio apostolica, Priests' Temperance Society. Much good is done by the many religious, charitable and social organizations which have been formed among the laity. Forty-eight of them exist in various places throughout the diocese. Only one Catholic paper is published in the diocese.

The following institutions exist in the diocese: 1 home for destitute children, 6 orphanages, 1 home for convalescent children, 3 homes for children, 3 day nurseries, 27 hospitals, 1 reformatory, 27 hospitals. There are Sisters stationed at various places who go about visiting the sick.

Ossory, DIOCESE OF (OSSORIENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—342d), in the province of Leinster, Ireland, suffragan of Dublin, with the episcopal residence at Kilkenny. For almost thirty-eight years this see has been filled by Rt. Rev. Abraham Brownrigg, born in Kildavin in 1836, appointed bishop 28 October, 1884, and named an assistant at the pontifical throne 15 January, 1892. The religious orders established in this diocese include men: Dominicans, Augustinians, Capuchins, Carmelites, Brothers of the Christian Schools, Irish Christian Brothers and Brothers of Charity; women: Presentation Nuns, Sisters of Charity, Sisters of Loreto, of Mercy, of the Holy Faith, of St. John of God and Sisters of the Sacred Heart of Mary. According to the latest census, collected in 1911, the Catholic population of the diocese is 79,572. Latest statistics (1922) credit it with 41 parishes, 127 priests, 9 higher schools, 96 churches, 1 college, 4 houses of regulars, 17 convents, and 6 establishments of the Christian Brothers.

Ostia, DIOCESE OF (OSTIENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—346b), a suburbicarian see, united to Velletri in 1150, and separated from it 5 May, 1914. This see is always filled by the dean of the Sacred College, at present His Eminence Vincenzo Cardinal Vannutelli, who is also Bishop of Palestrina. The statistics of 1920 credit the diocese with 3000 Catholics, 3 parishes, 10 secular and 10 regular clergy and 20 churches or chapels. On 21 June, 1919, the cardinal laid the first stone for the new church of Regina Pacis. (See also Palestrina.)

Ostuni, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See BRINDISI.

Otranto, ARCHDIOCESE OF (HYDRUNTINENSIS, cf. C. E., XI—351d), in the province of Lecce, Southern Italy. Most Rev. Giuseppe Ridolphi, transferred to this see 10 August, 1912, was again transferred to the titular see of Irenopolis, 12 August, 1915. After a vacancy of two years his successor was appointed, Most Rev. Carmelo Patané, born in Giarre in 1869, named a prelate of the Holy See 8 March, 1917, and appointed archbishop 11 January, 1918. The boundaries of this ancient diocese were somewhat changed by a decree of the consistory of 25 November, 1915. According to 1920 statistics the diocese counts a Catholic population of 100,200, and has 56 parishes, 260 secular priests, 100 seminarians and 325 churches or chapels.

Ottawa, ARCHDIOCESE OF (OTTAWIENSIS; cf. C. E., XI-352a), in Canada, comprises three counties of the Province of Quebec and four of the Province of Ontario. In 1913 the northern portion was erected into a new diocese with the see in Mont Laurier, Quebec, and in 1915 the portion included in the vicariate apostolic of Temiskaming was erected into the Diocese of Haileybury. The latest figures obtainable (1921) show a total Catholic population of 143,000, comprising 108,000 French, 32,000 English and 3000 Italians and Ruthenians. Archbishop Charles Hugh Gauthier, born at Alexandria, Ontario, 1843, ordained 1867, was appointed archbishop of Kingston 29 July, 1898, and transferred to the see of Ottawa 6 September, 1910. He died 19 January, 1922, and the see is now vacant.

This archdiocese lost three prominent and influential members through the deaths of Rev. A. L. Mangin, founder of the Institute of Jesus and Mary, d. 26 February, 1920; Sir Wilfred Laurier (q. v.), Premier of Canada (1896-1911), d. 17 January, 1919; and Lady Laurier, d. 12 November, 1921.

Bishop Gauthier was responsible for the introduction of the Sisters of Joan of Arc and the founding of their institute for young working girls, in 1919. Other religious orders established in the capital are: men, Oblates of Mary Immaculate, Dominicans, Capuchins, Fathers of the Company of Mary, Redemptorists, Fathers of the Holy Ghost and Servite Fathers; women, Grey Nuns, Sisters of the Precious Blood, Sisters of the Holy Family, Sisters of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, Sisters of Providence, Dominican Sisters of the Congregation of Notre Dame, Sisters of the Good Shepherd, Sisters of Mercy and Sisters of the Visitation.

The diocese includes: 98 parishes, 106 churches, 8 missions, 4 monasteries for men and 4 for women, 160 secular and 165 regular priests, 101 Brothers, 1315 sisters, 1 seminary, 35 seminarians, 1 university (see OTTAWA UNIVERSITY), with 62 professors and 800 students, 2 colleges for boys, 2 high schools, 15 academies, and 1 normal school with 15 teachers. The elementary schools have a total attendance of about 30,000. Among the charitable institutions are 6 asylums, 4 hospitals, 2 homes and 1 nursery. The taxes paid by the Catholics are sufficient to support the Catholic elementary schools. St. Joseph's Ecclesiastical Fund is established for sick or infirm clergy and the Catholic Association for Young Canadians, various societies of Catholic workmen, and the St. Joseph Society of Canada are organized among the laity. A daily Catholic paper, "Le Droit," is published.

Ottawa, UNIVERSITY OF (cf. C. E., 352d), conducted by the Oblate Fathers of Mary Immaculate, in Ottawa, Canada. Raised to the rank of a Catholic University in 1889, this institution offers parallel courses in English and French, comprising a commercial course, collegiate course, arts, including a philosophical course, and a theological course. The Government Museum, Dominion Observatory and Parliament Library offer the faculty and students unusual opportunities for reference work, and occasional attendance at the debates of the Dominion Parliament enables them to become familiar with political contests. The principal organizations formed among the students consist of English and French debating societies, an orchestra, band, and athletic association. Numerous scholarships have been founded. For the year 1921-22, 843 students were registered in the university under a staff of 62 professors. His Grace, the Archbishop of Ottawa is Apostolic Chancellor of the University, and the present rector is Rev. F. X. Marcotte, O. M. I., D.D.

Oviedo, DIOCESE OF (OVETENSIS; cf. C. E., XI-363c), in Spain, is suffragan of the Archdiocese of Compostela. Bishop Baztan y Urniza, who had filled this see since 1904, was transferred to the titular see of Nilopolis 18 October, 1920. The present incumbent Rt. Rev. Juan Bautista Pérez, born in Buriana, Spain, 1874, ordained in 1896, served as professor in the seminaries of Tarragona and Murcia, founder and director of the Catholic journal "La Verdad," made vicar general in 1909, appointed titular Bishop of Dorylaeum and auxiliary at Toledo, 22 February, 1915, and transferred in 1921. In 1918 the twelfth centenary of the battle of Covadonga was celebrated and the shrine of Our Lady was canonically crowned in the presence of the royal family, Cardinal Guisasaola y Menéndez, Archbishop of Toledo, and other high dignitaries of the church. In 1920 the Catholic population of this diocese numbered 776,347, and by 1921 statistics there are: 969 parishes, 3421 churches, 28 convents of men and 92 of women, 1323 secular and 214 regular clergy and lay brothers, 1081 Sisters, 2 seminaries and 233 seminarians. The various institutions include 1 normal school, 5 hospitals and 6 asylums. There is a mutual benefit society organized among the clergy, a number of societies among the laity, and Catholic periodicals are published.

Ozieri, DIOCESE OF (OCTERIENSIS; cf. C. E., II—581a), in Sardinia, Italy, suffragan of Sassari. This diocese was formerly known as Bisarchio, but had its episcopal seat at Ozieri; by a decree of 12 February, 1915, the name was changed to Ozieri. Rt. Rev. Filippo Bacciu, appointed to this See in 1896, d. 4 March, 1914, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Carmelo Cesarano, appointed 8 April, 1915. Upon his promotion, 30 September, 1918, the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Francesco Franco, was appointed to succeed him 10 March, 1919. The diocese comprises a Catholic population of 50,000, 26 parishes, 110 churches, 65 secular clergy, 1 seminary and 60 seminarians, 1 home for the aged, 10 asylums, 1 hospital and 1 refuge. Societies are organized among the clergy and laity, and various Catholic papers are circulated in the diocese.

P

Paderborn, DIOCESE OF (PATERBORNENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—383b), in Germany, suffragan of Cologne. On 12 Nov., 1920, Rt. Rev. Karl Joseph Schulte who administered the diocese from 1910, was named vicar apostolic of Anhalt and at the Consistory of 8 March, 1920, was made archbishop of Cologne. His successor at Paderborn is the Rt. Rev. Henry Haehling de Lanzener, b. at Coblenz, 19 Feb., 1861, ordained 18 Aug., 1883, elected 5 Aug., 1912 and made auxiliary bishop of Paderborn, consecrated 24 October following. In 1921 the vicariate apostolic of Anhalt was suppressed and incorporated in the Diocese of Paderborn. Soon after the outbreak of the war an association called Die Kirchliche Kriegshilfe was founded in the diocese, the object of which was to aid relatives and friends in their search for missing and imprisoned soldiers, to give spiritual and temporal aid to all prisoners in Germany, irrespective of race, color or creed, and to care for the German soldiers in the enemy camps. The Leoninum, the theological college at Paderborn, was made the central place of activity and Bishop Schulte, together with Rev. Dr. Starke, five priests and a great number of lay volunteers directed the undertaking. Through the efforts of the Holy See central places of communication were established in the enemy countries. German priests were sent to the enemy camps, clothing and food were given to the soldiers, with the aid of the Borromäusverein, literature was distributed in the camps. A special effort was made to supply Russia, as the prisoners in that country had been cut off from spiritual aid and but seldom had the consolation of the ministrations of a priest. At the camps at Senne and Doberitz, near Spandau, a temporary church for prisoners of all nationalities was erected from the diocesan funds and prayer-books were supplied for the French, English and Belgian soldiers. The work of this association was the means of bringing effectual aid to the afflicted and in every way furthering the spirit of Christian charity among the warring nations.

In 1921 the diocese contained 5,453,731 inhabitants, with 1,637,618 Catholics. It is divided into 53 deaneries and has 620 parishes, 210 succursal parishes, 11 missions, 830 churches, 25 monasteries for men, 323 convents for women, including 6 mother-houses, 1439 secular priests, 125 regulars, all engaged in parish work, 4 houses for Brothers, 1 seminary, 50 seminarians. Educational institutions include: 1 university, 12 professors, 300 students, 1 philosophical-theological academy at Paderborn, about 50 höhere schulen (scientific and classical high schools), 7 normal schools, 4 missionary schools. The parish schools are aided by the Government. The following institutions exist in the diocese: 91 homes, 53 asylums, 103 hospitals, 4 houses of correction, 1 settlement house, 197 nurseries, all of which admit the ministry of priests. Numerous religious organizations and societies exist among the clergy and laity. About fifty Catholic papers are printed in the diocese. Rev. Dr. Franz Hitze, distinguished professor of social science, deputy of the Reichstag, and champion of the Catholic social movement, died in 1921.

Padua, DIOCESE OF (PATAVINA; cf. C. E., XI—385c), in the province of Venice, Italy, suffragan of Venice. The present bishop is Mgr. Luigi Pelizzo, born in Faedis, Diocese of Udine, 26 February, 1860, elected Bishop of Padua, 13 July, 1906, consecrated at Cividale 19 August, to succeed Cardinal Callegari, deceased. According to 1919 statistics, the diocese comprises 580,000 Catholics, 321 parishes, 817 secular priests, 304 seminarians, 457 churches or chapels.

Palawan, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF; (cf. C. E., XI—417d), suffragan of Manila, Philippine Islands. The present prefect apostolic is Rt. Rev. Victorien Roman Zarate, b. 1875, ordained 1897, appointed prefect 1911. The population of the prefecture is about 60,000, of whom 27,357 are Catholics. There are 9 priests and 6 churches. The leper settlement on the Island of Culion is under the care of the Jesuits, aided by the Sisters of St. Joseph.

Palencia, DIOCESE OF (PALENTINA; cf. C. E., XI—417d), suffragan of Burgos, Spain. The area of the diocese is 2942 square miles, and the Catholic population about 190,000. There are 350 parishes divided into 19 archipresbyterates, 36 filial churches, 130 hermitages, 575 priests, 378 parish churches, 300 chapels and oratories, 9 religious houses for men, 15 for cloistered Sisters and 21 for Sisters devoting themselves to educational and charitable works, 192 members of religious orders of men, and 519 Sisters. The present Bishop is Rt. Rev. Raimon Barbera y Boada, b. 1847, elected titular Bishop of Anthedon 1907, transferred to Palencia 1914.

Palermo, ARCHDIOCESE OF (PANORMITANA, cf. C. E., XI—419b), in Sicily. The present incumbent is His Eminence Alessandro Cardinal Luaidi, b. in Milan, 1858, ordained 1880, rector of the Lombard Seminary, Rome, appointed Archbishop of Palermo 14 November, 1904, and raised to the dignity of Cardinal-priest 15 April, 1907. His auxiliary is Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Lagumina, titular Bishop of Samos.

In 1910 a diocesan synod was held and in 1920 the Plenary Council of Sicily met, the first since the promulgation of the new canon law. In 1921 the territorial congress of the third order of St. Francis was held, and in 1924 the third centenary of the finding of the relics of St. Rosalia will be celebrated.

During the World War many of the clergy went to the Front, 190 in all, and great privations were borne by those at home, while they worked in the hospitals and various shelters for the soldiers, particularly the Casa del Soldato, which was the first of its kind in Italy, having been founded by Rev. Vitale Bruu in 1913.

The diocese comprises (1921) 50 parishes, 524 churches and mission chapels, 1 monastery for men and 5 for women, 520 secular priests and 50 regulars, 25 Brothers, 500 Sisters, 3 seminaries, 125 seminarians, a theological college at the university with 10 professors and 15 students, 8 secondary schools for boys with 20 teachers and 350 pupils, 22 secondary schools for girls with 12,000 pupils, 1 professional school with 10 teachers and 100 pupils. Among the charitable institutions are 1 mission centre, 1 home for the poor, 25 asylums and 1 hospital. In 1920 there were 543,990 Catholics in this territory, a large proportion of whom are Greco-Albanians.

Palestrina, DIOCESE OF (PRAENESTINENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—421b), a suburbicarian diocese in Italy, united with Ostia in virtue of its tenure by Cardinal Vincenzo Vannutelli, dean of the Sacred College (see OSTIA). The Catholic population of the diocese is 45,700. There are 24 parishes, 62 secular priests, 47 regular priests, 42 seminarians, 114 religious and 96 churches and chapels.

Pamiers, DIOCESE OF (APAMIENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—435c), with the united titles of Couserans and Mirepoix, comprises the department of Ariège and is suffragan of Tours. The present (1922) bishop of the diocese is Mgr. Pierre Marceillac appointed in 1916 to succeed Mgr. Izart, promoted to Bourges. Born at Grenade-sur-Garonne, diocese of Toulouse, 10 July, 1863, Bishop Marceillac was ordained in 1888. He was professor of moral theology in the higher seminary in Toulouse in 1905, and seven years later became the pastor of St. Jerome's in that city, whence he was raised to the episcopate. Statistics of the diocese for 1921 give: 332 parishes, 367 churches, 40 missions, 10 stations, 306 secular priests, 1 convent of Carmelites, 8 religious orders of women, 2 seminaries with 100 students in both; 6 academies for girls with 60 teachers and 1000 pupils; 1 boarding school for boys with 90 pupils; 8 free schools for boys with 1200 pupils, and 30 for girls with 2000 pupils; 20 homes and 22 hospitals.

Amongst the clergy there are the Apostolic Union, Association of Priests Adorers, Association for a Happy Death, and the Society of Sacerdotal Vocations. For the laity there are the Union of Catholics and of Heads of Families, the Propagation of the Faith, Apostleship of Prayer, Sodality of the Children of Mary, and others. Catholic publications include "Semaine Catholique," "La Croix de L'Ariege," "La Jeune Ariege," "Bulletin des Vocations Sacerdotals," "Bannière de Marie," and "Bulletin historique du Diocese de Pamiers." A decree of March, 1910, united to the diocese the titles of Couserans and Mirepoix.

Pamplona, DIOCESE OF (PAMPILONENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—437c), suffragan of Saragossa, Spain. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. José Lopez Mendoza y Garcia, b. 1848, elected to the see of Jaca 1891, transferred to Pamplona 1899, assistant at the pontifical throne 1916. The area of the diocese is 3495 square miles and the Catholic population 275,000. There are 839 parishes, 1049 priests, 521 churches and chapels, 110 convents with 275 members of religious orders of men and 450 Sisters.

Panama, DIOCESE OF (PANAMANENSIS, cf. C. E., XI—438c), was erected by Leo X, on 9 September, 1513, according to the papal Bull held in the diocesan archives. For many years an inconsiderable appropriation was paid by the Government to the Conciliar Seminary and Missions, to partly fulfill the obligation to pay to the diocese a fixed sum in compensation for church property previously confiscated by the Colombian Government; however, in 1915, the National Assembly voted that even this appropriation should be discontinued.

The former bishop, Rt. Rev. Francis X. Junguito, S.J., who had administered the diocese for ten years, remedying as far as possible the damage caused by the Colombian revolution, died on 21 October, 1911, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. William Rojas Arrieta, C. M., who was born in Cartago, Costa Rica, 25 June, 1855. He was preconized on 21 March, 1912, and consecrated Bishop of Panama on 18 August of the same year.

In addition to the death of Bishop Junguito the diocese has suffered the loss of several other prominent and zealous workers in recent years: the Rev. Joseph A. Sanguillen, vicar general under Bishop Junguito, who died at the age of eighty-two; Manuel Jean, a distinguished Catholic layman, who founded an orphan asylum for girls, which he entrusted to the care of the Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul; Pablo Arosemena, a prominent citizen, lawyer and politician, who was one time President of the Republic of Panama.

Since 1911 the Cathedral of Panama and all the churches which had been damaged during the Revolution have been restored, the first ecclesiastical Synod of Panama was held in 1916 and theological and moral conferences for the clergy have been established. The seminary and all the religious associations have been reorganized, several new parishes added and many societies, the Knights of Columbus, Knights of the Sacred Heart, Knights of St. John, LaSalle Association for young men and Union of Catholic Workers, have been organized. Recent years have been marked by a revival of faith and religious spirit throughout the community. The religious interests of the Catholics in the Canal Zone are cared for by the priests of the Congregation of the Mission of St. Vincent de Paul belonging to the eastern province of the United States, whose central house is at Philadelphia. They take care of Balboa, Cristobal and the intermediate points along the Canal; the men of the army and navy are attended by special chaplains appointed by the United States Government.

In addition to the religious communities already established in the diocese (the Jesuits with 5 priests and 3 lay brothers; one Lazarist priest; and the Discalced Augustinians with 2 priests and 1 lay brother), many other communities have been introduced within recent years. The Franciscan Sisters have opened a college for girls in Panama and have more than 200 pupils, the Bethlehemites have charge of a government asylum for male children with about 60 boys, and the Daughters of Mary Help (Maria Auxiliadora) of Don Bosco have founded an orphanage for girls, assisted by the Salesian Cooperators.

According to the latest census the total population of Panama is 62,000, of whom 20,000 are Catholics of either white, or negro races, with some few thousands, mulattoes. Great numbers of these negroes, however, are not Panamanian, but immigrants from the West Indies, brought in for the Canal work. The diocese comprises 46 parishes, 82 churches, 3 missions with 2 mission stations, 48 secular priests and 14 regular, 18 Christian Brothers, 1 seminary with 3 seminarians. The educational institutions include 1 college for men with 18 teachers and 300 students, 3 colleges for women with 26 teachers and 500 students, 1 normal school with 10 teachers and 400 students, 1 industrial school with 3 teachers and 150 pupils, and numerous elementary schools throughout the Republic, the capital alone having 10 with 3000 pupils. There are a number of charitable institutions: 1 home under the Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul; 1 asylum in charge of these same Sisters; 3 American Government hospitals, 1 at Panama and 2 at Colon; 1 charitable center under the Brothers and 1 day nursery in charge of the Bethlehemites. The public schools permit the priests of the diocese to minister in them and the Catholic asylums receive financial aid from the Government. Two Catholic papers, 1 weekly and 1 monthly publication, are published in the diocese.

Paraguay, DIOCESE OF (PARAGUAYENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—470b), suffragan of Buenos Aires, comprises the territory of the Republic of Paraguay, South America, an area of 97,722 square miles. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Symphorian Norgarin, b. at Thacanguazu, Paraguay, 21 August, 1863, ordained 1886, elected bishop 1894, succeeding Bishop Aponte, deceased. The population of the diocese is 635,000. There are 110 parishes, 125 churches, 2 missions, 68 secular priests, 33 regular priests, 1 seminary with 40 seminarians, 2 colleges for girls, 1 asylum, 1 hospital, 1 day nursery, 1 association of the clergy, 1 Catholic publication.

Parahyba, DIOCESE OF (PARAHYBENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—472a), metropolitan see in Brazil. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Adauto Aurelio de Miranda Henriques, consecrated 1894. On 6 February, 1914, the western part of Parahyba was erected into the Diocese of Cajazeiras (q. v.). The present area of the diocese is 28,517 square miles. There are 735,572 Catholics, 1000 Protestants, 48 parishes, 52 secular priests, 10 regular priests, and 1 college.

Paraná, DIOCESE OF (PARANENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—475d), suffragan of Buenos Aires, in Argentina. It consists of the civil province of Entre Rios, with a population of 518,000, 33 parishes, 115 churches, 3 monasteries for men and 1 for women, 35 convents for women, 75 secular priests, 140 regular priests, 15 Brothers, 1 seminary with 72 seminarians. There are 20 schools for boys with 1600 pupils, 30 schools for girls with 3500 pupils, 1 normal school with 10 teachers and 45 students. The Government contributes to the support of the schools. Charitable institutions include 2 homes, 7 asylums, 12 hospitals. Three societies are organized among the clergy. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Juan Abel Bazán y Butos, b. at Tama de la Rioja in 1867, made his studies at the Latin-American College, ordained 1891, elected to the see of Paraná 7 Feb., 1910, consecrated 8 May following.

Pardo Bazán, EMILIA, novelist, b. of a noble family at Coruña, Spain, on 16 September, 1852; d. at Madrid on 15 May, 1921. A precocious child, she was carefully educated and could read with facility at six. At fourteen her favorite works were the Bible, the Iliad, and Don Quixote. In 1868 she married Don José Quiroga, and shortly after travelled extensively in France and Italy, becoming familiar with the great poets: Shakespeare, Byron, Alfieri, Manzoni, Goethe, Schiller, Heine. In 1876 she won a prize at Orense with her "Examen crítico de las obras de padre Feijóo" which was followed by a brief study on the Christian epic poets. She then read the novelists: Scott, Dickens, Lytton, Hugo and George Sand. This course was followed by her "Pascual López," the autobiography of a medical student, which was well received. After reading Zola's "Assommoir," she became a realist and an apologist for the French naturalistic school, first evidenced by "Un Viaje de Novios" (1881) though her delightful "San Francisco de Asís" in the following year was a reaction. Fitzmaurice-Kelly calls Pardo Bazán the greatest Spanish novelist of the nineteenth century; but Cejador in his "Historia de la lengua y literatura Castellana" judges her otherwise, pointing out how she cut herself off from the Spanish tradition and spirit, breathes a foreign atmosphere, exhibits an unnational frivolity, is a slave to Gallicisms; in a word, no one with judgment could for a moment think of placing her on the same plane as Pereda, Menéndez y Pelayo or Valera. Certain it is her reputation rests entirely on her fiction which is unhealthy and often downright indecent. Her greatest works are: "La Cuestión Palpitante" (1883); "Los pasos de Ulloa" (1886); "La madre naturaleza" (1887); "La priedra angular" (1891); "Dulce dueño" (1911); "Por la Europa católica" is a charming book of travel. In her review "Nuevo teatro crítico" she established a vehicle for a series of remarkable literary studies (January, 1891). Pardo Bazán wrote a few dramas of which "Verdad" and "Cuesta abajo" were the most successful. She was an ardent supporter of the feminist movement. Notwithstanding the character of some of her fiction she was always a professed Catholic. In October 1916 her statue was erected in Coruña by her fellow-citizens.

Parenzo-Pola, DIOCESE OF (PARENTINA-POLENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—480b); dependent of Gorizia. The cities of Parenzo and Pola, situated on the Adriatic, are in the province of Istria, which was ceded by Austria to Italy following the war. The members of the cathedral chapter at Parenzo have the right on feast days to wear the violet soutane with cincture of the same color, the surplice, violet mozetta and Latin cross in gold while the chapter at Pola has the same right except that the mozetta is replaced by the mantelletta and the pectoral cross is in Greek form.

The former bishop, Rt. Rev. John Baptist Flapp, died 26 December, 1912, after an administration of twenty-eight years and was buried from the cathedral church; he bequeathed the greater part of his possessions to religious works. His successor, the present bishop, is Rt. Rev. Tryphon Pedersolli, b. 28 January, 1864, at Cattaro, elected 19 June, 1913, installed in cathedral of Parenzo 9 November, 1913, and at Pola, 8 December, 1913. At the entrance of Italy into the War the southern part of the diocese was evacuated; some of the refugees were sheltered in barracks, the scattered people suffering great misery, resulting in steadily increasing mortality. Priests served in the army as chaplains, but none were in battle; the special devotions carried on in the churches were commended by the Holy Father; and generous collections, which the bishop himself went about to assist in raising, were given towards the relief of widespread suffering. The Catholic population is 122,000. The secular priests number 130, regular priests 12, and lay brothers 5. There are 51 parishes; 270 churches; 11 stations; 2 convents for men, and 14 for women; 1 preparatory seminary with 3 students; 1 college for boys with 4 teachers and 16 students; 1 asylum; 5 hospitals. The clergy have a mutual association, an organization for missionary work, and one for priestly adoration. Among the laity there are 15 religious organizations.

Paris, ARCHDIOCESE OF (PARISIENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—480d), comprises the Department of the Seine, France. Since its foundation the See has been administered by 110 bishops and 21 archbishops, of whom 7 are saints, and including also the Master of Sentences Peter Lombard (d. 1160) and in the nineteenth century Cardinals de Bello, de Talleyrand-Périgord, Morlot, Guibert and Richard. The present administrator is Cardinal Louis-Ernest Dubois, b. 1 Sept., 1856, ordained 1879, elected Bishop of Verdun 18 April, 1901, consecrated 2 July following, promoted Archbishop of Bourges 30 Nov., 1909, enthroned 3 Feb. 1910, published 4 December following, transferred to Rouen 1916, transferred to Paris 13 Sept., 1920, took possession 30 November, enthroned 8 December following, succeeding Cardinal Amette (q. v.), deceased. He was created cardinal 4 Dec., 1916, with the title of Sancta Maria in Aquiro. On 12 Dec., 1916, he received the pallium from the hands of Pope Benedict XV. Assisting him in the administration of the archdiocese are three auxiliary bishops: Rt. Rev. Benjamin-Octave Roland Gosselin, b. 17 Dec., 1870, named titular Bishop of Mosynopolis and auxiliary of Cardinal Amette 12 May, 1919, preconized 3 July, consecrated 12 August following, vicar capitular 1 Sept., 1920, auxiliary of Cardinal Dubois 30 Nov., 1920; Rt. Rev. Henri-Marie-Alfred Baudrillart, b. 6 Jan., 1859, rector of the Catholic Institute, named titular Bishop of Himeria 29 July, 1921, and consecrated 29 October following: Rt. Rev. Emmanuel Chaptal, b. 1861, ordained 1897, pastor of Notre Dame du Travail de Plaisance, 1910, appointed auxiliary bishop 1922, with jurisdiction over the Russians and other Slavs resident in Paris. The continual development in Catholic work, as well as the increase in the number of parishes during the past fifteen years has made necessary this collaboration in the ecclesiastical administration of Paris, and the recent appointment of Abbé Chaptal provided for the care of the large influx of foreign population, especially Russians, since the Balkan Wars and the Russian Revolution.

According to the report of the diocesan congress of 1920, the archdiocese comprises 79 parishes within the city, 12 chapels of ease and 30 public chapels, and in the suburbs 94 parishes with 27 chapels of ease. The churches are insufficient in number to accommodate the faithful, and to remedy this insufficiency the chapels of ease have been created. Since 1906 43 new places of worship have been established within the diocese; 16 churches and 29 chapels. Five churches are now under construction. Statistics for 1918 give a population for the archdiocese of 4,154,042. In 1914 the new Proper for Paris was approved. Now resident within the archdiocese are the Brothers of the Christian Schools, Lazarists, African Missionaries of Lyons, Foreign Missionaries of Paris, White Fathers, Holy Ghost Fathers, Hospitallers of St. John of God, Sulpicians, and numerous religious congregations of women.

Parish (cf. C. E., XI-499c)—It is provided in canon 216 of the Code that the territory of every diocese should be divided into parishes, that is territorial units, each with its own special church, special congregation and special permanent pastor having cure of souls; vicariates and prefectures apostolic were to be divided similarly, at least in part, where and when that could be done conveniently, and with advantage to the spiritual welfare of the people, in which case if a special pastor was appointed the territory becomes a quasi-parish, and the pastor at once acquires special rights and is subject to special obligations. The importance of this may be seen in the fact that in the English-speaking world generally there were no parishes and no parish priests strictly so-called, but only permanent or removable rectors. The question having been raised whether or not these rectorial territories, in countries like England and the United States, which had been released by the constitution "Sapienti Consilio" (1908) from the tutelage of the Congregation of Propaganda, had on the promulgation of the Code become ipso facto parishes, the Sacred Congregation of the Consistory replied in the negative (1 August, 1919). To constitute a parish a decree of the ordinary determining its boundaries, the seat of the parish, the endowment for divine worship and the support of the clergy, was declared necessary; furthermore, it was not necessary to make the rector irremovable, indeed for a just cause he might be expressly proclaimed removable in the decree of erection. Finally, if owing to the small number of the faithful or the scanty resources available it was undesirable to create a parish, the existing churches could be made subsidiaries, or chapels, or an adjoining parish, remaining in dependence on it until such time as they could be erected into parish churches.

A little later a question arose as to the status of the existing divisions of dioceses in countries like Australia, which were still under the Congregation of Propaganda. On 9 December, 1920, the Holy See replied: (1) that it was not necessary to divide the diocese of missionary countries into parishes at all; the matter will evidently be left to the discretion of ordinary, just as vicars and prefects Apostolic need not divide their territory except where it can be done conveniently; (2) that where the diocese had been already divided as prescribed in canon 216 the territories came under the name of parishes, but that the special regulations for quasi-parishes also applied to them. The chief significance of this is that while these territories are parishes and their rectors parish priests, yet the latter are not obliged to offer mass for their flocks, except on eleven important feasts, whereas ordinary parish priests must do so every Sunday and holiday (including suppressed feasts).

Without a special Apostolic indult special parishes cannot be created in the same town or territory for people of different nationality or different speech, nor can family or personal parishes be created; if, however, any such are now extant the bishop must make no change without consulting the Holy See. There is nothing in this legislation to prevent the opening of subsidiary churches on national or linguistic lines. Once a parish has become entitled officially to an irremovable rector, a removable rector cannot be appointed without leave of the Holy See. If the rector had hitherto been removable, he may be declared irremovable by the bishop—but not by a vicar capitular—with the advice of the cathedral chapter. Ordinarily newly-erected parishes should have irremovable rectors, but circumstances may arise justifying the appointment of a removable rector, though in this case the bishop must first consult the chapter.

Every parish is subject to a tax for the diocesan seminary; it should have its confraternities of the Blessed Sacrament and of Christian doctrine, and normally a special cemetery, though as frequently happens the ordinary may find it more convenient to have a common cemetery, especially in cities and towns. When a just canonical cause arises a bishop may divide, unite or suppress parishes, even without the consent of the rector or people, and erect the separated portion into a perpetual vicariate or a new parish; if there is no proper canonical cause, e.g., the difficulty of many parishioners in reaching the church, too great an increase or decrease in the number of parishioners, the action of the bishop would be invalid; as a safeguard he must always consult, though he need not follow the advice of, the cathedral chapter, and those interested, such as the rectors; while there is always the right of appeal against the bishop's decision to the Holy See, though until the Holy See acts it remains in force. When a parish has been divided the bishop must assign a proper source of revenue to the newly erected vicariate or parish, which may be taken from the mother church, provided the latter is not impoverished thereby; the new church if thus endowed is bound to pay honor to the mother church in a way prescribed by the ordinary, but the filial church is entitled to its own baptismal font. If the divided parish belonged to religious or was subject to a right of patronage the new or filial parish is independent of the religious or the patron.

PARMA, DIOCESE OF (PARMENSIS; cf. C. E., XI-505a), in the Province of Parma, Italy, dependent directly on the Holy See. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Guido Maria Conforti, b. 1865, elected Archbishop of Ravenna 1902, resigned and transferred to the titular archbishopric of Stauropolis 1904, named coadjutor Bishop of Parma 1907, succeeded to the See in the same year upon the death of Bishop Magani, and retained the personal title of archbishop. In August, 1918, he was named president of the Union of Italian Missionaries, created for the development of foreign missions. The Catholic population of the diocese is 232,913. There are 306 parishes, 467 secular priests, 66 regular priests, 100 seminarians, 2 Brothers, 99 Sisters, 406 churches and chapels.

Parousia.—On 18 June, 1915, the Pontifical Biblical Commission handed down the following decision in reply to the accompanying queries regarding the Parousia:

I. Whether to solve the difficulties which occur in the Epistles of St. Paul and of other Apostles, where the "Parousia," as it is called, or the second coming of Our Lord Jesus Christ, is spoken of, it is permitted to the Catholic exegete to assert that the Apostles, although under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost they teach no error, nevertheless express their own human views, into which error or deception can enter?

Reply. In the negative.
